The millions of brave soldiers who clad in the purple, crims on, and lavandar p articipated in the fiercest struggles ever described, recorded in this volume that mark still the early events of the umusually tremendous war will find here many stirring scenes that are not recorded in any true History, great distasters that are awful in magnitude ernormous battles, big fires, awful tragedies, adventures of heroes, and heroines many of them fatal, great war and storm disasters and will be taken through accounts of which they will never never, nver forget, and those f the readers and the like who do not understand or comprehend these scenes, will be reminded in again looking over these pages the exciting eagerness with which the vivian Girl Heroines(Princesses of Abbiecannia) do their noble dare devil work when even they do not need to, and how to help their generals they obtain every piece of news and illustration from the sea of conflicts, how they escape enemy persuers, and save their generals and armies during battles, how they rescue friends in time of direst peril, and face disasters during battles of extreme fury that become famious, and have taken a most prominent place in this history of the terrible and prodegious Abbiecannian cival war.

The stories in this volume have been reproduced after most careful Patient work and from original battles known in other sections of the great and intolerable war.

All the incidents in this volume is fully intended to give the reader and the others, i n a best a way as possible a complete and most accurate account of this great conflict as far as the volume goes, describing in intertaining language some more of the strange and sad circumstances that led to the recording record breaking struggle, the most important battles of that time on land and water, the kind of soldiers on both sides who so fiercely and insanely pq participated in them and the causes that brought such shameful disasters and down falls of some of the National armies.

This description with the interesting written illustrations will it is hoped bring about a far better knowledge and more correct idea of the fierce and sanguinary progress of the Abbiecannian intercine war than volume One first presented to the public.

Neither trouble or expense has been spared to make this volume perfectly reliable in every way.Editors of great experience will be in due time allowed to go over the whole work most carefully and verify every date of incidents, disasters, battles and great adventures so as to prevent the possibility of an error.

SOMETHING UNUSUAL GOIN GOES ON IN NORMA, DONNERNING THE DELL-HELL)tWELL-HE, L PENETENTAIRY FIRE.
CONCLUSION OF CHAPTER,BEFORE FINAL REIGN OF TEROR TERROR IN NORMA.

''You little rebel observed the Glandelinian general grimly.''Your bonnet does not seem to be a good fit.''
''Oh please get that dog off from me, oh please.''Screamed poor violet .
''I guess I can get the dog off alright general''Broke in Gabie excitedly. But I reckon you want nippers to put on this little rebel girl.She put dynamite in Captian James Gannons pocket. That is what the dog is mad about. At any rate she is a spy.''
''Dynimite!''Gasped the Glandelinian general.
''That is what caused the explosion you heard.''A nnounced Gabie.''It did not hury anybody though.''
''The glandelinian is telling a lie.I did not do anything of the sort.'' Pleaded Violet honestly.O h p! please be merci ful as to take this blamed dog off.Oh please do.''
''Why my little rebel girl it seems to me that I know your voice.''Said the Glandelinian general queerly.''Violet vivian my rebel I'm mighty g a glad to see you again.''
''Take the dog off please, he is eating my neck all up.''Appealed violet.
''I guess I can get the dog off.''Uttered Gabie''But I ought not to.'' Wi th a little petting and coaxing, g Gabie managed to draw the growling and bristling Rover away. Violet 's neck was bleeding freely, and the marks of Rovers teeth were plainly visible.
''Let me see your wrists.''Requested the Glandelinian general, and click snap the handcuffs were on, and poor weeping Violet was yanked to her feet a very crest fallen prisoner or worse. The Glandelinian general turned Violet over to some of his soldiers to hold. In the meantime general J ames Gannon by bringing his crew back to their work after the panic had subsided, between the use of axe, pike pikes and the streets in th the rear portions succeeded in getting the blaze in the back portions of the rooms under control, but not completely out . But the crowds which had found far more excitement, than it had looked for, was at a fever heat outside. For Gabie had told the whole story of the stick of dynimite, which of coure course was not really done by her, as they thought, and now with a crowd of several thousand in digmant Glandelinians, and only fifteen firemen on hand, it looked very dangerous for the poor prisoner, who was weeping bitterly.
''Hustle her away to the lockup.''Ordered the Glandelinian general to his two soldiers.Then he turned to the crowd and said;
''Friends let the laws of Glandelinia take its course.You allknow me and I tell you that I'm determined, that no matter what happens, you shall not take the prisoner away from my soldiers .''
That speech which carried with it an understood threat of trouble, q uieted the crowds of Glandelinians, untill Violet s two cruel conductors had disappeared with her.
''Oh general, oh general.''
It was Lisburn the chief prison guard, and he came running from a door- way of the burning prison, followed by a Glandelinian soldier.
''Oh general I have just been examining my show cases.''Cried the man hav ing possessed many as many jewels as in a Jewerly store.
''That was wise.Nothing wrong I hope.''
''Nothing wrong!''Gasped Lisburn.''General Deldon the cases of mine containing the most valuable jw jewels was broken open in the excitement.''
''What's that cried general Deldon sharply.''Anything gone!''
''I have been robbed of over twenty nine thousand dollars worth of stuff''
A Almost screamed the guard.

Indeed that was enough to bring general Deldon on the spot at a single jump. 2
"This looks to be very and mighty serious James Lisburn." e cried.
"Serious?" Echoed the chief prison guard. "I should say it is."
"James Gangon" Demanded general Deldon turning upon the Clandelinian Fir fire Chief" id you see any suspicious characters around the place."
"I don't remember any that I have seen." James Cannon rep/ied replied. O" Of course I left the rounding up of suspicious characters to the Calverinian police loyal to Clandelinia's cause None but children came out of your own room Lisburn."
"I know that." broke in the soldier with Lisburn.
"I'll turn out my company and have e'm searched as closely as possible." Added James Cannon gravely. "And I'll stand the first search myself. Or maybe you will search the Christian dog of a Princesses Violet Vivian herself."
"Th at's right" screeched a voice from the crowd beyond. "Search the little Abbisanian Princess Violet first."
Then the cowardly owner of the voice kept quiet to detect or prevent detection.
Violet was hastily brought forward.
"Search her now." Begged James Cannon turning to the soldier who stepped forward.
"Gabe Rosie get half of the fire men out now. When they have been searched we will send them back to relieve the other half."
The boy who had led Violet and her sisters out of the burning building was near by.
"Thunder if any of those Clandelinian rebels firemen have touched any of that jw jewelry I hope they will be discovered." The boy growled seriously.
The Clandelinian soldier was now searching through Violet's clothing.
"This anything of yours , Mr Lisburn?" asked the Clandelinian soldier, holding out some cards to which were fastenod diamond pins. Violet gasped in the sheerish amazement and then her brain seemed to whirl as the Clandelinian soldier produced ten rings richly and handsomely set with jewels.
"Violet Vii Vivian. You the Princess of Abbisannia. TYou. ! Good Heavens." gasped the boy.
"This is some infernal put up job." Shuddered Violet her face first blazing, then ghastly whit white. "I nave placed these things in my pocket, and besides I did not steal that j jwelery or either knew they were in my pockets. I I I I I cannot understand it."
Her brain seemed to reel and swim so that she reeled, but the boy caught her supporting her. He saw her already wearing handcuffs. Gabbie now came back supported by all the firemen under Chief James Cannon.
"You identify these jewels as your property Mr Lisburn." Demanded the Clandelinian soldier.
"I certainly do." Quivered the chief guard blazing angrily at poor Violet Vivian." So this splendid young Abbisannian Princess pretends to be a Clandelinian among us to spy and is not only a spy but at heart a thief shi she made those rescues only that she may steal, the little thief. It's bad enough to spy and make off as one of us, but it is worse to be a thief in the bargian. We would sooner have a dirty christian dog among us than one like her."
"This is an infernal lie confound you you devil." Screamed the boy, striding forward his small white hands clenched and raised. "Take that back you fiend, or I'll make you swallow your words whole, though you are a big bully. She is no thief, and though I'm only a little boy I'm not afraid you you, you dirty gutternip of a Clandelinian rebel, a traitor to God and your country."
"You bet your lief he ain't and the little girl Princess of Abbisannia is innocent." Snarled another Calverinian boy, whose name was Teddy Rourkin, bounding in at Violet's side. Angry protests came from the other Angalinian prisoners, who were also boys and they crowded around. Had not the soldier acted quickly the prison guard would have been killed for the boy prisoners at have the name "Christian" insulted, and the Vivian "irl Princess called a thief, were fearfully enraged. General Deldon pulled Teddy Rourkin back, while the soldier stepping between Violet and the guard, pushed Violet roughly ba back.
"See if the little tiger had my diamons necklace." Appealed Lisburn. "That is the most valuable piece of all, worth seventeen thousand dollars."
"Stand still you little girl devil while I go through the rest of your pi pockets." ordered the Clandelinian soldier scon scornfully."
For an instant the bold boy had a wild notion to pitch into the soldier and knock him down but realizing the absurdity of such a row he gave it up, while Violet stiffened herself up erect and replied with a sneer;
"Go on with your search mr soldier, and have done with it. I do not care one singlebit, what you find on my now for it is all a put up job anyway."
Violet Vivians pockets were quickly turned inside out but no other jewelry was found.
"What is the value of those articles Mr Lisburn!" Demanded the soldier, drawing out of his pocket a note book and pencil.
"About five hundred and seventy five thousand dollars and sixty s cents."
"I'll have to take the property to court Mr Lisburn." Went on the wicked soldier. "The penalty to the little thief and Federal spy is death. Come along Violet you little devil."
"Where!" Quivered Violet with tears in her eyes.
"To the slaughter trough of course." Retorted the Clandelinian soldier grimly. "You did not think I was go ng to takeyou to the Angelinians did you!"""""

Poor Violet stood still trembling. To the slaughter trough and be cut up by those horrible knives.
"ut I never took those things." he protested.
"I don't care what ye say ye little devil. Come along that's all."
"You will stop right here just a bit my man." Interrupted general Deldon. "I don't believe you quite dare take away a child prisoner in my own hands at a fire like to day."
"This young devil Princess does not belong to you." protested the soldier.
"not regularly no." Replied general Deldon with a scowl. "But I'm in command here and you obey orders. Take her away from here officer at your own risk."
"Of if that is the way you look at it." Grumbled the soldier.
"You have not searched the others nudged the guard."
The two or three Clandelinians who had first laid their hands on Violet Violet a little while ago now came up to help. General Deldon too, was impressed much against his will into thewerk work. Every single Clandelinian on duty of all the departments were searched but no more of the jwels jewelry was found.
"here is some mystery." Groaned the guard. "I hv have recovered ob only a trifle of my stolen goods. There is the diamond necklace, the diamond Idol, a small one of gatom, the coral and emerald- " and I'm seak sure that after all some one has put up a job on the little girl Princess of Abbisannia, who with her sisters have done done more rescue work than any one else to day."
"I believe it is true indeed." Broke in general Deldon indignantly." Why see here you fellow. Violet Vivian has had all the chance she wanted to hide those little trinklets, if she had known they were in her pockets. I believe with her that it was a put up job."
"That will be a good story to tell the Court." Muttered the soldier who had found the jewelr jewrly. General Deldon now chattering with James Cannon became conscious of another pair of eyes. He half turned to find another of the Abbisannian Princess of Abbisannia, Angelinian Vivian stealthily regarding him. Something jumped through Deldons brain at that instant.
"Why confound it I saw that little Abbisannian Princess in th at burning Penitentiary not many minutes ago. I know I did. I would have thought of it at the time if I have not been so infernally busy. That round Princess's looks were a good bit changed by having her elegant curls hanging partly across her face but now I'm ready to swear that the little Second Princess was in the guards Jw Jewelry roon room."
"Your thoughts seem far away." Remarked Cannon with a look at the burning building which was mostly obscured in thick clouds of white and cream colored smoke. Deldon saw his superior officer general Lolus Homer approaching.
"Pardon me just for one moment." begged Deldon and turned to meet general Homer. In a quick flashing whisper Deldon said enough to general Homer to make that active Clandelinian general cast a swift look tward Angeline. The poor little Angelinian Princess seeing the look, and beholding the cruel looking Clandelinian general coming tward her, and dreading danger, turned and made a frantic bolt.
"After that little Abbisannian Princess, and catch her." Roared Deldon.
With hundreds of Clandelinians on all sides, poor Angeline indeed had a poor show to get away. Yet before any of the human fiends could reach the frightened child, Rover, the Mascot dog of James Cannons fire company darted out from a door way of the unburned wing of the prison in full growling persuit. Rover made a spring, a snp, and caught firmly by one of Angeline's heels and the catch threw the poor little Angelinian Princess. Before Angeline who waw was screaming pitcously could get up, general Homerwas standing over her.
"Ye fool." spoke the general quietly. "We don't care about seeing you and your sisters alive in Vivian Vickey. Despite the fact that you and your sisters are Princesses of Abbisannia, and it may bring a dreadful curse and ruin on us we are going to put you to dath as well as your sisters."
"We'll go to heaven then." newered poor Angeline.
"Just before you go to Heaven." Mocked general Homer "could you mind stepping into one of these storex across the street and letting me look you over!"
"What for!" Demanded Angeline weeping bitterly.
"Just for my own satisfaction you fool." Replied the general cooly.
Had there been any show for her at all , Angeline would have skipped, but this Clandelinian general was not one to be trifled with, besides with a hundred of the fully armed Clandelinians grouped about her, and rover growing alert just behind her, it would have been foolhardy.
"I suppose you have captured me and am going to murder me without mercy." uttered Angeline a ghastly pallor up spreading over her angel face. "But if you do and you lose in this war Abbisannia will slay you all."
"Come" Said general Homer shortly.
He led Angeline into the nearest store. Deldon and the two soldiers with Violet, who was hand-cuffed, followed.
"Don't let any more folks in." wshi whispered Deldon and Gabbie stood on guard, at the door, politely pushin back the eager tn throngs of Clandelinians, that wanted to crowd into the store. General Homers movements were few, brief, and to the point. To the surprise and amazement of all the general laid out on the counter a diamons necklan necklace, a diamond satens to idol and many other costly articles of jewerly.

''so you are the real thief!''Demanded Deldon hotly.''You sneaked into the guards room, and with your hair fixed in a different way to conceal your beauty made a complete haul so you and your dastardly sisters could escape us and go b back to the besiegers eh.''!

''I t would not do much good to deny it with the stuff found on me would it?'' answered Angeline defiantly.

''And you stuck some of the jewerly into violet's pocket, playing a dirty treacherious trick on your sister!''Insisted Deldon his face hot with wrath.

''Seeing that you would not believe me I might as well acknowledge all that is coming.''Angeline agreed.

''Do you admit Princess Angeline Vivian, ye little fool that you treacheriously put those things in your sisters pockets?''

''No I did not, and I never took those things either, though I know you won'y wo n't believe me if I denied it in heaven.''

''Hurrah.''Quivered Teddy Rourken.

''Who in Jerusalem did it then.''Deldon belched forth like a roaring volcano.

''Why or------r------.''Angeline stammered.

''Who put you or any one else up to it.''Deldon fairly thundered.Poor Angeline looked as if she was aboiud to swoon.But she answered;

''No one told me to do it , and some one else must have put those things into my pocket. ''

''Describe your other sister Jennie and do it right.''Growled Deldon, placing a pistol at her head.

''I won't tell on my poor sisters or give a description of them, no matter what you do to me.''Answered Angeline.

But a tall Glandelinian fireman made a complete description.

''No fellows.''Demanded Deldon turning furiously to the Glandelinian firemen.Whom does that description really fit.?!''

''The Abbiesannian Princess Jennie Vivian.''Answered the firemen in one breath.''She is the prettiest of the Vivian Girls and you can tell her from her dazzling beauty anywhere.''

General Deldon glancing swiftly out of the door saw a cab which had been standing across the street, starting to move away.

''Order out all the soldiers.''Bellowed general Deldon through a loud sounding horn.''Don't let that cab getaway untill the man whoma, or child has shown themselves.''

With a loud whoop the Glandelinian infantry consisting of a few hundred soldiers which had just arived rushed forward swiftly, a score of them immediately surrounding the cab, while the driver raised his whip to bring it down on his horses.

''Driver don't you dare to get away, until my men ,and myself have seen who is inside that cab.''Roared general Deldon brandishing his long sabre.''If you don't stop we'll arrest you on the charge of harboring the christian dogs.''

The Glandelinian driver hesitating and not knowing who was inside the cab instantly drew rein, and Colonel Gourke, and Captian Gadlin seized the bridle of the horses, while with a rush and a roar a number of the wicked Glandelinian soldiers pulled both cab doors open and a small girllish figure of exceedingly beauty recoiled backwards on the rear seat as if trying to blot herself out of sight, but general Deldon cried sharply;

''Who is it.A christian dog or a Glandelinian subjet subject?''

''That's the Abbiesannian Princess Jennie Celestial ji Vivian.''Came the chourished answer in deep disguist.Then without hesitating the Glandelinians or two of them plied upon poor Jennie and though she resisted, they s chocked and beat her and dragedragged her shrieking with fury and biting at hands like a wild cat, into the street.

''This Angeline Angelinian or Abbiesannian Princess Jennie, and her sister-Angline Angeline Vivian must have put up the job on their sister Violet.''Shouted general Deldon infi indignantly.''The little Abbiesannian Princess Angeline Vivian has just been caught with the main party part of the stolen jewerly about her, and though stubbornly refusing to confess that she and Jennie did it, and refusing to describe her, I know that the little princess Jennie put her up to the whole thing.''

''Shall we m march the little Princesss of Abbiesannia to the slaughter trough?'' demanded half a dozen Glandelinian soldiers all of whom had a hand of holding poor Jennie who had been speechless with amazement at the strange accusation she heard.

''The little Abbiesannian Princess Angeline, knowing that death awaited her, has gottan away, and so has her other Princess of sisters, including Violet.'' panted general Homer running up.''My back was turned but an instant, and thy they sneaked through the back of the store.But who is this dazzling beauty in girls clothing and who seems so defiant.''!

''This is one of the Abbiesannian Princess.''Uttered Deldon crisply''.he put her sister Angeline up to hiding some of the plunder in Violet's pockets.''

''Sorry we have not got the Mountian of hell here.''Growled general Homer glaring at poor Jennie.

''Can't you spare time to talkto thecrater of that fearful volcano general.'' blurted out Deldon indignantly.''It is not fifty miles from here.''

''I'm afraid I can't take her there for no one can get out of the city on account of the Abbiesannian and Angelinian besieging armies under general Mansion.'' replied general Homer''there also is a big force of Calverinians not far from here and it is said that Hanson Avians christian armies are moving forward also.''

''Then you will be good enough to walk away for a few minutes general, and not ask-any questions afterwards!''Proposed Deldon grimly.

General Homer walked back across the street reentering the store, where a fireman and the store kesper stood guard over the jewels.

''Now ye nice little Abbiesannian Princess ye fake christian dog.''Go axked Deldon''Come here.''

Deldon grabbed the little girl by the throat and held her firmly almost chocking her.''Spread out infantry men down the street double file.''Begged Deldon.''We are going to give this little honerable Abbiesannian PPrincess a chance to run a beautiful gauntlet, and a race afterwards for life.''

In a straight double line the Glandelinians extended down the street, their muskets lying across so that Jennie would trip every time she got up.

''Now are ye all ready for a run ye little Princess of Abbiesannia!'' asked Deldon anxiously.

There was no response from poor little Jennie as all speech was plump out of her.

''One,two,''Counted Deldon-three go''''.

Jennie refused to budge.Thump.Deldon's foot landed on or against poor Jennies back in a swift kick and with a force that knocked her swa sprawling, and which must have jarred her whole body.But getting up and seeing there was no chance of escape, Jennie let out a shrill piercing scream,' and started.the little girl had sense enough left her for but one thing--running.My My how she did run, and trip over the muskets lying across ther path.she never made her little graceful legs fly so so before.Once she was through the gauntlet after may trips and tumbles, and from which she recieved a fearful number of cruel kicks and blows, Jennie was by no means out of her trouble.Most of the Glandelinians followed, throwing any missle that came to their hands, then recaptured her and brought her back to the scene of the fire.The fire was now partly under control, mostly nothing but heavy rolling clouds of smoke.But not untill night came was the p fire ever completely subdued.Just as the fire companies were preparing to go back, there was a flash from the side of the smouldering ruins, accompanied by a sharp crack, and the sig sing of a bulletthat flew between Deldons had and Homers.For just an instant both the great Glandelinian generals were star staggered by surprise.Then general Homer bounded forward straight for that portion of the ruins, nor did Deldon or several of the other Glandelinians wait to be called.The person who did the shooting finding the enemies of Our blessed Lord almost at arms length, turned and bolted from the smoking ruins, where the remaining fire companies were still pouring their stream of water.

''After that person.''Roared Homer.

The two Glandelinian generals sprinted hard followed by four soldiers.

''You might as well stop.''Sang out Homer''Weare surely overtaking you, and I swear we mean to catch you even if we have to cha se you all the way to the moon''.

the fugitive kept on running fr firing other shots, that were so well aimed that all the soldiers following Deldon and Homer were shot down.But the distance between the th other two persuers and the fugitive was lessening.

''Blazes.''ejaculated deldon.

''''''What is wrong now.!!''queried General Homer..

''I know the fugitive , I recognize her.''IT is joice Vivian, the boldest of the seven Abbiesannian Princess.The murdering scoud scoundrel.I do did not know she being simply a little girl could handle firearms and dare kill any of us.''

''Joice Vivian, yemight as well give up and stop ye fool.''''Roared Homer''you can't hope to get away from us now.''

Looking over her shoulder joice saw thatthis statement was true.But quick as a flash fla flash she halted, wheeled about, crouci crouching low, beholding a gleaming revolver straight out before her.

''Think you have got me do you you fiends.''She leered.''Come and get me if you can.I have got five bullets left for you, and another gun besides.''

Deldon and Homer halted swiftly, Homer ordering to the men.''Spread ouid. Get away from us and deldon.The little devil will killbyou all.''

This injunction peldon nd some of the soldiers obeyed to the extent of making a wide berth around brave little Joice, on the jump and getting behind the brave child.Joice wheeled so she could present a side to either one or the other soldiers.

''''Don't try to get any closer.''She ordered in a firm voice.''I'vegot a killing temper for you Glandelinian rebels on to night, and am bound to get away to rescue my sisters.''''

''''Maybe we have too''''Uttered Deldon very quietly.

''Get out of here both of you and bring your soldiers away too, orI'll shoot one and then the other and kill you both.''said Joice.

''If you try it one of us will be jumping on you while you are blazing away atthe other, and recapture you any way and your clock would be run you down ye Princess of Abbiesannia.''Promished Deldon.

Ere the words were out of peldons mouth Homer leaped and bore joice struggling fiercely to the ground, and began pummeling the poor little girl for all he was worth(not much)General Deldon too leaped forward, striking repeated blows.

Bang.the revolver was discharged but its bullet went harmlessly into the dirt, an and joice now crying for mercy, letthe revolver slip from her fingers.Deldon leaped to his feet., breaking open the wa pon and dropping the cartridges into his hand, thence to oneof his pockets, while omer took the other from her.

''No Now stop and let her up. ''Directed Homer as Deldon started to give her anot another pummel lling.

''Joice if you ain't as meak as a lamb and as obedient as a dog, wo'll cut you into pieces right here, and take out your tongues, eyes and ha heart.''said Homer. Poor oice got to her feet, a limp and spiritless miserable object.Deldon walked beside her and held her fast by the arm.

''Hold her firm and fast.''Homer directed.You peldon walk beside her.I'll keep behind the desperate little Prisoner.Joice don't try to make any breaks unless you wn want to be strangled to death and even have your intestines taken out.Also our paience is already ouid with you drat Angelinian and Abbiesannian dogs.''

hey marched Joice back to the nearest house, but now she saw a chance and giving a sudden spring, she struck them each a blow in their stomachswith her head in the fashion of a billy goat and knocked them sprawli g sprawling, and quicnly got away ag i again.Quickly as he could get up, Deldon went into a drug store and entering a tolephone booth called up headquarters.

''Hello.Is this general Wide Awakes headquarters!Os this is general Wide Awake is it.Say four of those ivian irl Princess's got away together to night.We still ré retain the other three.I'll betthe four are on their way to the besieging christian lines.Send some troops tward orma's Bridge and also Jennies Bridge and we might recapture them.There are four of the little runaways .They are spies.''

Deldon jammed the reciever back into its place, and darted out of the drug store and joined general Homer who was brushing the snow from his clothes(better if it was mud).Likemad the two generals darted along Dell-Mell-Tall-Mell- street, tward the approach of the bridge which ran across the Norma's Run iver, which river ran near the outskirts of the city.Just as they reached that point near the out skirts of the city four beautiful little girls disguised as Calverinian children hoved into sight from along the river front and started to climb the hilly street that led upwards tward the great bridge.

''''Dollars to doughnuts those are the vey Abbiesannian child Princess's themselves'' exclaimed Deldon to himself, he and Homer standing quickly behind a huge post, and watched the poor little girls as t hey reached thelevel of the great bridge, and turned tward the direction of the christian lines.The little girls were walking with hurried steps and Deldon and omer dreading that the little girls were armed with weapons dodged behind the uprights of the immense bridge, hoping that the little girls would not u urn or see them, or that the guards on the bridge would capture them.It also was their idea of gèting as close to the little girls as possible, see their faces, and then maybe get back, and tell genwal wide Awake where they could be found.Q

At their best w walking gate the four little girls hurried on tward the Norma gatherine side of the great river going down the incline on the approach way to a landelinian saloon.Not far from there they halted, turned and looked around, but general Deldon and Homer had darted into the shadow of a station at the side to the approach of the great Bridge andcouldnot be seen.Then one of the little girls who was joice ivian crossed the wide street, walked into a narrow alley, and disappeared while the three other little girls stood and waaited.

A moment later a flash of light was seen from a window in the upper floor of a dingy old three so story frame house, and the little girls moving or waiting across the street moved forward.just then there came the clackety, cl: clackety sound of landelinian cavarly on the stone pavement of the street, and they soon came thundering forward along the bridge, the horses going at full tilt, and the three other little girls halted.Deldon darted out of his hiding pla place to stop the oncoming cavarly, followed by Homer both thinking that general Wide Awake was leading them, and in fact he was.The cavarly numbered two hundred and fitythmene.

''General wide Awakw W k Awake .General Wide Awake.''cried omer throwing himself in front of the cavarly leader. Quickly the cavarly leaders horse was brought to a stop, the force of cavarly men also halting, and the voice of general Wide Awake a spoke;

''YIs that you general Deldon and Homer''with a salute''where are the little escaped Abbiesannian ueens ueens.''?

And as he asked the quest ion, omer swung to point th e place, but the litt,e girls had disappeared, having entered the house.

''they went in that house upsars up stairs.I saw them go in the little fools.'' said Deldon pointing to thedingy place two hundred yards away standing directly in the glare of an arch , light.Quickly general Wide Awakeurged his horse forward, ordering the cavarly to follow, and they clattered tward the house, which Deldon and Homer indicaad indicated.Deldon and Homer raced along side the cavarly as they thundered near the bridge reachig the place almost at the same ti e time.Asthere were great and tall houses along the street all the way to the b bridge, this dingy oldwooden house could not be surrounded.General Wide Awake leaped from his horse and started up the side steps in the alley.Deldon and HomerHomer were right right behind him as general Wide Aw k Awake reached the top, and demanded entrance, pounding fiercely at the door.

Within the door there was a hasty scuffling, and then four loud reports, as four guns were discharged through the center of the door.Whirr.Whiz,sing,sing.Four bullets whistled and sang through the air going past Deldons face, and the landelinin landelinian general ducked back, as if trying to dodge the mi missle.The only reason the bullets had not found a lodging place in any of them was that they had taken a p position to one side to watch for the coming of the ivian irls of or one of them through the door. Again there was a scuffling and general Wide Awakw utt ered a loud yell

''Oh help me boys.I'm shot.I'm shot.''

He was not shot, but only gave this cry thinking that the children would come to the door, and thus be nabbed.But a sound came from the rear as of glass breaking and like as if some one had gone through a window.The false cry of general Wide Awake had not drawn any of the little girls to the door.Instantly the cavarly general threw his full strength ag i ag against the door, smashing in one of the panels.quickly he reached a hand through the aperture, reached for the lock, turned the key, and with a shout threw openthe door n and burst intothe room. Just then the fourth of the little angelic girls went through a rear window to an old rotten porch at the back, and generas generals Wide Awake, Deldon, and Homer got to the window in time to see four the four little girls reach the bottom of the steps in the back yard and race for the alley.

''back that way.''Ordered general wide Awake darting back the way he had come by the steps two at a time, Deldon and omer right behind him.violet and her three sisters having seen a buggy standing on the side of the street with a horse hitched to it, leaped into the vehicle, and as general Wide Aw k a wake reached the bottom ste step, violet swung the whip sharply across the horses side, the animal reared a second, then plunged down the street at breakneck speed, the four little girls hanging inside the buggy.Instantly General Wide Awake whipped out his gun, and brought it to a quick level, ordering every cavarly man to mount anew and give persuit fullspeed.

General Homer merely rag nudged.Then bang,bang,bang.Three well directed and well aimed shots were sent flying after the little b girls by gen general Wide Awake.Two bullets took effect.The horse wavered and fell into the street, the buggy was upset and fell with a crash, but the four girls tender as t they were were unhury and fairly seemed to leap from the wreckage of the buggy and start for an alley.After them, general wide Awake, Deldon and Homer went, followed by the others.Deldon took the lead.Up the alley he went at full speed, swung into it and saw the four little girls dartl darting ale g the narrow passage way nearly a bloc away.Little as they were they could run faster than many children bigger than themselves, and they even seemed to beat the landelinians in their sprinting.Like a dear Deldon leaped along after them, taking evet every chance of striking rubbish or other obstacles, which might be hidden in the snow of the dirty alley.Two blocks they covered at full speed, but peldon had gained n only half a block on them, and as the little human angels wheeled into a street and started for the river the cruel landelinian general was right after them with wide Awake general Homer and some of the wildly racing cavarly men considerably in the rear. peldon swung the corner and sped after the four little girls who now after firing seveseveral volleys of shots that narrowly missed Deldon, crossed the street and started southwestward along a fro cross street.

Instead of rushing to the center of the street, where he might dodge to and fro Deldon took to the walk and dashed for that corner.A quick pistol butt came out at him, he darted straight into it, and the impact sent him flying from his feet, and made him see a cloud of stars.Pitty, pat, he heard the retreating feet of the child fugitives a he scrambled to his feet, and rubbed his eyes, his head swinging back and forth, his eyes dancing from the awful force of the blow.

Had it landed in the right spot it might have m killed him.General Wide Awake and the rest came darting out of the alley up the street heading straight for this corner, and seeing him general omer helped Deldon to his feet.

''which way did they go the young gutternipsI hate them for this''He shouted and as he said this the others caught sight of them to the south, fully a block, and going likethe wind.Deldon could barely stand, but Homer and the others went after them full -pelt, gaining on them every inch.It was plainer that they were the better men physically, and that violet and her sisters could not stand their own furious pc pace for long.Deldon staggered to his feet, leaned against the wall, and rubbed his eyes for a moment, trying to g regain himself, at the same time keeping his eyes on the street or at the street whither the four children and the persuecing Glandelinians went.

Then feeling himself able he started down the street..

''Gone tward the river.''He muttered to himself.''ow's the time.''

As he increased his speed and made for the river, he suddenly caught sight of a figure in the middle of the street, with five landelinians stooping over him, and three lay dead on the sidewalk.Crossing quickly he stooped over to see who it was.It was general wide Awake.thelittle girls somehoe somehow had laid him out. They also had shot down threeof the landelinians who almost had them and this occured near the sidewalk.Deldon with the help of several others tried to lift the man a little, and saw that he was just beginning to stir.

''General wide Awake''He called''General wide Awake.Are you all right.?''''

the man merely groaned and tried to rise instinctively knowing that he had a wicked duty yet to perform.Deldon helped lift the man to his feet, where he stood leaning on the gensal general and felt about to see if he was alright.gmiling with a silly silly grin at deldon and the others general Wide Awake muttered between his teeth;

''Those little Abbiaannian girl Princess got me clanclean that time sure.Got me before I could shoot and even too my guns with them and killed three of my men whose horses being frae ran away.Gee that little girl they call Joice Vivian soaked me a d daisy on the head.''

''Look''shouted Deldon pointing to the same hill leading twq rd the bridge which they had climbed a few minute before.''Just the way they did a littlewhile ago, and all four of them are there.''

While he said these words general Homer caught sid sight of the four little girls saw that Deldon was right as to the number but had no way of knowing if they were the same little girls.In a moment they had reached the top of the great Bridges approach, and again started for the other side, this time one who looked like Joice taking a fifty yard lead before the next who was indeed Violet started, the last two girls following in behind th e second at the same distance.

''Going to keep from being followed at on ce''as Deldon ni mudged the general. ''They did not t ravel that way before.''Or maybeit is to fool the sentries on the bridge.''

General Homer merely mudged and waited for the last of the little girls to move away from the head of the bridge, before he beckoned to general Deldon to come on.

Stepping from out of their cover, general Homer took the lead to one side of the bridge and staggering like a drunken man, gained a little on the rear Vivian girls who also was a hundred feet in the lead of the others .giving him as I said before, the lead general Homer and De don left t he hiding place and walked straight at the opposite side and Deldon increasing his speed passed general Homer in a short while,and gained a little more on the hindermost of the four girls. The leader Joice Vivian was seen on the middle ofvthe bridge but was hailed by some of the guards and instead of answering to the challenge she turned to the left and came back her sisters following and entered the alley to another house nearest the bridge darting to the foot of the approach and q quickly disappeared. a moment later the second little girl, Violet did the same trick.When only about fifty yards in the lead the third and fourth girl dropped out of sight, nd general Deldon saw they entered a small boat house on the river street.Quickly and quietly he scampered to the deck of the boat house, saw a small boat with a moored there with a rope instead od of a chain, whispered to general Homer for a knife, cut the rope in two, signalled to Homer to drop in, which he did, and throwing the oars inside the locks, gave a good push to the rowboat, and sent it i intothe river and the persuit was on in general.

''Have those little Abbiaannian Princess seen us yet?''Asked Deldon as he swung into the current of the large river and started for the middle, following in the wake of the others.

''Not yet''answered Homer.''They are not pulling h hard either.''

But in a moment later the oars in the first boat stopped for two seseconds, a girlish voice was plainly heard, and then diving suddenly at the oars the little girls sister Joice who was handling them began to send them into the water with quick sweeps dashing the water at a great rate but getting speed out of the boat.

''Pull a little harder Deldon.The little Abbiaannian Princess's have seen or heard us and they are pulling like the deuce.''Cried Homer.

General Homer now pulled out his gun and made ready, first examining it to see that every chamber f was filled.The next moment he made the movement to pull out his cartridge belt and place it on his knees.

''That'sgood keep her coming like that.''So muttered while Deldon boat evenly andregularly at the oars.Deldon was a good oarsman.He had practised much and he had several times found that accomplishment held him in good stead.They were moving south along the river with the current, and Deldon though he was pulling at a good rate of speed was not feeling the task as if he had fought gainst the curent, having to pull more sharpyl sharp sharply and with shorter cutting strokes.Minute after minute went by, Deldon feeling the exertions of the hard work but knowing the other little girl in the boat must be getting tired at the same time.

''The little Angelinian princess are hitting it up for Nadons Ferry on the other side ''Cried Homer.

''Neldons Ferry''muttered Deldon between his teeth.''Neldon Ferry.Did Homer mean to say that they had traveled no further than Neldons Ferry a little distance of less than a mile in this time time.Neldons Ferry!''Deldon felt as if he had sent the boat as far as Norma Catherine or Andrean himself anyhow.

''Take her to port just a little.''Commanded Homer as a shot whizzed past him. ''They must be getting lose t o the landing.''Thought Deldon''else Homer would not be-calling directions.

''All A littlemore to port.Now straight ahead.That's the trick.''Exclaimed the chief general as he saw the boat veer just s as he had directed.In changing their direction under under these orders they had necessarily lost speed but thought Deldon ''Those young Abbiaannian Princess had also to change direction, and they lost speed too.That some consoling thought.''

''Now watch where you are going.''harged Homer not able to give direction so close were they to the landing.Deldon wheeled in the boat still dp dipping his oars to hold the boat in its course across the stream, and saw where they were, close to the Norma Catherins side of the river, while thevlittle girls ahead were almost already lost to land among the nearest buiodings.Now they had only gained fifty yards stretched between themHomer quickly raised his gun and fired as fast as he could at the four little girls as they disembarked, while Deldon bent once more to the oars, and putting the boat at the landing with all his strength.Bang,bang,bang, bang,bang.went five shots fired by Violet and herosisters two of them firing two time more the bullets six of them striking in the water at the side of the w bont throwing the water in little fountians.Deldon bent again and sent the boat rapidly down the stream striking at the soft ground at t he side of the landing, the boat going far in,n and als almost throwing them out with the force, with which it stopped. The four little girls went up the bank and were dashing along the river road, toward the south at all speed.

''We have got to get them before they get into that park.''yelled Homer leaping away for the road his gun in his hand.Deldon also with gun in hand followed along side .

''Now is the time when we sprint.''said Homer.

The bright faced moon of a Cold December night, was throwing its rays over the snow covered earth, lighting up the river scene, and making plain the four little girls who raced down the street toward the park to the south of the Ferry Landing. Deldon took lead almost instantly and gained on the four littlegirls who turned from the street and dreated off into the park toward a thick thick thick clump of brush, which boarded the cite city limit limits a quarter of a mile inward.

''Go after the young Abbiaannian Princess's.''yelled Homer quite a few yards in the rear.Increasing his speed he leaped over the roughest places with ea asy bounds, his eyes changing every second from the little girl fugitives in front of the park roadwya which he traveled, and toward a terrible blz black cloud rising into the sky like a stir storm approaching filling filled with a lurid glow as if some mighty volcano was in eruption.

''Bang.''

One of the little girls turned, stood for a moment, and as Deldon and Homer kept up their swift pace fired..

''Gee ouch.''owled Deldon as he felt a severe twinge in his left shoulder.

''Got you!''Yelled Homer.

But general Deldon did not reply.He stopped on the instant, leveled his gun, and pulled the trigger..Bang.bang.two quick shots he sent after the little girl girl fugitive, and there was a cry of pain as the child dropped in her tracks.

''Got her.''yelled Homer again jumping away to see what Deldon had done to the little girl.As this was being enacted, and as the sky began to assume a strange red flickering color, the other three little girls, at the command of the fourth girl who had fallen sharply in the meadow to the southward, and peldon wheeled and started after them alone.Almost to the clump of bushes were the three children , and peldon had gained enough so that the distance was less than seventy yards. The red light had now became so bright that it seemed as if the sky was on fire, while in the distance the surprised persuers and fugitives saw a big piller of cloud rising high into the air.Deldon however pain paid no further attention to it, and halting raised his gun, and leaning on the crook of his left elbow he took steady and careful aim.Bang.The second little girl too, tottered and fell just as the other two went into the clump of bushes, and was lost to sight.Deldon dashed straight ahead reaching the side of the little girl who had fallen, just as that desperate little Jennie raised a gun and fired point blank.Deldon saw the gleam of the weapon in the red glare of the distant fire or conflargra conflargration, and fell to the ground like a flash, almost at the feet of the little girl, and the bullet went coursing through the air above him.Then Deldon leaped along the ground toward the little girls legs, and grabbed them, giving a quick jerk, and as the little girl again turned her weapon on the Glandelinian general and dir fired.Bang.This time the bullet went to one side, hurled that was way as Deldon h gave the tender legs a wrench and displaced the weapons position.Another quick leap forward, and he had the little girl by the wirst, and was struggling with her for a moment, wrenching the gun out of her hands, grabbing the weapon from the little girl, with one knee on the chest--leveled the weapon at her and gave his orders;

''Get Get up your hands ye little devil.Throw them up quick or I'll send you to heaven quicker than you think you'll go.''

Bang.his-i-i-i-i-i.

A bullet darted through the air right off the shoulders of the wicked old Glandelinian general, the flash coming from the brush.Another came narrowly missing his head.The other two little girls were offering offensive fight.They were trying to protect their two wounded sisters.Deldon stopp stooped to the ground quickly and looked for the two little girls to raise their weapons somewhere toward th that brush, but there was only a loud crackling and no more shots.

VIOLET AND HER THREE SISTERS ARE CAPTURED AGAIN.....

66 ''WHERE are yer hit ye little Abbiesannian Princess.''Asked Deldon with commise cond considerable roughness.
''In the left leg.''answered the fallen child , pointing to the limb, and while both opposing foes were startled by a str nge loud booming roar in the distance which resembled thunder, only was more profound and too continuous.
''got any more guns Ye devil children?''He asks this timemore roughly.
Jeanie did not answer, squirming to one side a little, hoping that the roaring of distant cannon wouldscarehor persuers and safe her yet.
''Turn over on the other side Princess.''Instantly commanded the Glandelinian general..
The desperate little girl turned a little, but not enough, and Deldon delivered an another order for her to turn.Then he stooped quickly, raised his hands hastily up and down the litt le girls side, loa locating a weapon, and stuck his hand beneath the little girls coat to obtain it. .Deldon re lizing that the little girl could do no more harm, likea flash leaped tward the brush several yards away, and started after the other two little girls, as gunner came running up.
Breaking through the brush he made for the direction of the crackling and crashing of bushes which soon stopped.Then Deldon halted an the instant.Neweadered two thing things.''were the two othr little girls out of the other sideof the undergrowth or had they halted again to show fight.sneaking quaitly along, trying to be careful of the noise he made, Deldon listened as he stepped forward, waiting for the ther other sounds which would locate the other two little girls for him.
there came none, and he again grew wary and cautious as he advanced.suddenly there was the quick snap of a twig, and Deldon dropped to the ground like a flash ,as th that bob boded ill, that snap.just that instant there was a heavy detonation.Two guns exploded simultanscusly almost directly in front of him, but the flash of the gunfire went above his head.Bang.bang.snap.Two shots he fired in answer below the line of the great flash, and then the ammunition in his own weapo was gone.
''I'm shot.''ooaned the two children, only a few yards, and Deldon leaped forward tward the place like a phantercafter its prey..ith all the fire thatthat the danger and excitement of the chase had given him, he leaped on top of the two childrem, who had beenshot down at his hands, and grasped away the weapons, with a pent up fury which knew no bounds.
'''Ohe shot.I'm shot.''the two children continued to moan..with one of their weaponscin his hands, his own back to its hostler now, Deldon quickly felt the childrens pockets for the other weapons.There was one on each but the shells were gone.
''id you get them too?''asked Homer darting through the brush at the sound of the words, which told of the children being shot.Deldon answered that he had gotten the twovPrincess'es wh who were merely shot in both legs..Dragging the chilren children to give them room, gomer lifted both from the ground and carried the little girls to the edge of the brush, and had just time to throw themselves to the ground, when there came the frightful roar of some gigantic explosion, and a great cloud of debris, snow and earth passed clear over them, the w explosion sweeping everything like a windstorm clears everything awa y in its path..It was / lucky that the Glandelinians had the presence of mind of throwing themselves to the ground, else the explosion would have killed them..hey were almost buried under two feet of debris and snow but they managed to get out of it and just as the Glandelinians got on their feet again and removed the children from the earth, they were startled by a cry;
''Throw your hands up.'' a nd from the dead grass in the undamaged brushwood a weapon glinted in the red light.Like a giant the general gomer lifted the shoulders of the two injured little girls higher on each side, brought them weakly to their feet, supported the little girls there, and was behind them.POn the instant peldon had leaped aside and thrown his hands up.
''Throw your own hands up you fool.''came the hoarse command of Homer from behind his bulwark.From under the arms of Violet a gun flashed out, but afraid that her two sisters or one of them would be killed or hurt by her own shot the desperate little Abbisannian in the dried grass lowered her gun, and Deldon instantly leaped forward to grab it.It was the weweapon he had hurled down when he had leaped at the second child.

CHAPTER THREE.
THE POOR LITTLE ABBISSANNIAN PRINCESS GO ON TRIAL. ITS RESULT.

IT took fully an hour to get the four little girls to the boat, though each of the four were able to walk without some assistance,but they offered every resistance they could, untillthe two Glandelinians were enraged and strangled them untill they were almost helpless.Deldon had brought all four of the little girls down ,and it was very lucky each of the wounds were in the lower limbs, a place which soscon heals up, and which ra very rarely leaves any effe ts effects.

"''Eight o-clock''exclaimed Homer s as he leaped u cuid of the boat, and tied a rope around one of the shore pilings.The high big tower clock in Vivian Dickey was booming out the hours.There were a few men on the warfe but they paid little heed to the landing of th tethe two boats, one which h Homer had pulled to his par part of the city, the other pulled by Deldon.

''Climb out you little Abbisannian Princes Princesses.Get cuid.''Those legs are not so very bad.''Yelled Homer indicating the shore, and beckoning to the little girls to desembarke.A few minutes later, they ha had the wagon at the landing and the four little girls were loaded in, and were tx taken to the Glandelinian he headquart ers, the doctor being called, the wounds dressed, and indeed it was the first time the Glandelinians had ever shown such mercy of dressing the wounds of the christian children.

At the preliminary Court Marshall trial that morning none of the little girls would answer an a question.Absolutely nothing could be obtained from them, either about the fire at the Dell-Mell-Tell-Hell penitentary, a or about the stolen jewerly.They were stubborn and defiant to theutmost degree.

''Clear the court room.''Peremptarily ordered the general acting as the judge after the examantion had proceeded for some time, and nothing could be obtained from Violet and her sisters about the fire. ith every one out of the room save the Glandelinian officials of the army defading the city, and who had charge of these departments, the judge looked sharply at Violet and her sisters, thought of the questions with w ich he would shower upon them and said;

''Prisoners at the bar.We have sufficient evidence against you to send you down to the slaughter trough, which has been unharmed by the greatest building fire in the world.We will give you little rascals thechanceof saving yourselves from the most horrible death by recommendation to the grand jury of Glandelinia, if you tell the truth about that fire right now and also of the stolen property belonging to the chief guard.Your silence and the evidence which have been aduced aduced , seems to show that some oneelse led the way of rescue through that burning dragon image.Is th at a fact?Remember what punishment comes if you do not tell the truth ''.

There was silence for a moment among the people gathered in the room waiting for one of the Abbissannian Princess to say something.

''Who in the world led you and your sisters saftly through the monster, and who gave you command to rescue the child slaves against our wills in that fire.And ye Princess's of Abbissannia who dare defy us,who also paid you to set fire to the Dell-Mell-Tell-Mell Penitentary.and forced one of our Glandelinian soldiers to sent a letter back to King Robert Vivian telling him of the condition of the besieged, and which he recieved before he we knew it!''

This produced a great sensation in the Glandelinian courtroom, wen though only officers were there ,and they were pretty well acquainted with all crimes against Glandelinia.Still Violet and her sisters in the prisoners dock were quite resolved at no m matter what the cost not to tell on their boy friend.

''I'll give you one minute to make reply.'' hreatened the cruel Glandelinian magistrate as he drew his watch.''One minute to answer.After that time you will be bound over to the grand juey of Glandelinia, and all the evidence we can st stack up against youwill cau cause your cruel death.

A minute passed and not a word came from the seven little Princess.

''I don't believe I ever was so ttired before.''Exclaimed James Gannon as he suddenly entered the room with two men, and dropping on a louns lounge noticing that general Deldon the owner of the Prison was there with the magistrate.

''It was a hard fight alright''captian Gannon.''And you will get something for it.''aswered Deldon smiling benevolently at the Glandelinian fire captian.

''But there is something more important right now Captian.'' began the judge or magistrate pulling over some reports and other papers which were on his desk.

We ''we are up against something which looks like if it is going to be a bad''

Jm James Gannon pulled himself up to an upright position and glared at the magestrate.His words certainly portended of some kind of serious trouble, and trouble would always pull James Gannon out of any kind of weariness.

''''What is thetrouble''The as ked quickly.

''General Deldon says his fireman and engineer told him last night that the Dell-Mell-Tell-Mell Penitentiary was set on fire.''said the magestrate.

''We have sent for these two men and we'll gear hear what they have to say.General Deldon says that it was these little Abbisannian Princess's in the prisoners dock who did it... ''
Gannon stared at his friend in blank amazement.
''Violet and her sisters had done it?''He gasped.
At this juncture the fireman and the engineer of the Pell-Mell-Tell-Mell prison came into the courtroom.
''Captian James Gannon.I want to tell you what I think of the way you did out there at the biggest fire in the city.''Exclaimed the engineercatching sight of the brave Clandelinian fireman siting on the lounge nar the magestrate.''I never saw a fellow do things like that in all my life, but it is a sure thing that you raised the reward in saving the dangerous powder wing.I would not have given twenty thousand dollars for your chanceson the powder wing ither, when you started in there. It was great.That's what , great.''
Captian Gannon smiled at this exclemanatio n of the appreciative fir engineer, and turned to the magestrsate, as that Clandelinian judge spoke to the engineer immediately.;
''Mr Dunn Towel.General Deldon tells me that you stated last night, that you thought the fire in the prison was set by firebugs, or start ed by some one, and that you know by whom?''began the m g ,a magestrate.
Dunn Towel looked at the magestrate and then at Deldon before giving a reply.
''Yes your honor.I said that to general Deldon and its no thought about it.
I and the fireman saw four of the seven Vivian Girls and a boy slipping out from the main entrance at noon, but not at first knowing who they were, we did not pay much attention to them. It was just after we saw them that the fire started up in the main hall.It first began inside the mo nster..You see we do not work the monster, but once a week, and this was the lay off time..And there was no man in thes there when the fire startod.''
''Did you see anything of them later to make you believe that four of these seven prisoners had anything to do with the starting ofvthe fire?''Asked the magest rate.
''Yes your honor.I was just coming to that.When we heard the yell of fire, I ran our out of the egine room of th e black slaughter house to seewhere it was, so that we could start the hose on it, when these seven Vivian Girl Princess with severi other little girls making mine altogether ran out of the building by the main entr nce entrance, while the fire was blazing far across the street, the children also rushing accross and disappearing among the crowd which had gathered.
A moment later I saw them go to th e rear of the crowd, but I think not think of hs having any suspicion of them just then.''
''hat did you do them?''Asked the magestrate .
''I called the firemen and told him to send in the alarm for the fire department, and then I got the hose started, but it was cut right there in the hall in the wing where the fire was.''
''You are sure the hose was cut?''Quest ioned the magestrate.
''es your honor.''nswered the fireman while the engine engineer nodded.''That hose was cut because when we turned on the stream at the engine room, and when I went to get the nozzle nozzle, the t ing spurted all over me, and almost drowned me.''
''Don't you think the hose was cut before the fire started, or might it not have been cut some other time, maybe severalweeks ago?''Asked the magestrate.
''No your honor if you will excuse me.''Answered the fireman whose name was James Padline'''I went there that very morning and saw that the hose was alright. Sure that's my job every morning and evening, to see if the hose is alrighy alright, and that the plugs is good .''
Deldon nodded his head at h this statement showing that they were the orders which he had delivered long since to his men.
''The fireman is right about t hat''he spoke up.''You are sure mr Padline that you really examined the hose this morning?''
''Yes sir.''
''Are you sure''QuwQuestioned the judge turning to the fireman.
''Yes your honor.That is my first job always in the morning, and it is to go over the morning and night shift and see about the hose.''
''Now about these seven prisoners''Said the magestrate turning once again to the engineer engineer.''You say you saw four of these little Vivian Girls, Jennie, Joice, Violet and Angeline with a boy run to the crowd, and immedaitely go to the rear.''?
The engineer engineer replied that was right.
''How did he mention it?''Asked the magestrate.

''Why after the fire started, and we got all the men out of the prison and were outside, and while the smoke was pouring from the building like an erupting volcano Padline said he thought four of these Vivian Girls whose names were just mentioned led by a boy and several other children who were child slaves must have started the fire, and then cut the hose.It surely is true because they with other child slaves were in the building and no one else when the fire started.''

CHAPTER FOUR.

A VERY ANXIOUS TIME. A MURDEROUS NATION.. VIOLET, AND HER SISTERS ARE ARRESTED. A THRILLING ES RESCUE, AND TTHE ESCAPE OF HETTIE, AND DAISY, FROM A TERRIBLE DEATH.

Deldon laughed a little as he saw the shudder over the fireman''You may as well shiver captian for that place was loaded for bear all right, for one wing is an ammuntition factory...''He said.

T he magistrate now turned to t he little girls.

''You are the important vivian girls are you not.?''

''Yes but we are innocent of any crime.''Answered violet.

''What made you steal those jewels?''Asked the Magestrate.''You are said to be christians and yet ye act worse than we do.''

''We did not steal them and we are telling the truth.''Answered violet Some one put them into our pockets, and then got us into it.''

''I did not say you stole them. Violet vivian, and wait untill you are asked to spa a speak on that other subject.''Thundered the magestrate.''We do not allow any inte interuption here in the court. And as we cannot get you to answer the quesio questions about the fire and who the boy was who told you to commit the rescues, we will sentence you to that horrible death and witi within two days.Deldon you may keep them in the slaughter house till the time for thir execution comes .''

'It was indeed right, that the penetentairy was set on fire, but violet and her sisters were innocn innocent, but truthfully if the Glandelinians had known they were innocent the sentencewould have bea been imposed upon them, because the magistrate was very wicked, n and did sects secretly enjoy the fact that the vivian girls could not prove their innocence, and was glad that so many of the poor child prisoners had perished in the ruins, and it was therefore without any reason that the crue, cruel sentence was imposed upon them. Indeed they had known who the re real rascal was but would not recall the sentence, though neverthel ess they did their best also to have the real culprit caught, though even if they had to rake the world through and th through for him. The man who had placed the sticks of dynimite in the captians o pocket, was the one who had set the penetentairy on fire, and the Glandelinians knowing it had a thousand detectives on his trail in a few hours and he was captured. The Glandelinians no matter whether they be good or bad are never the ones to be trifled with under any circumstances whatever and there is never anything they threaten they would not do, and who would he be who would even dare to try stop them when they are once aroused.-No matter who ever he was who set the fire,, whether he be a revengeful Glandelinian who may have had some grude on the owner because he had been refused to have the permission to join in the massacre at Norma Catherine or Calverine as it is called, or whether he be some angered Angelinian w he had no- buisness to set the penetentairy on fire, and I agree myself with the Glandelinians and say that any kind of the worse punishment would be too good to give to any one who ever committed such a terrible crime, for not that I would st ick for the Glandelinian cause, for there is a war raging and burning property of an enemy is just in war, but he or they who did the work ought to have known that there were thousands of children locked up in that immense ammunitio ammunition works and he or they was fully responsible for the death of the seven hundred children who perished in the dreadful fire. It was later on found out that seven Glande linians set the fire though who the thief was who put the things int o the pockets of violet and her sisters it could never be found out. The seven captured Glandelinians who set the fire were charged with high treason no matter if they did cauge cause the deaths of their hated christi ian en enemies, and their sentence was death.

the engineer and fire men were now allowed to go, while the magestrate, the owner of the building,, and james gannon and also Homer talked over the matter again while the vivian girls were being cross examined or quizzed by the judge.

''That is what I thought it was from where I was''said Deldon''the fire should not have been able to make such a great spread before the firemen got here if it was not set on fire.And great goodness Deldon, did you not notice that the fire was seperate, and distinct in five places!''

''hen it suddenly dawned on James Gannon that this was certainly correct. The fire had raged in fivedid different places, each one distinct from the others and all having been fought at different times.

''That's right your honor.''Exclaimed James Gannon''We h d had to fight at five different places.The first one which was the worse blew up before we got our lead started and then there was the center rear, and two sided p r part of the wing. It was in the front where the explosion occured, at the first where the girls and their boy companion ran out.You could hardly think that little girls of such exceeding beauty would content themselves of being the greatest firebugs the world ever knew.''

''And there was where the hose was located.''Said Deldon.''You see also that it was the place of the dragon image, and we were always careful about that part of the rear wing as there wer were gasoline vats there and also great tanks, which may have caused the explosion, which toppled over the first fire engine that gots got in its way and killed the two horses pulling it and its driver and fireman.''

''what made you so anxious about the rear wing then?''Asked the magestrate soberly.

''Anxious?Man who would not have been anxious.Don't you know there was enough munitions, powder, shells, dynimate and other explosives enough in that rear wing to have blown up the whole southern districts of Vivian Vickey and dug a mile crater in her.Don't you know that those firemen fought back the fierce flames from a place that would have probably tumbled over every house in this big city if th ey had not stopped it in time.Don't you know there was really more than six hundred and fifty thousand car loads of f dyminite and t thousands of tons of other explosives in that wing!''Quickly asked Deldon, and the thought of this startled Gannon, and as he realized the chances he had real y really taken, he suhshuddered perceptibly.

started.''

Violà and her sisters however were liberated once more by the craftiness of Gertrude who had sepnt those days in searching for them, and who hd been among the crowd in disguise who witnessed the great fire. So no many times already Violet and her sisters had been made prisoners by the Glandelinians, they could not keep them and so Violet and her sistes could indeed thank God that he allowed them such luck as to again escape out of their grasp.

THE BATTLE ALONG THE NORMA RUN KNOWN AS THE BATTLE AS CAT'S PAW.....

When general Gunte had heard of the terrible massacrea, that was taking place in Norma, and of the imprisonment and escape of general Vivians wife and general Hansons wife, and also of the great scenes ele elsewhere in Norma, of the ill t reatement of the Vivian Girls, and of the Glandelinians sett ing fire to the Dell-Hell-Tell-Mell- Penentemat Pententairy he was furious. He hahad been making preparation to make a seige had had it well under way, and during the time or after his recent struggle he had changed his positions and had concentrated a large army of his troops on a portion of the banks of N r Norma Run called Cat's paw, and soon as some of the excitement in Norma had slackened down he decided to renew the struggle for the possession of Norma Catherine or Calvarine which ever it was called. He again defeated the Glandelinians in a terrific conflict during the first fourty eight hours after the st opping of the excitement, and extended his long lines tward the ford of Kennith Casey Pine, and moved forwa forward to make the seige.

THE BATTLE OF HENRIETTIAS PLAINS:

Six days after the small battle of Cat's Paw he advanced about three hundred thousand men to force an immense body of Glandelinians from their positions on t a large plain known as Henriettias.The Glandelinian positions on theseplains were heavily guarded by the bibgest guns ever seen in an army , and guarded by a force of I,400,000 Glandelinians.Near their position was a convent caloed by the name of the plains in which there had been about five thousand prisoners, the fewest being porters, the rest nuns priests and children. The children had been the most , there having been one thousand boys, and three thousand six hundred fifty five girls all of whom had bea been massacred. The convent was now used as a sort of fort. The first attack was begun while the second fourty eight hours massacre in Norma Catherine was progressing, and two hundred and twenty five thousand men were personally led tward the convent, and these were led by Kennith Josie. These swept forward tward the convent, while the rest of the christ ians were to engage the main line, but their assault was unsuccessful, and Kennith Josie was wounded. At the same time the christian batteries under general gparring began hammering fearful volleys upon the fortifications of the enemy on the plains, while three hundred and thirty thousand more were led against the convent. cofor th the second time.

Adelsa-de-garbe who was in command at this time of the army on the plains was excited by the movements of the Angelinians and Abyssinkilians, and prepared his whole force for action. On came the Abyssinkilians, and Angelinians, and they made ten combined assaults the contest raging fiercely for ten hours, but ten times they were repulsed with frightful loss.

Simultaneously general John West led forward the three hundred and fifty thousand men under a deadly fire against the fortified convent. Heavy volleys were poured upon the christians from every window window and doors that mowed them down like grass, but after this repulse they came g again rushing with tremendous fury, but again the eefects of the enemys fire was frightful the Angelinian brigades being literally torn to pieces. The convent itself was armed with artillery of the smallest kins, and ma machine guns which opened a galling fire of grape and canister upon the christians which again checked them, but seeing that it must be captured to secure the point for the christian line they only rallied and went on again pressing forward furiously, but soon encountered such an annihilating from all of the enemys guns, that their leaders were again compelled to order their men to retire. Bunte sent them reinforcements and again they swept forward to the attack, and though masses of the Angelinians themselves were wiped out, and the Angelinians recoiled in confusion the Abyssinkilians themselves continued on with wild yells, and rushed right up t o the enemys position, but again encountered a murderous fire that withered their whole whole front line.But amid the dreadful carnage having no orders to retire the man tens of thousands of survivors swarmed over the works, and after furious fight ing for three hours at close quarte quarters drove the enemy from the position and back twa tward their comrades defending the convent, and after another fearful struggle succeeded in capturing the convent which they surrounded on all sides, but these being the furious hot headed Abyssinkilians gave the enemy no quarter and massacred all they took as prisoners.

The number who fell defending the convent was about twenty five thousand. Though now the convent was captured, the enemys main line still held its ground. Here the Angelinians had charged against the Glandelinian positin position again and again with tremendous fury losing twenty thousand in each succession of onslaughts, while at the same time to add to all the slaughter the distant Glandelinian batteries of cannon on the hills along the vinicity were massed upon the attacking columns.A tremendous cannonading burst forth with t the tremendous uproar of some great volcanic eruption and to add to all this other Glandelinian cannon, centemeters, parrot guns, mortars, kruppt guns, and all kinds of nine inch guns swelled in with their tremendous grandeur pouring frightful volleys of shot and shell upon the christians.The roar of II,345 guns on the enemys sides was deafening, but it was soon added to that of Buntes christian artillery, which soon hammered back in spasmodic reply, and the whole scene in the region of the battle seemed covered with thousands of bewildering explosions, which seemed to smother the landscape under the smoke pall. Being fully determined to force Adele-de-garbe from the plains, Bunts having withdrawn the other forces which were del depleted sent two million fresh troops to assault the enemys position, and these swept forward across the plain like the movements of a series of waves.They disolved away in brigades, but though some of the column swayed and fell back the rest pressed on with d dauntless courage, and over the works with wild yells poured the Abyssinkilians, and Glandelinians and Abyssinkilians closed the hand to hand fight being awful. For a moment these Abyssinkilian troops were checked in their onward rus h by reinforcements suddenly hurled upon them, and their lines wereshattered and desciminated by the furious fire of the enemys machine guns, and long lines of blasting musketry, and tumults of bayonets along the gray lines and general Horace Varney on the side of the christians was killed while Rowland and Carollyn Wells were wounded.

Though even this time the Abyssinkilians were repulsed and driven back the christians increased their cannon fire to redoubled invensity, and the Glandelinians who rushed forward madly to the counter charge and with exultant and derisive yells were cut down in horrible numbers.Still on pressed their survivors, and their lines were raked like a comb does hair, and reduced to a mere handful of survivors the enemy fled terror stricken.Bunte gathered the shattered christian forces, and sent forward three other big forces to renew the assault. The first big force was shelled to pieces, and the alrwady trembling lines in red and purple fell back being forced to abandon the assault and all along their line of retreat they were dominated by the big guns of the enemy their dead and wounded lying in heaps where they hd had fallen their leader general Nicholal Achten Version being mortally wounded. But the second force that went to the assault and charged again and again in heavy masses were wholly determined to force Adele-de-garbes army from the plains.But with their own men falling in tens of thousands this force was also compelled to retire, but by this time Adele-de-Garbes army was considerably weakened, and were unable w to withstand the assault of the third force and losing in this part of the struggle which lasted only half an hour over twenty thousand killed, and fifty six thousand wounded and the Glandelinians were forced to give give way. The total christian losses in this battle was I80,444 in killed and wounded, while that of the enemy was about 345,667 in killed and wounded in the morning, and of the afternoons battle they lost in addition ' I25,000 in killed and 456,777 in wounded. Total was 58I,777.

Some time later while Sieguenary was in the garden reading a pape paper telling of some other events a general on horseback wearing a large b bl-black hat with a big black flumie and ablue gray uniform covered with medals and badls bbadges and other designs which showed him to be one of the general in chiefs of the Glandelinian armies came along at foot 65[illegible] pace followed by a party of Glandelinian officers in the handsomest uniforms ever seen worn by soldiers soldiers. As Violet and her sisters were near by his eyes fell upon them, and rested there first with the doubtful look of recognition followed by a start of surprise and satisfaction. He reigned inhis horse instantly with an exclamanation;

"The Vivian girls....."

For a moment they shrank back their cheeks paler than ever before, then recovering he herself violet said calmly;

"We are the Vivian girls John Manley."

"General Manley h"He corrected. "You forgot that we are friends no longer.We have changed all this time since the opening of this war, and since you are some of those loathsome f Angelinian fools it goes to my heart"He went on with a sneer"Tbe be obliged to do my duty, however unpleas unpleasant it is, it must be done.You a are charged with stealing jw jewrly from a man and also of being spies.You are also charged with being in leagueof Gertrude Angeline, and also with s etting on fire the great ammunition works, a part of which is used as a prison. You are my pris prisoners."

Then turning to some of the soldiers who a had approached he said;

"Men forward march...."

At his command the men came forward.

"These seven little girls are Abbiesannian children in disguise."He went on pointing to violet and her sisters In vestiue of my office as general in chief of the Glandelinians commanding the armies near Norma and member of the Committe of Galmannia Shoemannia's command I arrest them not only as spies, but as firebugs, and give them into your charge. There was a person who was with these spies. Seize him also on the charge of harboring seven little enemies of Glandelinia, and a spy as well.They w are all in league with two spis two s pies known as the sons of that christ ian dog general Vivian."

But seiguenry was gone. T he moment general John Manley had looked around in ordering his soldiers to arrest them, violet had whispered in Siegmuerys ear;

"Fly general for our sakes. For I fear if you are arrested you are we are lost and if you are free we can be assured we are safe."

Had he alone been concerned Siegmuery would have stood by violet and her sisters, and shared their fate, but the words "for their sake" decided him and he had instaly slipped away among the crowd, this arrest had brought.

"Where is that man?"General Manley repeated angrily.

"What was he like?"One of the by standers asked.

But general Manley could give no description what ever of Seigmuery. He had noticed that violet and her sisters wre st sitting near someone reading a paper, when he first caught sight of them, and of their faces, but had noticed nothing more, and did not know whether the man was young or old.

"I can't tell you."He said in a tone of vexatation."Never mind we shall find him later on, and I'll take these little spies with me myself, and leave you men here to guard the house, and arrest him should he return. This capture is most important. "

So saying he set out with Violet and her sisters walking beside him but closely watched by Manley. In the next s treet had came upon a party of twenty armed Omarians, belonging to the Omarian Commune, and ordered them to take the place he had charged first with the duty du duty, and directed them to proceed with him to the assembly. Violet and her sisters were taken at once before the Glandelinian committie sitting in permanence for the discovery and arrests of suspects in disguise.

"I charge these seven little girls with being Angelinian spies in disguise and also with the burning of the penentantery. They are the daughters of the fool general Vivian and his wife, the latter who was to be executed at the convent, but who escaped."

"Murdered you mean, assassinated, sir."Violet and her sisters said in a clear haughty tone."Why not call things by their proper names?"

"I'm sorry"General John Manley went on not heding the interruption;

"That it should be my lot to denounce them, for I acknowledge that in the days before this glorious war commenced I have known their father and uncle well.But for a trifle mistake of mine concerning something about their religion he has become mine enemy, and so I return their enemity byarresting their beloved ones, that though it be my d duty to the Kingdom of Glandelinia or not before any private considerat ions. I know that I have done perfectly right.I denounce them as the greatest spies nd and the betterest enemies of Glandelinia. And as I understand that the does not deny that they are the daughters of the great christia general Robery Robert Angelic vivian, and neices of general Hanson vivian or what ever you call him I want you at once to sign an order for their co committal at norma. There is still room there though the pris ons are filling fast. It ain't safe to keep them in the Calverine portion because they are either rescued or escape themselves. And mind yo now if these vivian girls ew escape I will under any conditions hold you res ponsible for they are the most dangerous enemies of Glandelinia, and must not get away. Th They are to be put to death as soon as I sent the notice.''

''I'll do so right away so they will not escape.''Saidthe presidentof of the committee.''Hy won't this surprising capture surprisethe king.''

''I see that we will have to have another jail delivery.''One of the Committee laughed brutally, and a murmur of ascent passed through the chamber.''

The order was made out first that they should be confined to the Whitneys Convent, and violet and her sisters were handed over to the armed soldiers to be taken with the next batch of prisoners to whitneys convent. Siegmuery was some twenty yards behind iolet and her sisters after she had told him to fly. He recognized the man instantly, and seeing that their disguises were discovered his first impulse was to rush forward to their assi assistance, but he hopelessness of such any attempt at interference struk struck him, and he quickly disguised himself as a soldier of the commune, and had mingled with the other soldiers who were about to take them to the con convent. As soon as they were placed in a room by themselves, siegmuery not being recognized-was-placed inside to guard them. As soon as the soldiers wewere gone sig siegmuery laughed for a minute. They could see in his face that something was wrong.

''There is something wrong.''Violet exclaimed to joice vivian.''But as he is a Glandelinian he would not tell us even if we asked him, or pleaded to him.''

''It's quite some news.''Said the-supposed Glandelinian quietly.

''Try to nerve yourselves little Angelinian prisoners of mine for in t ti this prison you will need all your courage for siegmuery is in this prisonalso.''

''Oh goodness gracious.''Jennie exclaimed burating into tears, while her sisters sat still and motiolness.''Why did you take us away and put us here for!''She added in a sharp voice which the supposed Glandelinian would not ha have recognized as her own.Our place is with him and where he goes we will go.You have no right to lead us away.We will go back to him at once even it if it takes us to kill you''And she drew a pistol which she had concealed.

'''''We would like to shoot you anyway for killing our mother and aunt....''Joice said with a quivering of the lip.....

''No dear little girls, but I would have saved them had there been mut but a little time to do so.This time I hope to be more succes sful.I'm Siegmuery and saw that to go with you as your warden would be the only means to rescue you. Courage little girls .Do not give up.I depend on your clever little heads to help me....''

They were overjoyed when they saw that it was surely siegmuery C The appeal was success ful, and they burst into a passion of tears. Siegmuery did not try to check them, and in a short time they crisecried themselves to sleep.

''This is awful''Siegmuery said to himself.''Violet's mother and aunt having been in prison at Norma and I unable to rescue them and it had to be a little girl who did it, thousands, nay scores of thousands of prisoners massacred, violet and her sisters in prison with no one to trust butme me and the christian generals all over in a terrible state of mind about me and them. It's awful to think of it. It's enough to drive a fellow out of his senses. I have turned over in my mind every sceme by which I could get these little girls out of prison, but at present I have fixed up nothing. I cannot carry out the original plan of seiz ing Manley.It would require more than one to carry out such a scene. If these little girls could only help me to seize general manley, hold a kin knife to him and threaten to kill him if he would cry out. All may be well....But I'm afraid that it would not do. It is a desperate interprise for us.The next plan I thought of was to get appointed as a warden in this prison, but though I have succeeded it is only rashiness, and woo to me if I am discovered. The only thing to do was to let out tha that I'm an Angelinian, that I might get arrested and lodh lodged in the same rp prison, and to help them get out, as from what I heard the prisoners are not seperated as before, but live together now.

But tht I found was of no use for if I was once in prison as a spy I might never get out again alive, besides there are lots of other prisons , and there is no reason why t they would not send me there, or here eather than elsewhere. I thought it seemed too doubtful, and so did not con-cent to that plan. Of cours course if I knw they would sent meto me to this prison I would have risked it . I would have hide a file and steel saw about me, and might cut through the bars, but I saw no reas on why they should sent me here rather than anywhere else. It was lucky I pass ed off as a warden. I would certainly liked to have killed that si sly looking villain who arrested them, the scoundrell, after violet and her sisters had been so friendly tward him, before the war. Besides I do not see what the qur quarrel with him and Hanson has to do anything with the Vivian Girls.If I could I would kill the fool like a dog, but I don't see ho w that would do them any good, and it would probably end in my being shut up. The most hopeful plan as seemed to me was to try and bribe some of the warders , but as I act as one myself it would do no use use now and it would be a terrible risk to try it, for the ve ry first Glandelinian I spoke to mi might denounce me. The bet bes t plan I know is to wait untill the time of the second massacre of the prisoners comes n and then I may succeed in rescueing them some way.''

Of course there was a certain risk as there was no getting a captive out of the prisons without running some sor sort of risks, and the thing that poor general Seigmuery intended to do was to fix on as safe a pla plan as he could. However he had to think it out well before he done it for a failure would be fatal, and yet he did not think that there was any pressing danger just at present. It was hardly likely that there would be any repetition of the wholesale slaughter for a long while, and if they would have another trial of the prisoners, there were such numbers of them, so many arrested every day, that it would be a long time before they came to violet and her sisters.D Seigmuery was determined at all hazardous to get them out of prison.But how? If the men who have the keys to the corridors could be bribed, but again how could it be managed if those prisons builded by the former hands of the Abbieannians was too strong to break into, and really as impossible to break out of as it is to break out of hell. T he descipline was more stricker than usual there being a very close watch kept over the prisoners, and many guards who are good do disguise readers stood at the prison doors so as to be sure that no prisoners were passibg out in disguise. Siegmuery feared that it would be impossible to get violet and her sisters out. There were many of the men who were execut ioneers mixed up with the wardens, and this meant that there was the greatest villiageance to insure that none escaped.

There were many strong doors to be opened, and the keys were all held by different persons. Seigmuery could discover no way of getting them out befos before the time came of the second delivery of the prisoners for slaughter. V Violet and her sisters when they awoke feared also that there was no chance of escape for day and night the prisoners were watched, ten or twenty wardens heavily armed locking themselves up in the cells with them to be more sure they could not escape, and handing their keys over to their main warden so that the prisoners in vase they did do something could not have the keys to make use of. T here were ten cells in th wardens o in the cell containing violet and her sisters nine others beside Siegmuery. Every hour some names were called out, and these went but were never seen again . Vio Violet and her sisters did not fret knowing that they were in the hands o God, and if it was his will they would be saved, if not they must face bravely what ever happens. The next morning one of the ten wardens as they ledt accidentally dropped a note in front of poor violet Violet . As she read it a burning flush of color swept across her face to her very brow. She folded it carefully again, and stood looking through the window silently for about a quarter of an hour.

''What is it violet dear?''Joice asked.''Have you been crying Violet dear.You look so fli flushed.You must not fret as Seigmuery says says. We must not give up hope for that.He believes he may hit upon some plan for saving us tet. yet. It is only natural that we should thik think h there is no means of getying away. It is we who must invent something.''

''Yes we will t ry''Said violet with a quiver of her lip, and then she suddenly burst int o t ears.

''You must not give way violet .''Said Seigmuery when she g had recovered a little.''You know how much I trusted to your advice.If you were to break down I should also lose heart .''

''I will not try to break down again.''Violet said.''It is not often that I give way but to day I do not feel quite myself, and this note finished me ent i rely.''
As he took the notehe noticed that her hands were got, and her cheeks were quite flushed,and it looked to him as if she were feverish.Even what general Seigmiery read in the note shocked him about as bad as it d id too poor violet.He oread thus;;;;;;;;;;;;;;;;;;;;

''Your excellency general Manley;
I know that you ewatch over the city and the surrounding vinicity. As I would have you know that for more than two weeks seven little girls known as the Vivian Girls, have been arrested by you, but as you stated their escort general Seg Seigmiery of the christian army had disappeared. This in itself is mysterious as you believed. You had arrested the vivian girls and denounced them as spies in disguise, and it is now believed that their companion is now in their prison with them as a warde n. His description is this;

Brown hair, blue eyes, black beard, and light complexion. We advise you that he be arrs arrested before he finds that he is known, for if he does he will try desperate meansato get away with the vivian girls. The commitee has o ffered over one hundfred thousand dollars for his capture dead or alive.We thought that we would sent this note to you to warn you before it is too late.''

Your assistant general.
Calmannia.Shoemannia.

Siegmiery felt the color leave his cheeks, and his hand shook as he hastily abstracted the note.This was a sudden blow for which he was fully unprepared.He could not think even what was best to be done.
''There is one thing.''Seigmiery said half aloud with a scowl;
''If Violet and her sisters are murdered, I will s urely kill general John Manley as I would a dog, for he will be their murderer k just as much as if he himself had cut their throats. I would do it at once if it were not for the little girls. I must not run any useless risks for the only thing at present is to get them out, and this must be done at all hzards.''
Turning this over in his mind he walked about thecell. It seemed as if there must be some way of get getting poor violet and her sisters out, if he could only hit upon it. He turned over in his mine every escape he had read of, but in most of these the prisoner had been a man or woman capable of using tools passed in to him or her, to saw through iron bars, pierce walls,o overcome jailes jailers, while had some had been saved by female relatives, wives, or daughters, who went in and exchanged clothes and places with them, but this was not feasible here. This was not a prison were relatives could call up upon friends, for to be a relative of a friend or a friend, of a prisoner was acute acute s ufficient in the eyes of the terrorists to mark any one as being an enemy of Glandelinia. The Glandelinians already without hardly many m batt les had deluged Calverinia with oceans of blood and even now more fearful massacres were going on in Norma they being real wholesale massacres. Even thé afternoon there had been a terribleincrease in the work of butchery, and to add to that all eyes were turned to the spectacle of the mock trial of violet and her sisters. For a week they had remained closeprisoners in the prison and insulted by the ruffuanly guards, and only fel fedon the sal stalest kind of food, not even fit for the worse kind of hogs to eat and which had a foul revolting oder. Harmless as was the lives of poor violet and her sisters Cammannia Shoemannia and John Manley were bent on having their lives . The mockery of a trial commenced the next day and on a stormy one at that, when the wind was blowing hard and chilly and the rain pouring, and the thunder crashing with clamor loud enough to level a less substantial city as Norma.
Leonia Heldonia Bicknell and even general Accountantas villianious looking as they were defended the Vivian Girls fearlessly and elequently declaring that they were innocent of any crime against Glandelinia, and that if they were assassinated general vivian of Angelinia who throw his worse vengeance on the Glandelinian nation and probably destroy it entirely and massacre everybody without mercy. But all this was useless. Violet and her sisters to the rage of Bicknell and Accountants were condemned beforehand.

John Mahley and Calmanni a Shoemania led the assalt assault. Many of the hundreds of better Glandelinians, menanced and alarmed stood neutral, but Bicknell stormed with his full fury against the folly of their condemanation and declared that if they were assassinated, he and Accountants would resign their commands, sooner than be mixed up in the destruction of the Glandelinian cities and country that would result . From the fury of Bicknell and Accountants the ques tion wa was immediately put to the assembly.
''Are Violet and her sisters children of Abbisannia, living in Angelinia, or Calverinia, guilty of aroson arson,, conspiracy, and spyingand attempt against the general safty of Glandelinia?''
With a final lot with not one exception the assembly ret urned an affirmative answer, and the final vote was taken. Three hundred and sicty one voted for death, two thousand for life imprisonment in the Kings prisonpiroens at Glandelinia, three thousand eighty six for detation detention, bansement, or conditional death, but with a wish for the assembly assembly to reviss the sentence. Some had voted for cricu crucifixion so sentence of death was pronun pronounced. After a sitting which lasted for thirty seven hours there was another struggle between the avacotes avocates some of delay, and those i of instant execution, but the avocates of instant death won, and they were t o be executed with the massacre of pris oners which was going on l already though they had been granted a suspension of at least four hours to say what t o say pronounce before they were ''Executed.''
Siegmiery saw that it would be absolutely impossible for violet and her sisters watched as they were to escape or be rescued, and no pasx pass or permitt that John Manley could give would be of the smallest utility.You must re remember dear readers that though all apparently united against the vivian Girls there was a never ending struggle going on in the con vent ion between the various parties, and the various leaders. John Manley was the chief of them, but cou could gi egmiery wring a pass from him, that pass would not be respected, for Manley had warned the men that he will not give any passes, and in case one came to him, they will understand that it had been wrung from him, and they are not t o respect it under any conditions. The trial and threatening execution had at ,ea least thr the good effect of making the little girls pray without ceasing. Violet was passionate, and ot the others tearful in their sorrow, and apprehen sion. Over and over again violet and her sisters implored Siegmiery to save them. There were still many christians in Norma, and indeed many of the Calverinians were shocked andalienated by the violence of the Glandelinian concen convention, and violet urged that Seigmiery might obtain some pass or ducment which would enable them to escape. He tried again and again that sorrowful morning but it was us u useless. All this while the massacre of the prisoners was horrible. Glandelinia had indeed become a murderous nation. The very world- looked on amazed, ppalled at the act . General Bicknell or Accountant Accountants no matter what violet and her sisters had thought about them were not any of the foolish butchers, and were christians in themselves, and openign openingly too, and had undoubted ly strove their very bebest t o lesse lessen abusee , and tried to force the glandelinians under them to return to the path of reform. It was not their object to shed blood this way by the massacre of prisoners , and non combatants at that, and there was no readiness to give way to their effection of the Glandelinians, and which had allowed this awful massacre to mac march on its way without a check, and had been in Norma at the time it commenced, they would have put it down by main force though now the mobs were in such raging fury that it was impossible to do anything now. It was th the scores of thousands of victims, the nobles, the priests, the nuns, the monks, lay brothers, and the delicate women and children, and cultured men who had reason to complain for it was now Bicknells powerlessness to resist, which left the christians in Norma at the mercy of their blood thirsty foes. Every day before this second massacre the search of suspects had become stricker, hundreds of christians in disguise being seized, and thrown into pri son, and this of course had fu filled the prisons to overflow ing. All the massacres were going on in its fullest frenzy, and again Siegmiery was thinking of a plan to save the little girls, even if it be at the risk of his own life. Just then he had thought of a pal plan. And said to violet ;
''I'm going to pren pretend that I'm an executioner too, and though I may drag you out, and you must know who I am you must pretend to make resistance , pretend to appeal to the wardens and declare that you do not ewant to die, for if you don't it is just as possible that they might detect me, and refuse to let me take you little girls away, saying that the order was for your deaths not your delivery. It was only yesterday that I met general

Bicknell and accountants sometime before the trial was resumed and they knew me despite my disguise right away, but instead of denouncing me as I feared for they recognized me, they only congrulated me as being the friend of some children they wished themselvew to save, and so have given me this plan. Otherwise I would never have thought ot it. As for our plan I do not believe those other exe executioneers would recognize me, though still it would be as wel well to avoid any risms risks whatever of my scems failing, for then I would even disappoint the two good Glandelinian generals, and even risk my life. But then I may have to overcome the others as they t l told me for they may at any moment suspect me and then I would be in for it. But I will wait untill I get outside before I try to overcome them.." I propose to tie the hands and feet of the main wardens and gag them too, but it may be the safest plan to run them through at once and have done with them. For they may be dangerous enemies if they are left at large or alive and as they would kill you little girls without mercy if they had a good chance I don't see why I should be o ove ovgr-convinced about them. These Glandelinians are scoundrels and enemies of God, and one a nat ion of men whom I regard as murderersw murderers and assassins, but then yet I could not think of killing them in cold blood though they deserve it.But then we are risking everything by letting them liveso I intend to do some killing myself. Such fellow should be killed like rats, when you got them in a trap."

"It may be so"Said Violet. mournfully."But I could not bring myself t o kill them in cold blood."

Siegmuery was silent but not convinced, for he wa not going to change his plans now no and kill the Glandelinians it would be, no matter if they turned against him for it. It was to him the most extreme folly to leave such dangerous enemies alive after their att empt was discovered.

"Those Glandelinians would hunt us all down if our escape was discovered, and if we left them alive. And you all see I am risking my life in this buisness,-and I mean to have my say if you little girls wishe wish to be saved, for Bicknell and Accountants said it was the only way."

As he spoke a warden as drunk as a fool came in and with an exclamanation sprang at Seigmuery two other wad wardens having followed.

"That is Siegmuery the christian spy."He shouted.

"He would have thrown his army arms around Siegmuery but in that moment he slipped and as he arose the infuriated warden drew his sabre and before Siegmuery could draw his own the drunken fool would have cut him down, when he fell himself in a heap, from a tremendous blow which the other warden struck him with his fist.

"How dare you denounce my brother as a spy of the christ ian dogs."He shouted."I'll kill you if you do not get out of here might y quick."

The drunken Glandelinian got to his feet and saluting feebly staggered out of the cell followed by the third warden who looked suspiciously at Siegmuery. Violet and her sisters had already been weakened by their lo g long imprisonment, and shaken by what they had already gone through. They had almost grown indifferent to death. Hour after hour they had seen hundred hundreds of prisoners taken out to execution and the retribution which had d fallen upon several Glandelinians h gave them scarcely a thought, except a feeling of thankfulness th that some day they would be free from their l persecutions. Siegmuery had succeeded in being put in this cell as a steady warden, and then as an executioneor by the order of Bicknell as it would enable him to obtain information of all that was going on. Had it not been for this he would have gladly declined the honour, for his feelings were daily harrowed by arrests and massacres which he was powerless to prevent, for he did not venture to raise his voice on the side of mercy, for had he done so it would have been certain to excite utmost suspicion and probably end in his own arrest. He found that as horrible as were the great atrocities committed in Norma Catherine they were even s urpassd surpassed by those which were i nacted in other p places in particular. A most terrible persecution was raging under the direction of purgatorian. T he terror was universal. The news of the threatened execution of Violet and her sisters had hieghtened the dismay. Thousands of simultaneous massacres were going on everyw ere around Norma and even Julo Gallio. The lowest ruffians of the Glandelinians armies were now their mast ers and under even pretended accusations were wrecking their hate and revenge revenge upon the respectableinhabitants. Private enmities were wiped out in blood. None were too high or to low to be denounced as Angelinians, and denunciation was followed as a matter of course by a mu mi mock trial and a wholesale execution.

ease we will the main. The little girls were brought out.The youngest ones seemed frightened, but the others were as calm and as brave as if they fear ed nothing.They were asked their names but they would not tell, only crying out that they committed no crime.Old John Manley himself was there and he said;

There were spies everywhere, men who recieved blood money for every victim they denounced. Even before the trial of Violet and her sisters Siegmury being a stranger had begun to cause distrust among the Glandelinians, it had long before become whispered that he must be a spy, and acting as executioner so as to get a chance of freeing Violet and her sisters. Siegmus Siegmury soon percieved that he was regarded with absolute hostility, and one day general Wicknell came in and said to him quietly;

"Sir I warn you had better look out.There is a strong feeling against you. Take my advise and do something quick before they may denounce you."

It was aeful, hearing those fiends marking out their victims and exult ing over their murder. Hundreds of priests were all in hiding, and yet thousands more had been murdered, and Glandelinia had more solemly renounced renounced god and placed Reason on his throne. It was terrible and yet Siegmury had felt that his position was getting more and more dangerous, for he did not play his part siffucient ly well.He was not forward enough in their violent councles and he could not bring himself to vote for proposals for massacres, when there was any division among them, ad this had brought the suspicions. He had been asked questions lately as to why he was staying there, and why he had come whether he was a full blooded Glande Glandelinian or a christian spy. Siegmury felt that danger was thickening around him for he had noticed angry glances cast at him from the more violent of the co commune and had caught s sentences expressing doubt doubts whether he was a Glandelinian or not. He had alread also heard the president say;

"I believe he is a cursed Angelinian dog. And I want you to watch him closely.I shall make it my buisness to get at the bottom of the affiar and we will make short work of him if we find things as we believe."

CHAPTER FIVE.

THE REBELLION PROGRESSES.

Siegmury felt therefore that the danger was more urgent than at first believed, and that if they could escape the prisons, the risk of trying to escape to the christian armies by land could be like running into hell, and might might bring themselves under fire from the Glandelinian batteries on the distant hills or along the banks of the Norma Run. And he also feared that vague suspicions which he knew afloat would suddenly be converted into action. He determined to take his place that afternoon with the comittee as usual and endeavor to ally their doubts by assuming a violent attitude. He felt however that the hour of the execution of Violet and her sisters would be mor more trying than any he had ever passed and that he would give a good deal if the next few hours were over. Just tweb twenty five minutes later he had left the prison, and was reutnring, when two Glandelinian or Calverinians I mean who appeared dressed as Guarians came up to him;

"You are the man who guarded the Vivian girls nare you not.?"One of them asked asked.

Siegmury assented hurriedly with a strange presentment of evil.

"Well fifteen minutes after you left a score of men with six officers all being those blood thirsty scoundrels known aas Guarian-gurdes came to the prison and carried the little girls off. We fought them and killed a good many, and dared to do so for many of us Calverinians had arisen in rebe llion and take part in this war you Angelinians are waging against Glandelinia, but it was useless we got worsted as we were to too few. Some of the Curdes are waiting there for your return, so I advise you not to go back to the prison."

Siegmury staggered as if struck with a blow.

"O poor young man."The Calverinian said compass ionately."But I pity you."Mosy of the Glandelinians who are still at large and not prisoners are furious that these wrt wretches should have carried off those sweet young creatures, but what could we do.?We hissed and attacked the men.The little girls have again been brought before the tribunal and we will the hall. The little girls were brought out.The youngest ones seemed frightened, but the others were as calm and as brave as if they fear ed nothing.They were asked their names but they would not tell, only crying out that they committed no crime.Old John Manley himself was there and he said;

"You seven little shrimpies are charged with being enemies of Glandelinia i with being he here in Norma in disguise, and with t rying to leave Norma contrary to the laws against emigration and with being in compay company with one who under false pretenses as a glandelinian, who is but an enemy and a traitor to glandelinia. You have also set the Dell-Mell-Tell Mell penententairy on fire. What do you say?''

''I do not deney that I we were in disguise.''The biggest of those little girls said in a clear voice.''Nor do we deny that we should have escapd escaped if we could. And as you treat us as enemies, and as our lives ar are in danger I cannot see that we were to blame for doing so. I do neny that we are enemies of glandelinia, neither do I deny that the gent leman who was with is is a glandelinian either. But he is no spy and not that but I dare you t o hury or injure u s you bloody assassins. AndAwhy should we ourselves set that big prison on fi re when we knew there were so many child priso prisoners in it?''

Then us Calverinians thought it was time to speak and we cried out for mercy and said how good they had been to him when in trouble with general Hanson Vivian the great christian general, and then general John Manley got into a passion, and said theybwere trait ors and wort hy of death, and that they should die, and we shouted that we would not have it, and broke into the tribunal and surrounded the Vivian girls and then the guards rushed in and there was a fight. We beat them off and got outside, and then a regiment of soldiers came up, and they were too strong for us, though we fog fought stoutly I tell you for our blood was up, but it was of no use. The dear Vivian Girls were recaptured again, and many of us got severe wounds, and many were killed. But the feeling was strong I can tell you a o among even the better glandelinians themselve thelsen themselves when the news spread, and then later about five thousand Calverinians stormed the jail backed by the glandelinians who were the better class but it was strongly guarded and defended, and there were seventeen regiments in the town and these were brought up before we could force an entrance.It is horrible to brave the anger of these monsters but we did. They would think of nothing but putting us all to death, and also the glandelinians who dared to aid us. It was not to renew the fighting that we were afraid of, but it is the congeance they would take afterwards, whether we happened to win or not. To think that just at the moment when a chance of rescueing them was offered the little girls should have again fallen into the hands of the enemy, and we Calverinians trying to strike a blow in their defense. It is maddening.''

''If they are murdered I will go s traight to John Manley and kill him the first time he leaves his headquarters, though they may t ear me to pie pieces aft erwards .''Said Seigmuery.

''They are m not murdered yet.''The good Calverinian friend said.''But they are to be and every prisoner. The committee had this afternoon been down to the warfe of the Mc-gollester Run River's mouth and had seized a score of ships from us Calverinians. And they are openingly boating boasting that an end is going to be put to the christian doggies, that the slaughter at the prisons was too slow, that the prisons must be cleared, and that they are going to pack the prisoners on board the ships, and sink them with shot, shell, and canister.''

Poor Siegmuery gave a cry of horror.Then recovering he asked;

'How can they be saved.?''

''I cannot say my dear sit sir.''Said the Calverinian.''It does seem to me--------''

''The They have got to be saved.''Interrupted Siegmuery with a grave steady voice.''The question is how?''

''Yes my dear sir.''The Calverinian agreed hesitatingly.''That certainly is the question.You can however rely on me my dear man.''He went on.''I'll do my best whatever.You may decided that I have no head to invent things.You tell me what to do and I'll do it no matter what the risk.''

''I know I can rely on you Calverinians.''Said Siegmuery.''But I cannot invent anything just now unless as far as I can see there are two ways only. One way is to go to general John Manleys head quarters, find the monst ers, place a piztol to the human dragons head, compell him to order them to be released, stand with him at the prison door th till they come out, embark with them and him in a boat, row down the river and keep on untill we reach within sight of the christian lines, shoot the scoundrel to death, and thro thorw him over into the river, and then--''

''Sir?''The Calverinian asked after a puase seeing that Siegmuery was speaking more to himself than to him.

''Yes that i s the question that I cannot answer.''Siegmuery.''I can see allthe rest as if it were pas passing.I can feel general John Manley in my grasp and shrinking as the pistol touches his forehead. I can hear him giving his orders. I can see the crowds of graycoats falli ng back as I walk with him through the stree streets. I can hear him crying to the Glandelinians to stand aside, and le let uspass let us pass.I can see him going down to the river together, but what am I to do in a boat with him and seven children in the raging Norma ri ver where are are chances of him turning on me, when I'm l not not looking is a question that is more harder to answer than reading a book without printing in it.''

''In one way that could be a good idea.''The Calverinian exclaimed carried awan carried away by the picture which Siegmuy Siegmuery seemed to be describing as if he saw it.''But that river is just now swollen as it is, is more dangerous than the butchers themselves, and then even Manley is too reckless an man to yeild to anybody, even if a hundred pistols were leveled at his head for years. Why not embark in a ship and go out to sea sea. I could get you a ship, and many of the Calverinians also will stand by you, and when we are once outside the river we will throw Manley over to the fishes and make for Angelinia Agathis.''

''Thank you sir''Said Seigmuery.''If the other plans seem impossible I will try that but only as a last resort, for I know the chances are a million to one against its successes. I should have no fear as to general john Manley himself, but as I went through the streets all of the glandelinians might cover me with their own muskets and shoot me at once. If I could get him alone it would be different. You could go with me. I would stand over him untill you had time to embark with them, then I would blow out his brains and make my way down to the river. But there would be no on chance of finding him alone. Monsters like him are always fearful of assassination. If I could only escape by the bay of WVivian Wicke y it would be all right, but it is too far to reach that city of Vivian wickey, and probably by this time the Angelinian and Abbisan nian warships are besieging the fortifications of Mc-Whirther and boam bombarding the fortifications and so escape is o impossible that way on account of the tempest of high explosives roaring and thun dering every where.''

''And what is the other plan then?''The Calverinian asked.

''The othe other plan is to get on board the ships or oneof them on which they are to be placed, hide down in the holds untill the guards leave her, then join them, and when the ship sinks fasten them on a spar and drift down the river with them till out of sight of the city of Norma where Angelinians or Calverinians could row off at seeing us and pick us up. They say there are to be glandelinian soldiers on each side of the river?''

''That is true.''Said the Calverinian despondently.''To shoot down any who try to swim ashore with gathling guns?Most of them they say will be women and children, but their heads would be seen if they drifted down.''

''Yes we must think of something my dear man.''Said Seigmuery.''Think man think.If you were on a sinking ship and you wanted something which would hide you from the enemies batteries a hundred yards away, what would you take?''

''But you would be seen on anything you climbed onto, or clung to sit.''The Calverinian said.

''But we need not clin climb onto it.''Seigmuery said said.''I can take pieces of large cork with me and wrap around them so as to keep their faces just af, afloat.I should only want something that would hide their faces.''

''''''A hatch might do.''Said the Calverinian.....

''The very thing ''Siegmuery said, with a fresh ring of animation and hopefulness in his voice.''The very thing.''Of course there are hatch ways in the forecastles of the ships. We might get that loosened beforehand so thatit will float off.What is the size of thosehatches.''?

''The larg est are some fourty feet square Sir.The smallest are about ten to twenty feet square but all of iron and heavy wood, though of course they will float, and not sink if you know how to manage them.''

''The smallest will be enough ''Siegmuery said.''But how high would such hatches float out of the water, because there must be room between the top, and the water for us to breathe as we lie on our backs.Se ven inches would be enough.Are the sides buyant enough to keep the top that much out of water?''

''I do not think so sir.''The Calverinian said with a shake of the head.

''It would float with the leven of the water.But I have an idea.Those hatches are covered with tarpaulen. If you could hide in the forecastle during the night, you might cut away all the top underneath the tarpaulen and prop it up so that if any one trod upon it in the morning they would not notice what had been done.Be sure also to remove more iron and leave wood if possible. Then when they have pushed off you would knock away the props the boards would tumble down and there would be only the tarpulin coer over the sides. It would float then quite four feet, and that in the middle of the stream or even close to the shore it would look completely level with the water, and no one would suspect that there was any one under it.."

"I will try it."Seigmuery said."There is a chance of success."

- "It is a terrible risk sir."The grey-coated Calverinian said.

"The Glandelinians will also ri riddle the ship with high explosives."

"I know it."Seigmuery said."It is to sink them quicker and kill those on board or main them so that they will be too helpless to swim, in case many of them are good swimmers. But it is just possible. The chances are a thousand or a million against it even, but by the help of God it may succeed and if not, then K' I'll only go to heaven with them that's all. Well , , my friend do you be with a boat on the river just below the point on where the terror stricken city can be seen. If you see a hatch floating down row to it. If we are beneath it well and good, and if not------"

"If not sir."The Calverinian said solemnly "I will pray for your souls, ad and form the army of Calverinians to revengeyour deaths, which I intend to do anyway, find general Vivian the good christian general and tell him all."

"Now my good fri friend"Siegmuery replied."We will hasten to the quay for there is much to be done.And first of all you must see your other friends who have also tried to strike the enemy a blow, find out ifthe Vivian Girls are really going to be murdered, which I have no doubt they will be after the emeute there has been about them, and they are sure to be among the first victims. But above all find out if you can which ship they are to be placed in."

"But if I cannot find h that out sir------if there is no arrangements made---- -----at all------- though I should think there would be, for the butchers would like to have everything done----- in order--then,"

"Then I will get you a dozen men you can trust to volunteer to row to the ships, and to row the boats the executioners are in charge, help in the work of putting them on, and you must be sure to take the boat in which they are to the ship without any mistakes, to the ship we have prepared. A blund blunder would be fatal."

"I will try that if I die for it."The Calverinian said."Though in the first place I would sooner cut off my hands and feet rather than pull an oar to take those poor creatures out to be murdered.But I really will do it t if they are really to be saved afterwards.But exception for that I warrent they will not get one of the Calverinians to put his hands to an oar to aid their accursed work though we may go to hell for it. I suppose though no matter how it hurts me I will have to act violent tward them to avoid suspicion and dress as Glandelinians.?"

"Yes it is so"Said Siegmurery."But e be careful and do no injury though."

"I'll promish there will be no marks on them."Laughed the Calverinian. "I have three sweet little girls of my own."But after this service I render you I will have to rush like a frightened deer for the christian lines for if I am ever found out, and the Glandelinians know what I did, I may escape myself without any adventure, but they will make Calverinia an unearth unearthly hell for sure."

It was four o-clock when they arived at Norma. Being with two fierce and yeyet trustful looking Calverinians they got in without difficulty as ther their Glandelinian i uniforms and fierce looks folled the foe. The friendly Calverinian went straight to low for his pals and cronies while Siegmuery walked along the quay, followed by his ugly looking companions.

"Hi say Pal you wanta hook hout fhor the batteries, hen ye har hin he hater ha matuer."Said one of them who could not speak Abbisannian we very good.

"That is true "Said the other."Those batteries on both sides of the Norma river will rain shot and shell all along the river as far as they extent in a perefct storm of salvoes, and if one of their shells ever hits the hatch you are goners and no mistake about that."

"Hoeur Hirght."Said the funny speaker."Hou hawnt to be hareful hand hook hout for heem."

When the three came a abreast of the center of the quay a number of fierce Calverinians fiercer looking than worse movie criminals or villains were standing talking in low tones and t looking in horror at four hundred and twenty ships all big steamers, moored in a perfect line in the center of the wide and furious river. A number of Calverinians noticed a couple of Glandelinians the scum of the foe army pait painting the ships black, while a strong body of troops on the other side of the river were c drawn up on the shore in readiness to put a summary stop to any demonstrat ion of ho hostility on the part of the Calverinians on the other side of the river. The Calverinians were really strong enough in force to put a sti stop all right if only they could have been able to cross and strike the enemy a blow. These who were watching the ships openly ventured to express their detestations of the proceedinfs, and once in a while tried to pick off some of the men who were painting the ships while the muttered exsorations and curses that rose from the grupo groups of Calverinians showed how deep were their feelings, and showed a,s also that they would have started trouble if only they could cross the river and strike, but they feared also that if they started any fighting they may cause Siegmuerys attempt to meet failure, and so they used the better means of letting the case goe go as it was. W Siegmuery joined a little group of five or six men who were mostly Calverinians also.

"All is lost you see"Said one of them in a tone of deep comiseration."There is nothing left but vengeance-----we will take that one of these days,--- as us Calverinians are different than you christians,---we show enemies of God and helpless persons no quarte quarter,----recieve no surrender from the officer of the enemy of the highest commission even---but that is a poo poor consolation for you kn now."

"All is not quite lost."Siegmuery said."I have yet one hope."

" We dare not try to cross this river without pontoon bridges to try force" One of the other Calverinians said."Of course they have marched five more divisions of the worse kind of soldiers in to day, and what can we do against against the foe, though we are armed to the teeth when we have no means at prs present to cross the River. I could cry to think we are so helpless of any means of getting across in the face of all these things, but never theless we will have revenge. They have lost many thousands of soldiers on account of us, and some day we will get the best of those who butcher the prisoners."

"No I know forxe is useless."Seigmuery said."I have just one hope left. It is a desperate one, and I cannot tell you what it is now bot to night maybe Adolph Logan ,y my Calverinian friend may ask some of you to help us. I expect him here soon."

"Why Adolph Logan is my brother."Said the Calverinian.H"He is a born Calvé Calverinian als o, and here he comes."

Indeed thi s was true, and Siegmuery and the others joined him at once.

"I have got the news you wanted."He said."The poor Vivian girls are to be in the first batch of prisoners brought out. Boats have already been brought by the Glandelinians to row them out and men hired. They were forced to take the boats without buying them for not a man who is a Calver inian or an Ange inian would let his craft for such a purpose not even any of the better class of Glandelinians either. It would be acf accursed afterwards for no sailor or boat man would ever put a foot on board, not that they are afraid of such fables as ghosts, forthey believe not in them but because they will not defile their feet on boats formely used by ruth less assassins. The first boats will go to the ship lying lowest in the stream, then they will come bac k and take the next batch out to the vess el above so till all are on board. There will be one thousand placed on each ship, and I hear that it is only the first of it, and that the drowning will go on untill the prisons are cleared."

"Thank god that we know that much ad Adolph. Now in the first place I want you to get me some tools, a sharp saw, a chs chisel, a large screw dri ven, and a half dozen large screws.Also two beams of wood to fasten across the hatch way, and to keep the boards up after I have sawed them through. Also I want three bundles of cork, flat pieces will be the best if you can get them, but that does not matter much.I might as well have an auger to too."

"What shall I do next?"Asked the Calverinian.

"At nine - o-clock this evening have a boat with the things on boad half a mile below the city, but look out for the batteries of eit her side, for if you are seen they will fire on you.Give a low whistle and I will answer it. Wrap some flannel around the rowlocks to muffle the sound of the oars. It will be a dark rought night and there is a mist rising already from the river and also I fear there's a hurricane a proaching.I do not think there is much chance of meeing an boats any boats near those bessels?"

"No indeed."Said Adolpyh."It makes me shiver to look at those ships however There will be no boat out on the river to night excepiting ours ."

The man quicaly went off with some of his companions to do his bidding About eight o-clock Siegmuery who had remained there in the pitching rain and howling wind which was lashing the riv er into frightful fury till dark, and contimually listening to the continuous far distant booming of cannon hundreds going off at once, which told him that it was the fierce bombardment of Mc-Whirther three hundred miles away, and soon heard a low whistling on the water. Siegmuery whistled in return and in a minute a dark object appeared through the pall of down pouring rain, and in the gleam of the lightning f a flashes.

Siegmuery with difficulty took his place in the stern, and the boat rowed off quietly again, and so well were the oars muffled, that especially from the roaring of the waves which tossed the boat forward like a rocket at each sweet, could hear no sound, except the far distant booming of cannon, which increased steadily in hundreds of thousand of far distant salvoes. The city was very still and scarcely a sound was heard, excepting the howling of the wind, the earsplitting crashes of the thunder, and the furious splatte splatter, splatter of the rain. The awe of the horrible event which was about to take place hung over the city. So thick was the pall made by the pouring rain that they were some little time finding the ships, and many times came near being swamped or captized by the heavy sea that was running from the mouth of the river to where the ships pointed tward. When they reached the ships they rowed to that moored lowest down the stream, and made fast alongside. Noiselessly the beams and tools were handed on boa board. Then the men followed and made their way noiselessly to the hatch way of the forecastle of the large steamer. Adolph produced a file, and nk knelt down and felt the hatch.

"It's fastened down with a staple and padlock." He said. "They are old but you might have some trouble in breaking them. But lt let us see first. No it moves? Now a wrench together....."

Ashe spoke the staple came up through the rotten wood of the deck. The hatch was then lifted by the twenty men.

"Lower it down cornerwise into the forecastle." Said Adolph. "We can work all the better at it there. Ned you get that sail up out of the boat, and throw it over the hatch. It is not likely that any one will come out here through all this storm but the enemys flash lights are sweeping this region if a bewildering blaze of dazzli ng lights, and its just as well not to run any risks."

As soon as all were below and the sail spread over the opening above Adolph produced a dark lantren from the great pocket of his cloak, together with two or three candles. These were lit as well as the lantrens and the party then set to work. The saws had been brought on board, and a piece three inches square was cut out of it, it fortunately being a full wooden hatch fully fifty five feet wide, and they kept at it untill there was only six inches of wood all around. Great pains was taken not to saw through the tarpulin cover. Four pieces of wood each fourty r five feet long screwed against the combing of the archway in such a position that when the beams were placed upon them they were exactly level with the top, and supported the pieces cut out from the hatchway in its original position.

"That will do rarely." Adolph said when it was finis hed and the hatchway experimentally placed in its position. "No all you have to do is to knock the ends off the beas beams off their ledges. The bit we have cut off or cut out will fall down and you will be able to easily enough to lift the hatchway from it's place. It is no great weight now."

"It will do capitally." Siegmuery agreed. "And when it floats the tarpulin whill certainly be four feet above the water or maybe nine as it is the widest of all the hatches of any of these ships on the water."

"That is so "Said the Calverinian.....

"Yes I have no f fea of that part of the adventure going wrong wrong...."

"No you are right." Was the answer.

"But do you think it will be noticed from the shore Adolph."?

"Not it." Answered Adolph confidently. "Why from the shore it will look awash from the water. No one will ever dream that there will be a soul under it. I beging to think you will do it. Siegmuery, at first it seemed hopeless, not I do reall think there is a chance. I should feel pretty confida confident if it was you and two of us who had to do it, but the did difficulty will be to get the children under it. And then to get them to lie quiet there....."

"That is the difficulty" Siegmuery admitted. "I'm sure of the eldest girls as their nerves are as good as mine. What I fear is about the younger girls."

"I'll tell you what my dear sir" One of the Calverinians said. "If you take my advice you will have a piece of rope in readiness, and tie each piece around their arms so as to prevent their struggling."

"That will be the best way." Siegmuery agreed. "Yes if I see they wont be calm and do as I tell them, that is what I will do."

Now Siegmuery I will bore a coupele of auger holes through the bulk head here so you can see what is going on in the hold. They have got the hatch off there I suppose co for it is not padlocked, and they will no doubt go down t o bore the holes the last ti thing. Likely enough they have bored then already and will have to only knock out the plungs. I will just go down and see any how. If that is so you may set your mind at rest that none of them will come down here in the morning and so discover you...."

So saying he took a dark lantren, and climbed up on deck, n and decended the hold.

"That's it." He said when he returned. "There are twenty big holes bored with plugs in them so they won't be coming down here. When we will go up we wi will put the staple in its place again so that it will look all right and so that it won't cause no suspicion. It's about ps past midnight and i t were best we should leave you to sleep for a few hours. YOU WILL WANT YOUR ST STRENGTH IN THE MORNING unless of course you would rather we stopped with you a bit."

"No ta thank you Adolph." I don't think I shall fall asleep. I shall sit and think out every detail."

"Then good night my christian friend. May your god bless you and aid you to morrow as he does me and I think he will because you are adding seven little girls who if they are not saints are just as good anyway. And I do think you are the bravest man I have ever met for it is a very hazardous undertakig undertaking you are at."

"I'm not brave for myself Adolph but for them."

The twenty five Calverinians and Adopl Adolph shook hands with Siegmuery and one after another in husky voices gave him their good wish wishes. Then they ascended to the deck put on the hatch, pressed the s staple down through its hole in the deck, got into the boat, cast off the head rope and got out the oars.

"What courage." One of the galverinians exclaimed. "His hand is as steady as his voice is firm, and so calm as if he wer were reading a n bible."

"I kind of feel he is going to succeed." Adolph said. "Anyhow we will have out boat below the bend of the river and get them out."

When left alone Siegmuery blew out the other c candles, but left the light in the lantelantren burning and threw himself down on the locker and thought over every detail of the work for the next day. As he had said the great danger was of the younger ones in struggling and in being too frightened to follow his instructions. Certainly he would fasten pieces of rope around them, but then it might be difficult in managing them. If even if they were not as he feared, the other danger, and a more la alamring alarming one was that other persons might cling to the hatchway and so draw the full fire of the batteries on them, and then all would be lost. Siegmuery felt the long knife that was concealed in his breast.

"God grant that I may not have to use it." He said. "But if it must be I shall not hesitate hesitate. They will simply destroy us without saving themselves by drawing the fire of the batteries that is certain. Therefore I'm justified in defending the little girls as I go would against an enemy."

He knelt down and prayed for some time. Then he replaced the pieces they had cut from the hatch and fixed the beams beneath it and then lay down again. He was worn out by his excitement of the day, and in spite of his anxiety about the morrow he presently fell off to sleep. It was long before he awoke, and when he did so he looked through one of the auger holes in the hold and saw the light streaming down the open hatchway, and could tell that the sun was already up and that the day was going to be a scorcher despite the storm of that dark and fearful night. He ate some food he had put into his pocket before starting, saw that the bundles of corks were ready at hand and the ropes attatched to them so placed that they could be fastened on in an instant. There was nothing to do but to wait proceedings. The time passed slowly and all this while he could hear the far distant roar of a c another battle in the direction of Norma and won dered what was up. It was the sanguinary fighting of other battles for Normas Bridge called sharp engagements at Angeline gun. Presently he heard the sound of c drums and bugles and knew that the troops were taking up their position on the quay. At last it seemed nearly hours to him, he heard the spa splash of oars and presently a sharp shock as a boat ran a long side the ship followed by scores of others at once. Then there were voices and the sound of feet above as pesons mounted on to the deck. There was also a scraping noise by the ships side and immediately a a tafterwards another series of bumps as the second batches of boats took the l place of the first ! Thus far as far as Siegmuery could hear did not leave the ship, though the other boats came and went. There was a great hum of talking on deck mostly in wo e womens and childrens voices, and frequently persons stepped on the ba hatch and Siegmuery congrulated himself that the beams gave a solid support to it or several women and children perhaps scores would have been precipitated down into the hold and on top of him ....

30Half a day passed as well as Siegmuery could judge, then the boom of several cannon was heard, and immediately seven men leaped down into the hold knocked the twenty five plun plugs out of their places and climbed up on deck again. There was again the sora ping noise and Siegmuery knew that the last boat which had remained had pushed off again this time for good. He watched as if fascinated the twenty five jets of water for a minute. He waited untill he was submerged in three feet of water then saying to himself quietly;

''It is time.''

And he knocked the beams from the ld ledges allowing the pieces of wood to fall/ lifted the hatch, and pushed it off its combing, and then clambered up on to the deck with the corks and ropes. There were some two thousand persons on board, for the most part children as there were only a hundred women on board, the most number of women having been slaughtered by the sword inst ead of drowning at which was first planned..... They were gathered near the stern and were apparatly watching the scene ashore with astonishment. He hurried aft having no fear whatever that at this distance fr from the shore his figure would be recognized from the rest, and if it were it mattered not. Two or three turned around as thes supposed sailor came aft exclaming;

''What does this mean.Why are we put on board of these black ships.?What are they going to do with us?''

''Alas ladies.''He said.''They have put you here to die. They have bored holes in the bottom of the ship and in a few minutes all of these ships will sink.It is a wholesale execution.''

''As he began to speak four of the prettiest children in the stern pushed thei r way through the rest .

''Oh Siegmuery is it you?''Violet asked as he finished.''Is it true . Are we going to die together?''

''We are in God's hands violet but there is hope yet.Bring Hettie and Daisy forward with me.''

At Siegmuerys first words a panic had seized all around, one or two rushed to the hatchways and looked down int into the hold and creamed out that the way water was pouring in, then some one cri ed to the distant crowd to save them, un hundreds of others ran u up and down as if demented, while most of the others soon threw themselves on their knees.Butthe panic soon p assed away.All had for weeks faced deat h and though the unexpect ed form in which it had appeared had for the moment shaken the m, hey soon recovered . Mothers who had children on deck clasped their daught ers or sons to their bra breasts for a last farewell, and tha all with bowed heads knesled and listened in silace to an old man who began to pray aloud. Violet without another word had taken Hett ie and Daisy by the hands and accompanied Siegmuery to the foremost part of the deck, followed by the rest ofhe her sisters.

''Violet I'm going to try to save you and your sisters but everyt hing depends on being cool and brave. I need not urge you, Violet, Joi ce Jennie, or Angeline or even Cat Catherine because Iam sure of you altoget her. Daisy and Hett ie will you try to be so for the sake of your sisters and your own. If you do not we must all die together.''

''What are we do to do.''K?Violet said steadily while Hettie and paisy clung to her sobbing bitterly.

''Fasten these bundles of corks between you the shoulders of your sisters high up---yes there.''

While Violet was doing this siegmuery fastened a rope to a ring in the si de of the hatch, then tied the corks on to violets shoulders and that of Jenni e and Angeline and also Ca Catherine and the other little girls, and h the last bundle t o his own.

''Now violet''He said.''I will tell you what we are going to do.You see this hatch? When the vessel sinks it will float and we must float on our backs with our faces under it so it will hide us from sight of the wretches on shore, and even if they put out in boats to kill any who may be swimming or clinging to spars there will not suspect that there is any one under this. We of course may not succeed.An accident may betray us, or the batteries may t sweep the river on both sides with a galling fire to make sure that none lives. But there is a possibility At any rate little girls we shall live or die t ogether....''

''I'm content.''Sqid violet quietly.

''You know violet Siegmuery said pytting his hand on the little girls shoulder''That I love you and your sisters.I should never have told you so untill I got you little angels back to the christian lines if it had not been for this although I never have said it. You know I love you little girls.....''

''I know Siegmuery, we love you too with all our hearts so much that we can almost feel happy that we are going to die t ogether. We are your best friend friends now come what will.''And she lifted her little sweet face to his. He gave her one long kiss, then kissed, Jennie, Joice, Angeline, Catherine, Daisy and Hettie and was just going to ask Hett ie and Daisy if they would be calm when all of a sudden there was an unusual booming of cannon on shore, there came a terrific series of crashes on deck far to aft a series of crashes that threw them all down, and high explosives t ore large holes in the deck, and a board flying from the wreckage struck Hettie and Daisy simultaneously knocking them senseless. Impa Impatient at the length of time the vessels were in sinking, the Glandelinian batteries on shore opened a destructive raking fire with three hundred guns, and now more shells struck the ship just above the water line, while where there was a bewildering storm of shell explosives in the distances about sixteen ships were torn asunder by several high explosives which went off simultaneously as they landed.T he shore was lined in a wall of smoke from the mouths of the thundering cannon. Six of the other ships were covered with explosivions others were crushed and mangled already, and some were sinking or on fire. The tumult of the panic stricken o people on the ships was indescriable.

''Lie down on the decks dears or you may be struck.''Said Siegmuery doing so himself as the din swelled to titanic fury and fairly tossed the river into raging w waves from the concuss ion.''They are firing long lines of muskets now.''

Then he arose.

But in answer to their looks he said;

''I'm going t o lie down too but I shall first tie these cords around Hettie and Daisy so as to keep their arms by their sides, otherwise when the water touches them they may come to their senses and struggle and then we may be observed. That'a all right.''

Then he lay down on the deck between the little girls with his head against against the hatch and holding the rope.

''Put your heads on my shoulder violet and o your other sisters if you can. I will put my arm around you three while I will try to hold the other four the same way on the other side if I can.Hold tight by me for a moment as we sink. I may have to use my arms to get the hatch over out faces. Do not breathe wi while you are under water for we shall no doubt go down with the ship by the force of the suction, alot although I shall try to keep you little girls afloat when you are under the hatch.When you are under the hatch you will find that you will float with your mouths and faces well out of water and will be able to breathe.The corks will keep you up.''

''I uns understand Siegmurery.''Said Violet.''Now let us pray untill the time comes.''

By this time the Glandelinian batteries were in a deafening earsplitting uproar as all cannons on both sides broke into action, and from only two batteries broadside after broadside struck the ship amid earsplitting stunning crashes, and rending of timbers and boards, and every mast went down by the board and all the rigging came down with a great tumult of noise and confusion, then Siegmuery fat the ship give a sudden lurch, just as a high explosive crashed far above them sending hig hugh fragments down on the de decks, but no one was injured though the smoke almostsuffocated them. T here was a wild cry and the next moment the ship went down stern first . She was so nearly even with the water when she sank that there was less downward suction than siegmuery had expected and striking out with his feet his head was soon above the surface. The cord kept the hatch within a few feet of him and with some difficulty owning to the bouyancy of the corks he thrust himself and the little girls under it.The tarpaulin was olf and rotten, and the light pa penetrated in several places and siegmuery could see that in the position they were lying the faces of the seven little girls w were above the wat er. It was useless to spa speak for their ears were submerged but a slight motion from five of them responded to a pressure of his own arms and he knew that they were sensible, although they had not made the slightest motion from the moment the vessel sank. Hettie and Daisy had not as he feared would be the case, recovered their senses with the shock of the emersion, but lay insensibleon the shoulders of joice and Violet. He could see by the motion or movements of the ki lips of those yet sensible that they were praying and he too thanked God that he had gi ven success to the plan so far, and prayed for protection to the end. With every minute that passed his hopes rose, everything had answered far beyond his expectations.The other victims had apparently noticed wha he was doing and had not therefore as he feared interfered with his preparat ions, nor had any of them striven to gain a hold on the hatchway.

The sinking of the vessel and the tearing up of the water by the shot, shell, and high explosive would render the surface disturbed and broken and decreased the chances of the floating hatch attracting attention from the shore on either side. After ten minutes had passed he felt certain he must be below the point where the troops were assembled. The tide of the sea at the mouth of the river was running strong for the time of the massacre had been fixed for that hour which insure the bodies being swept down to sea.Half an hour would, he thought take them past the bend where their friends were waiting for them.The time seemed endless for though Siegmuery felt the coldness of the water but little for himself he thought it must be trying indeed for Violet and her sisters.As far as he could see their faces were as white as their senseless sisters, but by their their slight movements he knew they were still conscous. At last he heard th the sound of oars.It might not be one of the friendly boats, but it probably war was that , or it may be one or the other of them. Siegmuery could not hear voices although the water had conveyed the sound of the oars a considerable distance he could hear no sound in the air. The oars came neare nearer and nearer, and by the q quik quickness by which the strokes foll owed each other, he knew that two boats were at hand instead of one as he had ordered.For a few more moments he grew suspicious and drew his knife but concealing it so that the little girls would not see it until untill he acted.

"If they are Glandelinian butchers they will not kill them without a fight to the death in the water."He declared to himself.
The two boats passed him on two sides tha the hatch was suddenly lifted by some thing like hooks placed against its sides and Siegmuery lifted his head above water. There was a loud cheer and he saw Adolph and seventeen Calverinians, and some Abyssinkilians in a boat on each side seven st retch ing out their arms to him.There were siz six boats altogrether. The little girls were first li fted into Adolphs boat for they were all incap able of movement as theit two senseless sisters, then Seigmuery was drag ged in the Calverinians shaking his hands, and patting him on the shoulder while the tears ran down their cheeks. A glass of hot brandy was placed to Violet's lips. At first she could not swallow but after a few drops had passed her lips she was able to take a sip, and would then have stopped, but Si egmuery insisted upon her drinking the whole contents of the medium size glass saying that it would do no harm chilled as she was , and may save her from illness, that may result from the ice coldness of the rivers waters. In the meantime Adolph had poured several spoonfulls of nearly neat brandy between the lips of the other little girls. Three of the Calverinians had changed over into Adolphs boat and were rowing lustily down the river. As soon as Violet and joice were able to sit up they began to chaff the hands of Hettie and Daisy while Siegmuery took the other.

"Take off their shoesAdolph"He said"And soak a swab with hot water and put it to their feet ."
But with all their e efforts it was not untill they were close to the place where Siegmuery had formely lodhe lodged with them did they open their eyes. But they did not stop here for the Glandelinians we were swarm ing the city now and it would be dangerous. When they arived at a little causeway the seven little girls were wewarmed up by the tremendous heat of the Calverinian Sun and by the time they reached an old vacant house in a field the whole seven were as good as ever.

"My little friends can thank you all for the aid you have given me and them."Said Si egmuery."To you we owe our lives for without your aid I should never have succeeded. The climate in summer in this country is indeed scourcing srourching hot but what makes the the waters of the river so icy cold is a mystery. Could any of you men ex plain it?"

"Say nothing about it my dear friend."Said the Calverinian."We are happy to have saved such a brave young man and to have saved six victims from those monsters or e seven rather. What harm could they have done to those assassins, that those monsters should try to slay them."

The next day there was fresh notices stuck up warning all masters, fi shermen and others to look out for the vivian Girls whom it was repor ted had been rescued by the Calverinians and that the penalty of those men if caught for assisting the enemies of Glandelnia to escape, was death. The friendly Calverinians were indeed surprised and anxious when they heard that the rescue of violet and her sisters had been discovered, and decided that the best thing for them to do was to flee to the christian lines without delay delay.

Yet to attempt this they knew would be exceedingly dangerous and maybe useless for the viligiance of the watch for the escaping prisoners had increased tremendously. To add to the sad part news came that a sanguinary battle was going on at Violent Lansin near Julo Callio, and Orchard Appleton.which were terminating into Glandelinian victories, and that gensal general John Maley had also learned of the escape of the prisoners and was in a terrible rage, having offered $555,555,000 dollars for their recapture dead or alive, and for the capture or assassination who had the boldness in rescueing them. In every di rection a searching party had been organized and every hour the danger of their capture seemed more certain. To escape the wa w rath of these furious Glandelinians seemed maddening. Yet capture meant certain death the next time. That afternoon a large party of Glandelinians came to the house in the fi field where they wre were and rough roughly demanded admittance.

"A good many of them wil be dead before they arew arrest you little girls and us."One of the Calverinians said as he and the others t ook down their firearms which had been hanging up.We will give them a good reception."

Adolph quickly barred all the double doors doors and seeing that fortun ately barrels of ammunition had been stored in the house decided to make a good defense. The house was fireproof, and streng and they had no fear of it giving way before the attacks of the wily Glandelinians.
"We could hold a whole army at bay wit h this."Adolph said."Besides muskets were havy twenty pistols, and fourteen rifles , including four swive swi vel guns, and one gathling gun and twelve blunderbushes.We could make a good show with all these and could keep uo up a continous fire without hardly having to reload at all for a long time, for one gun is empty we can readily pick up another as the little girls will do the reloading for is us or help in the shooting if they like."
Recieving no answer the Glandelinians tried to break in but quite a number were shot down for their attempt.
"Batter down the doors."The leader cried in a rage."We will show the traitors to dare far fire on us their own people even though they be Calverinians."
"B But this was easier said than done. Though they tried to batt er down the doors the men with the battering rams were mowed down the logs rolling over them in quite a comical way.

"Drat those Calverinian rebels."Hiss ed the Glandelinian leader."They don't care to seem to care who they , who, they, w o they shoot down. Fi re upon the house men...."
All the Glandelinians knelt down at a safe distance and blazed away d firing with astonishing rapidity.Bullets struck the house like rd rain but the Calverinians did not respond untill only when the Glandelinians attemp ted to batter down the doors. T hen they mowed them down in good style. The smoke became quite dense inside the house and the report s of the firearms almost shocked the ears of Violet and her sisters the crashes were so deafening. As quick as the guns were fired off and were empty Violet and her sisters quickly reloaded them, and sometimes helpled in the firing themselves, and now when they saw that the Glandelinians were increasing in numbers and becoming desperate they r primed the artillery upon them through some of the narrow windows and opened fire with t hese. The assailants were mowed down by the score and the rest were c n compelled to retire at a safe distance, and keep up a continual firing.

"I'll bet they have those pesky vivian girls in there qll right."The Glandelinian leader hissed."My those Calverinian rebels are desperate. We had no idea anyone was in there untill they fired upon my men.The best thing to force a house is to fire it but that darn thing won't burn, and we might as well try to smoke them out, or get some means to blow them out for there is plenty of ammunition in there, and if we could once manage to throw a burning t orch in there or a faggot we could blow them all to bits."
At his command thirty Glandelinians decided to do this. Making fire brands they crept near the house and tried to get to the window to hurl them in while the others keeping at a safe distance increased their firing, but Siegmuery having found a bomb i nside had quickly lit it and threw it among the thirty Glandelinians killing and wounding all of them. U Yet more tried the very same t hing, and while others made attempts to build fires around the house so as to make a lot of smoke, to t the rage of the leade leader it had to suddenly pi pour rain, and the fires were put out as well as the torches. But by all this and their terrible losses the Glandelinians were not to be daunted. While he directed his men to surround the house on all sides he sent one to bring more soldiers and a few cannon.

''We will capturesand carry that plac if we have to besiege it for days.''The glandelinian colonel said.''B No christians or trait ors can get the best of me.''

While waiting for artillery and reinforcements the officer decided to make a desperate attempt to scale the four story building break in the double ba barred storm windows, and capture the plave place that way. He appoint ed about a hundred and thirty men to do this, this attempt being so risky that none of the men would do it unless he led in person, and so he did so thinking that there were only defenders below, and not knowing that the place was impassable at other points, for there was no windows where they appeared but solid walls behind tne the double sashes and glass and soon they found their disappointment, and they were forced to give up the attempt.

I t had been once a sort of store house o for the christ ians, who had builded in walls across the once fair openings of the windows, but on account of their hurry had forgotten to take out the sashes.Before its capture by the Angelinians this old house had been a child slave comm co mittee building as the utensils inside showed the defenders , and the y had a belief that the Glandelinians were attacking for that reason. However this was not their purpose for they believed the escaped suspects were in there, and so the Glandelinians werethe more determined to capture it, even if they did not get the substance of the building, and so the attack was now kept on without intermission, despite their losses, the gla de glandelinians keeping in swarms before the hos house, and within range despite the scathing fire they met and not giving the fugitives a single moments rest, and now the the fugitives were in a fix for all their ammunition was really given out for their firn firing had been so incessant and they only had what was left in their cartrid cartridge belts and in their guns still loaded. About four oclock five t housand glandelinians with fourteen cannon arived.S everal of the guns were trained upon the heavily barred doors.

''We will have to fire upon the gunners to keep them from firing the cannon''Adolph said.''Fireire boys.''

All the men inside the house took good aim at the gunners and blazed away. Nearly every one of the cannoneers dropped-even with their drivers and horse horses, and the curses and swearing of the glandelinian officers was fearful to hear.

''Get the infernal guns out of musket shot range and then aim them at the windows to get the bombs to explode insi de.''The main and first leader fairly screamed.''The vivian girls are in there and they must be captured dead or alive.''

The guns were dr agged for quite a distance and then carefully aimed, and primed, and then discharged als almost simultaneously. One shell struck the roof carrying fragments in all directions. Another crashed through the buildig building and tore loose one of the staircases, which fell with a loud crash that shook the whole house. The third hit a tree near by sendung it to the earth with a thunderous racket among the men, a good many others exploding among the Glandelinians killing and wounding hundreds, and the others exploded too high into the d air ten feet above the house. But a tragedy happened for the shell which had leveled the staircase caused the s iat staircase to fall with hundreds of pounds of other heavy material ad the shock caused the two heavy beams in the room of the first floor to collaspe from the coiling, and these caught Hettie and paisy under one with a great pile of laths and plastering.

''I don't cäl that aiming at all.''Tcried the infuriated glandelinian colonel.''What is the matter with you gunners? Can't you s hoot straight or have you gone loony.?''''''

''The range is too close''Prosted one of the men.

''The hell it is too close.You are only a lot of boobs w o cannot fire sra straight. Aim again now and if you miss the doors again I'll shoot you down also.....''

The guns were again aimed but the brave Calverinians managed to have found rifles tha that would get the range, ad and again the gunners were mowed down... Others immediately took their places, but every shot they fired wn wh went wild and many of these only fäl felled trees. The glandelinian officer was in a terrible rage The men were afraid that if the guns were mowed too fa far away the shots would go too high alt oget her, and had he been a better oj e on the knowldedge of artillery, he would have plaed them at a longer range and so annihilated every fugitive in the building. But he was no good at artillery, and began to realize it , so he determined to make a combined assault with all the men. He ordered them forward and with frightful yells, the graycoats were mowed down in hundreds a in a few minutes, their main leader among them.

Yet the doors had been forced by this time and in rushed the glandelinians but again the christians opened fire simultaneously and in one simultaneous discharge another series of hundreds of graycoats went down in a smash, but the surviving graycoats pushed int o all the doors and rushed in and up the remaining stair cases fired upon f by thedefenders just as they reached the doors of the inner rooms of the first corridor. The glandelinians pounded with the butts of their muskets against the doors with all their

CHAPTER SIX.
BEFORE THE BATT LE OF ANGELINE RUN.

General gunte was surprised indeed when he heard that not only in Norma was this reign of terror going on but in the surrounding counter and spread ing all through Galverinia. He was indeed puzzled at the two sit uations. If he assaulted the enemy at Norma Run once more he would only increase the whole sale slaughter and assassination going on, and if he sent a force to aid those besieging Julo Callio it might turn out as a serious disaster, for the enemy were strong in force on the Henryettia plains, even three times bi b bigger than Hanleys defending Norma from capture. He was anxious to even besige Norma but could not press on gear to the city because of the fact of the opposition he met already.Three glandelinian armies stood in his way and the three combined were q equal to his own numbers . When he had also heard that violet and her sisters and als o thousands of other prisoners were in danger of assassination, he was still more anxious. But that now as the terror in Norma and other towns was increasing so str st eadily, and spreading to widely thatat last when he was on the verge of despair he recieved news that a large army of Abyssinkilians crossing the northern boundary, of Galverinia, and advancing for weeks, were coming to make a junction with him.He at once sent a messenger, commanding him to tà tell the Abyssinkilian leader that he may move across a small stream in the vinicity of Norma catherine called Angeline Run, and to smash down all opposition on Henriettia Plains if he can and crash his way into ab and through Norma. Three days after this, while he was having all regions in poss session of the enemy heavily shelled, several soldiers brought before him se seven Calverinians, general siegmuery, and seven beaut iful little girls.
He was at first surprised then as he looked at the little girls he gasped;
''The vivian girls, daughters of general vivian. How did the two of you Hettie and Daisy get hurt.I see your heads are covered with bandages.?''
The two little girls told the truth.....
''These Calverinians whom I picked up on the Norma Rive River hotly persued by Zimmerman Zimmermanians in boats with the children from a boat, claim that they have befrionded the children.''Said one of the soldiers.''And the little girls admitt it too.....''
''Is that so?''Asked general Bunte.
''Yes your excellency it is true.''Said violet.

THE TERRIBLE STRUGGLE ALONG THE ANGELINE RUN,
AS THE GLANDELINIANS GAIN TRY TO CAPTURE THE NORMA
BRIDGES ,I N THEIR DESPERATE EFFORTS TO PREVENT THE CHRISTIAN R ARMIES FROM BESIEGING NORMA.....

Then Siegmuery told him the whole story of all that was happening in Norma what had happened, and of the experiences, he and the little girls had gone through. This made general Buntes blood boil with inward rage, and his face flushed red. For a time he was silent, then t urned to his tabel and wrote something down on a sheet of paper. Then he ordered an ordelie to summon all the officers to his heq headquarters. Siegmuery saw the note which rad as follows;

''Your excellency general Manson Vivian at Angelinia Agathia;
''For the attempted assassination of Violet and her sisters m your beloved neices, I will through the means of the Angelinian, and Abbieannian Government furnish $ I,345,899 dollars to any man to shoots down Manley no matter when, whr where, and how.And I will endeavor to push my way through to Norma if I have to tear my way through hell to do so.''
General Bunte....''

Siegmuery was indeed surprised. The Calverinians who had saved Violet and her sisters told the christian generals that all the Calverinians-were mustering their own armies to help the Angelinians crush the foes of god, and Bunte said that he hoped they could hurry up and do it. For quite a time Bunte waited for the officers and he recieving them held a long council. During the scouncil some messenger arived, having come a-tearing on his horse and dismountnting before the generals headquarters, entered and said;
''There is a fearful battle raging along Mansions lines. The enemy t are attacking his Abyssinkilian forces like an avalanch sliding against an obstrut obstruction on the mountian side.If he holds out and wins he will be able to drive the enemy into Norma ans we can begin the seige.''
This indeed took Bunte by surprise, and also there was excitement amog amon' the christian generals who immediately rushed to their respective commands.....

General Mansion of the Abyssinkilians hadmade his forces concentrate along the little stream called Angeline Run with the purpose of pushing forward later on and besiege the city of Norma. This was on july the 28th. Onvthe thirty first of July Ninsteen twelve general Manson learned that a large force of Glandelinians was coming to assault his I,300,000 Abyssinkilians. First they appeared as blurred patches stirring vaguely throuh through the blue depths of the wood land, strange but large patches, which looked like gray mice, and moved as silently, melting for an instant into the haze, now picked out in golden relief against a golden lacework of shadows, but always creeping nearer and creeping multiplying, untill the edge of the woods were swarming with them, and the whole forest behind seemed to quicken into a shifting restless life. There was no order or comdition, neither was h the therecany disorder. Then like a great wave they began to pour slowly into the open, and tear across the stubble fields beyond the little stream like a long tidal wave of men and halted on the further ba k to reform. It was as if though Mansions scouts were witnessing the construction of some monsterous puzzle whr where each piece endowned with movement had its allotted place n and slipped into it quietly, and of its own accord.And as companies became divisions, the whole seemed blinded into one whole vaste scene, and ef all of a sudden they realized it was a portion of the whole Glandainian Glandelinian army under Adele-De-Carbe which lay before them, com ing t o strike a blow against Manson.....

But still it waited, its seried lines now stretching in a solid wall behind tthe willows and the clumps of alder bushes, and still that heavy breathless stillness hung like some huge burden in the air. Then from the ground beneath them there came a faint pulsating rhythm, and in the hollow behind them sore screensecresned from the enemy by the crest on which they lay, divisions of Abyssinkilians were marching with guns depressed and heads bent forward, and as they passed into the shallow defile to the right others followed, and stilll others untill it seemed as if their lines would never end. They were massing back of a long rise of ground. There was something disp inspiring in that silent determined host something which thrilled the scouts. They were the flower of the Abyss inkilian army, those men, veterans in the grim buisness of war, the tales of whose exploits had gone like wild fire through out the world. They had heard the Glandelinians spoken of as ruffians, dare-devils, but always in admiration, and generally with a t inge of ev envy. A few minutes later hethey saw a long temuous line of s kirmishers deata detatch itself from the main line of the enemy, and wading the stream d deploy in open order slowly across the fields. They a were also conscious th that the long string of Glandelinians was drawing nearer and nearer, but now they had lost the appearance of men, and were splotches of c olor dancing on the green of the fields. Then as the mist cleared from his ey their eyes th they caught sight of their pale tense faces and the fancy vanished. From somewhere out of the death like stillness, there rang an order. Then a flash of musketry rose from the trenches, and the murderous roar of thousands of scathing volleys seemed to split their ears. Just as general Mansion himself bawled a second order and sprang on his horse, his voice became lost in the sudden sharp cracl crackling storm of musketry from the direction of the enemy, and a hot rain of bullet s swept over his head. Columns after colu columns on the fields beyond the enemy were advancing, and the dry shatter ing roar of their rifles rang out again.The general saw the gray nue murk of their volleys curl up in the sunlight. He heard a quick sharp shout of commands, the confused noise of cheering, then as the gray lines in full force broke for the charge, he galloped for his command, and saw as he went the first columns of graycoats melting as the first storm of bullets burst over the lines: There was a perfect hail of lead as the charging foe res- ponded with deafening volleys and the wild tempest of bullets shrieked a menace in his ears .
As he galloped on, Abyssinkilian troops confronted him, his own troops swarming to the front. He swerved to one side to let abrigade swing past uttering hoarse commands. The roar of hell seemed to come from the direct- ion of the firing line.Back-and forth he had dashed for nearly seven hours. Every hour one division of Glandelinians had struck here and there, broke back as a storm lashed wave, shattered and torn, only to go at it again/. The loss es on both sides was fearful but more fearful for the enemy. As yet not one point of the Abyssinkilian line had been broken.
While tward three o-clock in the after oon when after a lull in the conflict the battle had increased with redoubled fury, a portion of a brigade almost engulfed him, and stopping he halted them. He wheeled his horse took the lead and ordered them on. The angry hum of bullets still rang over his head, and through the pall of smokewrithing up from the cest crest the yellow flashes of the deafening volleys burst suddenly and rolled into a long continuous earsplitting dis discharge which now increased to ten fold violence every minute as more and more joined in. A drift in the heavy firing now set in on the left, and as Mansion gained the crest he found it deserted. Mansion shading his oyex eyes cast a fl glance down the death riddel ridden fields below, then turning stared northward, where the mad roaring tumult of the wild battle now centered and raged furiously. A moment later his gazewas fixed on the woodland beyond the stream, and as he took out his glasses to look better a large column of infantry surged up and around the upper edge of the trees, a and swept out into the meadows above.
''Reinforcements for the enemy.''He muttered, and spinning his horse around with galloped with the troops of his own reserves up the hil hill to the right. He and one of his immense divisions with him leaped the fences and small ditches, co crossed a trampled wheat field and fought their way through ap patch of brambles.And as they went the dull heavy firing increa increased in the distance, and broke out afresh in the clearing far beyond. Mansion swerved again, climbed a tiny knoll and halted panting in the clump of trees which crowned it.Across the field below lay long billows of smoke thr through which masses of men moved daily dimly. The dry crackle of musketry the blare of trumpets, and bugles , the shouts and shell yells came up to them in huge gusts of sound.And even as they looked a wreath of puffball like smoke rose from the hills on the enemys left, and the shrill howling of the battle was intensified by the deeper roar of artillery.

38 Mansion leaned forward and saw fresh columns of gray uniformed troops spas splash across the small stream and fall into position. The sun caught their bayonets in a sparkle of light, then the murky so smoke rolled over them, and they were lost in the fray. Suddenly a vast upheavel shook the dus dust laden monster at their feet, and as it writhed in its agony a dark stream of men burst from the heart of it and flooded the slope. Other streams of men followed, and others , with officers running wildly either among of before them, talking to them savagely.A compact force of Mc-Hollestinian troops charging swiftly had surged out of the smoke their officers trying to beat them back with their sabres, and stop the wild reckless charge. and as the death clouds dropped from it, a breath of air caught the flags and held them suspended. It was the left of the Mc-Hollestinian forces driving head,long to the attack. Mansion yelling hoarsely plunged his men tward it, and the whole the whole scene became suddenly immersed in a frantic human tide of men with glazd eyes glazed eyes, and drawn lips, blood begrimed men, with bare chests and bare arms, with t orn bodies and faces, men who laughed and cried in the same breath, and struck at each other fiercely as they reeled past both being a mixture of red and gray now. Then as suddenly they were gone, and n only Mansion and the little band with him lay before the advancing main columns of the enemy.

''Come back''Mansion shrieked.''Come back you damn fools.You are not beaten yet. Come on be sports and fight them like you never fought before.....''

He had spread out his arms, as although he wwe were herding sheep, and as he closed in one the lines they halted uncertainly.

''IT ''It's Mansion.'Ig It's Mansion.''Cried one. ''Reinforcements. Reinforcements.''

The words rising above the cries rang along the front lines, spread to their rear, and was echoed from the murky vistas beyond, and oneof the sergeants seized the Abyss inkilian flag. This he raised high above his head. The men swarmed tward him, and cheered hoarsely. He shook his fists in their faces.

''Come on ''He yelled.''You double dye d fools. Will you run from a parsel of murderers! !!''

His voice cracked and broke, and he stiffened as though stricekn with wonder. Then he flourished the flag and wheeled, the men cheering again, and pressing after him... But Lieutenant Manson had seen the sudden pained look in his eyes nd clearned a path to his side.

''That's right.''The sergeant mumbled to the men.Keep close.Keep close.''

He stumbled and pulled himself up with an effort. The lieutenant gripped his arm.

''You are hit.''He gasped.

''It's nothing only a scratch .''Said the sergeant. T

The sergeant shook him off feebly.''I don't think I'm-------''

Something ratt led in his throat, and he threw back his head with a chocking gasp.The flag wavered and fell, and as he sank to his knees, t he weight of the staff pitched him forward.The men crowding in on him faltered. He struggled t o rise but the lieutenant bending him ove- him snatched the staff from his hand. There was a sob in his voice as he called to the men, but he held the flag firmly and through the answ ering cheer the sergeant's last words were;

''May god give them the victory.''

The lieutenant looked around once. Then the wall of smoke toppled and curled o ver him and soon he was plunging through a wall of gray shadows, vague shadows, writhing out of the smoke, becoming men and were gone again, and alwa always beneath the rattleof their volleys, the enemys artillery boomed suddenly.

The reek blinded his eyes, stung his sturdy nostrils, and made his skin feel like leather.

He had ceased to shout, his breath was leaving him. Then the air suddenly cleared and through a rift in the smoke he drove straight into the face of the recoili recoiling enemy, the many scores of thousands of men at his heels pushing forward.He continually caught the white flash of many scou scors scores of thousands of musketry, saw the livid sheets of fire spring from the seried lines of receding fire, felt the scorching shower of bullets as they passed over his head. Men fell by the hundreds per minute all around him.Then something gave way, and he was stumbling across the stream, through fresh and thicker clouds of smoke, and out again into the open meadows beyond. Before him and the men in a whirlwind of dust, fled the enemy.The battle was over.The Abyssinkilians had broken Adele-De-garbes army to pieces.

He climbed one of the low slopes, flourishing his sabre, and as he gained the top a made surging yelling crowd pushed around him, men who cheered him by name, flung their caps into the air, and lifted him and his flag to their shouls shoulders, only a lieutenant though he was. The battle was completely won. At all points the foe had als o been driven, Mansions whole

THE BATTLE OF DOLERINE COSTELLIO.

At the same time this was happ ening the big Abyssinkilian forces under Meldon Merennio Aromburg had marched to the point of the city at the nort h east section, and far east of Buntes lines. Whilethe Abyssinkilians was con centrating near this town and strengothening positions, and destroying the bridges the general in chief of the Abyssinkildans came up followed by hundred hundreds of thousands of Abyssinkilians under Concentinian Aromburg. Following the concentration of the Abyssinkilians was a heavy artillery fire from the enemys batteries, and the atmosphere was heavy with the oder of smoke and of blood. Big divisions of Abyssin, i Abyssinkilian forces advanced across a wide plain to concentrate there and throw up works but it was impossible as the plains were heavily shelled, and in their retreat the Abyssinkilians with out offering any sort of fighting went down in hundreds.

The main Abyssinkilian general was angry over this and let loose his own batteries of cannon. Soon everywhere for the space of twenty miles there was a terrific hail of shells and high explosives, which blew up thousands of tons of earth per minute with cont inuous a ears plitting crashes, and spreading destruction and death, and soon for a whole day the Clandelinian and Abyssinkilian batteries were engaged in an unintrupted duel. The firing of the batteries hour by hour increased steadily, but tward night fall it ceased and the two forces awaited the dawn to resume the contest. The next day the battle was resumed by infantry and artillery combined and so violent became the struggle and so far extended that fearful became the crashing roar of artillery and musketry. The drum drum thunder of the many great guns became more violent every minute and the whole of Norma and even Julo Callio was shaken by it. During the fury of the struggle and when thirteen assaults of the enemy had been repulsed the wounded were brought in by those in the inactive parts, by the tens of thousands , and their groans and cries was awful to hear. All on the roadsides werestrewn with bodies. On all the roadsides that they came to the Abyssinkilian generals found the corpses of those who had died in the ambulances, or from falling shells, and many of their bodies were mangled by bayonet wounds , and had died in terrible agony. Even duri g this time the shells seemsto fall every moment to Aronburgs point of observation. Even now the nearest of all the new ly arived Abyssinkilian divisions were already in actionwith their fresh batteries, and on the right of Concentinian Aronburgs line the battle raged with sanguinary fury and a long ris e of ground on the right was taken and retaken over and over again with fearful loss es to both s ides. Thirty se en divisions of Clandelinians seperated into s different columns had swept forward four times in a simultaneous line to carry that rise of ground, bi but in vain, their line four times was torn t o fragments and shot to pieces, and the fields for miles was fairly c cumbered with their own dead and wounded. Hundreds of corpses, bloody clothing, and bloody ban dages were to be seen in every direction. Around where Concentinain Aronburg was standing obse ober observing the scene bullets were whistling and picking his men by the hundred. A few distant houses had caught fire from from the exploding shells and the flames were spreading rapidly. Concent inan Conr Aronburg himself led four hundred thousand men to the ch charge three times through a literall hell of bullets, shells and canister and even high explosives, which tore asunder his whole division, and almost half annihilated it, and after he had made the third charge the wounded lay thickly whe where ever he looked for miles d syno symbols of the suffering of the whole h human race. Thousands able to walk staggeringly, or crawl were trying to reach the red cross camps, but hundreds of thesewere shot down by the surging for foe or torn to pieces by the exploding shells that continued to drop intermitteringly onthe body strewn fields.

Thousands of others writhed in their agony without succor. When he wa was compelled to charge again he seemed to be plunging with his onrushing men into the lowest circle of the inferno of human pain, and hellish destruction of woodlands, and grassy plains, which flared into seething tongues of flame from bursting shells. As his columns went on again the hundreds of fields guns of the enemy committed frightful execution plough ing down the red coats by the t housands everywhere, the sight becoming ghastly. The roar ofmusketry extending along the enemys lines which was twenty miles long had become more terrible, and the meadows were filled with the dead and wounded of both sides, and with wreckage of every des description. The bandages of the wounded were fresh, and blood was soaking through their shirts. All along the fourth line of charge lay scores of thousa thousands of mutilated men, carried on stretchers, or staggering along with blood st reaming from their wounds.

In the afternoon a monsterous squadron of Abyssinkilin Abyss inkilian cavarly joining the charging infantry columns tthat swept to the attack again and with drawn sabres galloped ahead tward the enemy who were keeping up a tremendous fire of musketry and cannon. So vigorous was the cavarly onslaughts that the sabres rose and fell in every direction, mingled with a tumult of pikes , thousands of the Glandelinians being trampled under the horses hoofs, lances and bayonets clashing wildly toget her, and thousands of the Glandelinian soldiers dropped to the ground seemingly every minute. Moans, cries, shouts, curses, and la lamentations filled the air amid the deafening "Devil yell" of the foe, and so furious was the clash with the cavarly that it appeared to have been a regular whole sale slaughter. But nevertheless many of the other Glandelinian columns were coming up on the rush, and these moved forward like a mighty horde of demons, and instant ly as they advanced they poured in a terrible volley all ali along their line, which made an earsplitting and murderous roar heard for twenty miles.

T his terrific withering storm of musketrybhad extended along their whole advancing line at all at once. Oh the horrors that followed, the cries of tens of thousands of wounded as they fell, the shrieks of the thousands of poor horses as they also dropped, and the whistling of the frightful tempest of bullets, the screaming and ripping explosions of shells, and the melting away of the cavarly columns was horrible. Nearly two quarters of the whole cavarly force had been mowed down in one hour. All their leaders however survived, and they sullenly ordered the survivors t o retire. As the cavarly ret reated they left long and high windrows of dead and wounded behind, and many prisoners. The Glandelinians an hour afterwards followed up this bloody defeat of the christian cavarly by a fierce and violent counter charge, and Concentinian and the other Aronburg fought a fiercer conflict with them fou for four hours, and succeeded in hold ing the Glandelinians at bay, but so fierce was the attack of the foe that Concentinian Aronburgs center was outflanked, and though outnumbering their Glandelinian en eenemies were compelled to fall back, and despite determined m and desperate charges by the supporting divisions of Abyssinkilias under general Barnes, the Glandelinians drove all before them, capturing all the guns of general Toneys divisions, they being two hundred altogether, and taking also many prisoners. Had it not been for the prompth action of general Cansin who brought up by forced marches the divisions of Me ldonia and Hendia the day might have ended in a complete Glandelinian victory. These reinforcements arived where they were os most needed, and a determined stand was made. The ensueing struggle was frightful. General Francis T urmer Pagat orinan the main Glandelinian leader was dangerously wounded, and borne from the field of battle. Simultaneously the long gray lines were broken and driven to Dollerine Costellio, and here in this region also filled up by reinforcements the enemy also stood their ground, and Shoemann ia also advancing at this critical moment threw his columns forward to a fierce assault which raged fully fifteen minutes, Shoemannia carrying all before him, but in the confusion of the hellish bedlam generals Cansion, Meldonia and Hendia were killed and their Abyssinkilian divisions swept and torn to pieces. It was at this point when a messenger came to the main Abyssinkilian leader telling him of the enemy being once more successful. Aronburg was indeed amazed when he heard of the failure of those divisions to hold their ground, and he at once sent a few officers and a score of men on a mission to learn if the enemy had any intentions to follow up the success they had gained. Even before he had recieved the news henoticed queer movements among the titanic gray lines and had become suspicious. The battle however was over the enemy being successful were glad enough to have held the two Aronburgs at bay. The losses of both sides were horrible and so dreadful that either side would not admit them. They ranged into the tens of millions who were engaged in this tremendous conflict.

All the near by towns had been filled with millions of christian wounded alone.The Aronburgs claimed their wounded amounted up to I9,000,000 though they refused to reveal that loss. Later it was found to be much above that actual number.

In the mentime things had been quiet along guntes lines but as something seemed to be stirring and as gunte had wished to send men to learn what was taking place violet and her sisters wished to go with the men too, but knowing of their danger, and wq what they formly went through at Norma general gunte said;
"It is dangerous my dear little girls. They may discover you at any distance with their powerful telescopes , and open fire with batteries or sent men aft er you, and get you in their grasp again. I have no objections and do not inte nd, and cannot enforce orders on you l little girls for under the instructions of your father I have nothing to say over you, and you are at liberty to do as you please at any time. Go if you want to, but I am giving you advise on the dangers of the mission. But if you go stay close to the soldiers for I fear you will have a thrilling time.It's more dangerous for any one to go out and scout, than it is to enter the enemys lines on a spying trip."
"We are in the hands of God." Was violet's answer and she and her sisters followed the soldiers.

An exciting chace.

Just as they came within sight of the eny enemys lines without any excit ing expe experiences ea hordes of Glandelinians standing in a gr oup but on horse back and the fiercest of them too known as the Gargolians discovered them and suddenly delivered frightful rolling volleys at them mowing ten of the Angelinians down, and two officers among them, and then came dashing headlong at them and shouting lustily to rouse the others. The surviving Angelinians after delivering a few volleys t urned and fled violet and her sisters being in front, and delivering a few shots themselves, though not aiming carefully as they did not wish to hit any of these Glandelinians for to do so would mean really their end.The surviving Angelinians ran blind ly and the wild tempest of bullets shrieked a menance in their ears, and as they ran a body of of Gargolians trying to head them off cut across the road in front of the fugitives and wh were about to fire, when the Glandelinians who had first discovered them gained upon them in the rear, and engulfed the christian soldiers and violet and her sisters. T he christians desperately fought their way through mowing the enemy down by the score, and when their guns and pistols were empty, they used their sabres and bayonets, and got through to the opening beyond, but here the Glandelinians far in front tried to intetintercept them with fixed bayonets. A cor poral tried to clutch at one of the Angelinians but missed him. Several struck at violet and her sisters with their rifles, and as the blows fell short they could hear the glandelinians curse and swear, and yell like savage demons. Indeed a screaming hell seemed to be at the heels of the fugitives but nevertheless terr fied for their own safty they were bound to escape from these fierce Gargolins GaGargolians. Several figures suddenly loomed up directly in their path and tried to head them off.They swerved once more but the men swerving with them closed in on them again. Again they tried to dodge them, and maddened with rage the Angelinians cut them down with their sabres and stuck them through the body with the bayonet . As As luck would have it it happened t that a large group of Angelinians having seen the commotion came up and these at once attacked the glandelinians and held them at bay for a long time untill the fugitives could get further away, then another regiment of christians came up at hearing the firing and the glandelinians had to withdraw. The fugitives had reached the christian lines by this time and were questioned by the other Angelinians who crowded around them.General Bunte soon learned of their thrilling experience and declared that it seemed impossible to scout on the enemy without having an en counter of some sou sort. It had been more of a severe and bloody skirmish than a mere chace A hundred Angelinians had been killed, and wounded, and two hundred Glandelinians killed, and eight hundred wounded.
Every Glandelinian battery officcer were on the watch for spies, or Scouting parties with great spy glasses and he knew that such attempts after this occured would invu incur the deadly fire of the enemys batt eries, and also destruction and death.....!!

He knew the enemy had some intentions but what he thy they were heknew not, but nevertheless he was not go n going to be fooled, and he determined to strike a blow as the two other christian armies had done, and a sudden blow too before the enemy had a chance to strike him.So it was ;
''On to the siege of Norma.''

A part of Buntes lines was advanced aross a portion of the Arminis Run or Norma Run I mean, and also was extended across the Angeline Run, and this made such a great demonstration that the impetious advance of the enemy along another portion of the line which had been well planned by the enemy leaders was soon checked. In order to create a divers ion and to hold the reinforcements for which Hanson was clamoring, general Sherlock Ho, Holms and Logannia Brown and their own forces of Glande linians made a grand display of force, and active operations against the concen trating christian armies, but was forced to retreat nevertheless before the advance of general Benzigers forces of Abyssinkilians which outnumbered his Glandelinians leaving thousands of sta stragglers behind.

Immediately Imposters Glandelinians went forward also to stop the concentration of the christian armies , and for several hours succeeded in holding the largely outnumbering forces under Benzigers in check by demonsta demonstrations, flank movements, and threats to start a battle, while he hurried his wagon trains of ammunition to general Gandandons army which wa was als o threatened by an overwhelming force under general Richard Logan. It was one of the most masterly battleless defenses of the war ever worked out in Calverinia, and Sherlock Holmns though losing general Brown who was killed by a party of Angelinian snipers, covered some eight miles in his retreat tward Norma Catherine losing in all during some sev severe fighting thirty thousand killed and ninty thousand wounded, and a little over seveseventy thousand seven hundred prisoners.This conflict was known as the battle Holmenn. The christian losses were fifty thousand. The Angelinian forces under general Richard Logan who threatened Gandandons lines had experienced great difficulties, with muddy s swollen roads, and fierce assaults in threatening the villiage of Herman, and in one day by the series of onsets made by the Glandelinians it was divided by a branch of the Angeline Run, to which agood part had been driven across with fri ghtful loss, most of their art illery and transports being on the far side of the river. General Sherlock Holms whose forces were on the left of Gandandons army, occupied intrenched positions on the roads tward Gandandons main center, took aadvantage of the situation caused by Gandandon and without warning four days later he suddenly took the aggressive and with 234,567 men boldly attacked the other line of christians, divided by the river, and shattering the overwhelming christian forces under general Mica Michael Casey at a point called Idols Dell, but two miles from Gandan dons position. So fierce was the Glandelinian attack led by another and a new general, but a splinded fighter called Raymond Richardson Federal that the shattered christian forces outflanked and crushed, fell back, , and despite fearful and violent and desperate counter assaults by the supporting lines under general Schiller and Rescias main forces of Abyssinkilians, the victorous Glandelinians slowly drove all before them capturing seven hundred and seventy guns of general Caseys divisions, which had retired to Assentauto Crossroads, who also brought up his main divisions this happening on the A.B.and C. railroad but the prompt support of general Archibald who also brought up his main divisions, the Glandelinians were cheated of their success, and so dreadful was the stand or desperate also that in the midst of the fearful carnage general Sherlock Ho, Holms the able Glandelinian general was severely wounded and borne from the field of bloody battle. However a part of the christian linewas still broken, and heavy columns had be to be put into the break a to avert a serious disaster. T The assailants were soon forced to retire, Hanoans forces being available and his numbers being far in excess to that of the Glandelinians he immediately persued them, but soon his persuit was checked, and the logses in this part of the struggle frightful.At other points of the line the Glandelinian leaders tried all their able best to defeat general Hansion Flander who had thus been reinforced so strongly, and who had been endeavoring with all his fury to abtain lodgement on the south bend of the Angelinia, Bondinia and Calverinia railroad lines. It seemed to have been this other Hansions general Policy to allow one of his opponents to cross the stream a quarter ofa mile from the railroad, his forces generally reaching the banks in somewhat disorganized conditions, and before he could place them into position Hansion would attack and defeat this Glandelinian force in detail.In what was practically fourteen bloody charges this is what he precisely did, dgfeating in quick succession fourteen of Federals best divisions, and other Glande linian forces untill seven thirty in the evening since the battle along

But at another point, so well was the christian army handled by the Glandelinian forces, that general Doomann with his immense resources and his prepondwance of numbers was at last forced back to his own position with terrible loss. However opposed to the assaulting Glandelinians was a much larger force and backed by the genuis of their leaders which proved the christian commanders to be mighty powers on the defenses, the Glandelinians made no successes. This great advance of the enemy had led to a bloody carnage for fair, and the first intimation that Federal recieved of how desperate Mansioo Mansons d defense was had taken place when he attempted to break through their lines on the two sides of the branch of the Angelinein Run river where after fourty eight hours of severe fighting on that July fourteenth both sides had suffered a loss of I25,789, in killed and wounded. However as far as it goes none of Buntes main army had been in action. And despite these successions of christian victories the advance tward Norma was no more nearer than before.The christians were not beaten but checked.

CHAPTER TEN.

THE BATTLE OF EMPIRE CROSSROADS.....

Empire crossroads four days later was one of the bloodiest spots in the vinicity of Norma Run. The Glandelinians under Shoemannia had made a tremendous series of attacks which lasted four hours upon a portion of Buntes main left wing, but these divisions of Glandelinians had ben been compe, compelled to fall back after the four hours fighting, and now occupied a new position that was twice as strong as that they had abandoned, and the advantage of the christians in this mere four hours had been gained at a terrible cost. They occupied the abandoned positions of the enemy and cap tured a large amount of ammunition and cannon and one hundred thou and prisoners to boot. During the four hours of the first portion of the battle that morning of July sixth Violet and her sisters though they had been far to the rear of the firing line, and though they took no part in it or approach near enough to view it had many striking experiences . That brigh bright morning thousands, may hundreds of thousands of men could be seen movig moving down the slopes and hill tops with gleaming bayonets, while far off in another direction to their left they head continuously a sound of most heavy firing worse firing than they had ever heard in a batt le before, which seemed to mingle with a drum-drum fire of artillery. Suddenly a hail of shells came rattling over as if to say "Here I am."

Violet and her sisters were much alarmed, while the officers commanding the troops far in front of the observation point of Violet and her sisters did all their best to encourage them to do their utmost. Another hail of shells and still another came from the distant christian batteries, and the hills became dotted with the dead and wounded Glandelinians. The gunners of the battering batteries seeing that their shells were falling kind of short, ventured a litt le closer, and soon sent murderous vollets or broadsides of shells into the thick gray columns. However recieving heavy reinforcements the Glandelinians were seen coming forward in ever increasing masses to assault this part of the christian line. This portion of the christian line was under general Captenter.....

This shelling had continud for fifteen minutes, but the gaps we were closed as fast as they appeared, and the charging columns in gra were to be seen advanci ng from every lane, plain or orchard, and once in a while their colums columns we were hidden in the smoke of the bursting shrapnell that landed among their lines. Two of the christian generals along this point called John St Clai r and Augustine Sanders were killed as they moved their troops forward to counter charge the advancing foe who were trying to make a general general attack. More cannon were rus hed to the front to the new breast - works which had been thrown up in short order the day before in advance of the main ones, and soon these guns also sang their defiance. The troops under general Shelby was way in the front, and their firing had become s o incessant that the smoke obscured their lines in clouds, and everywhere along the line there was the thir thrilling cry;

"The Glandelinians are coming.TheGlandelinians are coming. They seem to be in overwhelming numbers.Hold your positions at all hazards of we will be annihilated if we are routed."

The Glandelinian vaca cavarly and troopers were f far in the advance, and to violet and her sisters it was exciting far by beyond description, and right close did the Angelinians hudd/e together in the works aiding each other in their firing or reloading guns.

The closerthe furiously advancing glandelinins got the more exoited Violet and her sisters bebecame and also the more alarmed, while the christian officers promished the men everything they could givethem if they would only hold to the end. How the little girls hearts did beat as the glandelinias glandelinians came within plain sight .The little girls thought the columns in gray were something dreadful. Despite the heavy fire the gray lines pushed on steadily, but slowly and a portion of the glandelinian wave came upon the christians under Brooklinia first, and in this direction it being on their right, Violet and her sisters could hear a fresh outburst of firing and violet sending one of her sisters to inquire what it was learned that the christians under general Brooklinia was already assaulted with the most tremendous fury. Violdinias divisions of Abyssinkilians who had ceased firing for a few minutes were set hard at work to dig more trenches covered by the hot fire of the christian bateries, they building the breastworks with stones and dirt and hauling big gathling and all kinds of machine guns to the front. As the enemy came within range at this point the divisions under genera general Lucille Sigamore did good work.

A very tempest of bullets and canister was poured upon the gray lines which mowed them down by t he scores of thousands for the dista ce of z seven miles, and even when the storm of bullets fired by the survors survivors of the enemy would strike the rocks of the christian breastworks they would rebound and often kill immense masses of men in the Glandelinian columns instead of doing havoc among the christians.

T Fresh Abyssinkilian artillery now broke into action and kept up a continual fire upon the survivors of the landelinians, but their advance was not checked, and instead the glandelinians only regathered their t orn and desciminated lines and made an advance so irrstible irrestible that violet and her sistersbeca became more dreadfully alarmed, and were about to leave the region of this horrible carnage which was now happening, when suddenly a shell came in a high pieve piece of rock buried itself about six feet in the dirt above and then exploded with a great crashing roa roar. This caused a large mass of earth to slide in a solid piece catching Violet and an officer under it, whose leg was caught and held, and he gave the alarm.

Joice reached her first with the assistance of that officer who was in agony and succeeded in getting her head out first before the suffocation she endue endured overcame her. The mora mortars were sending over their own shells hot and heavt heavy-and another fell near by ripping out a good piece of rock. The advancing glandelinians had become furious rushing forward and telling like demons. Just as the rescuers succeeded in getting violets head out another shell burst right above them sending fragments down about them. Then came violets release.Joice had cried in distressing screams for help and as soon as some men could get to her they pulled her out from under the mass of earth and stones. The blood was gushing from her ears, nose and eyes and several teeth had been knocked out. A pyh physcian had been called by this time and when he came and examined her he said that there were no bones broken but could not tell what her injuries were yet. Bent over with her injuries and suffering intensely she was helped to the rear but could not walk fast, though between the screaming shells they could make the fasts fastest time possible, watching the shells, and had even learned to run tward them to let them go over them if they would. As a great gang-gang shell would come over with its rumbling and screaming noise which violet and her sisters never forgot one of her assistance would say;

"Run" along poor things ."

And her remembrance was that she was indeed a poor little thing and so were her sisters. General Bunte was horrified when he saw her and made all preparation for relief at once. the dic doctors finding that s no severe injuries had been sustained only that she had recieved a severe shock and a few brusies.

This was their only experience thos during this four hours part of the conflict that morning. Two hours later the enemy res umed the battle with redoubled fury and annihilated the whole right wing of the christian army under Bunte and drovethe remainder of the force back in the most dis asterous defeat of the whole war entire ly the christian batteries being captured all the gunners being disabled, and genera ls Daniel s parring was killed and general Henry Saunders Hedan was dangerously wounded, having two shats shattered legs and a broken arm and fractured ribs. During this part of the conflict the shells flying through the air looked like a sea of blackbirds a striking against each other. The whole christian right was in full possession of the enemy, and big forces wse were bending forward in extending lines to strike Buntes rear. Surely as a flash of lightning his whole army was threatened with disaster and a stinging spanking in the bargin. His losses was fearful. Even the most massive Abyssinkilian and Concentinian columns were as a reed before the whirlwind as the enemy came forward with all speed possible carrying all before them. At this point there were a number of Angelinian divisions just coming up who had parks of Parrot guns and thes e were trained upon the enemy and when open ing fire t ore frightful avemies through their onrushing lines. These guns wol would run out from behind trees, fire,-and then run back again into the clump of trees so that the advancing glandelinian batteries could not play on them. The limbs of the trees would be split as if struck by a hi hurricane and would fall in front or behind them as the men had learned to run between fires. The firing extended along this new christian line now in general fury and the enemys main line was torn and ripped through and through like a siv sieve.The way the belching cannon mowed the enemy down was extre mely frightful, and violet and her sisters who were watching this scene had a narrow escape when a line of shells right near them in front exploded sum simultaneously sending fragments whistling about them and they were hard of hearing for several hours. Other cannons were brought upto check the enemys victorous advance along the right, but the advancing glandelinian batteries were also playing rapidly in front and the shot and shell fell all around making the scene a regular r roaring hell of explosions. General Knickorbocker rushed up to his aiding general at this time as he cried; "General keep your men close under the bank and don't fire until the enemy are well within range.We wi ll win if you follow this advise."

On came the glandelinians, jumping behind t rees, fences, or into trenches. Shell were exploding above the christian trenches scattering their pieces around Violet and her sisters who were watching the battle at a dista distance, and then Joice and Angeline were screaming and shrieking as the foe came nearer, begging t he f men to hold the foe back and protect them, and the little girls running between the shells were safe from being struck. As Joice was nearer to a line of trenches a mortar shell exploded right in front, and to avoid the flying fragments she threw herself flat upon the grou d ground. The works were struck hundreds of times by the shells which killed and wounded many hundreds .A minnie ball pas sed through poor Jennis Jennies hair and lodged in a hair near in a tree near by. The parrot guns of the enemy were dreaded because as their boom was heard the balls or shells shells were crashing down upon the m. May Many narrow escapes the vivian Girls had had the minnie balls whizzed by in a most furious concert picking the men by the hundreds. The glandelinian leaders were making the effort s of their lives to force these pos tions which boarded a long creek for the distance of nearly ten miles. The men felt bitterly tward the wicked glandelinians since the wounding of poor violet, and were determined that the positions should not be taken under any conditions, and never dreamed that such a thing as a retreat was thought of. The men had tearful eyes feeling that they would gladly give their lifes blood on the battlefield for revenge f of the treatement of violet and her sisters by the glandelinians so dear to the m. At length the bright shining bayonets, sabres and pikes of the might y host approaching tward the works came into view, through the thick haze of smoke from the christian cannon, but were met by a fire that mowed them down by the thousand all along t he line . T he bold stand made by the divisions under their various general officers staggered the enemy, and part of the assaulting line retired with ten of their generals Pisface, Knownothing, Sallowitch, Withering Haallow, Henry Jack Knife, Ring In t he nose, Contemptorian, Fairweather, John Loveh ouse, and too T oo Proud as they were called by their nicknames were wounded. Their n right names were never mentioned. With a ringing sh cheer the Angelinians pressed forward all along the line carrying all before them. General Gandandon was captured by the Angelinians, and over twenty five thousand prisoners with him. Seeing this occurance general Fiarwell and Federal frustrated the counter advance of the Angelinians and in the struggle that ensued with ta to n tenfold fury, general Fiarwell and Federal were driven back and general Contenpporrian was compelled to bring his most massive batteries to bear on the advancing christians.

General Federal in the meantike having brought up his main force de termined to resume the offensive despite the hazardiousness of the idea and resolved to strike out by his left in the direction of Buntes main cavarly divisions, with the idea that the Angelinian army might be forced to abandon the creek in defense of the cavarly divisions, threatened by this move, and so put an end to the counter rush of the repulsive christian forces pushing on against Fairwell. Federal of his whole force had about 500,564 men and more were coming to his aid. Contemptarenscously with Buntes operations the Abyssinkilian aurthorities had been organizing many large and strong Abyssinkilian armies and had placed general T ony Senguine at its hed head.
One of these Abyssinkilian armies had been in the meantime moving for days and being under one of this dashing leaders generals, had s oon come upon the Glandelinian forces under general Holi and Sandon, so that Buntes move by the left had also in view t he army of Abyssinkilians as the first obstacle in the war of relief to Fairwell, an obsticale to be rendered reo removable if possible before it could be greatly reinforced by other comman ders? Night however closed the scene of battle for that day, but however dur ing the night operations were made which brought on fiercer fighting the next day. The flourish of trumpet s in which the christian advance was conduc ted was more exciting than ever. Federal had not known general Mansions intention but accepted the popular opinion of him as a boasteful man, quite ambitious to accomplish great results, but unwilling to un study closely and properly the means necessary to gratify his desires in that direction.
With the double purpose of drawing Aromat ics forces from the creek, and of checking the advance of the new enemy then a approaching under Sendon and Senguino, general Federal sent general Schroeder with Gorginville with a line of men ten miles long to p oppose him, while he threw forward over I,833,000 men to engage general Mansion in case he should attempt to advance and make any junction w with Bunte. General Agcroeder had about two hundred thousand men of his own division, and later general James o O)conner was sent to reinforce him. Mc)d owell Jones was ready was already in junction with Senguine, part of his command however moving to- support other christian commanders.Two hours later Shroeder encountered the Angelinians, a part of Mansions force, and general Gorgonville and Rappah were pitched ont unto them and during this bloody action that second day the Angelinian troops by a well executed move was pressing the Glandelinians back with frightful losses wha the approach of heavy reinforcements changed the scene and a fiercer counter attack from the Glandelinians drove them back in fierce disorder, and again left the graycoats masters of the field. They followed the christians for some distance but Schroeder thought them too strongly intrenched and too strongly reinforced for them to cont inue the battle and risk more severer fight ing in a disjointed way.
So after caring for their scores of thousands of wounded they retired to a position behind the scene called Slaughter Lane and here they waited for the arival of genr general Federal with the other forc es. Thus on his firs t real severe meeing with the Glandelinians the new Abyssinkilian leader went to the rear and direction he was wholly unused to.At that time general Federal felt very certain that Fairwell was in no danger from the advance of the main line of Mansu o Mansions forces . He therefore at noon began at once a b vigorous advance against the Abyssinkilians.II,000,000 were left to watch general Mansion with instructions to follow the main body as soon as the Abyss inkilians were driven away from the creek, and simultaneously thw force of Glandelinians which had c defeated the GlandeAbyssinkilians rea reached general Gorgonvilles men and general Federal accompanied them there.
Shroeders troops were stationed on the left of the Sendon and Andrean railroa railroad and went into camp on Goe Gorgonvilles right wing. Farther on at Gandons was the army of Abyssinkilians and a little in advance of Shroeders positionxs was Hennie Shoemannias lines extending.
Recieving report s two l days later that the Abyssinkilian army was on very weak ground and so weak as to invite attack Federal determined upon s teady work and sent orders that his army should cross the river and make another short but sa sanguinary battle, but soon dispatched to general Jack ohnston of the Glandelinians, but this dispatch was captured by the Angelinians which gave informat ion of the danger threatening them by the nearness of the Glandelinians and of their advance and this caused theAngelinians to slowly withdraw to a stronger position behi behind the Norma Run river.
And there instead of the wea ground where the attack was first meant to be, Federal found the christian army, and also the close approach of Buntes army. The Glandelinians reached the christians and found them in an exatly a unassailable position with heavy reinforcements summoned up to the aid of the Abyssinkilian commander.Bunte was also close by.

General Federals intentions was to force a passage and make the attack before Senguine could concontrate. He hoped to be able to interpose and to strike Senguine before more troops could arive to him, while at the same time under a considerable peppering fire Shroeder was to prepare to force a passage at Hencies Ford, and also to Jacksonias Fords, and here he massed general Vristles forces who crossed the river by a left flank movement, but was opposed by a deadly fire of heab heavy guns which lighted up the scene that night in that direction like some trema tremendous conflagrat conflar gration. Brostole losing twenty hundred thousand in that contest of fiery slaughter withdrew, while Glandelinian columns sought ing an opportunity to cross the river at other points also met the same blazing fire of christian gunnery extending in a dazzling flare for miles. All night long the two immense armies had a regular t ug of hells warefare and in the frightful carnage general Alex Warren was killed, and his Glandelinian forces torn and smashed like an egg shells were also compelled to fall back. Not a regiment had a flag remaining in their staffs so fierce was the storm of bullets poured upon the enemy by the christian infantry. During this time the other Glandelinian forces had quite a spirited artillery engagement of twenty thousand cannon, while a force of Abyssinkilians under Hanson T urner made fi erce endeavors to cross Jennis turners bridge.They succeeded but at the cost of woeful losses and the death of their main leader. The superior position and metal of the Angelinians that it gave them an advat advantage which they imporved by skilfull practice. The Gland elinians had more guns however and by practiv practice equally clever at length gained the advantage and the Abyssinkilians and Angelinians were driven back in disorder. Pending Federals movements southwest of the river general Warri ngton with his cavarly had been making an effort to go around general Mansions army two days later after the battle of Jacksonia Fords, but fearing to remain on the north side of the river in the face of such opposition he was recieving he recrossed with important dispatches he had captured, by a ch arge upon H Mansions headquarters train. This corres pondence confirmed confirmed the informat ions the Glandelinians already had that the christ ian army coming up under general Aurand and the Abyssinkilian troops under T ony Senguine had been ordered to reinforce genera general Mansion. Upon receipt of that information general Federal was more q anxious about the safty of Norma than ever, and determined to cross at once. Mansion however was on the alert and Federal found that he could not attack him to advantage in his great stronghold behind the Norma Run, and so he decided to change his whole plan, and was grat ified in looking at the map to find a very comfortable way of turning Mansion out of his strong position.
It was by moving Shroeder off to his left and far to the rear of the christ ian army, while Bristle remained in front, with 6,338,,999 men to engage him in case he should offe offer to fight In two days moreas it was learned that the great christian armies was forming an extensive solid line in the fo form of a gigantic half circular angle, Shroeder despite the number of men he had recross ed the river four miles above the line of bridges, and four miles west of the Sendon and Andrean railroad. He passed general Gandandons army which he found to his surprise to be fiercely engaged with an Abyssin kilian force, and soon he was many miles in the rear of Mansions force, and between it. This daring move staggered the Angelinian commander, Bunte, but enraged the Abyssinkilian generals. From the Norma Run River Shroeder had gone without serious o position to within a stones throw of the field where the first day of this batt le was to be fought . When he arivd arived near general Bristletoes forces coming up at the moment, the greater part of the christian guard at that point offered battle with such sanguinary fury and despsation that it was evident that Mansion had discovered the sit uation and was moving with his entire army upon Federal. Indeed this was the fact . Shroeder being heavily worsted was compelled to sent a force of three hundred y thousand men forward two miles, but here these Glandelinian troops met a force of chr istian troops IO,000,000 strong who drove them back without an engagement, taking two hundred and fourt y two pieces of artillery and many scores of thousands of prisoners. Also great q quanities of commissionary and quartermaster stos stores.
At all points the Glandelinians had been compelled to withdraw especially those confronting the new force of christ ians. It was now realized that Federal had been outwitted.

July 27th 19?8.....

Prediction.

The reign of terror not alone happened just inside Julio Gallio and Norma Catherine:. The reignof terror as stated before had just began and progressed for several days or so before the advance of general Hansions army was known, and who had a little later according to the story at least started one of the most magnificent, bloodcurdling and terrific seiges on record for any wars ever raged in this story or any where else in this very world.

Not long ago just before the Angelinians and Abbisannians and even Abyssinkilians began the seige of Norma Catherine and the other sections of Vivian Wickey, dispatches from Pandora, a little further north of Calverinia announced that many smaller cities and towns in the regib region of Vivian wickey including Jennie Vivia and Gertrude Angeline had also been seized by the Glandelinians mostly the infantry and cavarly of the Turnorannians or Gargolian Turds whatever they were called, that they had tormented thousands of righteous nuns priests, and other holy women, and hilled so many children especially girls alone that their numbers were not accurately estimated, had killed the government surthorities best man who had been the headof Vivian Wickey and who had fled, and had slaughtered in cold blood over five hundred thousand Abbisannian sold s soldiers, who had tried in vain to resist their wild onslaughts. The Glandelinians known as Turnorannians driven wild with the fury of the war had then ridden or marched away tward Vivian Wickey after burning and looting all these towns and small cities, carrying with them into the most shameful slavery women and boy and girl children, and even old men, whom the five hundred thousand bravo Abbisannians had tried their best to save from the wild Gargolian Turds.

This news which was sudden came with a shock of horror to all supporters and fighters of the Holy Angelinian Cause, and was completely recieved with the greatest sympathy sympathy for the devoted sufferers, and rage andfury against their wicked attackers by everyone, had soon been supplamentted by further reports to Abbisannia and the whole world of just what occured during that horrible rwi reign of Terror in Norma Catherine and her surburbs. And yet these had revealed again just as usual the indomitablecurage and noble self sacrifice of so many of the those wh i those who literally took their lives in their hands when they go out to rebell the wicked rebels who fight so stubbornly for the cause of wicked child slavery and other wicked beliefs.

As may be said in other sections of this volume, what is called Norma Catherine, covers an area about twice the size of London and Chigago Chicago put together. It lises parry a acrcss n and on both sides of the great river which takes the name of Norma Run. It gets its name from the early race of fierce Calverinians, who used to inhibit the s city, and whose formers the latter Calverinians who had ruled it for centurior centuries before it fell into the possession of the Angelinian rebels. The Glanielinians I must confess are really Angelinians themselves, but had in earlier years seceded from the Angelinian states, freed herself from the surthoritiescof Abbisannia and became a free country of her own, and and became Ta famatic followers of the Demon. There seemed to be many types among them as stated on many occasions all known as Turnarians, Turnorannians, Zimmermannians, Comdencinians, Mc-Hollestinians, and the like but the worse of them are the cruel and cal callous Zimmermannians used in many sections of Calverinia by the wicked Glandelinian generals to carry out so many of the frightful massacres of the helpless women and children of Calverinia, especially in the east, where for a time there were not enough armies in the east to protect them from the fiends in human form, the others known as Turnarians, were usually cu cu courtios and kindly, but fierce when fighting in battle, but un crtunately on some occasions was much in the minority.

Vivianwickey, being a place over in this story five hundred years old was an immense city divided in ten sections, five of which were divided by the rivers detal dealta,and was located roughtly on the central coast of Calverinia, about six hundred miles erthwest of Bomdinia, and twice that distance from Calverine. Vivian wickey in winter had the coldest season of all Calverinia when in some cet certain winter spells the tr tempeture generally runs down to the seventy degree mark, and has so much snow that people cannot hardly get outside the city. She is also su subjected to terrifically hot and very long summers, and in the summer season by terrific windstorms which commit a terrible amount of damage.

To just west, north, and northe northwest of her is a welter of great mountian peaks, comprized mostly of the Bondon, Vivian and Loan Hills. The highest of them is sixteen thousand feet high, but there are no volcanoes in this location. Their hidden fastnesses during the seige made good places for the besieging christian troops and held to make positions which though not fortresses were much more stronger than even the fortresses of Vivian Wickey, and which the enemy could never drive general Hansion from.

The greatseige when it really began was maintained by the direction of the three generals Hanson and his brother general Robert Vivian, and Constentinian Aronburg, and backedby the International, Geminizocistics, whose headquarters were in Minneapoli Abbisannia. At its head were generals Hangustoplianna and Hania Gerogeanna, and his wife. He had three children, ad bis his helping his superior general Zimmermann or Concentinian Aronburg he gained almost as great fame as the great generals themselves..Aidingthem strange to say though they said nothing to general Hanson or his brother were the little Angelinia issies Angelinia Aronburg, and Jennie turner the amazons of Angelinia, and general Jacksonia Ambrose E . Evans.

If it had not been for all these, the city of Vivian Wickey would never had been captured in the third year of the war. Now in the meantime while general Hansions armies i onehundred million strong and divided into eighty sections or commands were advancing like storms tward Vivian Wickey, and yet while one section of it under his command in person was storming the foe-forces at Angeline un and Norma Jessia there had been rumors that the wicked Glandelinians in possession of the Norma Catherine section were gathered immense forces of Gargolian infantry and cavarly, for a raid upon all the outlaying towns in the vinioty of Vivian Wickey.

uspecting this general Williamsber Zimmermann Zimmermann who had advanced some armies tward Journellianna had ordered at Hansons advise the Calverinian surthorities to sent a force of five hundred thousand fierce Abbisannian gendarmes, to protect all these small towns, and Hansion himself rushed one of his armies upon Gertrude Angelina and Jennie Vivian with big forces of artillery and about twenty million fighi fighting men to protect these two most important places. Mostly from Jennie Vivian and Gertrude Angelina the women and children by the armies driving there had been sent away to Mansions main armies and to many other places of complete saftly including Pandora and Angelinia Agathia. Verything was in readiness to meet the outbreak of the terrific storm, and as day by day went by and the threatened attacks did not materialize many things in life and so on resumed its old way at the smaller towns, but the women and children were for safty safe forbidden to come back.

In was shortly after after dawn on the twenty f i foist of ohmly after several weeks when the "Reign of Terror was going on at its height in Norma Catherine, and also probably at the time when violet and her sisters had been held as prisoners inside the prisons that the soldiers and people of many of the towns were aroused by the a clamor of all different kind of strange noises, and cries of-:; "The Glandelinians. The Glandelinians."

One of the Angelinian officers in charge of some of the detatchments of christians in one of the towns ran to the roof of his headquarters to see what the trouble was.He saw to the north, west, and south, immense rivers of men on horseback and on foot streaming out of the foot hills from the direction of the captured city of Vivian Wickey. The rising sun flickered on the steel of uplifted rifles swords, and glinted even more ominously on the points of bayonets. There seemed to be countless thousands of them pouring our of those small foothills from the dire tion of Norma Catherine in particular, and the faitg faithful officers heart almost stopped beating as he thought of whatmight be in store for the members of inhibatants who had no doubt follishly remained in the towns and not gone for safty with the rest. the panic in the other distant towns grew, and with that the furious firing of the soldiers stationed there became terrific but nothing could check those terrific Glandelinians. In the town he was in the general saw the gend gendarmes gathering by the thousands, and yet noted how pitifully small they were in numbers compared to the force of Angelinian rebels sweeping down upon the town and the many others.

There came a screaming from the south from thousands of women and children. and the general turned his eyes to the plains at that side. To his amazema amazement he saw there coming like an avalanch a fierce body of the dreaded gargolian Turds, and they were racing their horses down upon those unfortunatels townspeople, who at their approach had tried in vain to escape.

He realized that the town, and probably many of the others also attacked by these - Glandelinians were surrounded. Even during the night immense detatchments of the Glandelinians had very stealthily made their wat way down tward the many towns and had picketted the places, while awaiting the arival of the main rebel forces. And they had remained hidden untilll now, vo for no doubt they had the cruel satisfaction gatisfaction of playing "Cat and mouse with the unfirtun fortunates before them. With the lash of whips and the strokes of their sabres and the prick of lances or bayonets the foe cavarly and infantry drove the fleeing people back into the town and soon the long column of horsemen in gray were close. The officer on the housetop could hear their wild shouts, which sounded like the yelling of as many fiends just sprung from the infernal pits, and also the rolling of drums the fierce noise of distant firing, and all confusion of sound. He then turned and ran below. There he found his wife and two little girls and three boys trying the calm other panic stricken women and children.

''It is th th end the end for all d us now I presume.''Said his wife in a whisper to him as bi his children clung close to her.''

''If it is it is what we knew might come.''He answered. ''We were sent here to repel the rebels if possible. It is our risk.''

There was now a scattering fussilade from outside, answered by wilder yelling,and a series of long rifle volleys. The gendam gendarmes were trying now to stem the menancing the menancing torrent, and how helplessly the Angelinian general knew for he had seen how greatly they were outnumbered. Nevertheless they did consid erable excution among the charging Glandelinian columns.. The fierce firing now grew continuous. Odds or no odds, the gendarmes were putting up a very heroic fight.

But steadily th the gendarmes were pressing pressed back du dropping in hundreds before , surprisingly accurate fire of the rebels. And the machine guns of the defenders were answered by the peculiar staccato of similiar death dealers among the Glandelinians which mowed wide swathw among the columns of gendarmrs.

Suddenly there was q a quick and sudden rush of men into the series of squares on which the generals house stood. It was the gendarmes reduced to almost half their number now, and all around them, yelling, cursing, and shouting, the Glandelinians surged, circling them with a ring of steel and fire and dropping them into windrows of dead and dying.

Then a flag of truce abruptly appeared from the ranks of the rebel besiegers. Then for a moment the firing ceased.

''Surrender''Was the message that accompanied the flag.''Surrender and your lives are safe. Keep on fighting and we will s destroy the town.''

The officers of the gendarmes took com council. At last they decided that as long as they were contending against rebels, and enemies of God, traitors to God and their own country, and all of christianity they would not surrender under any condition and notif notified the enemy so by firing on their truce bearer and shooting him down. Fortunately for them some of Mansions Angelinians happened to be near this town and an abrupt descent upon the Glandelinians by the Angelinians finally saved the town, and caused the rebels to withdraw in frightful panic and confusion and with the loss of twenty thousand in slain and a hundred thousand in wounded.....

Some of the other towns however not being reached by Angelinian armies in time were thus overrun, and the gendarmes were forced to give up their arms, and seized by the Glandelinians who tied their arms behind them, and then while four American watched the scene with horror stricken eyes these gendarmes were stood up in batches, immense batches and riddled to ribbons by the Glandelinian machine guns. It appeared that at the beginning of this wide spread atrocity that the brave American went out in a most heroic effort to stop the murders of so many gendarmes and women and children. The anxious w American women among whom were ten Germans and all being about twenty in number all watched him make his way, to one of the generals of the Glandelinian raiders. They lis the general listened and then laughed scornfully, and signalled to some of his men. These stepped forward gripped the American who was a kind of a professor, and held him while the awful work went on.. Not untill the last ofthe many gendarmes and women and children had been slain or carried off and many lay in shattered heaps about the squares of the towns did the Glandelinian machine guns cease their fire. Then at a signal from one of the Glandelin Glandelinian officers a hundred or more of the Glandelinians rushed an orphan asylum. There Americans especially nuns stood before their little flock in a most pathetic effort to protect them, but they might as well have tried to stem an immense torrent with straw straws. Jeering, yelling, and laughing and cursing, the rebels picked them up and carried them out of the building, and threw them violently at the fee feet of one of their main generals. From inside the orphan asylum came the screams of many children as the Glandelinians dragged them from their hiding places, killing some and carried others outside. The American professor s struggled to aid his women friends and even the orphans.

''These are American women who have charge of these orphans you are carrying away to bucher ot or slavery.''He cried defiantly.''My country will punish you if you dare to harm them.''

''Your country can be blowed.''Laughed the leader.''And It's a very long way off, perhaps a million miles. And these mountians of ours and all these positions and fortresses of Vivian Vickoy are close. And if they can hold off christian dogs they can hold off Ironjoed Grimgoes.''

Then as the professor still pleaded desperately,, the Glandelinian general leaned over and struck him across the mouth with the butt of his pistol knocking his s teeth out. Stunned the professor fell to the ground. His wife managed to break away from her captors, and ran to his side. The Glandelinians being somewhat touched at last did not interfere with her. But and at another command, other Glandelinians leaped upon the other American women who had been in charge of the children of the orphan asylum, and who were huddled together in stark terror.

Them brutally to the accompaniment of mocking comment and derisive laughter, the wicked wicked Glandelinians began to strips the clothing from all of the American goils. Despite the vehement struggles of the women the women and girls were uncovered piece by piece, until l they stood nude before their grinning and wicked tormentors. Indeed the shock and shame of such an exper experience to gently brought up girls of the United States, needed no ex comment. Thiey stood h there these many American fai m r mns martyres to their own fath striving vainly yes vail ca vainly to sheild themselves from the desecratig gaze of the many rebel bt brutes all around them, indeed for hours it seeme d to them. Actually it could not have been many minutes i but it did seem longer.

and they prisked the girls with the sharp po ints of their swords or bayonets. It was atthis moment, that the American progessor woke from his swoon. His horrified eyes fell upon the shocking scene before him. Whether it was his intention to try and sheild the American women-and girls or whether overcome by anger, he attacked their tortorers was not clear. What was clear however wasthat in a moment he was beaten down with rifle butts, cut and slashed at with cabres and pierced with mayoe bayonets, until untill he lay quiet.

It may have been however that despite their defiance,-the wicked Glandelinians were sobered by this moi murder of an merican professor. At any rate they fi nally ceased tormentoing the merican women and girls and ordered them to go back into the orphan asylum and put on their clothes. The women and girls picked up their clothing, threw a enough around them to cover them and carried the body of the American Professor with them. The Professors wife had vanished. The orphan asylum except for themselves was compe completely empty. The hundreds of children over whom they had laboured so lovingly and carefully were goi gone, many either carried to Norma Catherine, or in slavery or slain.....

Not long after the poor Professor died. All the rest of that day the women and even some of the goils had kept watch over the body, while the rebel troops looted the town . As night fell The Glandelinians, many captured women girls, and children thrown across the saddle of their comrades on horseback and other glandelinian cavar y cavarly rode out of the despoiled town. And those who were still alive in the little town of the Calverinians, that only the day before had been so happy, crept out to try and find their dead.

It was two days later or probably more when the Professors wife was found. then she was do discovered half in sane from the shock of her husbands cruel moider, hiding in a ruined house.. At the town of Je nie Vivian and Gr Gertrude Angeline the foe encountered too strong opposition to be able to raid or carry off ny one and then as Mansions main army was approaching within a mile of the scene the foe retreated back into the city taking with them all the captives they had secured. It later deve v developedthat the immense sections of the raiding parties had been a part of the forces f of the notorious Glandelinian general Purgatorian, against whom during the later part of the war and especially during the seige of ivian Wicksy there had been a heavy score for the massacres of the helpless people in the city of Vivian Wickey in the Norma Catherine Section. General Purgatorian it was said, counted those he had murdered by the scores of thousands..It was indeed fortunate for the American girls that he was not with the bands of Glandelinians that raided the town. Had the he been they would not have gotten off with the mere stripping offtheir clothes from them. Like the women and children of the towns and of the orphan asylum they certainly would have been carried away. What reprisals could be made or vengeance exacted against general Purgatorian and his big forces of Glandelinians in poeeession of the immense series of Mc-Whirthian fortifications was doubtful. And the character of the country about the region of the fortresses and its inaccessibility would make a punitive expedition out o practically impossible.

other terrible scenes ofbrutality also occured in the vinicity of Norma Catherine. Despite the peril of the situation and knowing the character of the Glandelinians who had rebelled against all Christian aurthoritiybin their efforts to retain the horrible child slavery, nevertheless war correspondents and news paper reporters of all nationalities had come to Vivian Wickey before the seige began, and had taken picturesand photographs which probably were sent to the Angelinian National Geographic Society to be printed by that Societys admirable educational publication..

Many of the brave war correspondents and newspaper photographers and reports reporters and the like indeed shuddered at the scene they had w taken the risk to witness, and they shuddered still more as they saw a peculiar looking box, with padlocks fastened to the top, and within it a little girl condemned by the wicked Glandelinian Tru Tribunal to die of slow starvation, and indeed their imagination told them how horrible that slow death might be. Yet they dared not try to rescue or save her, and the box was too heavy for a hundred men to carry and was made of iron and stauch wood. Maybe the heads of the Glandelinians are madeof the same material.

however heavy as the box was it was too small for a big man to sit, stand or ly down. ter
There was on the side of it, or at least on two sides of it if you please to look a hold big enough for the unfortunate victim to put out her little head or arm.
When the photographers took the chance of getting her pucture or the picture of the box and the child, the poor little girl wasxpicking vainly at the locks with her feeble hand. It was a great comfort however to know that she was soon beyond the reach of the injustice of the glandelinians because during the night a number of these brave newspaper reporters and war correspondents taking any risk, and dearful chances managed by files and chisels to break the locks, while others kept on the look out for glandelinians and finally managed to open the box and stole off with the child.

Dear readers let your minds supply the details of such a death she would have met had it not been for these brave war correspondents, the long horrible minutes, hours days ,and nights with hunger, thirst, and bol bodily n pain incresasing. No doubt before the war correspondents ever knew of her fate the poor child had been while being in the box starving and suffering from thirst was tormented by jeering Glandelinians, jeered at by officers, wicked in igurance being always on the side of the strong against the weak, ready to throw stones or hard words, as our own ancestors did at victims in the New England stocks, or to help the executioners in their work of torture in Europes Dark Ages. Any body no doubt can remember how a little innocent girl child bringing a piece of wood for a Glandelinian officer, was burned alive at the stake just because she brought the wrong piece for which she was going to get a thrashing with.

These pictures had been taken by the war correspondents for ceetain reasons, but they had not been published needless to say, for the Abbiesannian Gurthorities did not permit it, but nevertheless the reports about it arouse arose sympahty, and made all persons desirable to end all things which were so shocking. Some other pictures however including the ensueing reign of terror in Norma Catherine had been published by other states of Abbiesannia, and the scenes thewar correspondents had witnessed reminded them somehow of the stories of the shocking horrors of the great ''French Revolution, but cruel and horrible as that was or horrible and brutal as the whole of Europe was five hundred years ago, nevertheless Eup Europe was a Saint doing Good compared to these horrible scenes witnessed inside and outside of Norma Catherine.

The pu pictures showing the horrible scenes outside and inside of Vivian Wickey were published with a reporduction of one of the wickedest of the Glandelinian generals, that the wicked Glandelinian torturers worship, to remind the people of other nations that the character of the Angelinian-rebels and their ferocity showed what they really were, and that not one sect of Glandelinians no matter what they were called were any better than their wicked generals and other officers.
The most brutal Glandelinian general ever a known at that time was general Furgatorian, and appeared to the photographers as a brutal God of many hands and many heads, many passons and hatreds which heathens worship, with petty vanities demanding base flattery, and he himself as a god seemed to be worhsiworship worshipped by the cruel, the servile, and brutal Glandelinians.

The particular crime against Glandelinia of which this particular little girl was found guilty of and condemned at first could not be known, and nothing could be wrung from the child who was not then in any condition to speak. It was believed that at first it may have been such an offense as would cause the laws of war to inflict the barbarous sentence of capitol punishment upon a man, but worse yet it would be to inflict it upon a six yeard r year old child. It could be seen that the Glandwlinians despite their overthrown of the rebellion of Eighteen fourty one were still barbarians to any extent, not because they did not know any better, but because they were enemies of Our Lord who had died on the Cross even for them. Ha such gratitude he recieved from them.

Or the unfortunate little girl may have been claimed to be guilty of some offensse that in civilized countries would have called for only a reprimand . It was believed that she may have been lacking in respect and sus subsequently impertinent to some high dignitary of th Glandelinian Gurthorities in Vivian Wickey. They also thought she may have offended the notions of some wicked rebel general devoted to the services of probably the devil himself. Or maybe she may have neglected in some way to commit a sin when the Glandelinians demanded her to do so.
They thought also that she may have refused to tell the wicked Glandelinian Tribunal what she knew of escaping prisoners or something like some one elses offense again against the aurthorities of Glandelinia. Whatever the cause it was they saw the porr little girl in such misery and suffering as hardly conceivable, and thus the reason they could not refrain from taking the risk of saving the child no matter wht what happened if caught at the trick. And seeing this horrible scene, the war correspondents realized what barra barbarism existed among the Angelii Angelinian rebels in the system of rebellion justice, then existing among the Turmerannians in Norma Catherine, and other parts of Vivian Wickey, and they realized what it would mean if the wicked human fiends of that possessed fortified Calverinian city now fully armed, were turned loose in Calverinia as a result of the carelessless of the Calverinian Government of not having Vivian Wickey strongly guarded as Hanson demanded.

One of th the most peculiar sights which the war correspondents a had come across was another little girl who had been held as a so called ''Prisoner of war'' because the Glandelinians and even their aurthorities in Norma Catherine had claimed that though a little ten year old child she had taken the nerve and spunk enough to enter Norma Catherine, spy on them, spy on their doings, their child slave places and the like and thus she had been condemned to the peculiar punishment the war correspond ents had found her in. I presume all readers have heard of all kinds of prisoners prisoners in h chains, but a chain of this kind Iam going to mention which held the little girl is new to may merican imagination. the size of the chain which held the little girl to a s l large staple in the wall and on the floor was large enough to hold a dozen oxen, and one single link was big enough to go easily around a fat mans neck to the flow and th the wall it was riveted. The war correspondents found it utterly impossible to release her even with any kind of files, but nevertheless she bore it bravely and said that in no way was she really facing death, but only slavery and that she would be chained up like this for at least four months. To be photographed the poor little girl had to standup, holding the heavy weight as best as she could.

The photographs from h which these pictures were taken by the brave war correspondents were made were taken ten miles west of Jennie Vivian. Per the war correspo dents also a managed to secure a pucture or two of the vast wild and foreboding looking portresses of Lucillis Dickson and Cedermine, both near Agh burg landing, and all as they knew in the possession of the Angelinian rebels under the commandership of general Furgatorian.( Maybe he wentto Furgatory and came back to tell his friends about it)). In this location ran the beautiful little Gunbeam Creek extending tward the Norma river into which it emptied itw elf for the length of three hundred and fif y six miles,,, and along the former section near its mouth ran on opposite sides two immense eighty for feet fortified walls and bettlements, and a in this location were the fortresses of Laundaedocallio and Marquesian occupying an enormous region on the great Calverinian Plateay eau of Lucillis Dickson Drum.

Not far from here stretched the stream called Logan Race Run.....
( Maybe ll these rivers did run away from the enemy that is the rw reason they are awlawys called Run''.(-)

In this vast tarritory of fortresses were about fifty five five , million two hundred thousand Glandelinians. In advance of the fortresses at Gunbean Creek and along a porion of the Norma Run they had raised the fortified works called Lieghburg Landing, and so busy were the foe that in building they had seemed actually to migrate to one place a d and a nother, or erecting in settled places, carrying on their work as ants, and had erectedalong the mouthy section of the Gunbeam Creek for the distance of ten miles a long line of a hundred thousand cannon, and three hundred thousand smaller guns and fortified and protected by a certain number of fortresses which they gave the n name of St Dominean..

As wo will read later onin volume two upon these fortresses and other points, throughout the first months of the Second year of the war From December 1912, to June 1913 had poured millions of most desperate assailants, fighting fiercely the savage, cruel and bloody Glandelinian soldiery, and though they captured a number of fortresses, dashing boldly and recklessly upon para parapet upon parapet, they had only spend their power leave ocean s of their blood behind, and seemed to recoil again and to abandon the fury of war of the worlds. All this horror was known as the battle of Gunbeam Creek or Jermio Vivian. See First or Second chapter Volume II.

At the beginning of the seige general Mansion had made intentions to assail these fortresses himself, but great hordes which had come on horseback, ponies, even camels, and with oxen, had or crashed with him at Angelina Run, and though he had managed after a bloody battle to drive the enemy on before him, who could tell if the foe would not come on at him again, and this time in flying fury more swiftly. And who knows if the city of Vivian Wickey and its fortresses would ever be recactred. The Glandelinian aurthorities have declared once in a report after general Furgatorian and Mc-allister had captured Vivian Wickey;

''If the christian armies of any size were to besiege the city of Vivian Wiskey for over ten years, and have all the advantage of artillery pr v prov Provis pn privisions and all the necessary things an army needs they will surely never capture it, even if all the angels were to aid them also.. Dear readers This was some tremendous boast indedd. But let me tell you. The city fell before the seige in less than two years and six months.

The picturs were taken by the war correspondents to make the whole christian world,, realize,,, that in Calverinia that were many other great and strong fortresses, in danger of capture by the rebel Angelinians. There was once at the beginning of the seige of vivian wickey that there had been about fifteen hundred million Glandelinians advancing to -in many seried armies to re n reinforce the generals and their armies at vivian wickey, and among them more than a thousand million were Zimmermannians and Mc-Pollestinians. It was also stated that these hundreds of millions of Glandelinians were so deep in wickedness and savagery, that they could scarcely control themselves. They were really as immense as that in this story however as the reports were too true, but the of opposition they recieved from many christian armies of ermsrous size made them tear apart into seperate armies and at such distance of seperation that only those under the Hanleys ever reached vivian wickey and the rest were scattered thoucught throughcut Calverinia, under the Tamerlimes the Three Federals and other Glandelinian generals mentioned in the other volumes of h this story. there were other sects of Glandelinians in vivian wickey as brutal and as cruel as the Zimmerannians and other Mc-Pollestinians. And all these wicked Angelinian rebels ne being well trained in military ways were powerful beyond extreme in their capacity for work, fighting, trench digging, and operations, in battle and unlimited in their power to stand pains and all kinds of hardships. The Angelinian rebels always having had wars with neighborinbng nations and even with Abbicannia, had very intelligent and keen leaders as generals, and had all kinds of engineers and other w army workers that have proved themselves the equl of the Angelinians, in science, and v development, they all of the rebels equalled the Angelinians in their fighting methods also. That is the reason in many ways why they held out so brilliantly and gallently despite the wickedness of their cause.

And many christian generals also were no goods all blundering so that on the christi n side disasterupon disaster had occured, and defeat upon defeat at the most important gi goals.

All people in this country, and elsewhere in this world have indeed something to learn when they would ever hapc happen to look at pictures such as resemble the ones these brave war correspondents took at Norma Catherine( not inside the city of course) They could see the horrible cruelty that pimus punishes the helplessly weak and innocent children remorselessly because they are nothing else but ''christians dogs''.

They could also have on observed most ingeniously produced,,,, by the brave war correspondents in their photographing and drawingsthe scene s of the horrible Ch ''Child Slave Rebellion'' which made the wicked Glandelinian nation appear as a ''God of slaughter, sword and hediousness.''

Finally as they would have looked at these horrible pictures, they would have first seen the poor little goil putting hwr fingers in the locks,, and struggling desperately against fate, end they probably would have felt weak at thinking of the dreadful suffering that had been inflicted upon the millions of human beings, in the sections of the vivian wickey city. They no doubt would wonder what it was all for, what final good could possibly atone for it, and justify it.

Thousands upon thousands of millions of Glandelinians before the war had claimed to have lived in ij injustice, want and fear, and thus they rebelled against Christianity. The mind ask s? What for? Why all these horrors of ehiod child slavery, and false religions among the Glandelinians. Why a ll these savage human beings murdering so many countless women and children, acting like posionous snakes, ferocious animals, hedious diseases, and inflicting terrible tortures which no one can describe. And was it all inevitable before the outbreak of the-rebellioj , or as has been suggested, are there perhaps insanity in the whole Glandelinian nation, just as there i are in a nation, exceptions to be cured, perhaps buried??????

To look back over history is to see a few men of great power driving the thousands to murder each other, but what are they compared to the leaders of this mighty wicked nation called Glandelinia. It is to see immense storms of famine destroying the mothers and the children of vivian wickey, and skipping the greay Glandelinian armies, that wickedly brought on the famine, and who from the supplies from Calverine and elsewhere fed themselves carefully in spite of the seige while the famine rages. You see the Glandelinians in battle after battle fighting the christians in spite of cold and privations, fiercer than wild beasts or wilder human enemies than fiends, and millions driven to death and mutilation inder the lash and tear of rifle and gun fire, that the wicked Glandelinian nation to still retain the horrible child slavery might live in vicious luxery.

Blame forathe sudden seizute of vivian wickey by the wicked Angelinian rebels, and the terrible Norma Catherins horror in which countless persons mostly women and even little children were ruthlessly massacred in cold blood or driven to slavery was placed on the Calverinian governments on the charge that they did not fortifying the city and strong ly garrison it before the rebellion broke out. The blame was placed by Attorney general Hearth Henry Darger Precendent of the supt supreme persons of the Geminian spies Society, who said general Manson had advised, and begged and begged and commandedand implored the aurthorities of the Calverinian governments, to send immense bodies of troops as early as May 1911, at five o-clock on a t Tuesday evening.

General Henry Joseph Darger for a while visibly weak and broken as a result of the disaster and the inhuman slaughter told his version of the horrible scenes, while Ms his wife moaned and screamd hysterically. He said on account of the shocking scenes she had been compelled to witness even though she was one of those who had escaped her conditionwas critical, so critical that he may be forced to send her to a hospital in some town far from the reach of the Glandelinians.

General James Darger a brother in law of general Darger and also a leading Member of the socity in sp ing on the enemy at Norma Catherine was among the many christian spies captured by the rebels ta en t k taken into the woods outside of Vivian wickey, and shot down before the Glandelinian firing squads. His body was identified by Angelinians who had rushed the murderers and secured the bodies.

After her experience Mrs Darger had experienced a restless and sleeplessness night in general Dargers headquarters near Calverine, pacing the floor and the corridor untill after day break, when she went close to the outskirts of his army to await her husbands return. She collasped as he entered the lines.

''Poor Mrs vivian---Poor Mrs Vivian---send her a telegram---tell her how we grieve for her on account of the plight of the poor little vian girls.'' she moaned time and again. Mrs vivian the mother of violet and her sisters had however known it all having been caught in the maelstrome of horror in Norma Catherine herself with even her friend her brothers wife, who however fortunately escaped through the massacre.

General Darger left his wife at his headquarters the day after under good care, and with half of his own forces started for the scene of the massacre hoping to make a junction with general Mansions advancing armiew and strike a blow for revenge. After advancing the forces for about twenty five miles he was met by other advancing christian armies, and a group of their generals. They told him that general Mansion had already fo gh fought a bloody battle at Angeline Run, and despite a slight repulse in the battle had still pressed ahead and that he was already starting to invest the city, and they also told him that he himself would be killed if he dare to proceed in any direction further ; that Mg foe armies were waiting for his army to lay ambush for him. The then knowing it fr fruitless to advance in that direction for a while and that Mansion had started a seige, general Darger halted his army where it was and ordered by telegraph for the other sections to come on and join him at Chicatigal where he had intrenched.

''The first word of the serious trouble at Norma Catherine, and especially the dreadful lonb long battle at Julio Callio came to me at Tuesday evening at five thirty o-clock on July 14th while I was out riding with my wife and several of my body guard.''General Darger said.''It was in the form of a telegram, from suprentendant general Mc-Dowelleranna. He had sent it at nine o-clock that morning. The telegram read;

''My God---send armies of troops as soon as possible. We cannot hold off the progress of the massacres any longer. General Mansion is engaged at Angeline Run and we cannot tell whether he will win or be beaten back. The roar of that distant batt e battle is something terrible. Please send troops or what you can spare.''

''I got in immediate touch with our governer general Manson vivian and his brother general Robert vivian, and adjt;general Bicknell by telephone and telegraph. I communicated at leaset ten or twelve times before I could get to them in proper. I begged and implored them to send soldiers into the districts of vivian Wickey and stop the horrible massacres going on and informed them of the peril of their little girls violet and her sisters who were in the city. I told them of general Mc-Di powellannas urgent call.''

Imwas told that serious as the situation was that they could do nothing themselves even to save violet and her sisters as though they had got word from their representives too late, and that they were too far and too bitterly opposed by great foe armies to advance their armies to the rescue. They also said they could not send armies of troops, and that the best thing to be done was to advance his own armies and get into communication with general Mansion and Concentinian Aronburg and ask them to move on vivian Wickey and bombard it and the fortresses.

I understood it was almost impossible for general Mansion at the time to advance his forces because he himself at the time was fiercely engaged at Angeline Run, and his left wing at the time being cut up and confused had been driven to Carbondale twelve miles away.

I also understood that the wicked Glandelinian armies outside the city itself had surrounded many small towns and attacked carrying off children to slavery, and that both telephone and telograph wires had been cut or torn down, railroads were disabled big fires were being made, and everything of mischief had been done to prevent any one not far from Vivian Vickey from calling for aid. This wholesale killing of women and children inside of Julio Gallio and Norma Catherine and elsewhere is to be fully blamed on the aurthorities of Calverinia. It would not k have ta en taken place, and the city of Vivian Vickey would not have been captured by the rebels if troops were sent when general Hanson first ordered Vivian Vickey to be strongly garrisoned. The laws of Calverinia, and her governments are fully responsible, for this terrible state of affairs. I do not know how many women, men and little children in the two sections of that beautiful city are dead. But I am told that I am the olny one who had any connection with the so me who could really estimate the number n murdered. I want to get full facts, but the Glandelinian armies who were waiting to ambush my troops finally drove me back after fierce fighting. Imever refused to close the ports of the city against them. I told general Frank Manlett in April 1911 1911 that I intended to see to it myself that all ports around Vivian Vickey would be blockaded against the foe and how they broke through the great blocakde is a mistery. He had said to be that it would be all right to go ahead but that the enemy o could easily force any blocakde if they desired to capture the city.

I am interested now in trying to help the grief stricken relatives, of the women and children we who were massacred. After all these many win widows, child less men and women and orphan children are the real sufferers. General Mc-Dowelanna my best friend had been with me in my spying service for eight years. He was like a brother.

Oh gogged man--please do not ask me to say any more---I can't talkp-- they have shot and murdered all the thousands of little firnds I have ever had---they are all dead, dead down in Vivian Vickey''He muttered.''My wife is here with me---she is sick and hysterical in witnessing the horrible scenes. I am doing w hat I can for her but I cannot console her. I do not know what to do--I may have to take her to an army hospital any minute. She screams constantly for the mother of the brave Vivian Girls--she is so weak I cannot let you in. I --want to talk I want to tell you everything about the horrors at Vivian Vickey. I want to tell you of the ruin, and the horror that I saw. It is beyond words now.''

As the door to his headqusrters closed Mrs Darger screamed;

''Oh Henry I do not cannot blame you. But how about the remainder in Vivian Vickey. Who will save them.''

In the meantime hundreds of thousands of Calverinian and Angelinian National Guard troops had been mobilized elsehwere throughout Calverinia and Angelinia, and many divisions were being held ready to be advanced tward Vivian Vickey or at least to general Hansions support as soon as orders were to be recieved. It was predicted that two hundred and twenty five thousand women and little children were dead on account of the Norma Catherine massacre and that ninty thou a thousand others of them were so badly injured by the assassins they they would die. And all kinds of threatening signs were posted conspicuously on all street posts, and windows of the city by the rebels, and which showed the feelings of the rebels in the captured city.

And yet not the slightest apprehension was felt that a day of severe punishment would come to the Glandelinians fully responsible for the deaths and destruction among the innocent victims of the rebellion, and the number of whichmany believed exceeded two hundred thousand and the many injured left to the exposure of the atmosphere and the weater weather. As a matter of fact the maho majority of the Calverinians including th law enforcing officials looked upon the matter as a closed incident, and outside of the morbid crowds coming near Vivian Vickey to gaze upon the stricken region everything was believed to be quiet and peaceful and yet Hansions army had not yet arived.

Many of the dead were still accounted unaccounted for, and the dead adults alone was believed by censors to probably reach near fifty thousand. Of the numbef killed, one thousand were priests and nuns, and eighteen lay brothers in Norma Catherine. Among the injured list included but thirty thousand of the adults, and while many reports still continued to come in of many other windr windrows of dead lying outside Norma Catherine in the outlying fields, hope was expressed by many officials, that these were unfounded and that the situationwas not as critical as it was believed to be. The property loss among the raided towns around Jennie Vivian and Gertrude Angelia Angeline was believed to amount to millions of dollars, and the destruction also continued unmolested during the following days, untill everything that could be destroyed by fire and shells and dynimate was gone, and the smoke f many fires made s o such gigantic clouds that they were seen for many miles in perfect rolls as from volcanic eruptions.

Acr Acts of utmost barbarism upon the hundreds of thousands of the bodies of the dead and dying was testified by the many refugees who had escaped and who had been t k taken to army hosp hospitals and borne out by mutiliated condition of the many fields of dead which had set a new mark for lawlessness in the Calverinian country, which has been known for many centuries anyway as ''Bloody Vivian Vickey, for the reason that many wars started from her evil source. General James Orourke, belonging to the 147th Rigement and an identifiedofficer of the Calverinians had been inside the city of Norma Catherine at the time, and his story of his escape in which he told how he saved himself by crying out th that he was a ''Rebel'' follows;

''Boys I was in three great gr great wars, but in this Glandelinian war or rebellion wicked as the cause seems it does appear as if us Nationals does not have a chance. The scenes I witnessed in Norma Catherine was too fierce to describe in detail. They shot, stabbed, slashed, and struck down children in countless numbers as if they were dogs, and the mobs of butchers raved like madmen. It was the worse massacre I have ever witnessed and I have been through many.. The wicked Angelinian rebels did not intend that any women, old men and little children should escape. And that was a sure thing I tell you. Why I saw Glandelinian soldiers dragged their victims before the tribunals and then out again beating and stabbing and slashing them to death, and then after their bodies lay motionless on the ground, many Glandelinians with automatics filled them full of slugs. Colonel Benauder one of the main Glandelinian officers saw a number of fugitives trying to escape, but they were caught in the wire entanglements in the streets and filled fullof lead.

''urn to the left''Said one of the Glandelinian commanders.I turned right. I plunged forward like a deer. The leaden hail of bullets flew all about me making a screaming concert. I fellt o to the ground at the bottom of a scraggly buxh bush. There I lay more dead than alive while shells and canister screamed above me. However I was captured with one of the escaping children who was a little girl.

''Let's kill em off.''One of the Glandelinian sergeants sang out. That child with me seemed to be a coward. She whispered for her life. She fawned about. There was soon a crowd of Glandelinians about her with fixed n bayonets. I said to the Glandelinians;

''Well boys of Glandelinia I guess I'm done for but my God let me tell you the truth about this, I am an rebel like you fellows and a former service man. I have the proofs in my pocket. Go ahead and kill me but by God I swear that I came down here in Norma Catherine with the understanding that this was a Glandelinian fortress. We down in other sections did not know conditions. Go ahead now and do your worse. But I say there is a Glandelinian here and I am one.''

''One of the Glandelinian officers who was a lieutenant stepped forward with the look of a hot dog. He tookme to one side. I knowing it having learned it during my spying depredations and being a real Glandelinian by birth but in favor of Angelini Angelinia knew the password of the Glandelinians and their rebel sentinels. He summoned two more men.

''I don't know if I can get you out ofhere alive.''He said to me''There is ten million Glandelinians like us around these regions beside the hundred million in Vivian Vickey. And there is not a single road that is not guarded. But I'll try my best to get you out of the squabble.''

This Glandelinian officer who wore bobbed hair like a little girl and who wore a bac black hat looking like that of a college or professor took me and the little girl also to an empty baggage wagon. He then followe d by two Glandelinians drove untill he got to another road and then detoured.

''Lie here untill I can see whether I can get you across.''He said. ''The guards won't let strangers past no matter who is with them.''

So I and the little girl laid in the long grass, and were shocked at times by the crash of some mighty distant explosion that made the ground seem to rock and sway. It seemed he was gone for hours, and we saw many Glandelinians pass and look at the wagon as if it was something they had never seen before, and I was afraid they were so suspicious over its appearance there that they would make a search for escaped refugees. But finally he and his two followers returned.

''I think we can make it.''He said.

We then crossed a road and I taking the little girl with me managed to get to the teg telegraph office in Carbonndale. Even in that small town I we and the little girl were in extreme danger. They wanted to kill evetybody. They did not want the story to come from any person who may have been an eye witness, or who had gone through the horrors at Norma Catherine, and we were also looked upon as two escaping christian dogs. ''Those men there and women and children''Pointing to those who were with him''Had the narrowsest escape a of any one I know of. I don't know how they got away without having a friend among the Glandelinians. And of one of the men then said:

''I ran and ran under fire, and fell, and stumbled an and I got to a railroad. I don't know how I got there, but here I am.''

Another one of the Angelinian spies who had as narrow escape when he walked right into general Dargers christian lines that afternoon he got to the vinicity of the christian territory was wearing the hat of one of his dead comrades.

"It was my first break for liberty after I got captured by the rebels." He said. "When I ran a storm of bullets from the foe wassent after me, and one of the bullets took the hat right from my head. There were plenty of soldier hats to be had about however so I picked up the first one I could, and I see it is the hat of one of my dead pals. That gives you an idea of what took place down in Norma Catherine. Why they are even loading men and women and children on ships, which they then shell and scuddle massacring them that way by the wholesale."

A This escaped fugitive also said that at the beginning of the reign of terror in Norma Catherine one of the leaders of the massacring Glandelinian soldiery drunk with wine cried out:-

"If all who are Glandelinian civililaln want to escape the fate of the dirty christian dogs get over that bobbed wired entanglement in the streets and run into the houses and display your flags. All those who do not display flags will be shot down."

When several others who followed Glandelinian civivilians made for the ints intanglements and did not display Glandelinian flags the Glandelinians began to fire on them, and a number of them was stretched dead across the wire.

Still another escaped spy whose name was Bernard Angolino told the story of how he and seven children with him managed to escaped the raving Glandelinian hords.

"We had witnessed the scenes of Norma Catherine, and not being able to stand it loft the city without any attraction as it seemed. There were eleven of the spies with me belonging to the American Geminian Spie Society, including an officer and two guards. We had secured the children by rescueing them. Trailing behind us was a beggage wagon containing other spies. We got a little beyond the enemy territory about eleven A.M. and had just crossed the beautiful Little Gunbeam Creek, and were viewing the far encampment of some christian army in the distance, when suddenly several hundred rebels leaped from bushes and from behind trees and rocks and began to fire on us in a bunch. We were however at first a little beyond their range and as soon as they started yelling and shooting I yelled to one of my comrades who was an officer;

"They'll get us all if we don't break ranks."

We all then jumped off the wagons and taking the children with us ducked into the nearest woods answering the fire of the foe and bringing a score of them down. e then wadded into the giver untill it was up to our necks still firing at out our porsuers and hitting Glandelinians every time we fired. Of course we did not fail to bring the dittle kids with us leaying none behind despite the confusion of the sudden attack. several score of the Glandelinians however followed us firing buck- shot and one trained a machine gun upon us but did not get our range . We struck out over the river proper and then as another volley came from another machine gun shich did get the range several of my comrades, and three kids were killed, and ten wounded and I was struck by bullets over the eye and knee but they were glacing bullets. Many of my ow other comrades were also wounded, but still they retained a grip on the children who were not killed. And then when the Glandelinians saw we were really going to escape they began to bring into play bigger cannons and rifles and shells and solid shot plunged and exploded all about us throwing geysers of water into the air and spas spl s splashing us in torrents.

Nevertheless we managed to get to the other side with bullets still whizzing about us, and the exploding shells stripping trees of branches and leaves but not touching us. The children who survived were terrified at the deafening crashes of the big bombs as they exploded among the tree tops or somewhere about us. We then all hid in a field of corn and then still under fire of bullets and shells made for a large brush pils. We crawled under this, tearing our clothes, and cutting our faces and hands. In the meantime the rebels had crossed the river and a large party of them as as the shelling stopped came within twn feet of our hiding place. A tall man, who was an officer, apparently a lieutenant shouted out:

"If you see them dod-gasted christian men boys who wan off with our prey boys, shoot em down. And we can't have any one going away from Vivian Vickey and giving the tale to the christian generals or their armies."

Finally the Glandelinians dividing into batches went away in different directions. That was eleven o-clock. About the time we were going to crawl out of the bush a Glandelinian boyscout care along on a horse, and rode up and down the river--up and down. He watched untill five-clock. We could not stand it any longer and to mk make matters worse it was raining pitchforks. I soon spied a man in uniform, he looked like a Glandelinian military pol policeman. We decided to take out chances in a fif fight with him and the boy scout. We attacked and overpowered them. We then managed to escape without further hinderance to Carbanndaler where we caught a train full of christian soldiers going north. That's all."

Another spy refugee, colonel Louis Bert and with him a seond cook once belong- ing to general Bernard Cookerton, told this atory of his escape from the fi fussilade of rifle shots and shrapnell which he also faced. But in his experience he was alone.

"Since i began they now calls it "Bloody Vivian Vickey.the mad Glandelinian nation gone on an insane rama rampar rampage". Bloody is right. There was cold blooded murder in the eyes of every one among the scores of thousands of the mob of wild drink crazed Glandelinian butchers that deliberately ordered all who were Glandelinians by nationality or descent to run to shelter so thay could have the chance to shoot us christians in the back. How did I escape that maelstrome of massacre? Only God and his blessed mother knowns. It was either u just an accident or a miracle."

While spying on the foe I had seen them marching women and children in columns to the Glandelinian tribunals, and they were all massacred before my eyes. All men or women with little children who happened to claim themselves Glandelinians living in Calverinia and in Vivian Vickey were also marched in files of two for what I would call five or six mile miles. I went in with them with the purpose of making my escape. Before we reached the bared wire intanglements, they ordered us all to run for the emempty houses already clearned of christians. They all spoke fairly good ' Laten although many among the Glandelinians appearec appeared to be foreigness.

Finally it was discovered that a good number of the bunch among the real Glandelinia GlaNdelinians in the file were escaping christian refugee refugees, and a glance back revealed to me leveled rifles as we reached the barbed wire. I knew then from the discovery that christians were among them that the jig was up--that they did not intend for the suspicious ones among them to get by the wire intanglements so that we could be shipped home as they promished when we surrendered. The next instant a storm of bullets bee began to fly among those a suspected as christians, and also I felt the wind of many. In rows beside me the poor fellowes t who started to make their way through the barbed wire in the streets were being shot and crumpled up in the intanglement. S Many of them had their skin torn as they were desperately breaking through the pointed wire. I don't know what prompted me to do it but instead of trying to go through the wire, I threw mi myself flat on the ground n and crawled on the earth under the wire. That saves my life. The circle of men who pulled the triggers of the guns aimed high in order to get the men and women and children as they skirmishes skirmished and wriggled through the tortured wire about midway between the ground and the top line of the fence. And all those who displayed flags of Glandelinia did not recieve a single wound.. That's what saved me--oral crawling underneath. Their fire was a little too high for my position. just beyond the wire I spied a tall black berry bush and I literally dove into it after I wriggled under the wires. There I lay for three hours, with my arms and neck burning with scratches from the blackberry bush, and from the barbed wire, while Glandelinians were all around searching for me. However when all seemed quiet and the mob of searchers had gone I gave a qquick ground around me at the row-odidedlandwalked away to a railway station of the Mc-Hollester and Pandora two miles away. There were fifty two of us spies altogether who dared such risk to go down and visit Vivian Vickey in that terrible situation. From what I can figure only four os us may have only gotten away. I was told before I left that fourty two were in the list of the dead, and that six were badly wounded. It takes some nerve I tell you to spy on the Glandelinians when they are in their full rage."

Hundreds of haggard women with dishelved hari, with frightened children clinging to them, with their clothing in tatters and half naked who said they were survivors of the horror in Norma Catherine were escp escorted to the nearest christian lines by a posse of christian soldiers. The fugitives came into the towns after escaping the foe on some persued passa passenger train. No sooner had they descended onto the platform of the station than they were surrounded by a crowd of compassionate Angelinian soldiers, which after asking them a few questions and giving them some better clothing and food and provisions marched them northwest along the railroad tracks to the outskirts and told to go straight ahead and they would come upon the lines of christians under general Darger. When last seen these batches of fi fugitv fugitives were truding in the direction of general Dargers christian army which they did reach saftly.

Four score other fugitives women and children who had escaped most miraculously with their lives during the massacre horror in Norma Catherine walked into general Dargers christian army covere covered with wounds and ragged clothing, their clothes having been shredded either by bullets or sabres and pikes and still trembling from the shocking horrors they had experienced. The children themselves were too fightened to cry and were silent. A spy who claimed to be a Gemini also arivesd saflty to his lines and he was probably one of the few spies who had escaped during those horrible weeks of terror. These batches of refugees after comparing notes declared that they believed that besides two other columns of escaped refugees they were the sole survivor survivors among those massacred.

"They were all shot,stabbed or cut down like dogs."Said Fred Jemisanna an Angelinian officer who had escpr escorted the fugitives to the lines. The rebels are blood cray, mad with wine and w whiskey they had secured in Vivian Vickey. I myself saw sights more horrible than during my few months in battlefields. I saw five little girls with bodies gashed open and entrails hanging out hanged to trees, and another torn and opened body of a woman lying over a barbed wire entang lement and filled full of lead."

The figut fugitives taken in by Jennistonia or Jennieanna were mostly old men, women and children, girls and boys. The last column which escaped when the Glandelinians attacked a caravan of eleven baggage wagons full of women and children were an a great number of soldiers guarding them, but all got after after facing terrific persuit for many hours.

In the meantime large Abbieannian and Angelinian trolp troops were being held ready at Angelinia Agatha to probably entrail for the region of Vivian Vickey within an hour. Not being able just then to advance armies upon Vivian Vickey general Hanson by the help of his governments was mobolizing extra armies which were to be marched upon Vivian Vickey and besiege her. Indeed the estimates of the number of dead victims at Norma Catherine had not been determined even after h the scenes had lasted two weeks, but for the reason that the foe leaders would not allow the numbers of s of slain to be counted. There had been however by spies about twenty six thousand slain visic victims counted, and general Hansion then moving forward after his battle at Angeline Run was informed by telegraph and even by spies that seventy five thousand persons in Norma had been slain and that over twenty thousand were children. General Harrington Franklin President general of the Angelinians said in his reports to Hanson that spies informed him that fourty fourty four thousand children were dead.

General Hansions troops of Angelinians which had been baptized in the fierce rebel fire at Angeline Run were ordered by general Hanson to march at eleven-oclock to Vivian Vickey to lay seige, and be ready to face the rebel armies there, with big machine seige guns, and all other army provisions for seige, and he had recieved orders to stop the massacres even if he had to shoot as many Glandelinian prisoners down to do so. There had however remained only the official gestures— the formal plea of civic aurthorities in the heart of the districts of Vivian Vickey, to send all these Glandelinian rebels massacring the inhibatants of Norma Catherine and who ruthlessly brought a nightmare of horror to the whole of Calverinia to the infernalregions.

Despite the tales from the location of the Vivian Vickey trouble s zone and despite the thousands of reports of fresh outbreaks especially at the western section of the Julio Callio itself there had been also reported to be a most surprisingly delay by the Calverinian Covermment officials to ask for the necessary troops, and this delay had made general Hanson Vivian very angry, and many officlas officlas were forced to hand in their resginiation. It was necessary in the western section of julio Callio for volunteer posses of christian soldiers from Mansions approaching armies to escort to the christian lines many of the escaped refugees, some of them half crazed from their harrowing experiences, said to have been the survivors of the hundreds of thouzands of luckless captives taken by the enemy and thrown into prisons to await the slaughters in Norma Catherine, and Julio Callio. Most of the unfortunate redg refugees were brought to general Mansions lines on railway trains still in the possession of the Nationals and strongly guarded either on trains or tracks. As soon as they left the trains they were surrounded by immense crowds of soldiers, which began to harass them with questions, and even many among the crowds of soldiers looked closely to find wh whether any among them were their wives, fathers, mor mothers, sisters, brothers, or children, or any other relatives but there were none here.

Many of the christian officers fought their way to the side of the refugees formed a guard around them, and escorted them out of the town. They were marched north to the outskirts of the christian lines and told to go for all shelter they could find and were fed and given clothing that was obtainable. As Mansions troops waited for the general order to advance on Vivian Vickey general Mansion who had stayed behind at Angeline Run reached his army within two days after the battle, a poor broken nerve racked man who had looked on so many thousands of dead and wounded soldiers.

General Mansion also like general Darger blamed the Calverinian Covermments for the disaster at Vivian Vickey. He protested that the commander there in May before the enemy approached had begged, and implored the aurthorities of the governments to send troops in strong numbers as early as possible but none came. General Len gard heard of general Mansions charge against the Calverinian Governments after he had issued his call for one million one hundred and ten thousand troops. He admitted that general Mansion had talked to him Tuesday evening after the bloody battle on the Angeline Run, and that he had informed general Mansion that immense armies of troops mostly Abbieannians were being held in readiness for quick advance in the near by towns still in the possession of the christians. He also told him that the troops must await the call of properly consitited aurthorities in the near Vivian Vickey locality. Under the law there is some question wh whether us National generals may order troops into a war torn region without such an appeal. In an emergency I suppose I would have to and can act on all conditions.. The troops mobolized all around the section and even at Angelinia Agatha and Pandora will entrain for the region of Vivian Vickey the minute the loal Calverinian Aurthorities ask for them, or as soon as general Mansion shall make up his mind to advance or as soon as there is a renewal of the fearful outbreaks of the rebellion that convinces our governments that the smaller armies are not great enough to cope with the situation..

Hundreds of other refugeesx, men women and little children, from the Norma Catherine districts with stories to told the blood cold, reached general Mansions sheltering armies, and made their way to the inlistment offices which had rescued them from the scenes of death and destruction. General Mansions order for mobi mobolising was issued at three o-clock i on a sunday morning after the action at Angeline Run. All through the gray hours of dawn seemingly immense seas of soldiers were responding and Mansion was soon advancing to begin the seige. The one hundred and thirty second division was joined by many machine gun comapnies of the one hundred and sixty sixth division and infantry regm regiments. Each of these divisions had ten machine gun companies. The one hundred and thirty second corps had a centemetor and a gigantic howitzer company but it was not stated if they would all reach the region of Vivian Vickey as soon as the others would.

Prodent Abbieannian generals also responded for the call with haste. They went to the armories and assisted in the work, of issuei g issueing equipments equipment to the soldiers without it. Among them was lieuteranat general James Gannonia - chariman of the board of Calverinian Directors of amry supplies. Others were First Lieuteranat generals Eugene Schloederanna, Company H/ Second Battalion of Triponligonlias Railway Main Agents for Army Supplies, Major General Fredrick Andyanna and first Lieutenant general Clifford Bep pp Beppo, Handler of the Headquarters force, first Abbieannian Battalion. General Swanconia began arrangements to transport the immense christian armies to the scene over as many railroads as were not in the possession of the Angelinian rebels. The immense host of militiamen showed utmost willingless to get into the region of Vivian Vickey and to avert further bloodshed of the helpless non-combatants. Hundreds of majors and captians worked shoulder to shoulder with the thousand supply sergeants. Other great christian generals of these armies included among the officers of the armies of Nationals were gensral Jeffersonia Davidsonia, Company X. 22 Battalion, safty engineer for the Abbieannian bridge builders and general Waldoe Paldoe who had command of two brigades and artillery mostly big seige guns. General Swansonia conferred over the long distance telephone at nine fourty five P.M. with off officers of other divisions in Pandora. He recieved orders to advance on Vivian Vickey with Mansion without delay and to call back at eleven o-clock the day after the advance began for further instructions. He said any amount of troops could entrail within an hour as many trains were still running despite the fact it appeared as if the rebellion was going to be a terrible civil war.

The order of mobolization was telegrap telegraphed to general Henry Darger by Mr Mansion after a midnight conference with general Hanson Vivian and his brother with their personal advisers at which it was decided wise to use as big armies as possible in the disturbed districts of Vivian Vickey in case of need, than to call out any local armies which no doubt which would be slower in advance. The telegrem that s general Mansion sent Darger read as follows;;;;;;

Despite assurance from other sections of Vivian Vickey that other christian generals by threates concerning Glandelini n prisoners taken in war have established some piece and quiet in the city of Norma Catherine, I am nevertheless tonight reliably advised that life and property in the sections of Vivian Vickey are still in great jeopardy, and that hundreds of thousands of prisoners are still held by the rebels in the staunch a staunch prisons of Norma Catherine. Pending government advises you will please assemble and hold in readiness all your armies together with machine gun companies and such other divisions to make up a force of at least 10,000,000 men with full field equipment, to be movedy under further orders from me if necessary. I am advancing to day to lay seige to Vivian Vickey, and Hanson Vivian has ordered the Natiol National fleets of warships to blo blockade all ports of Vivian Vickey, and the rivers running through her sections. Plwase keep attention.

General Mansion.
governer general. Commander in chief of Angelinian National Guard.''

At the same time general Mansion sent the following telegram to general Barger, he also sent one to general William Whilliamsber Zimmermann;

''I insist on an immediate reply to my telegram of the twenty third of July in relation to tremendous battles and war roits and disorders in the Vivian Vickey County and the city itself giving detailed and accurate information of what steps have been and are being taken by you for the apprehension of the Angelinian rebels who committed those horrible crimes, and to prevent further difficulties of the law. I insist upon prompt action and upon enforcement of the laws of Calverinia for the preservation of peace and good order. Troops are being held in readiness.''

General Mansion.

General Mansion soon however got a reply which stated that general Whilliamsberger Zimmermann had been cut off from communications by the enemy, and that on account of fierce opposition he was not able as jet to advance on Vivian Vickey. Similarly a telegram was sent to a attorney general of an Abyssinkilian Army worded as follows;

''I have no reply to my telegram of the twenty fourth of July requesting inform information from you in relation to the steps taken by you for the commencement of the seige of Vivian Vickey, and the capture and or proc prosecution of the Angelinian rebels committing the wholesale murders and outrages reported to me concerning Norma Catherine and Julio Gallio, and the small towns outside, in your own county beginning on the Twentieth of July. An immediate reply is necessary, that the guilty rebel murders shall be brought to justice.

Further advise me whether the Calverinian Circuit Court in your county is now in session, and if not, what steps have been taken if any, for the convening of a grand army jury to investigate the crimes committed, and return indictments against those still committing those crimes, and those who have already done so. I must inis insist upon a prompt reply to this communication. It is necessary.

General Mansion.
n the Governer General.

James O'Rourke a Caldwell another christian general belongs belonging to the Sixth Division who was shot six times and cut severely as he lay on the ground to told the following story in the army base hospital to a representive of a war correspondent, while others wounded more seriously, who were either men women or children comfirmed his story by nodding their heads from the adjoining beds.

''I was sent to Norma Catherine to learn the strength of the foe positions in the Lucillia Dickson Fortifications by the Angelinian Commissionary General as an Geminian spy. There was nothing said to be at the time about spyig spying on an enemy driven mad by drunkedness and lust for blood and rape and other horror.

Of course I had nothing to do with my operations of spying inside the city itself in an any way as I was to learn the strength of the foe & garrisons at those fortresses so I never actually saw the Reign of Terror in Norma Catherine itself. I simply was supplied with the ne needs of spying on the fortresses only. I had been-sent by by general Hanson Vivian himself who having learned that the city of Vivian Vickey and her many immense fortresses had been captured by the enemy had been expecting trouble, and had told me that before the city of Vivian Vickey fell into the hands of the rebels had asked andcdemanded the Calverinian Authorities to send troops to fortify the city as soon as possible.

Yesterday at the height of the reign of terror additional armies of Nationals were expected after we had learned that the Authorities of Calverinia could not be counted on for help or reinforcements, and when some of Mansions armies were starting on the way to make seige of the city and her fortresses the main trouble with us Angelinians and the rebels started outside the city.

I had been spying around the fortresses, and the Glandelinian officials had been nor notified that spies had been within their lines, and that through the cause of the spies numbers of Glandelinian cavarly troops had been ambushed about eight miles out from Carbanndale and general Purgatorian notified general Purraggatorian who had the whole region combed for the suspected spies, and I realized I was in danger and decided to make my escape as soon as possible. I had never succeeded in entering any of the fortresses. Shortly after I had partly left the foe lines with a party of friends we f found ourselves persued and were forced to sh seek the shelter of a deep ravine. Presently afterwards Glandelinian soldiers began to gather around the ravine, and some fierce shooting began.

We all protected ourselves behind tall rocks, and quickly formed trenches and got through the night without any serious casualties.

Shortly after 6.P.M. we found ourselves still surrounded and the Glandelinians started firing again, and one of our comrades who no doubt may have been a fraidy -cat ran up the whits flag of truce. To think of us surrendering to the enemies of god. It is mortifying. I struck the guy down and took the truce flag away from him and hurled at it at one of the nearest Glandelinians who had started to screa scramble down into the ravine, and who had demanded of us to march out in single file, but we knew the savagery of the foe and would not surrender, and so eah each of us lied side by side, and gave the besiegers a hot reception. There were at least one hundred and fifty us us nati nationals and probably nearly a thousand of the Angelinian rebels.

When the arrangements were completed for a final stand we found that the besiegers were recoiling, and being fired on from somewhere, and then one of our leades leaders who had mounted the top ordered us to spring out of the ravine and march up the road in the direction of a large christian encampment seen not far away.

Seeing that rescue was at hand as the foe had been attacked by a party of Angelinian cavarly we obeyed, and as we reached a railway switch just west of the ravine, it was seen that the Glandelinians heavily outnumbering this their attackers had rallied and was pressing on, and one of our comrades whom the enemy seemed to hate the most, and whom they seemed to feel more strongly against for some reason or other was shot. A little further on one of the Angelinians called:

The Glandelinians are approaching again. The cavarly was beaten. We will have to make a dash for it now or we will be annihilated...''

Just then a yell came from the enemy and their leaders shouted as they fired upon us;

''Let's go and clean the christian dogs, the seam scabs of Angelinia'' And firing as best as we could we all started to run. We ran past an old abandoned power house, through a wooded country to a point about one mile in where a long barbed wire fence stopped us. The rebels were in hot persuit of us and still yelling and firing. While my comrades were tearing down or tying trying to climb over there was a regular fussilade of shots from the Glandelinian persuers, after which only six of us remained. The remainder of us werd were then captured and overpowered, and some of the Glandelinians tied ropes around our necks and we were ordered curtly to march ahead and be quick about it.

We were compelled to march to a point near one of the outside cemeteries of Vivian Vickey when I was shot in the heel when I made a desperate attempt to get Away. I fell carrying some of my other comrades with me, and once more there was a volley which left us all on the ground desperately wounded. It was while we lay there that Glandelinians came up and cursed and beat and slash at us. The pleadings of the wounded was most pitiful but it did not soften the hearts of the wicked rebels. I myself begged for waterThe Glandelinians finally left us lay there and returned to their own lines. Shortly after a woman refugee with three children all little boys and with a little baby girl of one year in her arms to whom I appealed in the name of Chir Christianity gave me some water but two Glandelinians rode up at the moment and struck her down, t ore the cup of water from me and gave me a kick instead as he threw the cup and water from him and one of the other Glandelinians appearing in sight at the moment dismounted from his horse drew his sabre and slashed my throat. I then lay still and awoke in this hospital.''

The countless bullet scarred trees in the woods north of the region of the attack and assassination of the escaped spies and pools of blood alongside of the broken barbed wired fence evidenced the shots where the spies harassed and persued closely tried in vain to escape into the woods. At various interbvals on the road tward the direction of general Bargers army a torn cap, a water bag, a bloody shirt, a shoe, or a gun or some broken sabre or knife marked the route. When the bodies were carried into the Christian lines by a regiment of cavarly general Whilliam Mc Gowaner ordered them brought into the barracks. Here they were first dumped into heaps, one on top of the other. Then while they were being laid out in rows, a hurry call for army caskets brought pine and other kind of casket boxes, upon which the hundred dead men were laid, stripped of their clothing and was washed.

Sheets were then thrown over them and the doors were opened to the thousands of women and other refugees which surrounded the buildings. Men, old, men, and women with babies in their arms and children clinging to them in grief and terror, marched past the bodies without recognizing any one as their friends orrvrelatives for hours during which time flies and other insects began to gather, and it was not long before the faces and other sections which were badly cut were covered back with the insects. Among the effects of the dead men were found part of an honerable discharge from the army of a man for old age by the name of Darrel. Still another discharged soldier bore the name of Jennsin who was to be discharged two weeks after because of a defect in his right arm susp sustained from a wound recieved in a re e recent battle . A third was marked G.C. WalWailen Company C. First Infantry. All of these dead bodies having no relatives or friends among any number of the refugees were then removed to be buried. Practically no marks of identification was found on the clothing of any of the killed spies and it was im possible to identify them as all the records of their spying companies were were destroyed by the Glandelinians. The question of who was really responsible for the horrors at Vivian Vickey and the capture of the city and her fortresses in particular was a matter that Vr probably would not be settled untill some outside investigation or investigating body got into the districts. The many christian officials and generals and oven general Manson, and Henry Darger put the blame upon the officials of the Calverinian Governments for delaying the strengthening of the garrison of the Mc-Ghirthian Fortresses, and for allowing christian armies in the vinicity to act without orders from Manson and to make movements that invited trouble.

The generals clamed the trouble concerning the massacres, and the bloody persuits of soldiers and spies, and refugees, was started when an Angelinian spy by the name of Guy Jinkins was shot by a Glandelinian guard while on his way to general Mansion with an important plan he had secured from generam Mc-Allister Stanwks tent. Their claims in a measure wes borne out by general Melviner who told of a xo conference with general W Lesterton,commander of general Mansions right wing, General Deloss, Army Attorney general, Supretendent general Mcc owner, and general Turner Hunter in which they argued that all ports of Vivian Vickey, and all the rivers running through her be blockaded, and the city and her fortresses be strongly guarded by Abbiesannian and Calverinian troops. He said that general Lester Stated that he had brought army equipment and the like for the purpose of making a blockade of the fortresses by land and sea, and that he had proposed to do it whr whether the government said so or not, but that he had been defeated by the rebels while engaging them in a section of the battle of Abbiesann. he check up on of the dead spies and the injured showed that there were ten Glandelinians, among the Angelinians. The injured list was slighter and six other spies who had escaped the foe massacre were missing. Missing list out of the two hundred and fifty two men who were routed from the ravine remained unaccounted for. Fourteen of the injured Glandelinians and Angelinians were placed in one of the base hospitals.

General Hunters record of events of the Norma Catherine Reign of Terror sin since the time of the escape of the Vivian Girls by river was astonishing. He had arived near his headquarters at Marion Creek on the following Sunday, to look the situation over and had kept a chronological record indeed. He was induced by anamerican war correspondent to make it public through the newspapers so the news would be known by the whole world. It explained many of the important factors leading up to and including the ''Reign of Terror in orma Catherine.

''I came down here on Sunday on my own initiative.''He said.''General Mansion was at. Carbondaler when I got word of the horrible massacres at Norma Catherine and Julio Callio and I decided to investigate as I knew this would be the generals desire if he were here. Let me say right here that I at the time did not have the power to call forward armies of troops at any time. The law of the Calverinian Governments compelled me to wait untill the local aurthorities announced the situation beyond their control and asked for troops and armies of artillery. All the time I kept in constant touch with general Mansion but was always advised by him that now he had the situation well in hand and was advancing to bes besiege the city and the fortresses..As a matter of fact I took a chance and exceeded my aurthority in a number of instances and the record I have here will prove this to be so. This record is as follows;;

''Sunday June I5th I9I2. Since the foe had fought and was still fighting the battle of Julio Callio, and hhad captured Norma already was advised of possible trouble in the districts around Jennie Vivian and Gertrude Angeline. Notified atturney general to arrange conference with other generals and with all sides represented. At this conference urged general Lester to come with his armies join Mansion, and close in on Vivian Vickey and punish the murderers in Norma Catherine. Stated the foe and Vivian Vickey w was a menance to the whole of Calverinia, to attempt to allow to go unbesieged because of existing conditions. I f not besieged foe would overrun thrwhole of Calverinia in double time. General

Lester tha with general Robert Vivians army at Abbiesann prepared to do so but had his army crippled in the battle at Abbiesann and was unable to move but had to go along with general Vivian. Monday June I6th I9I2 and Tuesday June I7th investigating. Sees seriousness of great suti situations at Vivian Vickey and asked general Mansion who was then raging the battle of Angeline Run if he needed any help. General Mansion stated by te top telegraph that he felt confident with his generals and their divisions to handle situation during battle. Got repulsed but still able to advance. His losses run to millions.'' Wednesday June I8th 9.A.M. Notified from general Mansio n that mobs of fifty squads of Glandelinians raided and pillaged towns around Jennie Vivian and Gertrude Angeline taking women and children prisoners and taking away all arms and great stores of ammunition and massacring gendarmes. Called general Mansion and verified report, also learned that towns in the vinicity of Jennie Vivian and other small towns were visited within sight of general Mansions very lines and two hundred and twenty two thousand five hundred rounds of shot gun, and rifle-ammunition taken and man many women and children killed or carried off to Vivian Vickey. At IO thirty P.M. was notified that attempts were made to raid the town of Jennie Vivian but failed on account of Mansion throwing troops in their way in the nick of time. Other towns were also entered bt as the town aurthorities had been notified to remove ammunition and rifles to christian lines the foe secured nothe nothing in the latter. Attempts made to secure more prisoners and ammunition from local chapter of Angelinian legion by a desperate sortie failed also. At 2.P.M. On next day notified great crowds of Glandelinians of nearly six hundred thousand assembling near general Mansions lines from Port Lucillie Dickson.

Notified general Mansion and he answered that his generals and officers had gone to the front of their positions to investigate, shooting of many sentries on line of duty and had observed the concentration.

In absense of general Lester asked genera general Deputy what he was doing on Mansions right and he informed me that he was the only one there in the center of the wing on duty, but that the other generals had go e to the front to see why it was that great forces of rebels were massing. At 2.30.P.M. called general Mansion again to learn if any generals and and spies and scouts made any effort to look up the situation. Was informed that they had not, but as yet no attack by foe had been launched.

At 3.I5.P.M. general Mansion called me by phone. Stated great forces of foevtroops were marching tward his central positions, that there was continual heavy firing, and already about five hundred thousand rifle shots had been exchanged and the noise was terrific added by artillery and shell and machine gun fire. He asked me to watched the motions of the foe elsshere and asked me if I needed troops and I informed him I had no aurthority under the statute to order any troops forward to battle unless they were attacked first. Told him civil aurthorities must make requests and that they informed me they were able to take care of any emergency.

3.30.P.M. The general called me again. Furious assaults has increased and his armies were fiercely engaged all along every point of Angeline Run. Battle raging furiously and one portion of his troops routed and rallied on the summit of a ridge with diffu difficulty. One portion of christian army surrounded. Whole army in dire distress. Losses terrificic.

3.50.P.M. Assistant Superintendant general Shoemaucker phoned and stated that one of Mansions divisions was wiped out. Even Mansion got on the Phone again and stated that one of his divisions suffered annihilation from an infilading fire of surrounding rebels. He soon got on the pohne again and asked me for troops. Tried to get general Lester5.I5.P.M. Called Mansion instead. Told him I couldnot find General Lester. I got word his army was crushed and he himself wounded. Mansion said) What shall I do? I suggested to fi ht u on under any condition and asked him to see if further trouble could not be averted as battle had a extended along my own lines and I was being hard pressed by the wildest assaults I have ever seen. Asked him if it was possible to withdraw the men from the danger zone of the heavily assaulting enemy and arrange with the main line to repel assault of foe with better advantage of good positions and they would then h rl hurl the rebels back. Said he would if I could get in touch with general Lester who waw wounded wounded. I agreed.

5.30.P.M. Notified by general Lester that many of his officers and one of his supreme generals was killed, and two others wounded and that foe was winning battle. At five thirty five P.M. got general Fox suggest on po phone and asked him or advised him of what general Mansion asked and he agf agreed to do it. Said he would muster reserves and endravor to repulse the assailants. 5.45.P.M. Called general Mansion and told him generals agreed to terms. He said firing had ceased along main center and foe were retiring but battle was still r raging along the other two wings with reo redoubled violence. 6.P.M. Called general Fuges. He had not started. Foe came on him like a train wreck. Suggested that he personally with draw his shattered and torn divisions from the field. Agreed to do so at once. 6.I0.P.M. Called general Mansion and advised him general Fuges was being driven back and that the foe was on his way to victory. Called general Fuges an again and he was gone. Be later learned battle ceased and foe had slowly withdrawn but Manl Mansion was for a time too shaken up to advance.

10.30.PM. Advised that all railroad tracks and places within location of vivian wickey were shelled, blown up or dynamited. I.A.M. Midnight quiet and evidently trouble over for the night. Returned to positions. June 30th 1912. Reports indicated little or no trouble along mansions lines but scenes in orma Catherine though slightly slackened up still continueing. S. A. D. went to the region of battle field with general mansion and learned that during night, many Angelinian guards had been withdrawn from region and that many christian positions during battle had been simultaneously rushed and many christians taken prisoners. Informed they were marched to Lawndale, put on trains in possession of rebels and sent to vivian wickey as prisoners of war. Both I and other generals believed trouble over, and went back to Marion creek so I could notifiy general Hanson vivian by telegram. On our arival we were notified that many of the prisoners had been placed before glandelinian firing squads and shot. Rushed with troops to scene of shooting, and find their bodies had been taken into Norma Catherine.

During the meanwhile in the month of July after the progess of the terrific massacre had gone to the extreme in orma Catherine a mob of more than fifteen hundred rebels and even their sympathizers attacked other christian scouting parties belonging to the advance guard of mansions advancing armies, between the town of ertrude Angeline and jennie ivian. Two hundred of the scouting party of the christian christians were known to have been killed or wounded during the bloody skirmish, and a score of glandelinians were known to have been killed some of them mortally. A truce on the part of the glandelinian cavarly however which had been disgracefully beaten afe effected by the foe leader late that night by Col Colonel am Paltercois of rigi. eneral arloos umper halted hostilities bwtween christian cavarly and enemy cavarly temporarily.

Colonel umper on the side of the foe said the dead on his side were really heavier than on the christian side but he was not telling the truth for many of the Angelinians had been killed in their fury of doing what no glandelinians dared to do and that was close. he glandelinians however lost a number ofleaders while the Angelinians did not. he glandelinian officers who were killed were ir idney Anfl Angeloicos of the ixth cavarly corps, and ordenni endersonia a c ellestinian D dragoon. Another report from a surviving glandelinian officer to the glandelinian ssociated Press at vivian wickey placed the number of glandelinian dead at seventy seven, which was however not so as nearly eighty nine glandelinians had been killed to sixty seven of the Angelinians who were killed outright and thirty more who had died a few hours later of wounds received and another Angelinian killed was a guard. gate that night while mansions advancing army was drawning nearer to within six miles of the fortresses and started an extention of his armies it was unofficially reported that the christian generals had demanded the foe to close their gates of the fortresses and not to dare come out and make a sortie or cavarly would be sent against them with such wicked fury that every one being reckless would meet annihilation. he wicked glandelinians really were and are extremely brave but even the bravest of the worse landelinian cavarly dreaded the christian cac c cavagly which all the devils of hell, and maybe the angles themselves without the aid of od could not beat. official confirmation about the truce offered by the glandelinian cavarly surrounded inthe engagement of the few hours before was lacking though the landelinian column had been surrounded and was being besieged without any supplies or rescue able to reach them. A surrender of the cavarly was expected at any moment.

he attack upon the christian cavarly which had ended so disgracefully for the foe was followed elsewhere despite ansions warning to the foe by raids in which the rebels were overpowered in ambushes and skirmishes by scores, and routed with many prisoners taken, in which the Angelinians overpowered and bound a numberof the foe leaders in three hardware stores and barns in which the foe haf had been forced after stubborn fighting, and then the Angelinians themselves having prevented the foe from lotting the looting the places of the towns removed all the stocks of arms, and many rounds of ammunition and carried everything else to the christian lines. he Angelinians having beaten back the intended raiders also saved huge supplys of dynamite, some of which had been used by Angelinians in the construction of bombs and shrupnell.

ther landelinian mobs of raiders, joined by Gargolians, from the vinicity of arions creek, johnston Run, and carterville started to march for some of the outskirts of the town of ertrude Angeline with the avowed intention of blowing up all the christian breastworks, steam shovels in their positions, ammunition dumps, and long lines of coal cars, and of wrecking everything in the vinicity, and also of destroying the town by explosions. On the way this force of raiders ten thousand strong and all on foot met a long wagon train bearing all kinds of army mechanics, and engineers and escorted by a cavarly force of twenty seven thousand men, and behind an immensely long line of infantry, with three squadrons of dangerous concentinians going to ertrude Angeline from the town of arbendalle, where they had left the main christian army. They ambushed the wagons and the long line of cavarly and infantry and caused an inferno like battle for three hours in which the landelinians being too heavily a overwheled was forced to retreat with terrible loss and had g ined nothing. hey however mortally wounded Colonel orrisonia of the christians and killed and wounded about three hundred and fifty Angelinians but lost themselves over three rhousand five hundred men of which one thousand six hundred w were killed.. he Angelinians killled six glandelinian officers, and seriously and probably mortally wounded sixteen other officers one of which was a general, C.W ingstonia of A glandelinia. All the officers and the general were army operatives of the glandelinian argrave Army Detective and spy agency, but at the time had been sent out by General Purgatorian to make the raid. All they got for their pains was their losses and suffered a total rout for the Angelinian cavarly and infantry raging a general battle leaped from the wac wagons, and rushed from the roads, and dashed upon the foe despite the ambush, closing with the landelinians in a terrific scrimmage and soon the survivors of the foe had managed to escape from being surrounded by their counter assailants, and got away from them by swimming the small Sumbeam creek, and fleeing into woods, and underbrush, and beyond it, persued for a mile by half the number of Angelinians. Late that night the survivors of the glandelinians had not been heard from and grave fears wi were intertained that they may be either massacred, by the ationals, the vin victims of the snipers and persuers, or captured by the fierce Angelinians who had followed them like raving wolves. he many hundreds of wounded landelinians were picked up by the main landelinian forces later on and rushed to the hospitals in vivian wickey, where another of their generals died a few hours later. The many seriously wounded officers however it was said would recover but would never bet fit for further service in the army of glandelinia.

Following the bloody and disgraceful repulse of the ambushmaders the other section of the Angelinian column still strong continued its march tward the location they were sent to. here the forces of christians surrounded a small town in possess ion of troops and officers of the rebels, the bluffs around it forming indeed a natural amphitheater ffom which the Angelinians opened a heavy fire on the rebels in the town and outside of it. This movement was the first stretch of the beginning of the seige.. he fire was immediately returned by the rebels who desperately made some fierce and sanguinary assaults, and on on of the early volleys and assaults the glandelinian general in charge Francis Henderson Trolleyanna was struck in the head by a bullet dying instantly and his whole column of assailants were mowed down.

The firing finally became so hot that the roar was terrific, and the rebels and their leaders were forced to abandon the trenches, and as the Angelinians swept to the assault the landelinian troops retreated to the shelter of the houses in the town, other foe soldiers being forced to seek shelter inside a hastily constructed barricade around or inside the small town. e supretendend general C.K. Ander telephoned to general Purgatorian and to adjutant general at springtonia for aid telling them he was besieged by an overwhelming force of Nationals who were attacking like fiends and bombing and destroying the houses and pouring through the streets like mobs of raving maniacs maniacs. He also put in a call foe general William Mc-Gannio who was in one of the lucillie ickson fortresses, and to the landelinian airgrave Agency. Efforts to communicate with general Mwl.Melvin h axterton disclosed the fact that he had left the count county seat. hen knowing through spies the foe leaders were appealing for aird their a engineers started to slash all telephone wires to the rown and elsewhere, and ripped up tracks and set long lines of railway cars freight and passenger in fire or blew them up, cutting off all the besieged glandelinian officers and their besieged troops off from outside communication. hen artillery being brought up the shelling was redoubled and the town was covered with explosions and clouds of smoke and the glandelinian losses was terrible. General Lester De Fester tried to communicate by telephone with general dwin unter unter, with the intetionato request him to use any means necessary to halt the wild and bloody battle. othing could be done however as all communications had been cut off and so the generals in charge of the foe in the town seeing they were facing total destruction induced the officials of the others to agree to a truce. By courier he got word to suprentend general Mc-gamon of general Lester De Festers instructions but too late, and half of the houses of the town were already great shoots of flame and smoke and as the conflargration was spreading to even woods and plains, and threatening to cut the foe off from escape even from the sea of fire flags of truce were finally raised and the peace parley began began between the two foe lines. This was the first great victory at the beginning of the seige and resulted in the surrender of two hundred thousand glandelinians and sixteen generals a disgraceful blow to general Purgatorian indeed and which made an opening for general ansion to be enbabled to throw in his armies and start in a general seige.

An ap eal to governer general aller at aukegan ortress for military aid brought the statement to the besieged foe that before he could act officlally he would have to have a request from general urgatorian, or the citys attorney general ov orma Catherine and this caused the most serious delay for aid foe the besieged and which soon cau ceased the surrender. hen it was discovered that with general Purgatorian out of of the forts at pr present and in the city at some buisness, the Nationals had also surrounded the headquarters of the citys attorney, and capturing him and nine great generals severed all the telephone and telegraph wires and burned the building to the ground.

On the advice of Major Hunter of the Rebel rebellines and with the approval of Governer general Fallerton general Black make advised other Glandelinian commanders that were in their command stationed at the fortresses of Maru Marcucian, and Annabell to hold their tropps and artillery in readiness for instant resistance, should the besiegers coming up now in strong armies make a more general attack. The battle in the ambushes and the encircling attacks on the town that evening was the first culmination of the war trouble which had been brewing since the Angelininn rebels had started the massacres of non-combatants three weeks ago.

The fortresses of Vivian Dickey, said to be controlled now by general Furgatorian and Mc-Allister Stanck unknown to the Christians under general Hansion bears and two hundred mile tunnel connecting with Vivian Dickey to Calverine, twenty seven feet below the surface which trains had been running through to supply the Glandelinians from Calverine. With steam shovels the covering of the strata of eat earth in front of the fortresses was readily stripped off the foe having made through this labor steep sailents approaching the fortresses also armed with rifle cannon and machine guns. Not far beyond were lines of cars filled with ammunition and explosives. When the general advance of Hansions army and the starting of his seige was noticed officials of the fortresses obtained permission from general Furgatorian to continue the work of stripping down the earth and building extra sailents. When they had stripped about a hundred and seventy five tonss of earth and made the steep thirty foot breastworks, the rebels sent in large gangs of child slaves, and began actual work and loading of empty cars to transfer the earth to other points to built smaller saiients. When this began the Angelinians then starting the seige became incensed, and so that evening and nights trouble was the outcome.

Since the long months obstinate struggle at Julio Gallio this seven hours battle of Garbondaler was the fiercest.

The Glandelinian officers had maintained that they had been using only soldiers and ing enginners in their work of building sailents and the fortifiyng of them, declaring that most of the men were members of the Glandelinian Engineering Corps and the work could not be classified as using child slaves in the strick sense of the word. Hence they said there was no cause for complaint and for the disasterious assaults by the enraged Angelinians. But the statement was a lie. They did use child slaves and scores of thousands of them too. General Henry J. Sneerder, acting in behalf of the enginners wired general John . L . Sneezer International general of the Gargolians asking a ruling on the status of the child slaves e forced to work on the Salients. Generals Sneezers reply was;;;;

''Representives of our Child Slave concerns are justified in treating this crowd of Angelinians who assauled our comrades in the town, and besieged them, as an outlaw organization, and viewing its members in the same light as ordinary assassins and rapers.''

Agitators made use of this statement, when it was recieved the day after the battles as rapidly swung the Angelinians away from the orc orderly course dictated by Angelinian officials.

The first line of erected Christian besieging sailents and breastworks the following day was wrecked by explosives set by Glandelinian miners. Many of the Angelinian Gemini and Secret Service men said they found long lines of wires used to set off the charge of two hundred tons of dynimate led into the hills. The Anglinian Angelinian guards also reported that a few minutes before the great blast which was heard for two miles they saw many suspicious persons running or sneaking away from the newly erected works and opened fire but did not get them. The line of wrecked works according to the generals in charge had been erected with the purpose of supplying christian troops for not only shelter, but for ammunition and arms and also for equipments and excellant defense. Despite the fact that the explosion occured so unexpectedly no one was hurt or killed though windo windows in towns two miles away was razed or shatteres d in by the concussion or air waves.

Simultaneously general Garry Sternerton while out scouting with two colonels and a , lieutenant, and a small cavarly force was attacked by a party of Gargolian cavarly. He was beaten severely and almost captured with hisentire force before he was rescued by a large party of christian cavarly which r va came upon the scene in the nick of time. Seven Glandelinian soldiers and two of their officers said to have been Zimmermannian Gargolians were taken prisoners and thirty of them had been killed or wounded. No one fortunately was killed or wounded on the side of the christian party.

An At another section during the beginning of the seige five thousand Glandelinians had been at work forming a mine to blow up christian infantry lines, and had shot to death, beat and hanged about two hundred christian soldiers taken into Norma Catherine at captives. Fourty three other christian prisoners were killed during the new massacre. This was on the following day.

Many survivors had given stories of the greatest massacre the world ever observed which occured in Norma Catherine, declaring that the rebels even fired on a many wounded christian soldiers. They even declared that many people of other nations were dead in the Norma Catherine slaughter, and that scores of thousands of prisoners had been led to graveyards or out into the streets from tribunals, then either shot or cut down.

Half a dozen wounded generals some of them lying on death beds that same fatal night, gave the Associated Press of Glandelinia the first actual eye witness accounts of that dreadful nights fight and early morning which had brought the heaviest casulaties since the months obstinate fighting at Julio Gallio, when as stated before the car aval caravan of christian troops had been ambushed, and when the other christian forces five hundred thousand strong besieged attacked, and captured the towns and foe forces. The scores of thousands of wounded who were among the besieged asserted that the figure of the number fallen on the foe side was beyond estimating especially among the killed and injured during the desperate fighting, but that the numerous killed Glandelinians and officers were shot down in cold blood after they had surrendered themselves and their arms, by the Angelinians who claimed they did it to revenge the butchery committed by the Glandelinians in Julio Gallio and Norma Catherine. Their testimony was not truthful as no wounded or captured Glandelinians had really been slain. And there was plenty from christian officers to contradict these claims of the rebel generals.

Several squads of Glandelinians who had been imported to work a number of mines and blow up some of the christian besieging lines absolved the christians from blame though Glandelinians they were, saying that the ones responsible who were those among the Glandelinians who unarmed or not refused to surrender under any condition, and who held to the last under false promishes from their leaders, that the christians could never capture the town if they fought them hard enough, and that the christians were too weak in nature to force an attack of any considerable violence.

Many of the wounded Glandelinians had been captured by the victorious christian troops and were interviewed by war correspondents in some of the Base Hospitals. Other wounded Glandelinian soldiers were located in the hospitals in the interment camps through Secret channels. Colonel O- ourker Commissionary officer of the Glandelinian engineering corps who was also a wounded prisoner gave a vivid account of the battle with the christian besiegers. His story was related as he tossed in pain from half a dozen bullet holes through his body.

''I was sent down to that town with a number of regiments by general Bertramder.'' He said. I ''I had no idea of what I was running into. I though a Glandelinian don't blame the Angelinians for attac ing us for we were unknowingly being used as dupes to help the more wicked sects of the Glandelinians from preventing the christians from accomplishing the seige and stopping the murders in Norma which I was sorely against. We were given artillery and machine guns when we arived to the town, and these machine guns were set up 1 on the encirclement of battlements around the small town. Guards were placed on the outskirts of the unfortunate towns most of them tough fellows from Gargolia, sent by general Furgator a Furgatorian. I understood the Angelinian generals had sent our generals warning not to dar leave the fortresses to occupy the towns or we would be run out like sheep. Our generals or officers never got the warnings. But perhaps or main generals Furgatorian and Mc-Allister Stanck did.

When we heard of the disaster to those who had ambushed the wagon train of soldiers, and following cavarly, and infantry, and then saw immense forces of red an and purble purple coated troops approaching yesterday afternoon, we did not know what to do. We were outnumbered five to one by the Nationals. And they had dangerous looking cannons and machine guns, and wicked looking bayonets on their long rifles.

The guards and sentries not wishing to face annihilation retired into the shelter of the town after opening a skirmish fire for several minutes. Most of us Glandelinians seeing the situation and being mostly forced or drafted into the Army we were not really in favor of the rebellion for the maintainence of child slavery and we wished to surrender. Through the night we lived and fought through an inferno . All night long a storm of bullets from probably hundreds of thousands of rifles rained upon us like a blizzard, and it being added by shot and shell, and grape and canister, and ho high expl sives we saw our shelter going to pieces minute by minute and we were losing our comrades by the wholesale. All of us shoul sought shelter as best as we could and returned a heavy fire . The Angelinians repelled the assaults made by our advanced guards, and pressing forward steop step by step despite our resistance climed upon col coal piles, battlements, and upon our sailents like swarms of ants, and swarmed over the earth embankments driving the defenders back from them with heavy losses and forcing them to retreat panic stricken into the town, and so thick was the smoke of battle that we were not able to see where most of our assailants had come from w and were forced to trust our aim by the flashes we saw in the direction of the attacking besiegers.

The majority of our lines kept up a heavy fire, and counter charged as desperatey desperately as possible when ever they had the opportunity, but the most of us unable to be engaged as we were too drowded in the now burning town hid in as much shte shelter as possible.

Then the Nationals pressing the attack with redoubled violence, and now swarming through the streets of the town, blew up our water station and cut off all our sp supplies and all hope of rescue from elseg elsewhere. Our resistance being now much worse the firing grew more instense and made a horrible roar. The shells made earsplitting ex explosions and tore and rended the houses like the tornado and every time killed and wounded every one who had taken sh shelter in them. It was horrible and I felt I would give anything if it would soon be of over. We were now in a desperate fix. We had no water, and our food supplies w were in frieght cars in the possession of the Angelinian Nationals and we were becoming exhausted in our ammunition. And the shell fire of the besiegers was becoming dominating.

About sunrise with nearly the whole town burning and the wooded country outside of it and the river damed up with wreckage and all our water supplies blockaded we put up a white flag. The Angelinian Nationals then poured in and we surrendered our arms glad it was over.

Up to this time not one of us in our three regiments had been injured that I know of, although I understand from reports I heard an acc unaccountable numbervof the besiegers had been shot, either killed or wounded. The Angelinians spread around quickly and forced us to march out of the town in groups of three or six. The great numbers of men this captured were then rushed off in dife f different directions tward the christian lines. some of them tried to run or escape or fight their captors with fists and kick the Angelinians and the like but they were shot down as fast as they made any of these kind of attempts. One Angelinian officer asked who were the machine gun operators of the town which had been captured after being burned down. Some one was forced to point h them out and he was shot in his tracks by some of the enraged Abyssinkilians, their bodies being laid over the machine guns. They then took five men with me took o us out on a road ,and we seeing things pretty dear though we had a g o good chance to escape and tried to run for it. We ran like deer but hundreds of bullets followd after us amid angry cries and yells from the Nationals. we staggered on, but finally three of our group fell, pulling the others down with us. There were several bullet holes in me alreadt already. This gave a good sign indeed that to escape the christians was utterly impossible. They know how to shoot I tell you. I lay there while purple coated men came up and fired more shots after some others still trying to get away and also brought them down. Then there was the roar of some great explosion which shook the earth and everything to me went black. I woke up later and finding myself helpless begged for water but there was not any, I remember dragging myself alongg the road hidden from my persuers by high grass and weeds, but I don't know how managed to escape detection. When a number of Angelinians finally found us, they being a body of cavarly and they brought us to one of their hospitals. One of them said;

"See what you get after surrendering, and then try to break away. Hope this learned you a lesson. We Angelinians are dangerous to traitors to God. so take heed next time and do not do anything rash or you will get it some more."

The story of this Clandelinian officer was confirmed by another Clandelinian officer Col onel S.P. Whilliamsonia, and Lieutenant James Greenburg, two of the men among the rebel officers who had tried to make the same desperate break with him, and who could thank their lucky stars they were still alive. The other three among them who made the same fool hardy attempt to escape the Angelinians are dead.

These were si the six found by the Angelinian Associated Press correspondent that fatal morning, to whom he tried to take water, only to be refused permission by Angelinian officers to bring any, he being told that the Angelinian orderlies are the ones who attended to the wounded rebels.

General James E . Morrisonia a young general in the attd attacking besieging forces told the war correspondent that the attack had been spontaneous, and that when the large hosts of christians went to the town to besiege and attack they did not really s stop to think of the horrible blood shed which would follow. He was wounded early in the fight..

"I was on my way to the town of Carbondaler which was the one attacked, with my division, when I met a gang of Angelinian officers of a different column. They said they were on their way to run out of the town all the Rebel Angelinians. I joined them with my division having the same purpose, and other divisions with their generals kept joining us untill there mi must have been about five hundred thousand of us. Most of us all had rifles and bayonets and great big seige and machine guns and other cannons, and those who did not have rifles or arms soon got theirs from supply stations. When we got to the town in the early afternoon we spread out forces around it. We had not any real good leader as general Green Burg Saunders the main commander to-have taken charge of the seige did not appear on duty for some reason or other. Every generals besides myself found it necessary to work for myself. It was just one big army out to drive out of the town the Clandelinians who were so reckless as to unhead general Mansions warning and occupy the town under our very noses. I am not sure who fired the first shot in that dreadful battle of Carbondaler but after it was fired there was a real war of the worlds and it was the first general battle of the rebellion I had ever been engaged in and I was almost made deaf when the cannons along our lines of seige let go with an earsplitting roar that almost shook u us off our feet and we saw the streams of shells go tearing through the town with the fury of a destructive tornado. Then I realized what war really was as it was my first battle. The firing became worse as our main line of infantry joined and the foe responded with artillery and firearms nd finally as the firig grew very intense it k kept up for hours incess incessantly, and our men were dropping like flies. It was worse jet when the foe assaulted us desperately. They cut through our besieging lines like a hay mow several times but were always beaten back and shot down like gr grasx grass cut bh by a lawn mow. Late in the evening when many of the towns houses were already shattered or on fire the christian troops led m by me and other generals made a fierce assault upon the foes position outside the town. They gave us fearful resistance fairly cutting our columns to pieces but we won the heights and sailents and drove the foe from them and into the town but at a fearful horrible cost of men and officers. As I mounted one of the sailants and my troops surged over in the face of a withering fire I was c shot in the arm. The wound was not serious, and I continued on to lead my men , and when the attack was finally over the several of my generals made me go and have my wounds dressed and I had to go to the Angelinian hospital in a car as it was dangerous to try it on horseback through that ten mile long inferno of battle.

One a newspaper reporter saw six Angelinian prisoners taken in the battle tied together and horribly mangled by bullats and clubbed rifles, stretched out o in a field near a cross road un er the o scorching July gun. Hundreds of the fierce and wicked Glandelinians stood by and laughed. One of the wounded Angelinian a Angelinians raised-a face covered with mud and blood cloths and moaned;

"For god's sake give me some water to drink."

The Glandelinians laughed. A young Landelinian officer who was a lieutenant and who wore a uniform fit to kill a king carrying his sabre unsheathed walked to his side. He looked down with a sneer on his lips and stamped his foot on his che ch chest and kicked him in the mouth.

"I'll see you dirty christian dogs in hell first." He growled.

"Please boys." He pleaded to the laughing Landelinians. "Give me a drink of water."

The Glandelinians cursed. The reporter in the uniform of a rebel ran to an ood abandoned farm house and returned with water. A score of Landelinians led by a sergeant ran forward to meet hi him the sergeant brandishing his s b sabre, and the others with leveled rifles.

"Leave him alone." They commanded. "He does not need any water."

This terrible and horrible h b battle had started on a Wednesday when two Angelinian officers were killed. Then after the surrender of the small town through the headquart ers of the main christian general in ch chagreof the attackers a truce was efected whereby the Angelinians were to withx withdraw to their own lines with the under standing that the rebel prisoners were to be marched to the internment camps in the morning.

However everything had not been so peaceful in the morning, for early inthe morning most of the Landelinians out of one of the fortresses nearest Carbondaler inflamed with liquir or moonshine and desiring to retake the town and drive back the christians stormed the tent encampments on the outskirts of the christian position where the Angelinians had been sleeping. They however found no one there and burned the tents.

Shrotly after daybf break the Clandelinians who had kept up intermittent sniping through the night opened with a terrific volley of cannons and rifles along a line of battle for ten miles and a half, and followed it by charging the christian position. The charge was led by general Fracania. The defenders without raising their heads stormed the foe l lines with rifle cannon and machine gunsand met them with the bayonet. Their fire galled the Glandelinian attacking waves and torn their columns asunder but the attacking army in good formation closed their shattered lines and went "Over the top" of the christian embankments and rushed in on the long wall of Angelinian soldiers and closec with them. The battle raged for three hours that morning and the foe managed to capture the position and poured volleys into a column of christian cavar y coming up at a dash, killing nin thousand men and wounding sixty thousand. The uproar was terrific and the smoke of conflict was so thick that nothing could be seen by it. Though the assault was finally repulsed with dreadful loss to the enemy the enemy during the attack had however managed to get their in engineering corps to dyn dynamite two lines of christian batteries, threw charges of explosives into the Angelinian rifle pits, set fire to many christian encampments of tents and outhouses, razed one of the generals headquarters to the ground, and fired a mile long string of frieght cars on a side track loaded with ammunition causing a c long line of explosions loud and deafening and the reports were as frequent as rifle shots from thousands of men firing in a clattering roar. Then the death retreat started as the christians counter charging drove all before them cutting down the foe in frightful numbers and sending them flying back to their own positions and massing a death dealing artillery fire upon them as they ran. The Angelinian infantry pressed on and carried a position of the foe and held it. The Landelinians who had captured prisoners during the attack , during the retreat jabbed the m with the butts of musketsor bayonets, and struck them with pistol butts to make them hurry faster. General Mc-Doverton superintendent of the assault who had been severely woundedi in the leg ocmpa complained to his Glandelinian captors that he could not keep up the pace. The mob of Landelinians cursing turned upn upon him and with their clubbed muskets beat him to death, then as they continued the retreat the other rebels followed riddled his body with bu llets leaving it beside the road.Colonel ghoemaker jamesonia a bo brother in law of one of the Angelinian generals under mansion, protested to his own captors at the brutal mud murder of a wounded Angelinian officer. By way of reply the wicked landelinians turned on him also and shot him dead. He was an army civil engineer for division B. fourty four of the Angelinians had been captured by the enemy during that desperate three hours assault and even were believed to ga have been marched to the massacre. After the conflict had ended and the bearers had brought in the bodies three days had passed and still wounded were being brought in and as the search for more wounded continued it appeared as if they were fairly created so many more wwre found. Many thousands of those who were killed in the batle did not contain any mak mar s of identification with the ex ception of a dead landelinian soldier who bore the army discharge of Francis Angelio who inlested At Calverine (Calverinia) at the outbreak of the rebellion and who had remained in the army to fight through the battle before going home, and another who bore a card on which was written the name of pankanna G. Warden company C. Ithe Infantry. The burning of many records in the capture of an enemy enca p encampmeny outside of the town that bloody m rning closes this source of identification. One hundred and seventeen thousand six hundred bodies wore laid out in the graves beyond the christian lines the following days after the strugfle where hundreds of christian soldiers their officers, and even refugees and so on filed by or watched the work of burting them, eve even making strange comments on the mutilated condition of the dead landelinians torn by shell explosions. Six Angelinian officers were in the Herrinia Base hospital with three glandelinian prisoners who were also wounded.

The following part of the rest of the day everything had been quiet. Many of the Angelinians were busy forming sailents or throwing up barricades, or saunter ing about discussing the norma catherine massacre, but declining to admit they knew anything about it, but just the same desiring to massacre many landelinians for return.

''We did not even know the glandelinians had even the nerve to kill and rape so many women and children.''Said one of the workers.''But they have. I wish we had not accepted the surrender of those who we cat captured in the town. We should have butchered them all and we would have been perfectly justiefied at that..'' nd it was said that many of the fool glanddlinians just dropped dead from fright when we surr ounded the town in overwhelming numbers and started blasing away with rifles and cannons and when we surrounded the town ca and their forces so they could not get away. And if general Furgatorian comes with his main body to assault our whole army under general mansion in an effort to stop his from arranging for the seige that will only mean that there will be be just that many more guns and prisoners for us. We have secure positions for they are natural ones.''

Three divisions of the I45 Infantry of Abyssinkilians were held in readiness to be thrown into the already thrown up works, under general Carlo galma, and Carles Gump, with orders to p be prepared to move immediately to the scene of the re recent battle, but general mansion had sent orders to general Franklin as his dispatching George francis as his repossentive saying that he did not ih intend to start a general seige as yot being powerless to do so as his forces were not big ebough but he was waiting for other forces expected at any moment. General temperary made the same statement. General Melvine Thaxtonia who was a superior officer under mansion said troops for a while were unecessary in front of the Lucillie ricksen portifications and that they should be con centrated before the Gen Cedermine fortresses.

''We don't want any armies of troops in front of Lucillie ricksen forts just now as we don't need to concentrate there untill ordered to.''He said.''It also has quieted down now at the approach of Mansions main army and for several days at any cause we have the situat ion well in-hand. hey won't dare to attack in general force or strength untill general Mc-Allister stanck can reinforce general Furgatori n Furgatorian.'' five wooden fortresses operated within the christian lines for local use with the consent of the christian generals wwr were abandoned for their coni condition and burned that day as they were useless before enemy artillery. Commissioner general Anderson Ralhper of division C:. Refused to allow general Cat Carterville to withdraw from his sheltered position at flanders forts, saying that at any moment he feared another outbreak. At fort zieglet a few miles from Lucillie ricksen in Bloody Carbondaler Region was Orient fortress NO. I. g holder of all munitions and records as the greatest ammunition producer of ammunition and explosives to the nations in the world. It was in the possession of the foe now. In t the third year of the war one of the gre greatest explosions in the war occured there and was known as the Lucillie ricksen Explosion.

Fear that the tremendous, fighting at Carbondaler was to demand by general by a large concentration of glandelinian troops and artillery was organized in hundreds of messages from many christian officials and other gener generals of the Abyssinkilian army corps to Adjt general Andrew johnstonia the noon of Thursday after the bloody ac afray of the morning.

''Word co es to us''It read that columns of men, trains and frieght cars and long lines of wagons and even autos and many other carriages loaded with rebel troops are gi goint gi going from position to position in the southern part of Carbondaler their generals informing the other divisions on duty at LucilLucillie Ri Ricksen that they must advance to all points within the next twenty four hours. These big columns of men are making no efforts to avoid general battle and their actions appear to be very suspicious..It seems that the s spirit of fiercer fighting still prevails.....''

The conflicts were interpreted by general .C.F.D. Honnoleder secretary general of the Glandelinian Engineers Assi Association as evidence as an absolute monopoly in the matter of resisting great seige in this section of Calverinia. And glandelinias glandelinian soldiers off duty at this critical time when the christian dogs are menancing us so terribly must have vacation certificates if they wish to remain off duty for the time being according to law''He said, the control of which was entirely with the United Engineers mine and Bridge workers. He said the christian foes now were attempting to take control of all coal and other mines all around inthe vinicity of vivian vickey and that the situation would really be serious if it was not for the fact that the great city of Calverine was not in the hands od general Manleys glandeliniana. The operation of the mine workers was done by thousands of engineering men of the in enginee ering corps, and additional men to let down the mine explosives were only common, unskilled manual army laborers and not soldiers at all but neverthaless they were willing to fight at any moment they thought themselve themselves be needed. Regardless of these critical condition with the seige starting and of the further fact that the christian generals in possession of manyof the small towns have repeatedly tried to wrest from the rebels other towns, the exixs existing milita monopoly of the glandelini n ur urthorities depicted that overwhelming christian troops assaulting the town of Carvondaler and for positions and repulsed the attack of the ambuscaders and as a result an accountabl e number of men on both sides had been killed. The Angelinian Engineers operater generals a so sent a long telegram to general Farrongtonia Franklin Head of the main force of Angelinian engineering corps asking what steps he proposed to take to repell any general assault that may happene to be made by the enemy later in the day, and how to stop it should it occur.

A telegram from general Lewiser johnston of the Anglinian Ei Engineer miners corps was blamed for inciting the concentrated forces of glandelinians to resume the bloody fray that morning with the purpose of making an effort to retake the captured town. His message was in reply to that of general whilliamsonia Sentatoria J. Sneerder a subdistrict Engineering mine official asking that the the main concentrating of the christian forces in that location. General Lewiser replied that the Angelinian forces concentrated before Carbondaler had through some unknown reason severed their line from the other section of the christian army, and that any representives of the Angelinian organization were justified in treating the glandelinians as an outlaw organization and in viewing the rebellion for the continuance of Child slavery in the same light as they would view any other common evil that was dreadful as child slavery.

The message was posted outside of the town of Carbondaler, and mobs of glandelinians who had come from the main concentrating line of rebels gathered to read it. It despite the capture of the town and by the christians till holoding it this mob of glandelinians in disguise before the vey presence of christian troops ransacked many hardware andother stores for arms and ammunition, and joined their main divisions of compared comrades preparing for that bloody morning attack.

The Abyssinkilian generals sent appeals to general mansion and to all his generals to use all their available forces and the full strength of the army to protect the newly formed christian positions against any coming murderous on onslaughts of rebellious Angelinian troops concentrating before Carbondaler.

The message to general mansion said;;;

F''Private and newspaper reports taken in from war correspondents are being recieved here of the consequeinces of lat last nights bloody battle and of the fatal results of the ambuscade attackers, and of the acts of murder to prisoners captured by the foe, and other acts of lawlessness and outrages to humanity in connection with the effort to repel the christian assaults upon the town of Carbondaler south west of the Fortresses of LLucillie ricksen. Many of the generals respectively demands that you give this su situation your most ernest consideration and promptly take steps to furnsi furnish protection to any portion of the christian lines and to concentrate heavily enough so the foe do not carry positions at any portion of the line of the forming seige.''''''

General Davidsonia Hovertonia the two cabinet officers of the Angelinian overnments watching with the rest the situation of the rebellion went into conference as soon as they learned that the city of vivian ickey was already beginning to be invested and that the foe had struck at blow against the christian forces at Carbondaler but failr failed and suffered a bloody repulseand over the reports of the frightful bloodsheds and horrible explosions at Norma Catherine, and also of the massacres there and in julio Callio. o formal statement was issued and it was believed the government officials of Abyssinkilem Abbiesannia, Angelinia, and Calverinia were awaiting for complete reports.

THE CAUSE OF THE OURBREAK OF THE BATTLE OF CARBONDALER..

General Gumper amueler presendent of the Angelinian overnment urthorities, when told the massacre and capture of hundreds of thousands of Glandelinian troops at Carbondaler, denounced the outbreak of the first bloodiest battle at vivian ickoy..

''I regreet, yes resent the resort of such horrors at Carbondaler in that bloody battle''He said.''The fury of the Angelinians since they learned of the massacres of so many women and children at orma Catherine, and fearing many of their friends and wifes wives children brothers and sisters many be among the assassinated that their fury is on u such a high plane of principal it must depend the on the solidarity of the action of the Angelinian rebels in vivian wickey now, but need not and ought not to fall upon physical force by such foolishness against overwhelming numbers.''

Many other men at the Convention in the overnment buildlings also announced they had recieved word from the war correspondents that countless numbers of men on both sides during the battle had been killed or wounded, and one of the Presedents declared that he would start for general ansions army on the morrow at any risk and converse with him on the situation.

At the overnment building at AAbyssinkile the head of the overnment urthorities the only Abyssinkilian member of the constitutional convention and who addressed the inquiry to President Lewis of Angelinia overnment urthorities which brought the latters ruling that the Angelinian troops converging about vivian Wickey were really not Angelinians but mostly Abbiesannians and Abyssinkilians placed blame for the outbreak of the battle at Carbondaler on general Whilliam Lester Johnstonia, m i main Glanddlinian general at the time in possession of c Lucillie icksen ortifications. He assere asserted that general Johnstonia of the rebels had obtained permission from general Purgatorian to start a heavy concentration with his divisions and to place many of the columns in the town of Carbondaler close to the the christian lines which had arived in the meanwhile and when the warning had come from ansion that no Glandelinian armies were to dare concentrate before the christian lines and not suffer the conser consequences. He was also under a pledge to genera Purgatorian that he was not to abandon the town untill ordered to do so by general Mc-Allister Stanck in command of vivian Wickey and the great Mc-Whirthian Fortifications. After some sixty thousand tons of ammunitions and explosives had been brought up for artillery according to the head man of the Angelinian overnment urthorities, general Lester ohnstonia concentrated large forces outside of Carbondaler and pushed a mighty force into the town and ordered them to occupy the works and sailents around it, and had the placement of artillery and other big guns started and also drove in some forces of Glandelinians u d under general Lester De Fester too near the right wing of general Mansions Central grand ivision in front of the town to the North. This action he asserted was directly responsible for the battle that followed.

''Only Glandelinian engineers were before the battle permitted to work their mine laying and pontoon gridge bridge construction in southern vivian wickey.'' Said the leader of the overnment urthorities of Angelinia.''All Glandelinian engineers belong to the fiercest set of workers in the Glandelinian army that is known. But in forming mines with the purpose of blowing up trenches or fortresses the army employees are not req uired to have the skill at such work as long as they are willing to learn Only mine setting men and army laborers are employed in setting these mines and thus it does appear dangerous if the foe are not watched. hat they cannot do with assault, forages, forays or sorties and artillery they usually do accomplish with disaster to us with mines and explosives. They h ve not succeeded in exploding any mines during that battle though.''

His atatement brought a reply from F.J.Harnold of the Calverinian urthorites that no engineers of athe christian army itself are necessary at setting mines when they themselves have so many men outside of the engineering corps who can do all such work. such mining however is merely a crime.''He said and unskilled mine setters are only required to trace the mines if possible and report their presence before the enemy have a chance to es exploc explode them.'' he real cause the the battle of Carbondaler with its attendant fatalies bego beginning at the Ambush on the road.''He asserted was the effort to force a gap into the besgeing christian armies in the matter of an attempt to break the seige if possibe possible.''

General Tracy Andersonville Repessentive of the Aurthorities of Abbiesannia charged that an attempt by the Angelinian rebels was being madd made to wake the whole christian world''The goat,''In the battle of Carbondaler and asserted that no advantage at the battle had been won by the enemy anywhere. The landelinians were either dissilusione,d forced to surrender or where were cut down and routed to their fortresses the town ca captured and their sailents and other positions captured.'' He said.''A week before the battle when Mansions army was a mile from ivian ickey the urthorities of Angelinia had sent fourry statesmen to Norma Catherine, when told there was signs of the seige beginning, but the officials had been told by officers of other christian armies that Mansions army as yet was not in sight, and through some mus misunderstanding through the results of the battle of Angeline un had for several days refused to advan e untill reinforcements and big seige guns had been obtained. The president of the Abbiesannian overnment and W.S. Angelio President of the Gemini of Abbiesannia conv conferred in Sacrament o the day after the battle at Carbondaler and then it was reported started immediately for ivian ickey on the fastest train running clear through the christian territory of Calverinia..

Governer general eukeegan at Angelinia Agatha recieved hourly reports of the situation at ivian ickey and the two battles there one at Julio allio and the other at Carbondaler from general ansonia Sunteo in Pandorna and was ready to send forward as many armies as possible if general ansion would call for them, for there was danger of the fighting continuing in general fury in case the seige that ansion was starting would become general. e sent the following telegram to the gener l Hero viviania commanding A y Abyssinkilian armies near the town of hilliamson.

''Repeatedrumors come to me come to me that peace and good order have not been restored and maintained in the region of ivian ickey sincethe massacre in orma Catherine and that the city and all its fortifications are being invested by the Abbiesannian armies under general Frank Mansion. Advise me here definitely on all conditions prevailing there, and if general Mansion wit - with his armies have the situation in control and as able to beis besiege the city and its fortresses without suffering disaster in case the enemy attack in general and are able to maintain peace for a while and good order. urther advise me what.if any captures of landelinians as prisoners have been made, and of the persons and landelinians who have per perpetrated the crimes of murder and rape in orma Catherine..(''

''In a message to the Calverinia Attorney of the Calverinian State he said;;

''Information has come to me that a great number of christian soldiers were killed and wounded in the battle of Carno Carbondaler near vivian Wickey last night and to day between the foe under Lester, and a part of Mansions right grand Divisions. What steps are being taken by the surthorities of Angelinia, Abyssinkils, and Abbiesannia to draft soldiers for the armies and to send troops to reinforce Mansion? If none are being sent they should. nd what steps are also being taken by the army officers to capture andpunish the Glandelinians who are guilty of the massacres in orma Catherine. I wish ish to be fully and accurately advised bt telegraph or wireless.....''

The reply from the Calverinian Attorney said the fury of battle and other hostilitis hostilities at other portions of Vivian wickey and elsewhere had quited down, but that from concentration of Purgatorians main army near Mansions lines it did look as if a mightier conflict was threatening. owever no mention however of any one beingkilled or wounded was given. Governer General Waukeegen said his lack of knowledge of the horrible situation at vivian Wickey was due to attorney general Clockline fr forcing him away from his duties as the nations chief executive. General Clockline saif said if his office had not encountered alleged irregulations in the handling of mobolising armies Governer General Waukeegen would not have been kept from his duties. He deglared that he himself had no idea that anything so terrible was going to occur in orma Catherine or julio Callio, though he did expect the city and its fortresses to be invested and battles to rage there. He was even surprised that the battle of Carbondaler was not more severe, a though the christian victory was more tremendous than any victory the whole world ever heard about.

Governer general Waukeegen's officials observers at ivian ickey were slow in reporting and he was forced to depend on the reports of generals or war correspondents and news paper reporters..

The fearful battle of Carbondaler in which twenty six million Clandelinians were engaged one million inside the town of which were captured showed as evidence that there exists a fearful situation indeed at Vivian Dickey and that t the foe being in possession it was stated that the rebellion would rage a long time and that the rebels would never be easily overthrown. During the battle of Carbondaler the headquarters that genera General Mn Mansion had selected for himself and his generals which was a three story affair at Fairview near Sunbeam Creek was dynimated early in the morning and razed as if struck by a tornado. However as at that time the buildig building was not occupied no one was either killed or inju red.

C FUGITIVE ANGELINIAN REFUGEES TELL OF BATTLE AMBUSH THEY WITNESSED AT DISTANCE DURING BEGINNING OF BATTLE OF CARBONDALER!!

The first eyswitness story of the opening of the battle of Carbo ndaler at the southwestern section of Vivian Dickey, on Wednesday night and Thursday morning July was related to general Hanson Vivian himself who at the time was planning a drive for Calverins especially by one of the men fugitives who had escaped from Julio Calio and on his way to Mansions lines had seen the beginning of the dreadful battle in which over thirty million christians had been engaged in which TO,000,000 besieged the one million in the town. They escaped the hail storm of bulle ts and exp,exploding shrapnell and other bombs by keeping out of the location of the raging battle, and after making their way to Mansions lines escaped on a train on the Mc-Hollester and Hendonia lines. They were found in a hotel near Hansons lines a wekk later and being known as refugees were brought to his lines. For obvious reasons at Hansons orders their names were withheld. One of them even a little girl said excitedly::

"I saw the terrible when when the enemy ambushed the christian troops o n the road and also from a distance the taken of the town and the enemy it it after more bloodier fighting. But Thursday morning the shortest but bloodest part of the battle I left the region of Carbondaler-to meet a group of my friends who were making their way to general Mansions army. When we stepped off a train and were encompassed by Angelinian guards were were astonished at the terrific roar of the mornings battle. My companion and my friends took our guards and friends of the nationals to three waiting wagons which had been left about five blocks from the railroad station. The wagons were driven by Angelinian soldiers who had been accompanied from the train by a troops of Angelinian soldiers. We started for the main christian lines still more surprised in the way the battles noise was increasing so rapidly and fairly shaking the ground, the other wagons proceeding ours for a distance of about a mile. The sky was hazy white from smoke probably coming from rifles and cannon in the battle. We started for the christian lines but owing to bad roads and being fourced to make detours on account of the battle being too near us our p rogress was slow, and several times the little trai train of covered wagons were halted while we got them out of wagon holes. Eight miles from Carbondaler we happened to run into a certain section of the battle field before we knew it and were ambushed by Clandelinians a part of which was no doubt assaulting the main christian line along the battle front. The rebel troops, two xolumns of them ambu he ambushed us as we rounded a sharp curve in the road. Just after the wagons had rounded the curve and before they were quite out of sight a great mob of armed Clandelinian troops leaped from bushes and rocks fr m beside the road. There were between two hundred and one hundred and seventy five gendarmes and battalions combined coach armed with rifles with bayonets fixed. They with wild yells surged up to the middle of the road and opened fire in both dire tions, pouring a rain of bullets into the rear of the wagons and the front of the wagon in the van. The shooting continued for several minutes to which the MAngelinians in the wagons and outside them responded fiercely, more than a IOO,OOOshots having been fired wildly making a deafening confusion of sounds. When the driver of the front wagon tried to turn they discovered t it had been struck by many bullets and that the two horses were wounded and could not walk a few feet and finally dropped, struggled a few minutes and lay still. We were forced to aba ndon it with the christian soldiers and started back for the christian lines in another direction on foot.

After walking about two and a half miles with the escaped column of Angelinian troops who had repulsed the attackers in the ambush some of the soldiers hired a boy of a farm to take th us on tward the christian lines.

As we skored a portion of the battle region again and thinking it was further than usual as the sound was more distant but more lively and as we stopped at a farm house and ordered some one to give the soldiers a drink of milk there came in the distance a terrific explosion which fairly shook us off our feet from the shock and viberation. Finally wevreached the region of Carbondaler about noon three hours after the ambush we escaped. One of the soldiers telephoned to general Mansion at the city or christian lines near the city to general Hanson Vivian, Near Shoeanna, and his brother at Abbieann. General Robert Vivian at Abbieann replied he could not come or send armies from Abbieann as he himself was confronted by a vast rebel army under his Traitors and wicked son who had deserted him and god, but that if possible if general Mansion could wait long enough general Hanson could sent armies or bring them one or the other. He himself promished to go and see Mansion alone but he failed as the battle of Abbieann stopped him. General Mansion himself arived near Carbondaler within an hour after the mornings battle, accompanied by two covered wagons loads of army officers and men and provisions.
While I was awaiting the arival of the main Christian general I and many others made every possible effort to get medical aid to go to the scene of the bbo bloody battle but strange to say no doctor was able to respond to our pleas as they had more to attend to from elsewhere than they could. At last a large number of soldiers promished to help us get army ambulances and wagons. I also notifed the C l Calverinian Murthorities that a terrib/e terrl terrible number of Angelinian soldiers had been killed in the battle. When general Mansion his elf arived I got into his a carriage to direct him to the scene of the a battle. On our way out there however we were stopped by some Calverinian guard who told general Mansion it was sucide to go near the scene of the battle. General Mansion not wishing to meet with a fatal adventure and place his army in a paralised condition from the loss of a general refused that day to go outside his own lines, and turned around nd returod to his main encampments. He asserted he was not going to go beyond his lines without orders from general Hanson Vivian. When we got back to the main d hristian lines general Mansion asked me to see one of my wagons and we stopped in front of his headquarters and were told therd that five of the Angelinian officers probably generals had been killed in the battle. I then went with two soldiers to the Base Hospital and found general Morrisonia and colonel Jordon Mcillesnna, and Robert Kingdonia all who had been wounded in the battle of Carbondaler.
Then I started in search of my sister in intending to return to the town of Carbondaler if it was safe. I was stopped by a deputy general who wanted to know what I had done with my gone as I did not have it with me. I assured him that I did not need to carry any gun,--that my gun had been left behind at Mansions headquarters at the request of the general. While we were talking another soldier who had escaped the ambush walked up. The officer immediately thinking we were sus sus suspicious characters immediately put us under arrest. He took us to one of the tents and there we were loaded into a wagon wh in which were two more Angelinian officers and sixteen soldiers. They drove us to the Base Hps Hospital where they tried to interview general Morrisonia. While there they were joined by many christian commanders. All these held a long consulation and again attempted to get me to admit that I had willfully neglected to bring my rifle. At this moment general Mansion appeared and he immediately ordered our release. I then went to the road where I had left the wagon intending to see to it that the injured soldiers were removed to the christian lines but I was told that the injured had been brought in t and that they were still being brought in and seemed to not stop comi ng.
I then called up general Mansion and told him that the battle had raged allnight and a certian pa part of the morning. He asked me to notify him if there was any signs of the battle being resumed and asked me to urge the other generals to concentrate their main forces right away. Then while I was f doing this I encountereda mob of Clandelinian prisoners all Mc-Hollestinians being brought to the had hastily ere cted internment camps.. Finally three Angelinia soldiers in chatge of the batch of prisoners called to me and my companions. They offered me someti x something to my liking if I wouldhelp them to escort the scowling rebel prisoners to the internment camps. We told them that we already had orders to carry out and that if we had the opportunity later on we could escprt help them to escort the other prisonerswho had beenccaptured, especially as we were under orders to gt as many of the injuree as possible and so we did so. When a train pulled in and the wounded we found were loaded upon it we ourselves climbed aboro aboard. Some Angelinians not having recognized me as yet were not sure if we were on the square and they followed us untill we got off the train here. Then they quit following us and we slipped into the building and got this hotel."

Her companion--confirmed that portion of the story in which he was concerned, including the attack upon the small wagon train during the battle, and the return and the escape, adding that while he was in the wagon and the other guard at the driver drivers seat he had been approached by an officer who warned him to take another road and not go through the battle region. Both and all were shaken when told of the massacre recently happening in Corma Catherine.

(In Abbiesannia this was the news h thay came in newspapers and other correspondents.

GREAT LOSSES IN LIVES IN BATTLE OF CARBON.DALER.
FIERCE EXPLOSIONS ARE HEARD. COUNTLESS NUMBERS CONSIDERED DEAD, AND WOUNDED/

AMERICANS REPORTED AMONG S SLAIN AND WOUNDED IN THE BATTLE.

XSACRAMENTO ABBIEANNIA:::::: JULY28TH.1912//....././/
By Abbiesannia the International Catgo ic Cathloic News Service:

The bloody battle bew between Mansions armies coming to lay seige to Vivian Wickey, and the Angelinian rebelsunder general Purgatorian after an overnight lull broke out early again to day with tenfold violence and raged for four hours, according to reports reaching here by wireless. Battle ending in most tremendous christian vootoy victory the world ever heard of before. Capture of whole town full of Glandelinians who were forced to surrender. Deaths and wounding of many generals. Wagon train and christian cavarl ambushed. Ambuscaders desminated and routed with disaster..

Corroboration of the report was furinished by some series of most tremendous explosions shortly after sixo o o-clock in the morning coming apparently from some direction of the beleagured town of Carbondaler five miles away from Vivian Wickey where a large o force of over a million rebels are reported to have been surrounded and ca t captured by an overwhelming army of Angelinians. hole town burned and forest fire sta started. Three hundred and sixty five thoudand Angelinian xsoldiers are known to be dead as a result of the bloody fighting which began late Wednesday afternoon, raged in x succession of struggles throughout the night and resumed for four hours the following morning with greater violence. A check up will show many more dead of the christian side it is feared. Thso soldiers Three solds soldiers wearingt he American uniform are known to be dead and one of the Americans was believed to have belonged to the Secret Service Agency of New York and according to other dispatches ir it is reported he was also killed.

Officers of many partd parts of the christian line engaged in the ten mile battle line were pleading with their higher surthorities in an effort to start a concentration strong enough to scare the enemy so far as to prevent further blood-shex sh shed. Many officers declared that there was not many Angelinian soldiers captured by foe as supposed. A crowd of boyscouts eager to join the battle did attempt to go to th battle but they were not allowed to ap roach the firing line as boyscouts were not employed for fighting.

( MAY NOT CALL MORE ARMIES OF TROOPS UNLESS NECESSARY.)

SP SPE SPECIAL DISPATCH TO THE SACRAMENTO EVENING CATHOLIC WORLD OF ABBIEANNIA.

Sacramento. AbEeannia.. July 28th.1912. General Franjl Franklin of one of the armies of Abbieannians not engaged but also near Carbondaler declared to day to the International Catholic News Service that main armies from Angelinia Agatha would not as yet be called by Hanson to quell the bloody Vivian Wickey Affair unless necessary. "I do not expect to call for armies of troops from Abbieannia or Angelinia Agatha, as long as it is reporteed that Mansion has many armies near to his servi ce just now" Said general Hanson Vivian. "I don't think there is any necessity for them now. and I don't think there wil be any more desperate fighting for a while anyway."

Blame for the outbreak of the battle of Carbondaler was laid squarely at the fact of Mansions army reaching Vivian Wickey sooner than expected despite the bloody Angelinian run affair and of his immediately starting the seige of Vivian Wickey and her fortresses. The blame was laid by all aurthorities of Angelinia and the other st ates of Abbieanni a..

General Hanson Vivian warned general Mansion.

"We sent notices to general Mansions with tears in our o eyes and warned him of the danger of coming battle." Said general Hanson Vivian. He also declared that scanty reports indicated that several divisions of Glandelinian troopx had been annihilated kn the battle in the battle of Carbondaler. Two Glandelinian generals were known to be killed, six teen were reported to be fatally wounded, and eleven were in Glandelinian h ospitals with bullet and shell wounds to day. First reports said ninteen others of injured officers were Turserannians. The dead Glandelinian generals are not named. Neither were any of the fatally wounded named. Many of these offi eers and generals had led the Glandelinians who had ambucadde ambuscaked christian troops on a road and were thus killed or wounded when those who formed the ambush ambuscade were driven back completely shattered and cut down and routed pellmell.

The battle took place after christian forces had marched on the town with the intention of closing around it. After stiff fighting the Glandelinian head general hois; hoisted a white flag it is reported/ and agreed to surrender if the Angelinian commander in charge of the besieging lines would endeavors to arrange for a truce. Armed forces furnished by christian generals after the surrender are reported to be now control of the town. Acro according to word from the captured town of Carbondaler, the one hundred and fiftieth infantry stationed near Carbondaler under general Carlo were being prepared to day for instant action in the trouble zone should the fighting be renwed by the enemy.

Some believed that news of the plans to have the main armies concentrate on the foe if necessary would have the effo effects of bringing on general battle instead of order, and that the situation is not under control as was stated.

CUT WIRES! DESTROY TRAINS AND RAILROAD TRACKS! PATROL HILLS AND VALLEYS..

After miles upon miles of telephone and telegr aphic and other electric wires leading to Vivian Wickey and all orther parts in the possession of rebel troops, had been ripped or cut down, railroad treacks destroyed and trains of cars, reports spread that immense bodies of christian cavarly and dragoons on the fastest horses composed of Consentinians and Abyssinkilians from general Mansions right wing and elsewhere were patrolling in many of the hills to watch out for approaching foe troops that may advance to general Mc-Allisters aid and prevent Vivian Wickey from being besieged.

BUILD STOCKADES AND FORTRESSES.

w With the comme ncement of the seige after the battle of Carbondaler the Angelinian engineers and many scores of thousands of soldiers are starting the con struction of heavy stockades and besieging fortresses, and when more troops were placed near here by general Mansion armed guards and strong garrisons were posted in the stockades and constructingfortresses. A few days as the enemy seemed about to concentrate a heavy artillery fire upon the christian lines as the stockades and fortresses were not as yet finished the garrisons were withdrawn after a conference between Mansion and his generals. When as advanced detatchments of the rebel armies appeared within sight garrisons were replaced in the stockades and fortresses, and strong forces of christian infat infantry took shelter in the trenches and on sailents, behind massive rock formations. The first casualities from the battle reached Sacremento shortly after three days. The body of one of the christian generals who had been slain was the foist.. He had been shot through the head and had been instantly killed. General Joseph Frankminer an Abyssinkilian officer, and James Morinia an Abbiesannian general were brought into the christian lines badly wounded.

TROOP MOVEMENT UNKIL UNLIKELY.

PANDORA )(CALVERINIA) July 29th 1912.
By Calverinian International New Catholic News Service------The sending of extra armies to general Mansions at Vivian Wicket is not being considered." Adjt. General Hansonia Carloes said here in his report to the Calverinian Aurthorities tooday. The head of the main christian forces general Hanson Vivian declared his reports from general Edwin Gunther at Carbondaler did not for the present warrent the probable incitement of further trouble by sending immense armies of troops to the already o inflamed area but immense armies were nevertheless held ready in case of more trouble breaking out.

CALLS DISTURBANCE LOCALIZED....

ANGELINIA AGATHA.( CALVERINIA))) July 29th 1912.--By Cathloic Calverinian International News Service of Cathloic World.---Department of army officers said to day they regarded the disturbances at Vivian Wickey as purely local in character and said they did not expect the bloody battle of Carbondaler there to lead to general vio,e violence in other regions for a while at least where it was reported the rebellion had l lulled. The rebel troops who were involved in the battle of Carbondaler they said were ordinary rebel r troops belonging to general Furgatorian and not the fiercer Glandelinians under general Furragot orian or Mc- Allister Stanck.

GENERAL AMANSIONS HEADQUARTERS DYNIMATED OR BOMBED.

July 29th .I(

I9I2.

Union town(Abbieannia. July 29th I9I2. --By International Cathlcic News Service -- Dynimating the headquarters of general Mansion who with his generals was elsewhere at the time of the battle of Thursday morning was accomplished by rebel miners and engineers at five o-clock in the morning, when assault of the foe in that location won a temporary success. The side of genr general Mansions Headquarters was blown out entirely other sections of the building was razed, and every window in the structure broken and many even in the town when a mine was exploded under the structure just before the assault was pressed back by heavy concentration of National troops. Also a mine was set off alongside the headquarters of another main christian general (name withheld) just before daybreak. Considerable damage resulted to this building also. but in either case no generals were reported wounded.

Half a a dozen wounded christian generals, somev of them lying on death-beds that fatal thursday night gave an Associated Press of Abbieannia correspondent some more actual eye witnecs accouts of the Carbondaler battle that we wednesday afternoon , night night, and Thursday morning which caused dozens of divisions be be descimated with their losses when as said before I0,000,000 fierce Aby A bbieanians attacked and so surrounded the town which had been in the possession of one million Mc-Hollestinians.

The substance of the statements by the wounded generals who had been among the besiegers was that not a few escaped during the bloody fighting and that the number of killed were killed so freuqntly as if they had been shot down by the wholesale in the cold blood. It was stated that some glandelinian prisoners had been shot down in cold blood but that the Angelinian officers had stopped this before it became general. No one could contradict these claims. Many of the Angelinian officers however had absolved those among the an d Angelinians who had committed massacre of glandelinian prisoners had absolved them from blame saying that the ones repons responsible were the glandelinians who had aroused the Abbieannians to the extreme bi by their cruel atrocities in norma Catherine and julio Callio.

General Roy puganna, a officer who had inlested in the army at Pandora gave the most vivid account of the fight. His story was related as he toossd in pain from half a dozen bullet holes through his body and from a shell torn side.

"I was sent down there with the army and with my division by general mansion."He said. I had no idea of what I was running into, though I didhear that the rebels knowing of general Mansions advance on vivian wicksy was aroused and appeared dangerous. I don't however blame the Angelinians for attacking like they did for the glandelinians had been seeming to use us as dupes to keep their own comrades from suspicion. My divis ion at the time had not been armed but we were all given arms when we arived to within two miles of the town of Carbondaler, and when we did arived most of the other forces had already come up, machine guns were being placed into position and I noticed the forces were surrounding the town and preparing to fire upon the rebels. At parts were encampments were set up strong forces of guards were placed follows sent mostly by the Gemini Agencies. I understood general Mansion had sent us warnings to be cautious in our movements as a fierce conflict was impending. Our generals never got any of these warnings as dar as I know but perhaps our main commander did as he acted very cautious and placed at every point at where the foe most likely would counter attack great lines of heavy artillery and machine guns. When we saw the christian troops of other divisions then approaching and start concentrating we at first did not know what d to do. But our general at the moment came up and deploying my division intoo three brigades had me march them into positions by a roadside. Our artillery men prepared to shell and storm the town but most of us infantry men wanted to charge and rush the foe.

Through the night while the battle raged furiously after starting late on Wednesday afternoon the enemy rained bullets and grape and canister upon up us frombhouse tops and their sailents outside the town, and we gave them in return shot, shell, shrapnell, high explosives, dynimate and grape canister, chain shot, and a perfect storm of bullets and rifle battles. Several times the glandelinians driven desperate , made tremendous charges upon our lines and though during the assaults they did carry portions of our positions and force us to recoil and seek what shelter we could from their merciless fire, we nevertheless would counter charge, and drive them back with heavy losses. At times we were unable to see them during the nights bloody conflict, and so fierce was the flash of shells and cannon and great explosions that it appeared like flashes of lightning during a thunder- storm only that the flashes of shells was red or blue.

Sometimes when the battle beam more general the firing grew intense but most of us being protected by natural positions we had secured did not suffer as heavy losses as e the enemy did just then. Then our Engineers blew up a pumping stato station which the enemy had recieved supplies of water from, and the foes food supplies in fright frieght cars and provision wagons were seized by our comrades. the enemy w re without water and foocf food. About gumrun Sun rise the foe as we saw especially in the town with the hundreds of buildings burning and their streets cove covered with fallen charged us once more, and then when their charginglime was destroyed and the remainder on in the town saw it fruithless to continue fighting their main leadegs put up a white flag. Our forces then poured in and we took an immense force of glandelinians as prisoners and captured the town and all the foe works. Up to this time not one of our officers had evob even been injured that I know off, although I understand that our losses in pro privates had been unusually heavy. We had spread around the town q uickly that afternoon of Wednesday, and many of the Angelinians who had secured prisoners tied them together in groups of three and six and made them march to the encampments. The many swarms of prisoners as I saw were rushed off tward the rear but many of them either foolish or too desperate to think of anything sensible tried to break away or run for tgeir freedom but they were shot down as fast as they tried to make a break. One Angelinian officer asked a prisoner how machine guns the enemy had in their possess ion outside of the town, and as he refused to give any answer some enraged Angelinian soldier shot him dead and thre w him down over one of their own cannons and wheeled him into the camps.

A guard and several men were in charge of about five to seven glandelinian prisoners to within a few yards from me. suddenly I was surprised to see these very glandelinian prisoners suddenly set upon the guards knock them down seize their guns, fire at some of the Angelinians and start ru to run. ok soon hundreds of the angelinian soldiers opened fire at the rebel fugitives. A couple were shot down but the rest continued to stagger on one halting to fire but finally he and three others fell with several bullet holes in their bodies. The remainder of the fools then seeing it was hopeless to get away su surrendered. One of the glandelinians who was only woun ded slightly laid in the road and when the soldiers came up and demanded of him to rise he suddenly drew a gun and shot one of the Angelinians dead. One of the other Angelinians then shot him and a second put a bayonet through his body. I then saw a glandelinian prisoner who was just breaking away seize a rifle from a guard and aim at me. here was a puff of smoke and a crash and then every- thing went black. I woke up later and found myself in a wagon and begged for water but there was not any in the region and I could not get any t untill I was brought within the lines. I remember before I lost consciousness being dragged along the road but by what I do not know. Then they brought me to the hospital where I was treated for my wound. Thus it shows how dangerous even glandelinian prisoners are if not watched more closely."

This officers story was confirmed, by general S.P.Whilliamsonia, and general Edward Greenburg two of the Angelinian generals who had been wounded in the battle of Thursday morning two hours after the surrender of the town of Carbondaler. The other three gensrals who lead their divisions to a fierce counter charge when the foe gave way were killed as the enemy let go a withering fire of musketry and machine guns. These were the six foundby the Associaito Associated Abbieanbia Press correspondents that Friday morning and whom he had taken water to.

Another christian officer who was also in the attacking forces but who had not been wounded told the correspondent the fierce series of attacks had been spontaneous and that when the Angelinians went to the c counter attacks and drove the foe from house to house and street to street they did not stop to think of their own losses they would probably suffer. His comrade officer was wounded early in the battle of Thursday morning.

'I was on my way through one of the streets of the town with my regiment and was charging through an inferno of rifle shots from doors and windows and stee street barricades, when I met coming from another street a large yelling gang of Abbieanians. They said they were on their way to run out of the town all the rebels that they could find. My colu n joined them and other attackers kept joining them untill there must have been five thousand Abbieanians within my command.

When we finally got to the big public building in the center of the tstreet where the resistance of the foe was fiercest we gradually spread around it. In this rust of street fighting we had no leaders all of them having been wounded or killed in the fighting inside the town. And it appeared as if it was just one big immense mob out to get the glandelinians who were resisting them through every street and house in the town. I am not sure which regiment of christian troops under my comm nd which f ought the hardest, but after more troops of the christians got into the town the fighting had increased still more furiously untill it looked as if the town now burning was a city of Hades. This fierce fighting kept up for hours after midnight, and many of my regiments and others belonging to other commanders suffered heavy loss but we were capturing prisoners by the wholesale and shooting down rebels as thick as flies. The noise was something awful. It was real w ar and no mistake. Late in the evening a general who rushed up along side of me got shot in the arm and leg by a glandelinian sniper. The wounds he recieved were not serious however and he was carried back to where a group of troops were waiting by an captured army ambulance and they sent him to the christianlines in i in it. II did not know if such reports were really true but I understand from what I heard that most of the losses suffered by bon both sides before the foe surrendered the town was cau sed in the street to street and house to house fighting in the town and no doubt the attack of the Nationals was so sg strong and the pressure of such overwhelming numbers so great that the survivors of the foe finally surrendered.....Itwas terrible I know, and I'm sure the heaviest lost may have been among the enemy.It's just the old story of a battle gorw growing violence and bloody. O'''''

Other officers also comfirmed his story. General Miriam Lesiw O-Rourker o e of the dangerously injured Abgisannian generals was not exiected to live. He was one of the hine wounded christian generals in the Base B Hos pital.. he Base hospital was carefully guarded, all doors being locked to prevent any possible attack on the wounded men generals andother officers. Only soldiers and officers who could prove they had buisness in the ... Hôspital were admitted.

News of the gathering of many christian armies at many of the armories throughout Abbisannia, Angel inia, Calverinia, n and Abyssinkile was spreading through out the world. General Hanson vivian and even his brother with the intention of march ing his armies on the city of Calverine itself had ordered IOO,000,000 National troops to be mobolized as soon as possible if at n once id need be, and held under arms to be sent to many points of Calverinia if needed, for he realized the situation at vivian Wickey was showing s g signs indeed that the struggle was going to be terrible indeed ,and not only that but amatter of endurance itself. he governer generals telwgram a to Brig;Gr General James vivian his son followed;;;;;;

General Rbert Angelic vivian.
governer general of Angelinianand Calverinian armies..'''..

General Hanson Angelic vivian himself ordered mobi mobolix tion of all Calverinian and Angelinian, Abbisannian, and Angelinian or Abyssinkilian troops instead of small divisions of troops as at the outstart of the war, when it was poine pointedout to him by general Henry Josp Joseph Darger that the southern Angelinian troops probably including Mansions armies were already starting the seige of vivian wickey but that he would need immsen immense armies to uccomplish the seige or he would meet with disaster. For this reason it was said, mobtroops from any point of southern Angelinian would be sent northward as these were needed to keep the foe out of northern or southern Angelinia, and also armies were needed to protect Jennis-Wren-town, Angelinia Agatha, and Dolerine Mc-Hollester and also Glorianna.....

The one hundred and thirty second divisions,, were being commando by general Beppo Hansonia Evans and general Swansonia vivianna. The one hundred and thirty foist artillery corps and other machine and big gun com panies were also from Pandora and Angelinia Agatha, while the three a hundred and fourty fourt h infantry divisions were being moved from the vinicity of Pandora. Indeed Angelinia and her sixts sister states were more prap preparee than the wicked enemies of Our Lord expected. If they were to thick of winning the rebellion they would have to form armies quicker than the christian countries were and this the enemy found impossible. he main thing they mostly depended on now was to hold the fortresses of vivian wickey, Aronburg and Federal and Calverine themselvies.

Early three days after the reports of the battle of Carbondale and how it resulted was u pulled through general Hanson vivian made the following statement to the Abbisannian Associated Press known as the ''Double Eagle News-concerning the reports of the desperate battle itself/

''I can't believe that it is possible in view of my reports from general Mansion but if it is true then Attorney general James vivian and his brother my two nephews i are the men e can rely on to let the enemy know how to stay in their pl ces places, but nevertheless the enemy under the Manleys are fully resp-n responsible for keeping me and my brother and our armies here neawr Abbisann at this critucal time, when these very armies are e needed for the advanced advance on Calverine and so I have ordered the mobolisation of immense armies by de draft and conscription which will bring to me as many men as necessary to held help thrown down in the quickest time possible this great child slave rebellion the Glandelinians are waging against us all christian countries..''

''My Uncle General Hanson vivian is mistaken as to where the blame reallys belongs.''Attorney general James vivian his Nepehw said while he was stationed with an army of IO,00,000 IO,000,000 men at Angelinia Agatha.''''It is not only the Manleys who are keeping him from moving on Calverine but also other foe armies under Calmannia Shoemannia, those picknells, and other Glandlinian generals, and the slowness of the mobolization of our armies. We have had many respond to the call of volunteers but so many either do not heed the call or are not able to inlest on account of not being enough recruiting stations that it does seem possible that the nation itself for Gods Sake and its own will have to get armies by the quickest Conscriptionthat is possible. he Capture and the situation at vivian wickey makes it so.''

A long distance tepephone from probably Angelinia Agathis, vivian wickey or even Pandora early that morning places the number of total losses in the battleve Carbondaler on the christian side at from two million to three hundred thousand more -out of which one quarter of the number wdrekilled and the rest wounded.Many Associated Presses reports said that two million two hundred and twenty six thousand dead bodies of Glandelinian soldiers had been picked up or hastily buried within two days work. A vivian wickey editor and correspondent informed the Adjutant general Masonia that all of the Glandelinian wounded had either been taken prisoners r had been taken back to their own lines by the retreating foe, and he estimated that the number of Glandelinian dead was four million but he n could not make this a com confirmation.

President general Farringotonia Greenburg of the Calverinian armies mostly Gendarmes said while he was at Pandora inspecting the immense Mutio Mutition works there that he was advised that the real foe loss in killed was about over two million five hundred thousand and that seven million had been wounded or taken prisoners and that the battle fully raged eighteen hours and one fourth. He also said that reports came from cable gram and w from wireless from Abbisarnia that it was probably the first bloodiest battle of the war as never so many fell even at the long months battle at Julio Callio or elsewhere not even ar Ester Starring . He also said it was probably one of the most glorious christian victories of the war so far...:::''..

''BLOODY VIVIAN WICKEY. ..... heart of the northwestern part of Calverinia had in 1912. ama smeared another red splotch over the name that had clung ot to it since it its first horrible vendettas of 1841/.. As believed at least twenty nine glandelinian generals------perhaps fourty---have met horrible dw deaths during the battle ofgarn Carbondaler in recj recklessly facing the horrible storm of christian rifle and cannon fire, when their wicked Angelinian rebels mad in the Unholg ugly glee of a Wicked Roman Holiday made violent onslaughts against the christian forces that horrible Thursday morning staging probably one of the first bloodiest battles of the war. To make matters worse it was blieved that Moonshine Whiskey the foe h d had made in Vivian Wickey during the Reign of Terror had staged its parts in that horrible Thursdau morning tragedy when the foe were so reckless to to as to face for four hours una una unvailingly a annihilating fire.

TOWN OF CARBONDALER IN RUINS. FIRE AND EXPLOSIONS...

The whole town of Carbondaler eight miles northwest of Cedernine portresses the scene of perhaps the first grimmest grimmest and bloodiest battles in the war was in ruins either burned and scarred where the firs fierst fires had raged during the battle, or blown to pieces by shell fire and other explosions. Scores of miles of railroad cars wither frieght or passengor, , buildings of other places many railroad stations, and tens of millions of dolars more worth worth of property were destroyed y by fire or explosions, and dynimated as that bloody battle closed with a brilliant christian victory before eleven o-clock Thursday Morning, amid the hilarious whoops of many millions of Angelinians and the admiring plad plaudits of refugee women and children. verything was being wrecked so that the foe who had been in possession could not make use of it in case during some other violent battle they may recover some of the lost sections outside of Vivian Wickey.

But reports that following night from Carbondaler from which the many deadly assaults had been directed indicated that order for a time was setting in and that no firing or explosions were further heard though the besiegers were concentrating and some fires were still burning. Worn by eighteen hours of violent and sanguimary fighting the millions of victors had stacked their arms, though within easy reaching distance. General Frank Hunter returning to Pandora from Vivian Wickey in the disguise of a foe general, said that Hanson had not ordered up as yet his main argies and would not do so unless requested by local aurthorities or by general Hanson Vivian. He was not ready as yet for a general seige as the positions were not as u yet selected out, and that he had to be careful in his movements so as not to bring assaults upon his lines at a very bad time when all the army may be in disorder. He was only intrenching one divisions at a time and keeping the main army heavily intrenched to meet any general attack that might be expected. He was even to submit a general report to general Hanson Vivian or his Brother the following night as to conditions around and inside Vivian Wickey, and of the strength of the foe in the fortresses. He even said general Hanson had some generals who had been in touch with governer General Hanson Vivian at Abbieann where a fierce battle had raged with Germania Vivian Robert Vivians wicked son and Robert Vivian himself ending as a drawn battle with an advantage enough to the foe to enable Germania to delay his F Fathers advance to make a junction with his Brother Hanson Vivian. General Hunter also said his investigation indicated seventeen christian generals who had been killed in the battle of Carbondaler and many thousands were still lying out in the fields though it wasa wekk now since the battle, in which no doubt many of them had been shot down by machine gun fire, as presumably they were storming the christian line of machine guns, upon which they had expected to strike desperate blowx blows. Many of the christian officers no doubt were victims of the wild rebel fire of that fatal Thursday morning when the foe were so disgracefully and so soundly thrashed. Three wounded generals were in a hospital near Carbondaler, general Hunter himself said and a lin like number were in a hospital within the christian lines, and also that nearly a hundred thousand tents big or smal, held wounded five or six a tent apiece. One of the latter an ex officer working as a war correspondent shot by a shell fragment in the chest would die. Other casualty reports were at wide variance with that recieved by general Hunter, the death toll in most instances, mounting considerably higher on the foe side than on the christian side in officers, and privates.

Before noon a wee after the battle of Carbondaler a reporter for the Abbieannian News had counted thirteen hundred bullet riddled bodies in one of the timber fields not far from the scene of the conflict, two miles southeast of Carbondaler, where the vanquished glandelinians, whose remaining columns were still battered and bleeding had been routed through all clearning and through glens and woods like herded ot cattle ,many of them shot down intheir tracks by their persuers.

Squatted near this immense gory group was a wounded glandelinian veterna of an Zimmermannian type. He was still breathing, and sat bolt upright he surveying the approaching newspaper men with unseeing eyes. He was sobbing sobbing. His grey uniform which showed he was some sort of an officer was torn to shreds, matted on in blood. So he sat for minutes then toppled over dead. Many Angelinian soldiers who had witnessed the massacemassacre of glandelinian troops during the time they faced the christian c fire but who had been sickened by the awful sights they had witnessed soon however talked freelysbout the battle for days seeking thusto gain some relief for overwrought nerves.

But they mostly talked only in the beliefthat these outbursts would not be reported to headquarters. Some of these were aurthorities for the charge that the so-called ''Angelinian rebels were deliberately run into the fields of carnage and damantion by their wild desperate officers and then despite being made targets by the wholesale still pressed on by their officers who had been bound to win the battle at any cost. The bloody battle that had started at the Ambush first on the road, gradually but violently swung to Carbo ndaler, and then along a portion of mansions main line forming a line of battle to ten miles long when general Johnston. L H. Lewis general in chief of the main line of glandelinian assailants said in his reports to general Purgatorian that the Angelinians who had captured the town of Carbondaler should be regarded as o''Common Rebellion breakers, resulted in so many killed and wounded andmissing and prisoners after eighteen hours conflict, nine million on the foe side and 10'000,000 on the christian side. The christian side lost the majority in killed and wounded only four hundred thousand of the ten million having been captured.

Following the disgraceful repulse of the enemy attac when they ambushed the strong christian army on the road, woods and fields, the battle had swayed with the result of the main armies in action at Carbondalar and had raged in general fury throughout the night unti ll the fall of the town early in the morning before complete daylight came. After the capture of the town and the surrender of the glandelinian force stationed there there had been for an hour a cessation of all kinds of hostilities, and it seemed as if possibly all was over when the battle was resumed heavily as at sunrise by a most violent assault of strong waves of glandelinians sent forward by Purgatorian in person against the first portion of Mansionsmain army. During the first two hours t of the struggle the fight had come out in favor of the enemy the assailants having carriedlines of works recaptured the town and seroff mines under many houses and lines of coaches and freight cars and destto destroyed many christian encampments blowing many soldiers to atoms. The mornings struggle raged four hours with a finaly defeat of the foe mian ln lins of assault. This and other incidents of the fighting at Cargondalaf were recounted by many of the defenders who had been taken prs prisoners, and some others who had been known to have escaped-after being disarmed and lined up for what was to prove the prisoners march. One glandelinian who also escaped by a tr ck trick was Fred Bernardsonia a Zimmermannian thirty nine years olf wa wearing a black beard and long bobbed hair. The password of a glandelinian Free Masonic Order of which three of his comrades belonged failed to save him. He however someway tricked his captors saying that he was an escaped christian spy who had learned the foe password and could obtain information this way without being discovered by the rebels. The Angelinians who had him thus liberated him.

''I was engaged general Flandertonia said to his christian comrades as a member of an engineering corps and sent during the battle to blow down a bridge on the Norma gun River. I reported at the bridge just twenty four hours before the main trouble over the battle started. When I got out on the job I found many other Angelinian enginners had come under the same representations which induced me to start the work. I have not a very clear idea of what happened after we were attacked by glandelinian enginner engineers that fatal wednesday afternoon.

I know that inside one of our barricades of heaped up slack and ground there were three main line tracks passing through tward Vivian Wickey,, and on each side were a number of side trackson which were long lines of gondolas. When the shooting and firing started from glandelinian enginners,--the engineer guards--there were about thirty six of these,I believe---wanted me and my crews to take up our arms and beat it while there was yet time... But we ducked and crouched down in one of the gandolas of the second line of frieght cars. The firing grew heavier, and we could hear further off the noise of a general battle raging. Bullets struck allaround us throughout the wednesday a ternoon, and even during the night and shell fire even roared near and over us, but we never bulged.

Thursday morning when the first general heavy attack was made against Mansions m in line at sunrise we were still hiding in the gondola. But the besiegers did not get over the huge pile of slack on the particular side they had selected as our own fire threatened themwith annihilation. After we fought for an hour and shot many of them down their survivors finally withdrew, withdrew.

But in less than one hour the rebel troops under the gener l known as MEEHaw were back again with heavy reinforcements. About a thousand colored Glandelinians led the new assault. I don't know what came over the first batch of defenders in one of the gondolas because they had lots of ammunition rifles and even a machine gun, but some one among us raised a white flag and was shot down dead by one of his comrades. Despite our fierce resistance the enemy uelling like demons swarmed over the t top of the piles and down upon us. We were helpless agains such against such overwhelming numbers and the majority ofus were captured. First we were frisked for firearms and then lined up out up outside the cars. Perhaps some of our Angelinian comrades did not suspect what was in store for them but I felt it was all over just as soon as I got a good look into the bloodshot eyes of some of our Glandelinian captors. Many of them were reeling drunk and w r worse than that they were the dreaded Mc-Hollestinians. First the gl Glandelinland Glandelinians struck us with their fists or butts of rifles, and then as they tasted blood they started into to han er some with the butts of revolvers. I was not beaten.

General Mc-Dowell one of the leaders of the rebel assailants, who crippled from some wound walked up to us with a distinct limp and muttered an order to some of the wickedest of the Glandelinians. It seemed to me everybody among us Angelinians would have given anything to have a god crack at him."

He then then des cribed the horrible spectacle of fifty two thousand Angelinian soldiers v violently whipped into line by clouts and wicked urses and blasphemies , forced more dead than alive,, into a march between flanks of armed and moonshine crazed platoons of Glandelinians. Two A bbisannian News paper representives driving over from Carbondale fifteen miles southeast of Lucillie ickson met this formidable army of rebels. Their horses pulled over to the edge of a narrow narrow road, barely left room for captives and captors to pass. The newspaper men responded to the exultant greetings of the thousands who hailed them as the marchers trudged by. The advance guard rattling by a number of wagons and other veheciles had screeched the news;;;

"We have got the christian dogs, they are coming."

And they came the limping Glandelinian general heading the bunch of rebel troops blinking blindly from his eyes and at the same time trying to give comma ds to his men while inthat condition. He had been wounded in the battle. Many of the Angelinian prisoners were about as much b battered. All the prisoners now app rently realized their fate and plight to some extent, although it was doubted if they sensed death. In fact it was equally doubtfully whether at first such was the plan of the Angelinian rebels, at the outset of the march. But blows and so on brought bloodd, and the sight worked the Glandelinians into a blind frenzy such as their comrades had during the "Reign of Terror " within Norma Catherine and Julie Allie, and the frenzy swept away all selfit control. Their lines of marchers followed by still other Glandelinian columns prevented the newspaper men from turning in the narrow road. They waited untill the line of tro ps and captives had passed, turned and then took a short cut un isto one of the christian encampments, planning to give warning and intercept the Glandelinians. But rescueing troops and the newspaper men swept through the town and out again and through other parts of the country and back toard the christian lines again, without sighting the rebel troops or their prisoners. On every s con any satreet of the christian encampments refugees no doubt were old men women and children eagerly awaiting the triup tru triumphent entry of the victorious christian troops who had won the battle completely that morning.

But they did not enter. But instead men wounded and long lines of them either in wagons , cars or carts that had originally brought up the rear of the line of dashing counter charges dashed into the christian lines announching that victory had been won but at a horrible d cost and that a sea of dead lay on the battlefield.

To favored acquaintances wholined the roadways onthe outskirts of the christian lines they shouted the tidings. "Nobody is coming in alright at this part of the con encampment. We are mostly all wou de wounded.."

Maybe they were telling the truth. Geneal General Bernardsonia gunn one of the worseof the Glandelinian generals had been the leaders of those who had captured the large number of christian troops but as already related some of the rebel generals maintained they did not capture as many prisoners as the "Christian dogs" did and that instead that the Glandelinians had cam captured chris e christians in small groups and that the christians had captured prisoners by the wholesale and those among the rebel prisoners who were mean and furious over their capture and des erately tried to escape by running across a small wheatfield on the roadside were follo fooled for as they ran many rifles had cracked, and the fleeing men had pitched forward by scores. General Mc-Dowell according to some accounts was the first Glandelinian general shot and wounded at the battle of Carbondale Thursday morning just a few hundred yards beyond the point at which the line of furious christian charge had passed, according to some of the Newspaper men. General Bernad Medley of Hansions cavarly divisions said that when the captured rebels tried to run or do did so he saw one of the rebels who suspected what would come when he and his comrades made the dash and so when he and his comrades did so and instinctively saw many of the Angelinian rifles leveled at his anshis comrades, he wisely pitched forward face down. Joseph Williams Parkersonia,, of the Fourty fourth Glandelinian corps a waiter for the Glandelinians Mess Halls followed s suit and so also escaped the christian rifle fire. That the Glandelinian Whilliams Parksersonia was playing "Possum" was discovered first,, and the second Glandelinian was yanked to his feet a moment later and given literall "HELL fo" for his recklessness by his captors. When it was he asked if there was an Angelinian brother in the crowd of Angelinian captors. One man respondensed responded, and the tricky Glandelinian gave the counter sign, two others stepped to his side. One of these fellows lodge members to the Great Geminian spy society society not thinking he was tr cking them escorted him safity while the attention of the Angelinians was engaged in winging others who were making reckless breaks for freedom,or others who had escaped were being hounded like hares while seeking shelter in the underbrush.

"There were d cries of "There goes one rebel" and "Here is another one escaping." followedby yells and shots. To escape Angelinians when once captured seemed night impossible. After losi ng track of the long line of Abbisannian troops that was headed with their pr prisoners for the christian lines some of the other Abbisannian newp newspaper men did not encounter action again untill they saw wild groups of escaping Glandelinians dashing across a roadway now completely th transformed from res reasonably legitimate soldiers, to men of escaped tigers ferocity, and the Angelinians who were beating the bush brush for their human quarry were indeed fortunate these rebels were not armed. They saw two escaped Glandelinians uniforms torn and blood soaked, driven out by persuers from timber. the prisoners tried even then to escape but finally with hopes of freedom obviously gone and abandoned, they finally raised their hands on high and surrendered themselves.

Whether these surrendered fugitives were ten out of twenty men who were later marched out to one of the schl schoolswithin the christian l nes lines and on t o the main christian lines toard the internment encampments was not established. It was known however that these rebel prisoners had their shoes and socks taken from their feet,and their suspenders taken from them so they could not escape again, and then were pushed forward. An old Angelinian woman who had taken refugee within the christian lines stepped out in the roadway with arms extended pleadingly-;

"Oh what are you foolish rebels going to do now?"

One of the rebel prisoners turned on her furiously and felled her with a blow and then was felled himself by an Angelinian soldier. But this elderly woman was an exception. Young matrons and even maidens and children encour ged the Angelinian soldiers.

"Let's make soap out of some of the Glandelinians. 'One of the women suggested as the line of Glandelinian prisoners banded together in squads of four ranks were being threatened to be shot down at one volley if they dared to make another break. An examination showed that a number of the prisoners was wounded and they were marched or taken to the army hospit l. One of fourty hundred Glandelinians who had had fallen in battle found under a tree in Carbondaler woods, where t he body of another was suspended mysteriously from a bar n branch supposedly from the explosion of a big shell had offered a gold watch and chain, twenty five dollars in bills and a wad of fifty dollar bills to some of his cap captors when he saw all was over.

"You are enemies of course" He muttered faintly "but you are brave just the same and as I'm going to die in a very few minutes I give this all to you."

"You are a good scout though you are a rebel soldier." Said one of the Angelinians."I' sorry however that this happened to you."

The unfortunate rebel soldier had been shot down by a machine gun during the time his regiment was making a charge with many other regiments of Glandelinians.

"Be one of us and keep moving and ask no questions." seemed to be the order of the day in the theatre of operations which centered about Cab Carbondaler.

The following are the names of some of the desperate Glandelinians who had been injured in their attempted break for liberty from their Angelinian cap captives:

John Koclanius, army engineer operator, shot through leg, lung, and back, expected to die.

Edward Fullmannia,-dishwasher in Glandelinian army, shot through hip and thigh.

A.Phil lip Pinner,Glandelinian lueitenant, shot in foot, arm, thigh, and two places in the back, and also in cheek and abdomen, expected to die. Counted as mortally wounded.

.James. S. Hollens of Twenty fourth Division, Glandelinian army laborer and drill hand for bridge work and pontoon construction, shot in both knees, once in the neck and tight side. May live.

Edward Greenburg , Madisionia Glandelinian Division of Ninth Corps, Trench operators officerp——ieutenant colonel shot in ankle, and suffering in arm and shoulder from sabre wound.

Some of the other Glandelinians known to have escaped from the Angelinians staggered into Port Carter ville a few miles west of Carvondaler p Carbondaler, where he dropped dead in front of one of the rebel officers. Soldiers took him on a stretcher to the lines. Other Glandelinian wounded who had succeeded in escaping to the rebel lines were given refuge and then the foe generals fearing violence should the christian break through their own positions shipped the wounded to the fortresses of Mc-Whirthler, Lucilli Ricksen and Port Cedernine and the other gigiantic forces.. Others were shipped to Vivian Vickey by frieght.

In one of the immense tabors within the main christian lines-were counted one hundred and seventeen bodies of officers, some riddled with Glandelinian buckshot, and others minus various parts probably killed by exploding shells. In another tabour near Marionia twelve miles from the town of Carbondaler lay the body of one of the best christian generals also slain in the batt e battle. One Abbiannian correspondent and other newspaper men saw with their own eyes one hundred andthirty seven bodies of non-coms and still higher christian officers such as captians and lieutenants and one other officer later died in the base hospital. What had become of the bodies of thousands of more dead not haveing been gathered up yet even a week after the battle was not known as they had disappeared. Many freshly spaded piles of dirt were noticed by searchers inthe Carbondaler woods. The unusual solemnity of death if you please was lacking in many other hastily prepared morgues for Glandelinian dead picked up by christians. Hundreds of women and children filed past the lines of dead Glandelinians frequently commenting ontheir mutilated condition. Children it was stated laughed at the dead Glandelinians, women pointed with scorn and disdain, and the men and even Angelinian soldiers chuckled.

Most of the bodies of both sides among the slain victims of the battle as declared before di didnot bear any marks of identification, though the empty pockets of many of the killed indicae indicated as many said that the bodies had been looted.

On another body a man who was a Glandelinian Dishwassher was found an honorable discharge from the Glandelinian army made out to the man whose name was not able to be pronoucn prom pronounced. It showed inlistment at Jacksonia Barracks, Omaria and discharge at Lucilie Ricksen, July 23th 1912..

On another dead Glandelinian was a torn half blod soaked piece of paper which bore the name of Nero Heroia Company DI44th Glandelinian Infantry. Still another body of a dead Glandelinian officer bore the n n name of Emil Johnstonia. In his pockets were found brass tags, money, and other trinklets besides a handkerchief and a roll of army bonds. These with many other rebel dead were theonly bodies which could in any way be identified.

General Sheriffia Melvin Thaxtionia the night after the week of the battles past told the Abbiannian Associated Press that he did not think is possible at the time to ask to for more troops to quell the roiting at Carbondaler because he did not see any need of it when Mansions army had been right at hand. General Herdrude Hunter stated that he himself did not askgeneral Mansion for any militia as he was there on his own cause and was however without aurthority to ask for troops and artillery unless requested to make such a request by general officials of his own command. General Sheriffia Thaxtionia's statements followed;

''Shirtly before the our outbreak of the battle began that Wednesday n after hoon I was called to general Mansions headquarters on urgent buisness.I recieved reports that early in the morninf o morning of Wednesday several great demn demonstartions had taken place but as there had not as yet been any hostilities I did not pay any attention to them, believing them merely slight desultory fights. I did not then see any need of big forces of troops for my divisions and their positions and consequently did not make any request for assistance from general Mansion. I am of course very sorry about the f ve very matter, but now I do see that I need troops now. It was only by the mercy of God that the foe did not attack me or my forces.. I came down here the Sunday bebefore from Springfieldbof my own initiative without aurthority from any general and called several conferences over the coming seige of Vivian Vickey which was attended by general Mansion himself and who held it personally. I urged general Mansion just for a joke to try him t to see if he was as determined as he claimed to be to abandon the intention of laying seige to Vivian Wickey.But he replied fiercely:
''I'llbe damned if I will. And once I start it the enemy will never get be to break away.''

I had no aurthority to ask for state and other troops unless requested to ask for such at the time and no such requests were made to me when it was seen by my generals that the foe only made demonstrations near my lines but du did not attack or advance at all.''The st

The State ent of general Farringtonia in Cincinnati(Calverinia) that four hundred and fourty four thousand Angelinians had been killed in two hours fighting that dreadful Thursday morning was intrepeted there as official confirmation that every one of the besieged Glandelinians in the town of Carbondaler the early morning were either shot to death, seriously wounded or forced to surrender. These rumers whips whispered back and forth during day after day had not been published however and gener general Farringtonias announcement brought open statements from hundreds of Angelinian soldiers and even Glandelinian prisoners that the attack on the besieged Glandelinians in Carbondaler was more of a massacre in which many of the Glandelinians who after being captured and then tried to run for their freedom wre shot down in cold blood by the scores of thousands. Not a single Angelinian of any numbers found talking together about it in the trenches, fortifications or company art streets made any attempt to deny that the Glandelinians who had surrendered had been disarmed and then shot down in cold blood as they tried to break away. All however defended the action of the cap captors as justified under the circumstances explaining that the Glandelinians should be treated that way, especially for the horrors committed by the rebels in Norma Catherine and Julio Gallio and especially for their foolhardy break for freedom after having surrendered. The action of general Bernard Hanconia Malltoe at Chicago(Calverinia)) brought much comment, the substance being that it was too-late for Hanson or general Robert Vivian to move immense bodies of troops for Vivian Wickey now. The inquest was sched uled for the next coming week but so far there had not been any official steps taken to investigat the cause of the battle of Carbondaler. No army grand juries had been summoned and no extra investigations had been made. The Angelinian officers openly boasted that they were in the besieging forces around Carbondaler. When a war correspondent that night asked a score of Angelinian soldiers what a action could be expected he was laughed at and told that no action was needed. Everywhere the attack was upheld.

Anoth r Another blame for the open battle between besieged Glandelinians and the Angelinian besiegers was placed upon many Glandelinian generals in a statement issued by general Henry Darger at Mansions army at the time President or supreme Person of the Geminian Socies of spies. He claimed;

''General Purgatorian violated an agreement with general Mansion after a warning not to dare allow troops outside of Vivian Wickey, by hurling troops of great numbers in fierce attacks against the christian lines instead. He was oven given warning by his superior general Mc-Allister Stanck not to work his intentions of attacking Mansions immense forcejust then as long as he did not expect to ship his wounded anywhere outside of Vivian Wickey but when he had managed to clear some of the prisoners in i inside of Norma Catherine of prisoners and when he had concentrated before Mansion between sixty and seventy million rebel soldiers he advanced a portion which ambushed the christian troops on the road and defiantly placed a strong force of Glandelinians in the town of Carbondaler itself. When he began the battle which became very violent and general in an hours time. In truth duringthe battle of Carbondaler the rebels had over five million christian soldiers but in the excitement most of the rebel soldiers had forgotten to disarm their prisoners having forgotten no doubt to take their guns and ammunition away from them and so nearly all of these christiansoldiers being within foe lines were the worse of all for fighting their way to freedom they were mostly responsible for the horrible losses the foe suffered.

Even the reports of the violent bloodshed at Carbondaler brough brought a conference between many government aurthorities and the cabinet members whowho were still watching the su situation of the Child Slave Rebellion decided on no immediare action however.

General Hanson Vivian himself heard of the great horror at Carbondaler and he declared he had recieved his information from telegraph but refused to reveal the identification of the e person who notified him. He also declared that he had not agreed to permit general Mansion to c lose on Vivian Wickay without a bigger army especially where the trouble occured, which it was said was possible under the National law to permit small forces to try and besiege an immense city with more immense fortresses. General Hanson decided to march for Calverino as soon as possible and capture it first so he could send armies to Vivian Wickey.

He had heard that fourty four g christian generals had been killed and seventy woundedGeneral John Cleveland also conferred with Calverinian Aurthorities and then dropped completely out of sight sight. Accompanied by general Whilliamson Greenburg general Lewisonia another investigator quitly slipped into Pandora two days after and went into conference with the Calverinian Aurthorities there, eluding all all war correspondents and reporters and newspaper men before and after the meeting. Neither did any one who conferred ever register their names. At many big Calverinian, Abbiannian and other great cities conferences over the Vivian Wickay affiar wax was held. Through this it was seen that before another year was out the war would be one of the fiercest conf i conflicts the world ever seen.

When general samuel Chopmper of the Abbisanni n Abbiesannian Federalaration of nationals now holding its fourty seoln second convention over the war and its situations was shown dispatches from the region of vivian Wickey citing the battles horror and the massacre of so many Angelinians by foe troops after they had been taken by glandelinian troops. He said;

''I regret yes-resent, the resort to violence in the beginning of the seige of vivian wickey,. the beginning of the siege of vivian wickey is on such a high plane of principal it must depend on the main action of main christian armies.

Even on account of the horrible scenes of norma Catherine throughout the month of July there had been reported thousands upon thousands slain and massacred as a result of the ferocity of the glandelinians. In the extreme southwestern art of Calverinia and also a portion of the west we have already I00,000,000 troops on mobolization, and over 5$, 000,000 are moving for other parts of Calverinia. And the one hundred million soldiers who are being mobolized are not ready yet for any advance to support beleagured sections of Christian ca Calverinia. Why? Because general Hanson vivian has not yet dared to do what his brother dd did two months ago. General robert vivian father of the most beautiful children the world has ever seeen seen speaking yesterday before the National convention of christian generals thus critized even his borther what he termed his backwardness in mobolizing armies as quickly as they should have been mobolized. A little more than two months ago we had a terrific battle in the Angelinian country called probably Jennie-Wren-Town. rt was in the dead of winter and not two months ago as it is my mistake. It was in march near the end and though so near April the weather was near zero, and more than two feet of snow was on the ground. the people of Jennie Wren town on account of the enemy being inpossession were suffering. After general Hanson vivian captured the place he pl placed great armies there who took over the city into o their own position and then called for volunteers to mann the fortresses there and prevent other foe armies from ever retaking the city again. In twenty four hours over twelve million men had responded. We picked out the most healthy and stalward young and sag aged men and marched them to the fortresses. When we arived there with a number of good strong armies with plenty of ammunition and artillery the enemy forces under new leaderw had gathered near Jennie-Wren- own much in the same spirit as they had gathered as I believe At vivian ickey or the Julio Callio and norma Catherine section. ut I and my divisions went inwith the armies and took the city into our possession and fortified all points and strengthened the garrisons of the fortresses and in ten days the situation was relieved. he foe did not dare to advance and attack, but encamped about twelve miles from the ci city and stayed there. Then we started the dr drafting of troops. Both Labor and capitol opposed the drafting of troops for the war, but the Anb Angelinian law works..''

General Johnstonia Lewinn Lewise Fresedent of the Angelinian Geminian ociety of spies and Army Secret Service Agencies, and general Whilliamsonia Greenburg Secret ary Treasurer left Pandora for General Mansions army. It was expected they both would return to Pandora as soon as the situation for the christian armies was relieved and the seige of vivian Wickey was well progressing. In his absense genera general Phillip Aronburger vice President said;;;

''I wish to deny most empathically that any letters sent by general Lewise could have had any bearing on the occurances reported from vivian ickey. The united Geminian Socicities qill undertake an investigation of the situation.''

vivian wickey despatches stated the trouble was incited by a message from Lewise branding foe troops in the city of Carbondaler as common enemies of od and declared that they were too wicked to be only fighting for the upholding of child lavery but that the rebellion was also a rebellion against god and Christianity. He even however denied that he ever wrote such things to the enemy to stirr them up to destruction saying it was all a put up job to get him into g trouble. General Jacksonia gneeder Whilliamsonia, President general of the Angelinian ngine ring corps had wired to general Lewise whether there was any agreement by the Abbiesannian Federation of War allowing christian armies alrwady mobolized to remain idle, not advance,and support christian armies already besieging vivian wickey.''

''The standing armies''gaid general Lewise in his answer was held inactive on account of Hanson vivians orders that he himself will not allow troops without his knowing it advance against certain places and run into unseen dangers from foe armies that may at any pointbe lurking in ambush.It was also Hansonias Hanson ivians purpose to bring on his own armies as soon as possible to vivian wickey by capturing Calverine and Poverty ow first.And he added;

''Representivies of our army organi xations are justified in treating the rebel troops as an outlaw organization in the same light as if they were waging a rebellion against god but I do not claime they are for if they did they would not be in existance now. o one can rebel against od and win a single battle.''

vobolization of the Abbisannian and Angelinian armies andother divisions of christian troops and Great National uards in preparation to meet any further outbreaks of the Child slave rebel ion in all sections of Calverinia and elsewhere began at 2.a.m. two weeks after the battle of Carbondaler. At that hour the order of genwral anson ivian sent through adjt.General Robert Vivian for as many christian armies to beprepared to take the field, with full equipment of field and other necessity was recieved at Pandora, Sacramento and Angelinia Agatha. General C.B.D. Heller supply genwral of many christian armies was at one of the armu am armouries of the huge city of Pandora at the time and immediately notified general Swansonia who issued all the orders required to set in motion the machinery by which the soldiers were summoned to all the armour amories of Calverinia. The battalion and other christian commanders were notified of the mobolization orders first. they in turn notified many of their divisional and other general commanders who through their officers and top s r sergeants passed the word along the line to thousands upon thousands of non-commissioned officers. Each corporal called the eifht men in his squad.

It was expected that it would be three or four weeks before the actual armies needed would be mobolized, though millions had appeared in the quickest time possiblefor service at the armories.Their arms and equipments were issued to them there. These many organized christian armies were to be joined b at the armories by artillery divisions and many machine gun companies, and other regiments of artillery. Each of the infantry divisions and artillery regiments were to be placed into field service as soon as possible and each gigantic division were to have three or four machine gun companies, which would give a total force of four hundred and nine machine gun companies each company having about a thousand guns. In addition the divisions and armieswere to have howitzer and krupt companies and fields of contemeter guns and calibre and motar cannond cannons.

It wasnot stated whether the howitzer co companies would be called out immediately or not.

Before general Hanson vivian had issued the order for the general mobolization of the immense armiesof troopsmany telegrams urging him to exert the full strength of the Nation in the ivian wickey crisis to overthrow the rebellion had poured in upon him while he was forming his own armie to make his n intended march on Calverine.

They came from members of the Angelinian and Abbiesannian government aurthorities, to every one of whom a bulletin had been flashed from the Pandora headquarters earlier in the week urging immediatel immediate telegraphic actions. Other messages reached the governer genwral from the Geminian Associations and many other places even in Calverinia, and especially from the region of vivian wickey where the centre of the rebellion just now seemed to prevail.

The appeal from the Abyssinkilian Assiciations to governer General Hanson Vivian which was signed by General John M. Glennertonia read as follows if you care to follow;

''Private and newpaper reports and reports from war corresp ndents and so on are being recieved here of the acts of murder, butchery, lawlessness and outrages to christianity in connection with the ''Reign of Terror'' in orma Catherine and Julio Callio, and also of the battle of Angeline un and Carbondaler.The livew of thousands of soldiers pe- hour who are doing the necessary work attending to the erection of the seige are threatened. Information of the most flagrant character c m comes from all q over Calverinia about the affiars at vivian wickey. All the Associations of Calverinia, and even all the governments respectfully demands and requests and beseaches you and pleads that you and your generals give this gorrible situation your most ernest consideration and promptly take steps to furnish protection to life and property in all districts of Calverinia where the ourrages referred are being threatened or committed. The rebellion is on now in full sway, the war is worse than even any one thought it was going to be and all efforts must be made to overthrow the insurrection.''

Also on account of the situation at vivian wickey and of the results of the battles of Carbondaler and Angeline Run the Associations of the Geminian ties wired the Angelini n governer general;

''word come to us that armies of soldiers are going from town to town and their genera,s generals are notifying their men who are in charge of troops that they must stop their southward advance within twenty four hu hours and turn northward.

Such people which are threatened with horrible destruction in Norma Catherine and Julio Callio are christians and womenand children..It seems evidently that a definitely lac lawless spirit prevails even after the frightful fatalities and that the besieged Glandelinians have to be watched. I advise that the only way it can be possible to prevent further massacres of women and c children inside of Norma Catherine and other sec tions of Vivian Wickey who are still held prisoners is to have your generals threaten or shoot down as many Glandelinian prisoners as there are women and children slain by the rebels..."'' V V

Abother Another message flashed to general Vivian that is Hanson Vivian, by Attorney generals Ballson, Lyions Leonia, and Olsionia, counsel for the Geminian socisites who had just recieved news of the horrors at Vivian Wickey, and the deaths of one of Mansions chief generals at Carbondaler read as follows;;

''We are advised that fifteen or twenty generals were killed during the battle of Carbondaler, during the time of the enemy attacks uponthe christian lines and poer property of general Mansions besieging troops. We are informed by spies that despite the seige starting the lawlessness still exists, and one of the spies notified me that the Vivian girls the dauthers of general Hanson or Robert vivian have been captured by the rebels. We urgently request your prompt action to save them if possible.

National Guard Boards of Inquiry head headed by general Milton Forhead were to arive on the scene of Wednesday and Thurds Thursdays bloody battle of Carbondaler as early as possible tovesit estimate the situation at Vivian Wickey and Norma Catherine. Whether Calverinian state armies of troops were to be ordered to Vivian Wickey to Mansions immediate support would be upon their report to Governer General Hanson Vivian or his brother. In the military sense((to estimate'' a situation means that e each of the the officers will form his own judgement. Each were to file seperate reports to Governer general Hanson Vivian or his brother..... Out of these reports will come or suppose to come an average or mean calculation of the situation of the conditions of Vivian Wickey afterwards known as the''Strange Aronburg Mystery.'' When general Fore head, General Swansco Norco, Major General Freddy E Allexicannia and major general J. Morenio of three immense Abyssinkilian armies, and genera s Francis Semilmt and Major General Richmondia of other divisions were in the investigation.

''We are going as boards of inquiry.''General Forehead said it''On a purely military mission, to decide whrther immense armies of troops and artillery should be sent there promptly, whether local aurthorities of Calverinia alone can handle matters at Vivian Wicke seige, nd and whether this was simply a flareup, which has died down and will stay down.''

The boards of inquiry were ordered to entrain by governer general Hanson Vivian who said;

''This action was taken because I and my generals and even the Aurthorities' of Angelinia want more complete details and reports than I or they have recieved. Praxtically every one of the reports has been to the effect that no armies of troops are needed..Yet I get statements from men and officers acting as custodians of property and generals from Mansions army that theywere being threatened with disasters and that the enemy at Vivian Wickey has by wireless telegraph appealed to Glandelinia for aid. I want to know exactly what the situation is. I now realize that the rebellion had made very serious progress and that this is going to be a terrible civil war if nothing is donw quickly...''''

Two weeks had passed since the battle of Carbindaler and many more mortally wounded and wounded were still brought in from various parts of the battle-field and placed in hospitals towns and within the christian lines, many threatened with death from their long exposure as they had been difficult to be found. Past them filed an unending line of men, and women, young and olf old mostly rescued refugees from Vivian Wickey, barefooted boys and little girls. They lifted muslin cloths and peered at thousands of pals faces, and at the horrible wounds left by pistol shots, rifle balls, buckshot, and shrapnell and grape and canister. They lingered mor mournfully, then reluctantly pressed on to some adjoining horror eager to miss nith nothing as long as they were sure they may be able to identify some of the dead. But not a one was found to belong to them. Millions of words of pity and sorrow however came from the crowds. But no words of sympathy came for rebel dead slain in the battle. These were the Glandelinians who had came to Calverinia to take away the freedon freedom of little children, and well so it served them right. That was the attid attitude of the throngs of onlookers expressed by the men women and children. They had gone through such horrors and witnessed such sights in Norma Catherine that they hated and dreaded the Glandelinians and had no pity for the dead Glande Glandelinians. The dead Glandelinians lay at peace for all the c crowds, laughter and sullen looks. Bricks beneath their heads for pillows/ pine and-wooden boxes and hard stone slabs for their beds. They lay waiting for the call of Glandelinian friends and relatives who loved them once and have lost touch with them in the horrors of rebellion. Most of them were to be forgotten in the ''Potters Field(('' , their meager courses run, their stories finished. Ma y of them died, hunted across the fields after breaking away reckless ly from their captors, stoned, shot, tied and dragged down dusty roads and across fields and down lanes because they were so mean as to break their parole after they ''galln Gallently surrendered.'' From the morgues of Glandelinian dead the crwo crowds drifted to the billboards in front of christian intrenchments to see what the posters telling casulaties promished, to the army canteens, for soft drinks, then to the refugee barracks for dinner or supper. Only others showed surprise and horror over the disaster at Carbondaler. People of such kind said;

''This is our buisness what Angelinia aurthorities do to rebels. Sorry but it was done and cannot be helpled. Let the rebels let us alone and we let them alone. We will handle this bloody rebellion alright with a an withering iron hail of cannon. We are good pople to get along with even-if we are Spanish in Nat Nationalty---godd good as any other nationalty. If Glandelinia minds her own buisness, we and all christianity will atrend to theirs.''

THE SITUATION OF THE VIVIAN WICKEY HORROR CA S CAUSES AN ASTONISHING BLOCA BLOCKADE OF ALL WESTERN C L CALVERINIAN SEAPORTS AND RIVER PORTS.

Reports by the Abbisannian Associnted Press. All foriegn shipping companies on duty at many of the Calverinian seaports and riverports of the closed blockaded towns and cities of the waterfront, through an agreement between the Calverinian Aurthorities and the United Abvisannian Counsil were n known to be quitting the Calverinian sea rd and river ports, because of fear from bombardments should enemy fleets come up and attack the blockaders. Unless the situation was relieved scores of millions of dollars worth of propery and food and all kinds of pr v provisions would become a total loss from the internment. Since the beginning of th the blockades many tumers have come that many squadrons of foe ships were a- advancing to make raids on the blockaded towns and attacks also in reteliation for the previous war tro b troubl es were planned, and that all ships belonging to other nations would be forced to leave soon as there was no telling what the Glandelinians who respect no christian nation wouldde. General Herrintonia in a message to his superior offiers officers said ty at the rumors seemed true for no enemy would allow a blockade to progress if they col could do anything to prevent it. Also alarming reports that threats had been made by the Glandelinian aurthorities of Glandelinia demaning the immediate opening up of allthe blockading towns in thw westernsection of Calverinia were being quietly circulated throughout the whole Glandelinian country and passing to every person of high rank in Angelinia. Many towns which were supposed to have been blockaded in Northwestern and Eastern Calverinia were st ll be still being e kept open on agreement between Aurthorities of Calverinia and of Abyssinkile to prevent damage from rebels, and also to provide provisions for other nations that may be in need as shipping could not be accomplished from the west on account of the rebellion.

It was also reported that many threats h ad been recieved by National gards Guards.

On the beginning of the third week since the battle of Carbondaler the whole region of Vivian Wickey was now seeming to be placid enough after the tornado of murderous passion between the two rival armies which resulted in such loss of life and such a sea of wounded in eighteen hours of bloodshed satiated was the Lood lust for mo more rebel soldiers remained outside of the fortresses of Vivian Wickwy just then to be drivenback and the city of Carboldaler which was probably the cause of the battle was closed and in the possession of vast armies of christian troops.

The army morgues which had been filled with countless victims of the dead of both sides was empty the dead having been buried but all hospitals in the town and within the christian lines, and all tents and houses of Carbondaler and scores of other towns in possession of christi an troops were still filled with Angelinian wounded. Many more bodies of dead were believed to have beencdragged out of ponds streams and picked up from the wooded sectionsnear Carbondaler, and others were supposed to be still in the wedds and on roadways that were the scenes of the wars probable first bloodiest battle.

But the feeling in the whole region of Vivian Wickey seemed to be one far from re gret regret. here immense groups of soldiers gathered in comp ny streets near army canteens and elsewhere there was nothing in the conversations but a tone of sat isfaction, not to say exultation.

Many of the Angelinian officers themselves had posted notices in the windows of the sotrex of Carboldaler and on trees in the encampments xovering the shootn shootings of the battle and apparently considering the outbreak a closed incident. The notice read;

''Countless rebel Angelinians are dead, millions of their wounded at are no doubt in vivian Wickey and nine hundred thousand of their wounded are in our internment hospital camps as prisoners, and vivian wickey is closed up an upon and besieged. General Mansions prayer was answered. And the Glandelinian urthorities have declared that because the fortresses of ivian wickey were builded by Abbiesannians the Angelinians cannot capture it within twn years. Well we'l show them that it won't take three years to tale it.''

It was in the air almost everywhere in the region of vivian Wickey and within the christian lines, not only among the soldiers, but even throughout the whole of Calverinia among buisness folks, and among women and children andall those not yet drafted into the armies. Street talks of the coming ferocity of the rebellion, and the number of killed and wounded in the war thus far was rather a shock by its prevailing tone of callousness which no doubt proved that Abbiesannia's hundred year hatred of Glandelinia was growing in intenis intensity. The many dead and wounded Glandelinians sincethe beginning of tnr war when looked upon were often treated as subjects for jests and jibes and it was a wonder indeed that the Glandelinian wounded ever recieved any mercy. ut they by their captors were treated better than they were by the non-combatants..

''There isnt a Glandelinian officer in vivian wickey with enough nerve to make any efforts to revenge the bloe blow at Carbondaler.''Was an expression often heard. Glandelinian generals and all their officials and all the Glandelinian urthorities, in Vivian-wickey, charged openly th that the ''Christian Dogs'' have not only terrorized the Glandelinians tropps at Mc-Whirther and within the region of the Lucillie icksen fortifications but have laughed at-and bluffed the main officials such as Manley, Shoemannia and icknell, and the Glandelinian ing himself, who were supposed to be at the scene several days prior to the battle and had not arived or even showed themselves.Along many dusty roads and highways long strings of army closed wagons and wagons of all kinds and even army atomobiles were parked near the scene of the battle while scores of thousands of merry curiousity seekers swarmed to the neighborhood of the Carbondaler Timberland where occured the frenzy of war blood letting...If.. the question of incesitg ting and fix fixing responsibilty did not seem to have been taken up by the Angelinian aurthorities yet, with any degree of ernestness, and it was believed that even all inquests would not be held on account of the diffu difficulty of some of the spies accomplishing their missions. General Thanxtonia Welvin Hill declared that if possible a full investigation would be held. Be he himself in the battle of Carbondaler had been considerably wounded, wh ch somewhat dimished his strength and made him unable to even command a regiment..As to bringing in immense bodies of troops to reinforce general Mansions besieging armies that was not supposed to be under consideration now by the aurthorities here. The fierce fighting was over and order has been restored and no further outbreaks were looked for unless some one tries to bombard the city of Vivian wickey before the seige was in full progress. The Angelinians generals declared and even insisted that the provocation was on their side. They declared that the Glandelinian forces taking possession of Carbondaler at the time of Tuesday night, who appeared Wednesday morning to make strong demonstertions that looked very suspicious to the christian generals started the hostilitici hostilities. They set forth that the full Glandelinian forces appeared recitive because the christian troops which had concentrae concentrated before the city of Carbondaler broke the agreement to keep inside of vivian wickey and not dare attack, and did sent forwad upon christian troops marching upon a public highway a bi big force of troops that ambuscaded them. Remonstrances they say were all the men had in mind when they first approached the roadways, but the enemy tropps having curcumded them opened fire heavily on all sides and thus precipitated the wholesale kil ings and woundings of the battle the following night and early morning. even Glandelinian guards according to christian officers and town folk mounted patrol on the roads and public highways running around the region of ivian wickey and interrupted people, vehicles and allowed no one to pass wirther they were non-combatants or not. Also according to evenbus buisness men and soldiers the Glandelinian supretended general Purgatorian on a occasions drove into the city during the last week or ten days for supplies with soldiers and body guards accompanying him and indulging in swagger and loud talk about christians.

It all incited bad feeling among the Angelinian soldiers they say apart from the attempt of the Glandelinians to threaten to assume war operations around Carbondaler in a district where christian forces were laying ready for a seige. This it may be said frankly in giving only one side of the case for the other side is even more extremely difficult to get, due to deaths or flights. Two of the sm

Two of the smaller points prodtruding of the case were; Christian officias officials declare that a certain letter of general Purgatorian at vivian iw Wicks w ickey captured by an Angelinian spy saying the christian troopswere violating the rules of war in besieging a city full of non-comvatans non-combatants had nothing to do with inciting the bloodshed. he troubo e they declared was well in the brew before general Purgatorians letter was captured and brought to one of Mansions generals and it was on an indendary tone at any rate.

The armed forces of christian troops that perpetrated the battle of Carbondaler was not composed of Angelinian forces alone, but were representives of Abbiesannians , Calverinians, Concentinians, Calverinians,and Domdobians,, most of these soldiers also being representives of the home owning persons. lso among the Angelinians according to this story anyway there were Americans, Scotch, English, Italians, Lithuanians and representives of the other varied nationalities that had come over to join the Angelinians either to see the pa war or take part init just to let the Glandelinians know that no nationality are afraid of them, wicked, serious, and strong as they were. Among Angelinian-soldiers as well as the foreign one always heard a general sentiment th that the Glandelinians were reckless and should not have attacked the christians near Carbondaler. General Samuel Hale-Chunter representing Adjt. Gen. Antonio Carloes who arived in Mansions army the Sunday following the battle says that on the sunday night he went into Carbondaler,and after being intercepted a few feet off the public highway by an Angelinian guard was permitted to talk with generalCavalier. He advised the general to strongly fortify the town because to take possession of it under the conditions it was in now constituted a menace to the safty of the whole besieging christian army. He urged upon the division officials that all parts of the town should be strongly fortified because he knew a real war storm waa growing .The christian generals did so as soon as opportunity presented itself and so during the whole seige the enemy never regained Carbondaler.

And during Wednesdays fight, and also the fighting of Wednesday figh night and early Thursday morning when a call was sent in to Gurgatorian by the besieged for help it was Mansions efforts that prevented help from reaching the besieged rebels in Carbondaler and so only when the enemy were reduced to the last stages of desperation and despair and when threatened with annihilation did their officers suggest to the Chief commander of the besieged that a white flag should be hung out, and a truce was struck. A cording to many Angelinian officers hundreds of farmers Calverinian farmers were in the ranks of attacking and besieging christian troops that after the battle was over rounded up the Glandelinian prisoners and led them off in the direction of the main christian lines. hey say the farmers were not inlested soldiers, but participated because many of them had been abused by armed guards of rebels and intercepted on publick roads while going to town on their buisness and also that many had their farms raided by rebel foarging parities parties. he question really was of who was responsible for the out outbreak of the battle would probably never be settled untill many outside a agencies and the Gemini in particular took the matter up. ome conservative officers and farmers in Marion Region and near Carbondaler appeared to think it would eventually be a subject for many attorney generals to handle and a big one at that, put on your hat.

The quad quarter from which came the greatest concern over possible results of the massacre like battle was in many of the hospitals wih within the christian lines and inside the towns were wounded Glandelinian prisoners picked up by christian soldiers were taken to be treated. In the early morning of Friday crowds containing many soldiers, men women and children refugees and officers, and even the dreaded Abbiesannians and Abyssinkilians gathered about every hospitals. here were no hints of hostility tward the wounded Glandelinian sol soldiers, but nevertheless their more presence caused uneasiness among the landelinian pri paitnents. inally one Glandelinian soldier who was an officer whose name was LL nAmacil Mc-Lemonia lying helpless with bullet wounds through i his right shoulder, right leg, and at least fourteen other buckshot wounds upon his body, and left lef and side town horribly by shellfrangements begged leave to speak to generalJohn Anchutze superintendent general and doctor of the hospitals in his vinicity.''

''Doctor I want to be removed to some safter part of the encampments especially the interment camps at once he pleaded.''You see I noticed it was a wild young bunch of Angelinian soldiers that did all that fighting, attacking, and shooting yesterday and the day nand night before and Iam afraid many of them will fell still enraged over the cruel scenes of gorma Catherine committed by my comrades, and storm the hospitals. If they got started no one could stop them and they might drag us all out and torture or hang us.''

The doctor general sought to smooth away the fears of the Glandelinian officer, but the uneasiness gradually crept throughout all the hos hospitals. The doctor then communicated with general Mansion, who accompanied by his generals drove immediately to one of the hospitals. He was met there by doctors and nurses. the generals made a tour through all the hospitals pausing to talk to each prisoner. the wounded Glandelinians were given every assurance that they were safe and that all possible would be done for them even though they were enemies.

Earlier general Mansion and his generals discussed plans for meeting instantly any sign of further trouble. Then general Mc-Ghunter called general Manson Vivian on long distance. He confirmed the generals opinion that no further violence was expected for a while at least, but nevertheless that-allthe troops and artillery and provisions necessary would be needed as soon as God would give him means to allow them to be sent. Even two weeks after the many scores of thousands of searchers were scouring the wooded hills and other regions near the scene of the battle for more bodies. The possibility of some of the many wounded fleeing in terror before the advancing and attacking christian troops may have been mortally-wounded and hiding in the hills and many other places was held posibitive.

General Mc-Ghunter after recieving reports from many farmers and non-s com stants that many bojects which could have been dead bodies of rebels or even Angelinians were seen floating in the small Sunbeam Creek near the scene of the Battle of Carbondaler ordered a search with Grapelling hooks. the many wounded many of them dying or notified they would not live from their wounds repeated and repated their stories of acts of Glandelinian barbarism on the bodies of many dead and dying Angelinian soldiers and even women and children. Their stories in the main corroborated by the mutilated con condition of many hundreds of dead Angelinian soldiers, and for the number killed and wounded in the battle itself, and the appearance of the character of the seige had set a new bloody mark indeed for Vivian Vickey. General Mc-Learner said that in his opinion appointed leaders of the foe e were scarcely responsible for the murder of women and children inside of Norma except Manley and Purgatorian.

''The felloow a Glandelinian officer who seemed to be a sergeant was indeed terrified. He stated thus;

''The Angelinians who had captured us during the Thursday Mornings battle ordered to ma us to march peacefully and if we were careful they would be on the square. But as we trab t raveled along the Christians had also captured gangs of tough Zimmermannian Glandelinians who felt it a dire insult to be made prisoners by more ''Hell hounds of Christianity and it was this element that ran away and forced us to follow and break our agreement on parole, when the Angelinians persued and shot us down. When we startedour break for liberty, and realized how foolish we had been, we then began to realize now it was run for it now or bekilled. Before I had gine over thirty feet I felt a string sting in my right shoulder, and heard many bullets whistling past me in a perfect consert but kept on. I got almost a mile and a half before I fell riddled with buckshot.''

General Mc-Lennon of the foe side said general Mc-Dowlell among the first Glandelinian generals slain in the battle of Carno Carbondaler had asked the local aurthorities of Vivian Vickey for reinforcements to fortify Carbondaler as early as Wednesday Morning, when he saw the threatening movements of the christians. Additional divisions were at lease least requested when it became evident that no general aid could be expected from local officials, he said. When our reinforcements were ambushed by advancing christian troops reight miles from Carbondaler, general Mc-Dowell had notified general Purgatorian of the coming battle.''Mc-Lennon had declared. ''We hid our provisions and materials and prepared for the worset.''

At six o-clock Thursday morning when the struggle around Carbondaler had been raging at its worse the Glandelinians thus besieged and shot down in such frightful numbers had finally ran up the white flag, and as the rebels had marched out on orders of the besiegers many armed soldiers had been placed beside many columns of the surrendered Glandelinians. There were one n million tw two hundred and fifty thousand more who had gotten away from the town however by fighting their way through before the christians forced the surrender however. Mc-Dowel had been shot earlier in the day in leading a charge when his troops crossed the railroad tracks, just west of Carbondaler. The Angelinians then resisting the charge had seemed to have a special hatred of him.The foolish crowd of Zimmermannians thinking they would have a chance to escape from the Angelinians fur first broke into a trot a little further along and then broke into a desperate run when the Angelinian soldiers who saw them began to run after them yelling;;

''The rebels are escaping and breaking their parole. Let's clean them ungodly scabs of the Devil!''

The escaping rebels had reached a line of barbed wired fences near the Carbondaler woods, but while desperately striving to tear down this barrier or at least get over it a regular hurricane of bullets tore through the escaping column of prisoners.

In a moment out of five hundred of the escaping Glandelinians only six of them remained on their feet. After the survivors were overtaken and captured and were tied by the necks with ropes, the march was resumed. At a roadway nearby the shooting continued as Angelinians still persued escaping prisoners from another crowd. The Angelinians were so furious that losing control over themselves in their rage they beat some of the wounded Glandelinians unmercifully as they lay helpless on the ground.The cries of the dying Glandelinians had been pitiful but the captors exhit exhibited no mercy whatever to Glandelinians who after surrendering broke their parole and ran away. Of course that was the way with all Zimmermannians. They are treacherious and one of them while resisting his captors had tried to slash the throat of an Angelinian officer with a razor..!!..

General William Vincennes subdistrict general of the United United Armies of Abbiesannia said that he had addressed a letter the day before the battle to general Manscnia Tracey of Pandora munition factories and armories, district representive of the Angelinian armies Union, asking him to send two troopsand provisions to Mansions aid, and asking him to withdraw from Angelinia Agatha undeeded forces of troops, also from Sternertown, and advising him that the actions the enemy were having at Vivian Wickey was suspicion and that delay in any orders was under jurisdiction of the Angelinian urthoi Aurtherities. Furthermore general William Vincennes explained''was entered into by general W.L.Lestertom of the Southern Calverinian armies with general Franklin Pierce and state board mem ers, and Hugo Williamson of Pandora early in May even before the foe took possession of Vivian Wickey.

General Lestertom agreed that no armies without provisions and plenty of ammunition and supported suff iciently with artillery would be attempted to reach Vivian Wickey as soon as expected as no trains could be taken possession of to send troops to that locatica, and that as many divisions of armies as possible would be mobolized in preparation for futire fur future marching southward or northward when needed. However after seventy five million or a hundred millions had been mobolized the General through some reason or other violanted his agreement to send troops as soon as they were mob mobolized and so lost his command.

Reiteration of his assertion that the Glandelinian generals of Purgatorians command commands were not in any way concerned in the battle of Carbondaler was contained in a formal statement issued three weeks after by general Purgatorian himself.

The work of concentrating troops into and around the town was no way known to him it was declared. He declared the difficulty was precipitated by the generals of other commands who were putting the troops into the town and ex especially by the generals leading the troops that ambushed the christians on the public road which at the time had been guarded by gun gunmen, a situation and condition under which no one would dare pass through, hence they were not in any way involved.

During the lull while the seige was still being formed local pit and mine forming were in operation around Vivian Wickey than ever before, the number of dangerous mines being set totally more than six hundred and fifty according to general Marten Bolder assistant lieutenant of general Mansion.

''Of course this does not apply to local mining that employed any kind of men or soldiers.''The general declared. ''The men are army wi eingineers. The mines are being set to blow up trenches of the foe where they had been formed.Even a large strip mine gallery was being made by Angelinian engineers with armed guards all arou d around it and that no one who were not angelinian soldiers were all allowec allowallowed near it. Each guard carried two pistols. Even near Terre Haute River mines were being made and generals here have taken no added precautions or precautions to ga guard the men at work following a warning issued by general Mansion. Attorney general Darger declared no move to ask injunctions will be made untill overacts on the part of the foe will again be committed. General Heart Walker of the Abbiesannian Federation of War issued the following statement the time when he heard of Carbondaler;;

''What has happened at Carbondaler is indeed deplorable. Organized christian armies are usually against the use of physical force in the adjustment of desputes but when it cannot be avoided of course it cannot. However it is these wicked forces of creed that profetesered so shamelessly during the beginning of the war on thecside of the Glandelinians by means of Child Slavery and who are at the present time so brutally and mercilessly trying to crush all Christianiaty so they may exploit Child Slavery worse than ever and as they see fit, particulary those horrible child slaveries and the elements they represent in industrial and other works that have created the feeling of suspicion, distrust, bitterness, and harted that is responsible for acts of this character.''

General Estonia Folinia in a statement also declared;
The Angelinian aurthoritiss or even the generals under Mansion are not to any degree responsible for the unfortunate occurances at Carbondaler. Sinister influences had been at work among the Angelinian rebels to incite and inflame the spirit of violence. Armies already have employed scores of thousands of detectives to act as spies.''

Accusing general Lewiser of making idle and indefinite allegations, general Hammond cal called upon him to prove conditions of christi n christians armies depended on their ability to prevent turmoil. During that time the last three mines were being laid in galleries under guards of soldiers acting as sentries. Fifteen guards were stationed at each mine gallery under orders from general Dante Adamms to shoot propwlr prowlers when necessary but to shoot to kill.

MOBOLIZE IO,000,000 TROOPS NEAR VIVIAN WICKEY IN NORTHEAST. TWO HUNDRED THOUSAND DIE IN FIGHT ATLAGONIA.

General Mansion later in August authorized general Young Turner to mobolize IO,00,000 IO,000,000 of his troops take it from the right grand division to assist him to preserve order in connection with the seige declaring battles are raging too soon and that something must be down to concentrate strong enough to prevent the enemy from making desperate sorties any more. The general acted following an attack upon christian troops near Laconin in which part of the battle raged through the town and along stretches of railroad tracks, among and inside cars and coaches and on top of long coal piles and wood piles and high embankments and bridges a roaring battle line seventeen miles long but nevertheless not quite so violent as Carbondaler. ome of the attacks raged on the street when a mob of landelinians entering the town attacked a street car carrying christian soldiers in which many glandelinians were killed. The mob of landelinians stopped the fleeing-car, pulled off the trolly and swarmed aboard. Ten of the attacking party of glandelinians were killed by being shot as they crawled through the windows. A colonel and a hundred other landelinians were injute injured. The foe loss in the entire battle was two hundred thousand in killed and three million in wounded and prisoners. The christian loss was less being only half that number and they won the battle. All of the dead soldiers were indentifed however the aurthiroties said as zimmermannian troops. Twenty thousand prisoners charged with pae participating in a massacre in norma catherine when captured during the battle were not taken as prisoners of war but arrested as criminals and put into army prisons.

I75 EVICTIONS OF CHRISTIAN OFFICERS FROM NATIONAL GUARD.

PANDORA. CALVERINIA. AUGUST I2 TH. I9I2. Evictions of Angelinian officers from many National guard armies on account of insuf insufficient efforts to comply with orders and commands were going forth at the rate of seventy five to one hundred a day, according to a statement from army headquarters at Pandora. Thesecofficers mostly lieutenants and colonel and of other rank were being put out of their commands because of not understanding orders when given to them and so considered as unworthy to lead troops, and because they did not take sufif sufficient means to care for rvfuge refugees escaping from foe advances near neighboring towns.''The statement said. In many instances the fugitives had been living in tents on ground donated to them by troops of other commands. Where tents are not available they were living in barn loof lofts and such other shelters as could be found. In spite of this the reports indic indicated the whole region in southern Calverinia was still quiet, and there was little if any trouble. Also nearly one hundred glandelinians in a crowd that dared to make a demonstration at the H g Huges town were captured by attacking christian cavarly as they were returning through the streets. A number of rebels were found to have with them grenades and posion bombs. All were zimmermanniams. They were lodged in interment camps.

Last details of the d death march of prisoners and the massacre of prisoners by the Glandelinians a little beyond the battle field of Carbondaler were related by wounded christian soldiers in the hospitals by two of many survivors who on atretchers arived within the christian lines during-the day following the battle. gtill shaken by the horrors and cruelties of the glandelinians which they had indeed witnessed, but realixing that now within the christian lines they were safe, the two wounded Angelinians talked freely of their experiences with the Glandelimians while being prisoners. both the men Nero Planter, and Loi Louis Burnshine two serge nts of an Abyssinkilian squads who were sent down to the field of action with a division of Abbisannian troops by general Mansion attributed the facts that they were not murdered with many other prisoners by the wild savage Zimmermannians was a miracle.

Many soldiers during the action of the battle according to Nero who as not only a sergeant but also an expert cook and bakr Laker combined were refugeed in box and other frieght cars on side tracks near the Mc-Hollester and P ndora which ran through Carbondaler.

''Wednesday morning just before the outbreak of the battle one of our positionsc filled with inf n infantry troops and guardsc by artillery was shelled in a desultory manner by the enemy and then dynamated or mined.''Nero said''. nd in the afternoon I talked with one of my comrades about getting food and rice for the soldiers for supper..As i I left him the heavy firing of the smhs ambush part began and I seeing troops of glandelinians advancing tward pther sections of the christian lines ran to one of the cars and got the army waiters and dish wahsers and we all climbed into one of the steel cars. Many troops did the same. No doubt there werescores of thousands of other men hiding in all the other cars and all night long the wildest and heaviest firing of musketry and cannon, and the greatest roar of explosions I ever heard kept up and I fancied at least that the rebels were really winning the contest. Afterday break the next morningbefore the main four hours horror I heard that the rebels in Carbondaler had surrendered after they had been promished a safe conduct to the christian lines as prisoners of war from where they promished never to take part in the rebellion again. Of course we were not by no means near Carbondaler but in the path of the direct attack of the main body of Purgatorians army that morning. When the attack came like a tidal wave and before the enemy were repulsed we al in thU cars were either killed wounded or captured, and we happened to be captured by the dreaded Mc-Hollestinians and Zimmermannians, and yet we had no idea then that wecwere to be murdered, and believed positively what many of the Glandelinian officers told us. We were soon made to realize where we stood however for as soon as we had been captured and our fire arms had been taken from us the Glandelinians started abusing the Angelinian soldiers. Many were tied together, and beaten or slashed, others were knocked down and kicked by the Mc-Hollew tinians themselves.

Then what we call the death march started. Hered together as we thousands of prisoners were we were marched between five and eight miles through a number of small towns which were partically burning or had had been burned, in each of which the numbers of glandelinian soldiers were increased. Many of the Mc-Hollestinians and even the Zimmermannians were crazed with whiskey and moonshine and the abuses became more severe than ever. Hundreds of men were prodded with guns or bayonets to make them march faster. Others were struck in the faces by the rebels with the butts of revolvers, and when they fell to the ground they were roughlt rougaly dragged to their feet and made to continue the march. An Angelinian colu Colonel who was an Abyssinkilian by birth was at the head of the column of prisoners and he was the continual target for the blows of the glandelinian guards and soldiers. He was even beaten into i sensibility several times by the Mc-Hollestinians, and at last when another officer remonstrated with the rebels for their brutal attacks on the aged colonel he was taken from the line and shot to death by Omarians. Then we all begn began to realize what we were up against. Shortly afterwards the poor colonel was shot several times as he lay onthe ground but many witnesses had declared they thought the aged colonal had been beaten to death. Eventually Nero said the many thousands of captives were hered into an open spot near Sunbeam Creek and lined up against a long line of four strand wired fence while off to the right in a large e semicircle werea large number of the blue uniformed Mc-Hollewtinians armed with bayonets and rifles and looking pretty ugle ugly.

''We are going to give you christian dogs a chance.''Nero said the prisoners were told.''We are not going to hold you as prisoners as you are too many and are a trial on our hands.We are going to allow you thousands of christian dogs to climb or go through the wired fence and then make a run for it to the woods opposite.''

''But we never had the cnahce the survivor continued.''As ass as soon as the soldiers started for the fence other rebel soldiers from another direction coming up raised cain with the Mc-Hollestinians for allowing their prisoners to be free and started firing themselves and I saw many of my comrades hanging from the wires riddled with bullets, while in front of the fence was a pile of bodies, possibly many more. Nevertheless though the Omarians hollered for the rest of us to stop or be killed also I instead of obeying and instead of following the rest of the still fleeing numbers of fugitives dashed for a large clump of bushes a short distance to the rear of the fence his camp my cap being shot from my head as I divied into them. In the woods I found another of my comrades who was one of the Angelinian lieutenants. From his place of condealment Nero said that he saw the Omarians vegan a search for the sur vivors and cursing the Mc-Hollestinians in the meanwhile for letting us escape. He told how many of the wounded picked up by the Zimmermanniams were strung up to trees and their bodies riddled with bullwts, while the bodies of many of the dead were weighr weighed with rocks and tossed into the river. Eventually he and the lieutenant were found the former being struck across the face with a pistol as he was dragged from the bushes.

Then Nero to save himself from being murdered by the fierce Omarians thought up a trick even if he had to lie to escape. He asked if any of the crowd of Glandelinians was a member of a Secret Fraternal Order or Society to which I declared I belonged. Nero asked.''And when a little old fellow a Mc-Hollestinian stepped out I knowing the signs gave it to him. He then told the men that I was all right and then a few minutes later a couple of more Brothers of such a peculiar ociety turnedup. So fortunately under the escort of his Lodge Brothers Nero said that he and the lieutenant finally reached Carbondaler, from where they were released and took a wagon for the christian lines. Many of the other fugitives thus having been released by the Mc-Hollestinians also escaped by hiding in the bushes and in ravines so the fierce Omarians and Zimmermannians could not find them bu the enemy having overlooked them and under cover of the darkness they succeeded in reaching Carbondaler. The Angelinian rebels according to both Nero and the lieutenant were armed with every kind of conceivably weapon of war, carrying rifles, pistols bayonets, lances, butcher knives, razors and other kinds of firearms and eve pitchforks, shotguns, blunderbushes, muskets, and long barreled rifles.

''I even saw one colored Glandelinian sergeant wearing a tin hat like Happy Hooligan and carrying an old fashioned flint lock muzzle loading rifle.'' Nero Said.

Approxim approximately half of the number of christian wounded of the battle are owever still alive and have been accounted for. Of course a whole army of the men were wounded either seriously or slightly in the battle but made their escape from the scene of the battle roits, and many were already recovering and on their way to rejoin Mansions army once more. A war corresponfent who was an American by nationalty started to the scene of the battle three days after with the purpose of identifying the bodies of many of the slain and gai n faia g news of the w battle but upon reaching Carbondaler and making his mission known to some christian officers, was shown an outgoing train and told to make himself scarce. He returned to Pandora without any news obtained whatever.

While most of the mobolized Angelinian armies weepermitted to prepare for any needed avance tward Vivian Wickey they were nevertheless warned not to move too swiftly and that their generals were asked to be careful and watched all the movements of the Glandelinian armies known to be under general Stanck Furgatorian and the Manleys. Although general Hanson Vivian during the later part of the third week recieved a great number of communications assuring tbhim that the crisis in ''Bloody Vivian Wickey was probably passed for the time being nevertheless, and there was no need for the movement of immense troops to that country or part of the Calverin ian country, I00,000,000 fully equp equipped,well armed Abbiesannian, Angelinian, and consentinian soldiers were ready to move from Pandora, Angelinia Agatha, Dolerins Mc-Hollester and from Chign Chicago (Calverinia) at a moments notice as Hanson Vivian was not going to take any chances. e He felt sure it was only a lull and that if general Furgatorian saw the opportunity he would crash heavily upon general Mansions army in heavy force and rage a wilder battle than before and probably win in the bargian.Both General Stanclin Hunter who was sent into the regionvof V v Vivian Wickey a week before thevbattle to report on the conditions, and general Than Thaxtonia of general Williamsonias command had assured the governer general of Calverinia that the danger of fierce conflict in the region of Vivian Wickey had subsided that the rebels did not dare reattack ansins Mansions army after the bloodshd bloodshed at Angeline Run, but the executives recieved their reports without comment and refused to allow the mobolization order to be neglected. Indications were that he would hold all troops possible underarms untill he was certain there will be no further trouble and that Vivian Wickey would give in, and there were rumers that he would remove Hgunter and Thaxtonia, the former for not keeping him posted on the ap r approaching conditions of the Aronburg Situation, the latter for failing to preserve order. For many days the armore armoe armories of the christian nations werethe scenes of well organized activity as the troops from all divisions and armies were being equp equipped in conformity to the governer generals milatery orders. The draft bo ards of the country was succeeding in conscripting millions of men who were willing togo and there was not a slacker or deserter reported on the army or national list thanks to God for the willingness of the people to repel the invaders and his enmies enemies and help surpress and overthrow the wickedes of rebellions.

The order called for the mobolizarion of all men and boys of age enough to fight both of Calverinia, Angelinia, Abbiesannia, and the other Angelinian states, and already the entire one hundred and thirty second division, ten battalions of two Grand divisions both of Pandora, and the following divisions and I56 Infantry of the I1 II6th Division downstate, Division D. Battery C and all other companies and divisions were being prepared to move on the shortest notice. The one hundred and thirty second division began assembling at three thirty o-clock on the following Sunday Morning after orders having been recieved and sent out by Major general Hansonia Stanclin commanding fourteen machine gun dompanies. Major general

Joesph Hadleyton, General Joespeh E. Braddeytonia, and Major General Berthanna Dolana weresoon at many a m army barracks near Pandora and as thehundreds of thousands of dfrated men came in full of spirit and enthusiasms and eager to go to the field of action they w r were issued their full field equipment by their different companies. The majors captians, lieutenants, generals, colonels, lieutenants, and all other officers of high or low rank, and even non-commissioned officers most of them old men and veterans of the Glandico-Abbiesannian war of I84I set about equipping the conscripted men with clocklike regularty and were astonished at their extreme willingness to go and fight. While the drafted troops were being assembled call over the country and even in Angelinia and Abbiesannia, general In chief Swansonia with his plans and operation officers, had made arrangements of the transporstion of the immense seaof troops thus drafted. Many railroads not in the hands of the enemy yet promished to hold the necessary trains in readiness fri frieght and passenger. Many arrangements were also made with many surbaburan lines and local railroads and carlines and vagon road ways andother passageways of elev to elevated roads of big cities to take men to the scenes of army formations and to the depots of the big cities. General Hanson Vivian refused to comment upon the advises of general Thaxtonia and Hunter, and later one from major general Robert Medehiller dire cter of draft boards and the conscription that all was quiet now in the region of Vivian Wickey, but a member of Hansons friends and even his Wife and his sister In law attending a trial in Pandora at the time that''there was something rotton down there and that it would be unwise to refuse aid and armies to general Mansion..''

General Thaxtonia and general Hunter also communicated withgeneral Robert Vivian the generals telsgram stay stating that the situation at Vivian Wickey and with Mansions besieging armies were well in hand now. Coroners inquest not yet held. No need of troops. Mansion can take care of himself.''

This message was relayed to the governer general Hanson Vivian but during the meanwhile the general in chief of the christian armies recieved more than fifty thousand telsgrams all of which he could not read or have time to read, but mostly all of them or at least their senders urged h im i the name of God and His Blessed Mother and Humanity that immense armies of troops be held in readiness to be moved to any part of the troubled zone that the war seemed about to gain force and utmost ferocity, and that delay was dangerous. The murderous outrages alreasy known by Hanson to have occured in Norma Catherine had stirred the administration of Angelini Angelinia and Abbiesannia to a renewed effort to overthrow the rebellion of the southern Angelinian states. General Hanson Vivian himself and even governer general Robert Vivian following the cabinet consideration of the Vivian Wickey two months and a half e treme violence let it be known that the governments of Angelinia, Calverinia, and the other immense Angelinia st ates still loyal to God had taken new steps looking to the adjustment of the bloody rebellion, but just yet on account of fear of the Glandelinian spies he would not disclose the details. The ass ssionations in Vivian Wickey, espeically in Norma Catherine and Julio Callio general Hanson Vivian and many others greatly deplored. At the cabenit meetings which lasted for a week the disclosesure was made that all the Angelinian governments had no officla official reports of the awful occurances in Norma Catherine and even of the bloody Carbondaler battle, and the inquiries were sent out to many Federal aurthorities in the region of Vivian Wickey to make complete reports at once. There was little that governer general Hanson Vivian could do now to end the rebellion other than to persaude many men to join the ranks of the Nationals and also had persauded all the christian generals that could do so to come to Sacramento and hold with the Abbiesannian aorth aurthotir aurthories a conferecne. go far as can be learned the governer general Hanson Vivian had it was declared issued no such invitation forsuch a conferecj conference, but some of his advisers believe that many inquiries have been sent out immediately which may be leading to the early call of a joint con ference. Meanwhile now the summer was getying well along, and the situation of the rebellion was getting threatening now. something the Aurthorities of Angelinia and Abbiesannia insists must be done to bring it to an end as soon as possible as the tisup at Vivian Wickey was telling hard on all Christian nations of the world itself. ''The world department of war.''General Davis said'' Deeply deplores the violence of the enemy in and outside of Vivian Wickey. Many millions on both sides in the battle of Carbondaler had been killed injured or taken prisoners. The guilty Glandelinians also who had taken part in the ''Reign of Terror'' in Norma Catherine and Julio Callio and elsewhere should be proce prosecutes to the fullest extent of the laws of Angelinia. One of the unfortunate features of this most deldeplorable occurance is that the death of so many women and children of Norma Catherine and Julio Callio will accomplishing nothing in the direction of a settlement of the despute of Glandelinia and the Angelinian states. surely no better argument can be advanced for the settlement of these disputes around the conference of these National desputes around the conference table than the dead bodies of a score or more thousands of women and children who met a futile death in the fatal Norma Catherine and Julio Callio outbreak. surely in this civilized age matters of dispute between men of states and nations should be adjusted at least without bloodshed of innocent women and children....''

Eighteen officers, generals, colonels and other ranks and nearly 10,000 men on the foe side at the third week of the seige were literally blown to pieces by the gigantic explosion of a gigiantic mine set off by christian engineers with the purpose of attempting to wreck one of the sections of the Lucillie Erikson fortifications. The explosion also fired off a dump of shells . The bodies of many of the slain were found in the debris of the consconcrete walls of a fortress near where the mine explosion occured and practically all the clothing or uniforms were blown off the bodies of the soldiers. Fragments of stone, sticks and other materials blown by the explosion lof lodged in hundreds of thousands of trees, and housetops and houses of towns near its vinicity was demolished by the concussion. One of the first Glandelinian physicians and a general to arive on the scene of the disiaster was Dr G.Hanson Powad. Lifing a covering which had been placed over the many forms of dead soldiers he recognized the body of his son by means of bandages over his arm and leg having been wounded in the recent battle of Carn Carbondalar. He had not known his son was in the army. Many bodies of the dead soldiers were found apparently at places near where they had been concentrating when the blast came. Near them lay fragments of thousands of trees. Many great slabs of stones and boulders and every barracks near by were blown to bits, and trees by the sections were torn from the ground as if swept by a tornado. Many concrete houses near the scene of the explosion had been reduced to mere powder by the cons concussion..Presence of the thick concrete and iron walls of the fortress nehind the mine explosion general Furgatorian declared threw the force of the explosion forward a directly against the trench full of troops and officers, almost as if they had been standing directly in the path of an annihilating fire from n machine guns. The explosion had went off without the engineers of the Angelinians intending it to as it was not their purpose to explode the mine as it had not been finished. It had really went off accidentally.

General Furgatorian himself had declared that the mine experts had believed that the hot weather of the month had expanded the tremendous T.N.T of the mine charge wo which had made the mine especially susceptible to explosion from the slightest jar, and a jar would be needed to explode it. It was believed a tree blown down during a gale at the time of the explosion mat have jarred the explosiv -explosive underground and thus causeo caused the blast. Nearly fifty thousand Glandelinian soldiers were wounded seriously or slightly and many more were rendered senseless by the shock and ivian wickey had every window broken and the streets smashed with glass from the concussion. The concussion even stirred up a small tidal wave in the Norma Run iver. The earthshake of the concussion was felt plainly with considerable effects even in the christian lines, and big fires of great intensity and beyond control followed the explosion and the smoke looked as if a hundred volcanoes were in eruption.Those of the Angelinian engineers who had formed the mine that if officers were

THE FIERCE BATT LE AT APPLE ORCI PRCHID.

At the time general Good-Kings divisions came moving up with a great force of Abyssinkilians and Angelinians at the whole part of Shroeders force, the battle at once begal again being at first in series of s mall conflicts, and desultory, and soon became genera, once more and now raged with dreadful fury. General Delbies Glandelinians being also overwhelmed was compelled t o withdraw, while hearing the sound of more deadly conflict general Nancy Gap had also came up with great forces of men and artillery for the Glandelinians and tri ed with might and main to force a n passage in his own front moving heavy forces tward Gandandons engaged lines, and tward the main goal called Apple Orchid. Simultaneously general Beldier Shraeder had been engaging Mansion at different points along the Norma Run t o impress him with the idea that he was also attempting to force a passage, expecting the christians to break away from their own strong position to meet Shroeders daring and unexpected move, but Mansion was not to be cau^ tcaught in the trap laid for him as believed. Federal realizing that he was outwitt ed, and realized that the movement had caug caused a general engagement decided to follow at once, force a passage of the river and take the rout of which Shroeder had gone. As the Glandelinians reached Nancy Gapss army already fiercely and fearfully engaged, another force of christians approached from an opposite direction and here Federal saw an unassailable position. It being occupied with strong forces of art illery and infantry. Up to this moment Shroeder had recieved report s from Federal at regular intervals assuring him of his successful operations of bringing on the engagements and of his confic confidence in his ability t o baffle all efforts of the Angelinians till he should reach them. T his sudden interposition of a force along this river indicted a purpose on the part of the christians to hold Shroeders Glandelinians in check while overwhelming forces were being brought against him. This had placd placed both Federals and Shroeders c forces in a desperate situation and also condition for they were within relieving distance and must adopt prompt measures thathat would burst through all opposition.

A mile north was Glandons ridge and it was necessary to get possessiin of this low line of hills in advance of the christians in order to have the vantage ground for a flank movement at the same time they forced their way in foot paths over the low ridge. General Kyded moved for the ridge and came within sight of it at seven o-clock in the morning. They had no trouble in getting to it, and giv believing that the christians had given up the east side of the Run and were many mi miles in advance of the Glands i Glandelinians moving in the direction of Apple Orchid, they continued on while other forces marched liesure ly to unite his forces on Apple Orchid plains, but as they started to move up this seemingly unoccupied ridge, it suddenly seemed to be swept by sheets of flame, there came the murderous roar of hundreds of cannon at one discharge, followed almost instantly by a deadly dreadful crash of musketry, and one whole wave of the unsuspecting Glandelinians went down in mangled and dead. For a time all was disorder, but the remainder by the desperation of their commanders were rallied the panic being stopped, and on up to the ridge rushed the Glandelinians with fierce yells. Their officers allowed the Glandelinians to take their natural swing under the inamation of the impending battle.

As the sj surviving Columns continued up the ridges the cannon fire again broke out with a most horrible reverbrating roar and down went the Glandelinian platoons by hundreds. The general battle of Apple Orchid was now raging in full force and fury. Approaching general Gainstows divisions those under Fii Flieshead filed off to the left and soon came in s ight of the Angelinian troops on the summit, and made one desperate assault aft er another finally carrying the ridge but losing eighty thousand for their pains. Their line of march had brought the in on the left andr rear of the Angelinians, and thus they were not able t o hold the ridge though they gave fierce resistance for three hours and had sustained five great bloody onslaughts.

Mansion seeing the fierce resistance made by his Angelinians and of the furious attack by Federals men immediately threw forward one million two hundred and seventy thousand men who swarmed through the orchards in a long thick line line yelling like fiends. The Glandelinians however were coming on not checked. Kydeds, Warrington, and Bristols forces stormed Good-kings purple and redlines but the gray lines were held in check, and soon driven back, though ad m amid the frightful carnage Good-king had fallen mortally wounded, while generals Kydid, Bristol and Warringt on had also been wounded. But yet this was only the beginning of the great struggle. Aft er the Glandelinians who had lost t heir three commanders retired, Federal who alone attacked was suddenly reinforced by three hundred thousand more, and resumed the fierce assault upon the leaderless christians. The Angelinians quickly supported by seven brigades of Abyss inkilians met the enemys terrific onset-with merl merciless fury, mowing their ranks down frightfully, but the Glandelinians only recoiled a short distance only to rally and again resume the fierce assault once more, while now simultaneously an assault of equal fury was made on the center of Mansions lines, the Glandelinians swarming across Apple Orchard plains in a long perfect wave thicker than could be belisved and never before did they yell so fiercely. Imagine a thick crowd before a great place demonstration in mob numbers andt to see large gaps or lanes torn through them. All the christian artillery was trained upon them and five hundred cannon and hundreds of thousands of firearms mowed them down in multitudes. Despite this heavy art illery fire, and their men being mowed down so frightfully t housands aft er thousands only came on anew and flung themselves with all their force and ferocity upon the christian lines.

The carnage now was more horrible. Regiments were literally wiped out on the side of the enemy but the survivors only came on as fast as those in front were mowed down, but for a time their assault seemed useless.The christian line only remained as firm as a line of rocks, and soon I,900,000 fresh troops of Angelinians came up and the assailants were driven back with still more frightful loss. However it was not general Federal who was driven back, but other divisions of the foe, because as we will read, wicked as this Glandelinian general showed himself later on in the war he was a general never to be beaten, and it was he who won this battle for the wicked Glandelinians. Only his timely death in the third year of the war saved the christian nation. Federal seeing the columns retiring, became furious and also much alarmed and did all his bewt to rally them amid the dreadful carnage, and he threw forward fifteen fearful charges in quick suce succession the Glandelinians time and again rushing forward with fixed bayonets, and Finally Mansions center was broken up and forced to retreat to the rear. Mansion was now in danger for the most important part of i his line had been driven and rolled up.

In the meantime general Crainer met three fierce attacks made by the Glandelinians under generao -Victorian. The first attack was made by one hundred and seventy thousand Glandelinians under general Aberdeen Shroederins, and Cannie Shroeder. Crainers forces of christ ians numbered about five hundred thousand men including seven hundred and ninty officers and the general, confident of his strong numbers told his men to hold firm against the Glandelinians as they overwhelmed them, but the wicked Glandelinians being Zimmermannians proved that numbers did not always make the success. The attack of the Glandelinians was so fierce that the christian divisions suffered fearfully from their losses withered before the enemys musketry fire, and gave way retreating clear through the orchards persued by the enemy. By their bravery the christian officers managed t o check the panic mo among their divisions and reinforced by one hundred and fifty thousand more only retreated slowly before the advancing foe untill their retreat was checked by a strong solid wall of Abyssinkilians under Ant onio Vivianda.

On came the enemy, the divisions under generals D oristineans, Gingersnap, Ryan Stanck, and Hanson Kauffmann, being the fi rst to reach Craniers rallied divisions. The christian line blazed with the roar of hell, and nearly two quarters of Kauffmanns divisions disolved before the terrific sea of musket ry fire of the Abyssinkilians, and D oristineans, and Ryians divisions coming up afterwards to also strike a telling blow were almost annihioated with their leaders mortally wounded. General Kauffmann was badly wounded but by sheer force of bravery he managed to bring back to the main line what was left of his force.

But on came Shroendinians main divisions of zimmermannians, backed by Victorians, but now the Abyssinkilians waited untill these came in closer and then cut them down with their storm of musket ry and drum drum of artille artillery, and as their ranks seemed to disolve by neary two thousand at once a part of their column withdrew, but reinforcements were ariving through the great storm, and aft er rallying the panic stricken Glandelinians they resumed the fierce attack driving in the right and center of the main Abyssinkilian forces. But the divisions under general Cranier johnst on having come up at the moment now rushed to their support, cut the enemys remaining forces to pieces and drove those under general Hennie back with the loss of twenty thousand in four minutes. But id did no good for the remainder again resumed the attack coming on with all their violence, the Abyssinkilians being I,200,000 strong and Cranier johnston had about two million one hundred and eighty thousand. Opposed to general Richard Kauffmannia was a force of 3,280,000 to that of his own one million one hundred thousand. He was indeed mb met with terrific fury. His front lines disolved before the terrific destructive fire of the Abyss inkilians as his men rushed forward madly, and the fire of the other forces tore his main line through like a comb, and now for a few minutes there was con ffusion among the Glandelinians and they retired, but Kauffmannia seeing that Federal far to his right was again becoming successful, encourgned his own men with the words of success, and again they pushed forward only to meet the same deadly fire and this time added by artillery of the worse dew description. But the survivors did not hesitate this time, but swept up to the very muzzles of the Abyssinkilia cannoj cannon and pressed the whole line back cpt capturing all the art illery and driving the christians back in the greatest confusion. Simultaneously back were pressed Cranier johnst ons Abyssinkilians also, but forward under clouds of dust and s moke they surged again, and then their leader went down mortally wounded as well as general violet vivian on the side of the Glandelinians .

The other christian divisions seeing the sad plight and dangerous s ituat ion of the Abyssinkilians poured in a most galling fire of-gathling guns into the Glandelinian columns/ and for nearly tn minutes the Glandelinians were driven into a panic,and the Angelinians taking advantage of it added their fire with musket ry and then counter charged, and so intermingled were the Glandelinians with the Angelinians thwy s urged upon first that the clash had the pressure of the counter tackle in a million foot ball games at once and the christian line was crushed down before the pressure of the foss attack, and before the mistake was known the Glandelinians realizing the chance had rallied and crashed down upon the surviving christians carrying all before them capturing these guns and twenty thousand prisoners.

But in all this carnage general Ant onio vivianda was killed, and Cranier on the is side of the christians also while general Violetianda on the side of the Glandelinian army lost every horse he had procured during this bloody hammering charge every one being shot as fas t as he mounted it.The two lines had come t ogether with the same horrible results as two tin trains.

Over this the whole army of Abyssinkilians was demorilized and quickly withdrew hotly persued by the advancing enemy. The Abyssinkilians had been pressed back for a mile coming suddenly upon the approach of general Roswell Johnsons Abyssinkilians, while at the same time T ony Senguine came hurrying on with his main force of two million. Abyssinkilians and such fearful numbers soon checked the headlong advance of the enemy.

The Glandelinians during the highest fury of the attack were filling the air with the most fearful t umults ever heard their devilish yelling make making a most heartrending and bloodcurdling ye noise that the christ ians ever heard. The Goandelinians did not know of the death of their general Kauffmannia untill they found him missing. But under such circ circumstances and for unknown reasons though confused as they were the Glandelinians were unable to retreat or halt as they were too overwhelmed with animation and excitement, being perfectly devoid of any fear whatever, and they stormed the overwhelming christian lines with more tremendous fury than they had attacked the others the firing now roaring like a hundred thousand cannon.

The Glandelinian columns ploughed through and through were badly cut up and angled but on the survivors swept and surged upon Tony Senguines lines driv ing back a part of his force of stubborn defenders, and pushing forward like an avalanch. Federal also despite the overwhelming odds against him was having far greater advantage but at a dear cost. Scores of thousands of his best men and hundreds of officers of all rank had been mowed down, and T ony Senguine was himself badly wounded, but he was able for a time to retain his own command and tried all his best to force out the Glandelinians from his position they had captured, but of all the fury of the storming counter assaults the Angelinians and Abyssinkilians were just as well off as if they would run through a gigantic lawn mow when it was spinning millions of revolutions a second. It was nine o-clock by now since the frightful carnage began and the assault of theenemy having already lasted four hours , and a half in series of attacks never slackened and Mansion saw surely that he was on the losing side.The christians on the part of T ony Senguines driven corps tried again and again to rod recover their lost position but in vain and were only mowed down in thousands every times and with scores of their leaders simultaneously. General Kauffmass es divisions which had also carried all before them were checked by this time though both sides for an hour had charged to and fro delivering volleys by the thousand each second, and sla slaughtering each other in numbers beyond anything imaginable. The main christian batteries sent by Bunte were now run into place and a very storm of sh ells at the rate of fifty thousand shots per minute cut the the Glandelinian divisions to pieces. Men and horses went down in the most frightful numbers , bullets as in other battles made hickory out of thousands of trees per hour and now the Angelinian gunners, and infantry defending the guns had to edge away from the works which were shot to pieces by the hail of bullets from the enemys musketry, which threatened them with annihilation.

At the same time a force of Abyssinkilians under Beppo Casine came dashing up from the rear with more artillery and these were run forward and opened upon the enemy with double charges of canister at short range. Then a cavarly force came up and charged the foe the carnage increasing beyond describing. Though they were mowedcoown in numbers too horrible to relate the survivors under cover of the dense smoke of musketry and cannon dashed forward again and again and finally surged among the christians firing their muskets and pistols point ba blank and using their s muskets and pikes and with murderous effects.

The Angelinian gunners despite this tumult of hell and its legion stuck to the guns amid the inferno untill not one of them remained alive. The horses had been all mowed down and the guns themselves were disabled by the rain of bullet s, and nearly a thousand poor horses could be counted in one space of one hundred yards all in a windrow and all riddled with their intestines ex exposed.All around these horses lay immense piles and windrows of the dead and wounded, and even on t top of them. Four times the christian works had been taken and retaken untill they them selves became a long windrow of dead, and the ground was completd completely soaked with bleod.

Despite the fury of the glandelinian onslaught the Angelinians were like leeches in sticking to their las last line of positions and kep up such a horrible fire of musketry and artillery that soon their own dead and wounded lay in many thousands on the other sides of the works. Indeed here they seemed to be finally checksd. However general federal was bound to take this position at all hazardous risks and moving great columns forward made the carnage so dreadful that it was never forgotten not even by himself. In parallel lines the christians sprang forward by hundreds of thousands to meet them, and from every tree, and bush, fences and stone walls and shurbbery they kept up a horrible insd ins edious withering st orm of musketry which filled the scene so full of smoke that it resembled the approach of some great forest fire, and in the way the gray columns melted into fragments was so terrible that it horrified the christian leadwrs leaders themselves and almost made them wish that their main commanders w u would allow them to retreat so that the horrible battle would cease no ma no matter how it t urned out. Mansion declared that it seemed far worse than any struggle he had ever heard of. Hundreds of fences were cut and hacked so badly by bullets that they gave way from their posts and this only gave the enemy more chance to po ur in their deadly musketry fire upon the christians. Beppo had fallen, two d thirds of his division had been killed and wounded. The disabled artillery itself was scratched by shell fragments and the wheels fairly splintered. Four hours the enemy kept up their furious onslaughts, the glandelinian commanders at t imes commanding their men to lie down and to keep firing for all their energy between pauses of the charges, for they were bound to see to it that the christians were driven back if possible. The glandelinians obeyed lying close to the windrows of dead formed by their own-lls losses during the terrific charges, and soon the dead and wounded glandelinians became three or four deep. Thousands upon thousands had alr already fallen on the christian side itself t he Angelinians having been mowed down frightfully and as fast as thousands of others took their places they only seemed t o disolve away despite the seem ingly protection which the works and windrows od of dead afforded them.

The sun through the thick haze of smoke shone with a d dreary light on the large field of slaughter, and showed more plainly what terrific havochad been wrought on both sides.

Along the main center the Glandelinians were assaulting with all their main fury, b but at other points of the line they were at a standstill, while at other points of the line the christians had been able to adfance themselves Federal being amazed at the stubborn determination of the Abyssinkilians but nevertheless though his columns were retiring at many points he was still more determined to capture these positions. It wa was now ten o-clock. F Federal immediately withdrew those of the divisions which had alrsady been crushed and mangled, and also those being hard pressed g by the christians, and still keepi ng the divisions under Shroeder r to watch the movements of the christ ians, he a appealed to general John Manley saying that he was overwhelmed. and not able to win unless he was heavily reinforced. Shroeder resumed his own assault sweeping forward upon the christ ians once more and from everything of defense for the christians a new and mue murd murderous fire was poured upon the christians/ and though stagge star staggered by the stubborn resistance they only res umed the attack again with all their fury.At one point of the line the assault was so fierce that at this point the christian line was bended and broken despite that they tri ed to hold firm, expecting reinforcements, but soon they had to give way for they could hold out no longer. Kennith Biters glandelinians had by this time made fierce and bloody demonstrations against Mansions left, and so fis fierce was the christian fire at this point that three times the Angelinians used hundreds of rounds of ammunition, and also about one hour of this kind of fighting brought on the deat h of general Ritter. General Kennith Biter himself fell mortally wounded. The death and wounding of their leaders demorilized the glandelinians and they slowly withdrew from the attack though other divisions immediately took their places, and so the transformation of armies and divisions kept on the series of onslaughts against the christian line without intermission, and now as Federal threw forward two immense fresh divisions against the point where he had been forced to withdraw the others, the battle increased with te redoubled fury and simultaneously gens general Kithnough brought forward one hundred thousand glandelinians and threw these forward to the aid of the other assail ants, and now again it seemed as if Mansions whole line was in danger of being crushed to fragments. General T ony Senguine though wounded twice had pushed forward his entire army to Mansions support and he led led I,500,000 men ten times in fierce and success ive onslaughts but had lost fourty thousand each t ime making the total altogether as much as four hundred thousand.

On account of the main line of Abyssinkilians however the enemy failed t o make furt her impression on the christian line, the Abyssinkilians holding their ground against every effort of the enemy, and charging them selves at every repulse they inflicted but nevertheless Mansions line was already terribly thinned, and general Edition whose men was opposing genseral Federals right own center wi with all their strength was injured and his own divisions threatened with annihilation.

Ga General Arsourys glandelinians about five hundred and fifty thousand in number had come within range of t a parto of the christian line under the command of general john Chaplin, but they disolved in regiments like snow before a fire, and the only more handful of survivors about fifty thousand under a murderous fire from the Angelinians who counter charged them were compelled to flse or be annihilated.

A litt le time after general Howsens glandelinians had moved forward at Federals command and soon division after division came to the support of the retiring Glandelinians, then forward it swept again against Mansions line with such force that the whole of it was compelled to give way, and so within three hours more of desperate fighting Mansions whole line was completely rolled up and driven completely from the field. T he Abyssinkilians under Senguine st ill held firm and being in stronger numbers than Mansion was able to give his assailants once more the warmest reci reception they ever had. Federal now saw that if he could force Senguines Abyssinkilians he could st rike successfully against Bunte also and the day would then be won. However determined to try his luck Federal decided to push hu his whole column on and did so ordering their commanders not to make an inch of stopping. Federals right center however by their losses had been crushed during the recent struggle, and so he had to reinforce it, and also deployed I80,000 cavarly to move far in the advance. Senguine saw by this move that Federal meant a terrific demonstration of all his troops, and so he ordered his troops to reserve h their fire untill the enemy came within the closest range possible, and then to fire simultaneously all along the line. The enemy were now again pressing forward in the heq heavis heaviest columns they could deploy, and suddenly yelling in one voice, and tearing the air wit h the din of their yeo ling they made one suddenh headlong rush.

T here was a blaze of musketry sounding like a sudden explosion of a million cannon, but so unexpex unexpected and furious had been the rush that only IO,000 Glandelinians fe ll, all only wounded,, and the rest of the survivors had swarmed over the entire line of wor s works before a single cannon could be fired, and back were thrown the whole line of A Abyssinkilians with their main leader seriously and dangerously wounded.In vain the brave Abyssinkilians tried to resist the the assailants but the glandelinians pressed on with irrestible force and to add to their discomfiture all the captured cannon were trained upon the Abyssinkilians and so appalling became the carnage along their own lines that the survivors were driven int o confusion, and upon them pressed the Abyssinkilians once more in a vain endeavor to drive-back the foe engaging them in a fierce hand to hand fight . The remaining glandelinian leaders saw indeed that their men were contending against overwhelming numbers, and seeing their men cut down and desciminated all along their whole line in the most frightful numbers, one after another was cœpelled to order a retreat and soon within another two hours the whole glandelinian force was again rolled up, but at still other points the glandelinians were still pressing on, and even reinforced by one hundred and ninty thousand more their advanxing lines extending many miles but their advance along this point was more slow now, and time and again those in the foremost ranks had come into hand to hand clashes with the Abyssinkilians, the resistance of the christians here being eqully as terrific as at other points. But now nevertheless so much reinforcements crowded to the assistance of the Abyssinkilians at this point that the line could not be forced.

The fighting at other portions of the line under Bel Benligan went on steadily, both sides using bayonets, pikes , sabres and clubbed muskets.They even fought hand to hand with pistol butt s, or wih fists a or even threw rocks at each other.

In the meantime things began to happen that told fearfully on rederal. He wished to crush Sengui ne be ore Bunte could arive to the rescue, but Bunte had gone on ahead of his porpose, and thos though he was too far away to immediately engage Federal he sent enough officers and troops to restore the line of Mansions army and t o reinforce Senguine, and in a few hours more the whole Abyssinkilian army was heavily reinforced, and had recieved thousands of rounds of ammunition, and thus reinforced the rallied christians again went at their assailants like tigers.At one point of their own line the Glandelinians had already recieved a stagh staggering blow the christian colu ns making a furious counter advan e advance. Seeing that most of the Angelinians and Abyssinkilians were coming on now instead of falling back as usual the Glandelinians took to their bayonets and held the christians in check for an hour with more terrific slaught er, while two christian divisions crushed to fragments , completely out of ammunition, and exhausted with their exertions and appalling losses were agd again compelled to withdraw their leaders general Henry Goodchild and Love Pies was severely wounded.

There were so many divisions being withdrawn by sheer force on account of their acute exg exhaustion from their exertions that it seemed an inviting point of the enemy to press their attack, but quickly fresh divisions were pushed into their places, and so the enemy though again they rr resumed the assault with redoubled fury, could not gain any headway at all, and only suffered i ntolerable loss es.

General Braggtongue had encountered some serious resistance and his whole assailing force was also fearfully desciminated while three hundred thousand Glandelinians under general Heehawand her name was maud also encountered an appalling fireof ten hundred gathling guns and he was mortally wounded while Braggtongue was killed. T he advance was altoget her too near the active lines of the christian reinforcements, for a long line of communi cations stretching in the rear and guarded against attack,s and just as many points had been wrested from the christians, but at every stage of advance there was furt her diminishing of the glandelinians from their frightful losses. Though checked at many points three hundred thousand five hundred other Glandelinians had advanced cautiously through the Apple Orchids, and as three large Angelinian divisions retired before their impetious advance, the Glandelinians here were met by a more fearful art illery fire from a long line of gathling guns, including four hundred Angelinian field piscos . Just at that time when the glandelinians were melting away in swarms general Logoe came up with a grea great force of men and opering with the Angelinians made a move to attack the Glandelinian flank. This caused these Glandelinians who suffered terribly to give up their furious advance and retire. The Abyssinkilian army would have advanced now that the foe was slowly retiring, but all the distant Glandelinian batteries were in spasmodic act ion and under the destructive fire the Abyssinkilian lines were galled frightfully and could not advance.

However Mansion seeing how things had turned decided to advance at all cost cot costs and to advance his whole three columns simultaneously if possible, a and to throw forward all his cavarly forces also. This terrific and bloody advance accompanied with the dashing cavarly forces was very swift pouring agi again through the orchards and striking the still resisting glandelinian divisions and driving them for some distance while a glandelinian cavarly force was encountered resulting in a fierce engagement at c close range and there was no more greater or splindid cavarly engagement seen though it re resulted favorably for the glandelinians.However the main line of the christian forces was not checked and they still pressed on in heavy masses moving in long lines. At the railroad station there were two columns of Angelinians under Delby but they were overcome by even a an inferior force and driven back with their leader slain, and many thousands of them were captured. Even six regiments of Angelinian cavarly were surrounded but after a gallent fight with the Glandelinians they managed t o cut their way out. Howev However now things were telling on the glandelinians for over 6,800,000 had fallen in the struggle on their side, the struggle having been most appalling, and was how positively raging at its highest fury! Many times divisions after divisions on the side of the glandelinians were withdrawn fro from exha e exhaustion.

However the glandelinians were just as determined as the christ ians and as they themselves were reinforced they pres sed forward once more against the advancing christians, the glandelinians once more proceeding on in their destructive onslaught with irrestible force and fury, destroy ing two lines of christians in the dreadful onset, and capturing many baggage wagons and ammunition. But the most of the Angelinian forces had massed in overwhelming numbers against the counter charging Glandelinians pouring in such a destructive fire as to make it impossible for the glandelinians to advance any further, though most of the frontal columns hw hewed their way through the christian lines, baoy bayonets and pikes being used so fiercely as to alp appear like two lines of abatis moving and pushing through one another and all mingled with dense clouds of smoke of all colors.

The Glandelinian army had been badly thinned out by their frightful losses, t but as a whole the Glandelinians could not advance any further though they made repeated onsets and in which ten generals not named were killed, and over twenty wounded. One the side of the christians general Beppo Evans came dashing up and cried;

"General Mansion, a large force of Glandelinians have come down by rail and are decending upon our flank."

The news was true. A heavy force of Glandelinians under general Cotton-Loom had advanced upon the flank of the christian lines and assaulted it with all their fury driving it into confusion. The enemy in the front in a few hours soon realized this and crushed down upon the Angelinians and Abyssinkilians with all their fury crushing many of the main christian columns topo pieces piecos.The counter advance of the enemy was so fierce that it drove the christians upon the bayonets of their assailants in their rear, who in turn drove them back upon the bayonets of those in front.Placed between two fires the Angelinians alone were driven into a stap stampede but yet Mansion and Senguine by their bravery crowded five hundred thousand Aby ssinkilians in long lines steming the threatening rout and rallying the Angelinians giving the foe fierce resistance from both s ides. However the battle so hard fought by Mansion sad to say had been lost and poor Mansion suffered a c crushing defeat.If it had not been for the assault on the flank Mansion could have held on in his own ass ault, but he with tears in his eyes ordered a t retreat tward Gandandonia his own main position followed closely by the victorous foe under general Raymond Richard son Federal.Senguine however was a different man than Mansion and showed the enemy that it would take more than five times their number to drive him back.This he proved and when night came on he was still master of the field. THE was even still in possession of two lines of Federals works and having capt ured over IT I00,000 prisoners and general Shroeder among them. This battle had raged for twelve hours the losses in the struggle being I,497,999 on the christian side while the glandelinian losses in total were not predicted though it was over eight million no doubt because they had exposed themselves so terribly. Violet and her sisters who were with Mansion marched with him and did all their best to console him in his grief.Their own eyes were dimmed with tears as Mansions army headed for the rear of his works at Gandanonia depressed by the thought of voot ory that might have been.The whole army was in absolute sorrow.And millions of the forlorn soldiers could hardly see on account of their eyes brimming with tears and forced to leave such a sea of their dead and wounded behind in the hands of the enemy and having suffered such heavy losses for nothing and beaten as it seemed by a wicked nation.

But the enemy did not win the battle by all means.Manson was defeated, but Senguine the main christian commander had held his ground to the last.So it was merely a drawn battle, and though the christians did not succeed in breaking the Julo Callio horror, or prevating general Federal from escaping the clutches of general Senguines army general Senguine nevertheless was on only waiting for reinforcements and he decided to start a general seige.He wo would not leave his point by all means, and when Federal stopped advanc ing, Manson was by some means able to recover from his serious defeat and the next day was able to recieve reinforcements from general Blansco and advanced rapidly to reinforce general Senguine.

It took Manson some days before he arived as he was fiercely opposed by Federals now retreating army, but nevertheless he arived and when other armies came a concentration was commenced and soon Julo Callio and Norma wa were under a seige and a cont inual shell fire.

However general Manson and Vivian needed these two commanders elsewhere, and they were ordered to immediately take command of other christian armies, while Manson rushed two new leaders, and larger armies to take command of the seige which general Senguine had begun.General Manson taking command of an army formly under general Banders was ordered to march tward gackletonia, and after he arived there to move on and oppose the enemy at Bells.Manson indeed started his advance with the new armies, and Senguine aiding him moved forward tward gackleton. T The There were two large Glandelinian armies here without leaders and Manley was compelled to order general Raymond Ri Richardson Federal to march to these armies, reinforce them and take personal command.

The attacks of the christians it is true had been held off at Apple Orchard or Angeline Run, and other battles but nevertheless these slight defeats to the christians were really a dreaded menance to the enemy. The Glandelinian armies at Julo Callio and Norma were besieged, Manson an Vivian and his brother general Robert Vivian was advancing more armies, and already both sides of the Normas Run was meshed in christian earth works and batteries firing on the city of julo Callio, and it was evident that now no efforts would ever break the seige.The enemy had captured julo Callio and Norma it is true, but it was worse for them than the christians for the enemy had ran into a dreadful trap, in which there was no escape.

Manley at the approach of general Mansons army had fled alone from Norma leaving the Glandelinian armies to oppose the christians leaderless and it was only by the prompt arival of Federal who took personal command that saved the Glandelinian army from destruction by Mansons and Senguines army at Angeline Run.

Manleys escuse was that he had done this to bring on another army to opp oppose them and general John Manley himself accused his Son in Law for desertion of the Glandelinian army in time of war, and within two weeks after general Jack Manley was relieved of his command; and federal placed generally in his stead. John Manley had r remained at julo Callio and Norma at this time, and seeing it possible to get away he did so with some of his followers by making a desperate attack on a weak point of the be siegers, and succeeded but the main army found escape impossible and so after the disgraceful discharge of his son in lo law general john Manley h hastened to Violet Paul to bring up reinforcements before any of the christian armies could oppose him.

Manson avanced to violet Paul, and met the Glandelinian armies once more and a terrible battle ensued. The Glandelinians had attacked the christians most desperately, and raged the assault for a whole day but met frightful descimination, and general germanias christian troops coming up banged the enemys lines to pieces, and threw back their columns, and when several forces of Glandelinians tried to rally general Francis Manson on the enemys side fell mortally wounded. Five more days the battle raged with dreadful fury, and the enemy tried every means to back back the christians but found it most difficult as the christian troops only counter attacked and drove the Glandelinians clar across the Norma's Run, and held the foe back from the other points, and then routed the enemy terribly. The battle of Apple Orchd was continued no doubt at this point after a lull of a few days, with advances only and skirmishes but nevertheless the clash was more severe this time and had e exacted a total loss on both sides that was shocking. The whole battle had already raged six days and the total losses counting the other days of fighting along the Angeline Run amounted now up to nearly esoven million.

THE FIERCE FIGHTING AT VIOLET PAUL, AND VIOLENT LANSIN. THE BLOODY SEIGE OF GLORINIA. THE HORRORS GERTRUDE ANGELINE WITNESSED. THE FRIGHTFUL CARNAGE AT GLORINIA ,AND THE DEATH OF GENERALHENDERSON.....

Violet despite the slight injuries she had recieved on account of the slide of rocks caused by the shell had also recieved a shot in g the arm, Joice had a bandage around her fiar head, and Jennios army was in a sling.The situation was maddening. There was no joyful music now but sad songs and slow marching tward Norma Catherine. It wa sad to see the sorrowful down cast faces.As the small portion of the christian line at Gandonia was reached it was found to have been sacked and burned by the retreating Glandelinians, and that the city was already a furnace of flames and the fire ps spreading far beyond control, a worse scene than the burning of Pullaway. The total losses of the christians in the battle was believed to be 8,661,131 in killed and wounds. The enemys total loss was 9,582,983. in killed and wounded, and over twom more million in prisoners. However though general Hanson had been defeated general Federal and Manley had the main armies under general Bunte to contend with and general Germaine Vivians and his brothers also and these two forces were three times the size of Hansions singly. Bunte realized the disaster along Hansions lines, and so made as if you throw in a severe offensive movement and rushed a force of great size to threaten the point of Norma called Tericia, and here a new long line of battle was formed in the night and Norma Catherine was now actually besieged beside the defeat of Hansion.

At the very first of the struggle on the morning of July 30th which o consisted as the battle of Tericia saw general Germaine Vivian one of the main christian generals and higher t in officership than even his own father desperately wounded, and he was borne from the field covered with blood. The losses of h s his dovisions was fearful. He was the third son of general Vivian and brother of Jimmie Vivian equal in rank, and also the brother of Germania Vivian on the side of the foe. The destructive boast of this des erate battle seemed to have withered the face of nature for thirty miles, and no telling what would have happened had it continued any longer. As the Angelinian batt eries numbering hundreds of cannon were in action hundreds of shells would explode with deafening earsplitting crashes, smash ing the cannons they struck to pieces and killing many. Gens General Jimmie Vivian another brother of general Vivians son was also desperately wounded and supported on either side by two generals and the both of them were forced to seek refuge for an hour from the furiously advancing enemy. He had been wounded while reconnoitering on the enemy, and even after they left the swamp thinking themselves safe another hail of shells immediately exploded with earsplitting detonations near the fugitives as they passed an uprooted tree and after finding they were closely persued by a detatchment of Glandelinian soldiers. Their situation was als almost as desperate as their irretrievable fortunes of their cause. General Cannon was also one with the armies with these two and as he was restoring his torn and broken line he recieved a serious wound in the head as his men contested every inch of ground, and all the Angelinians of the three divisions however were not driven back could not be driven back and they tore the enemys lines down completely for every charge they made killing and h wounding a hundred thousad thousand for every attack untill the enemys losses was so dreadfull that they were literally frightened.

"We cannot spare Cannon from the ranks and neither the two sons of general Vivian either" Was their battle cry. "Down with the Glandelinian butchers.To hell with them.Give them no quarter."

"Counter charge them and win." Gloriously shouted Cannon despite the wound in his head. "The battle is to the brave and not to the strong my brave boys."

His army of Angelinians seemed in dang er of being surrounded by the advancing Glandelinians but they fought with the fury of tigers untill the last drop of blood was shed on the enemys side and many fell with their faces to the christians. It was in vain to drive them back. A new detatchment of Angelinians outnumbering the foe ten to one and as they fell back the Glandelinians ria raised their guns and fired volley after volley, and an

and an Angelinian officer bravely facing the foe with up lifted sabre clasped his hand to his brast breast and fell mortally wounded his privates falling by scores of hundreds. In the meantime Gannon had escaped with the Glandelinians in hot persuit and had finally reached an old house where a kind old lady managed t o help him into a hiding place behind a secret panel door.In burst the Glandelinians and began to search the house with the offi cord prodding the walls with their bayonet in quest of some secret hiding place.Suddenly some more Angelinians had approached by a different rout and attacked the Glandelinians in the rear rear. A Glandelinian officer drew his sabre and attacked an Angelinian lieutenant with a ferocity of a t iger defending the cubs.

He was driving the Angelinian all over the lane beating down his defense when another officer withmore Angelinians came dashing up, dismounted and parried his weapon with his own d sabre. The Glandelinian was now surround ed by purple coats and the lieutenant of the Angelinians r remained, and the Glandelinian instead of being a combatant was made a prisoner. The Glandelinian bowed his head in bitterness and yeilded his sabre as gravely as if surrendering an army corps. When general Schiller came to view and tended to Germaines serious wounds and learned of Gannons danger and that a woman who had befriended him was in the hands of the enemy his revengeful passion was fearful to behold. The grizzled warrior raised his sabre in fierce resentment and his eyes glowed with settled hatred as he exclaimed;

"May Almighty God strike me dead when ever I dare to bow to the flag of Glandelinia."

He at once threw one million men against the foe and defeated them with such dreadful slaughter that they fled in frightful panic tward Violet Paul twelve miles south of Buntes lines along the Norma Run, and here a new seige began. The seige lasted three days, then terminated in another terrific batt le as the enemy made a desperate assault to raise the seige. General Bernard Baldwin endeavored with Schiller to get a force of one hundred ninty thousand men to carry Nandons hills and this counter onslaught was made under a hot fire from the Glandelinian batteries, which mowed the christians down in masbers beyond des rdescrin r describing. They succeeded in carrying the hills and by crossing the north face of Logans Ferry under a furious gunnery came into Velous plains held by one hundred seventy thousand Glandelinians, and in the rear were four hundred cannon. After two hours of most bloody fighting surpassing the three days Gettysburg the Angelinians also mag managed to force the evacaution of the enemys position but the passage was a difficult one to make in the face of the enemys hot fire of batteries on hills bordering the wide plain with storming broad sides of shot and shell and the advantages, as well as disadvantages of this actioj action were well considered.The enemys heavy artillery fire consumed so much time as to lose the use of the Angelinian troops engaged in it at other points where they were most wanted. After reaching Pauls lane quite a formidable line of Omarian Curdes and Zimmermannians had to be forced before they could proceed in their advance. Thi s battle was quite a fierce one indeed, and the daring of the Glandelinians had become very tremendous. During the engagement large forces of Glandelinians uniformed as Angelinians made a headlong rush upon their assailants, and these Glandelinians as it appeared seemed unarmed, but most of them wore mats or small cloaks, or overcoats, and so it was very eas y to suspend short sabres or daggers or even u guns over the shoulders where it was hidden by their mats so that the whole party of Glandelinians who came among the Anfelinians apparently unarmed each man was in fact armed with the weap ons he most trusted. The plan persued was that in their rush the Glandelinians should mingle freely with the Angelinians untill each man was close to the Angelinian marked out as the c victims. The moment they rushed and mingled with the Angelinians the concealed weapons were snatch ed from beneath the mat and in a moment after there was horrible carnage, and terrific confusion. These Glandelinians even leaped among the other scores of thousands of Angelinians who were hastily approaching, dealing their blows right and left among them, and shooting , and cutting them down in frightful numbers..... Sergeant Baldwin himself was immediately surrounded by more than three hundred Glandelinians and before he was aware they had forwith made him and a good many other officers prisoners.

Indeed tremendous were the bawlings and screscreeching of the Glandelinians while they stamped in rage and brandished their weapons like real savages. One of their leaders, a colonel had surrounded Sergeant Baldwin with his fourty officers holding their pikes and bayonets to his breast, and his sides and the chief officer screamed in tones the most odiois odious and o horrifying: and deafening;

"We got some christian dogs and we will make them pay dearly for this cruel war on us."

Baldwin convinced that inevitable death was at hand decided to die hard and was about to show fifh fight, but the other forces of the christians having pressed back their assailants were advancing and coming to his aid and this caused the Glandelinians to become preternatually furious and demonical and two stalwart Glandelinians stopped up to the prisoners and with indescriable ferocity of aspect and look, and pinioned both his arms to his sides and bound them fast with strong cords, and no effort could be made to elude or resist the gigantic grasp, the Angelinians knowing that such would cause their threatened desc destruction.

Immediately another Glandelinian raised his sabre over Baldwins head and this ruffian looked with demon like eag erness tward the colonel for the signal to strike, and here it may be observed that our good readers can have no idea of the almost preternatural fury which these Glandelinians spoiled by wickedness can throw into their distorted countenances, and infuse into their deafening and appalling voices, when they are possessed by the legion fiend of rage, cupidity and ren revenge.

Each Glandelinian gave himself up to the excitement of the moment and dur ing their attack shouted , yelled, and screamed and brandished their weapons, soon being guided by a discipline and precision of drill to which that of all the tribes of savages in this world or our own was loose and irregular.Their greenish gray uniforms were smeared with foul smelling stuff and their faces were covered with scarlet ochre which made them look frightfully hodious?

Their nat urally passionate disposition was excited to the highest pitch and arranging themselves in lines nine deep near the almost amazed christian christians they cont orted their faces, and ttrust out their tongues tward the Angelinians whom they assaulted as an act of defiance, interspessing those horrible gestures with deafening oearsplitting shouts, yells and challenges to the Angelinians. Thechristian generals were all amazd amazed.

"What in the world had taken possession of the Glandelinians? What had happened? Had they gone mad, that they should act more like savage demons than men. Had they t urned cannibals, or Indians, or were their senses gone or were they de rived of the light of reason by God for their wickedness, and their butchery of children in Norma!"

So were the thoughts that passed through the minds of the christian officers as they watched this extraordinary scene. The Glandelinians began this hedious advance by rushing forward in perfect time with each other the vigor of their attack increasing with similar proportion.Suddenly with a most frightful demons like yell the whole body of Glandelinians rushed forward as if aduatedly one spirit and as they crashed into the christian line their feet seem to tramp the ground with the thud of some mighty engine and which made the earth trenble. Their terriblewar yell was again rais ed and in accordiance with its ry rhythm the Glandelinians pressed on with great force and the effsct of the bloody struggle upon the Glandelinians was extraordinary.

It seemed to make absolute maniacs out of them their whole nature being given up to the furious excitement of the moment. Their faces were frightfully cont orted, the magic influence of the battles roar affecting the assailants as strongly as if they were Macries close to the position of their own enemy or their fort rw ready for battle, and they became so furiously excited, and their faces became so horribly cont orted that they assumed absolute demoniacel expressions, and they became as danger ous as fiends. In a short time their measured force of rushes became so violent and their forward progress so powerful as they shouted the martial rhymes of their warsongs that they shook the ground beneath them with their rushing feet as if with blows of the battering ram, and some of the Glandelinian officers fearful less they should actually rush headlong into the main christian line and be too much overwhelmed, begged and commanded them t o desist. Their entreaties were in vain even if they were heard, though it was verl very likely in the their furious excitement the Glandelinians were deaf to every other sound except the blood curdling war song which they were yelling and singing at the very t op of their voices, and the attack proceeded to its point, and did not st op untill the assailants were quite w exhausted by their furious exertions and great losses, desisting only when compelled t o do so by overwhelming numbers being concentrated against them. While the Glandelinians were making this demon like charge the colonel had at first stood quietly by, but the influence of the battle was however to contageous to be resisted and rapidly extended itself to him.

Then the Glandelinians realizing that despite all their fury they could no not force back the christian line retreated with their prisoners t o a long fence lashed together so firmly that they were able t o resist any or dinary attack. Reaching the long fence the Glandelinians hatily threw out ang les to secure a flanking fire, and filling the frontal ground of the fences with trenches in which the defenders could lie secure from the fire of the Angelinians. Fearing the awful power of sh e,lls which might come from the christian batteries in case they repulsed the christ ian counter assaicants the Glandelinians hd recently constructed cross walls in the trenches which would not only guard them from the fr agments of the deadly shells but prevent an infilading fr fire from doing much damage.

Rifle pits were also constructed with singular inquenitey.

The reader will with pleasure remember the unfortunate buisness which soon came. When taken by storm these defenses of the Glandelinians seemed to be empty and deserted, the Glandelinians having apparently escaped, when they found the place no longer tenable. They had however laid a trap into whi which the christian assailants fell. When the Ang elinians had scatt ered themselves across this section in perfect swarms and miles long and were quite off their guard, picking up arms lying carelessly about, a terrific and murderous musket ry fire was opened from under their very feet, the Glandelinians having constructed pits into which they hid themselves untill the Angelinians were attracted within their range by the weapons and war implements which they had laid on purpose to act as a bait. The Angelinians who were entirely off their guard, and many of whom besides were raw recruits, were stricken with a panic, and with a few honerable except ions rushed out followed and cut down by the fire of the wily foe opening a withering storm of fire into the confused mass of ret reating christ ians.

Of course this repulse was but temporary but such a stratagem as this was sufficient to show the military genuis of the Glandelinians who if they became enemies, are enemies that cannot be despised by impunity. This system of taking the Angelinians by surprise was a mode of fighting by the Glandelinians who displayed wonderful engeniuty in conti contric contriving ab ambushes and enticing the Angelinians into them. When the christian assailans made another assault the struggle was fearful, and something like a terrible massacre ensued, for every Angelinian who got within range were shot down.When the christians were repulsed a second time nearly every man in the rear were killed, and many survivors were slain as they retreated.

While the third assault was in duration a buntch of children having hidd hidden among the Glandelinian sailants were discovered and the Glandelinians placed them in front so meet the fire of the advancing christians. This accomplished little for the Angelinians only continued on. The enemy seeing the charge unchecked this time opened fire with all their firearms.

The slaughter on this occasion was more terrible two thousand of the Angelinians being killed outright their bodies riddled by bul bullets, and the terrible scene kept on as the assaults continued, and the firing was continued untill fifty thousand more of the Angelinians had been mowed down. Yet heavily reinforced and recieving cannon they resumed the fierce attack upon the enemys position and recpatured sergeant Baldwin, the others having escaped.The surviving Glandelinians ret reated keeping up a heavy receding fire as they went. The battle was over ending as a sort of christian victory.So terrific was losses on both sides that it was withheld but the battle was considered more severe than any of the past ones.

ACTIONS AGAIN AT NORMA'S BRIDGE. THE RESULTS AUGUST 5TH ..

In the meantime the seige of Norma was progressing, and for two days while the battle was raging at the point called Violet Paul the christian main batteries under Bunte and Hansion were shelling the fortifications around Norma causing incapable damage. Being threatenined in the meantime by overwhel ming forces general Calmannia Shoemannia had withdrawn his shatt ered forces with Normans Normas from the positions in the Henristta plians Adele-De-garbe following and Hanley had also being disheartened at the desertion of his brother Jack leaving the rest of the forces under the Second Purgat orian to contend with Bunte while he moved his armies into the defenses at Norma for he feared that without his aid Norma would not be able to hold out much longer.

Purgatorian who was recovering from his wounds decided to assalt Buntes lines simultaneously and by noon the whole army was advancing to storm the christian line with all their violence.

''Is the center strong enough to hold out against the enemy?'' Akkod general Blending of general yivian Wickeyins as the enemy began to surge forward and increase the speed of their vigorous advance.

''Yes''Answered the general''And if you are hard pressed notify me and I will send reinforcements right away.''

Ten minutes the tremendous roar of many hundreds of cannon again was heard at a different point of the main christian line, and the whole front main line of the assailants torn by a fearful fire was broken into seried fragments, but nevertheless as they continued on and sw ept on furiously tward the christian lines the simultaneously came the sharp thundering roar from more christian batteries and now again monsterous gaps and avenues appeared by scores in the enemys main front line, but still on came the survivors undaunted.

As they increased the speed of their advance still more the christians at the parts first threatened formed in seried long lines of battle and soon their lines were engulfed in smoke so fierce was their firing.

''Hold your ground firmly boys.''Shouted their generals Henry Gannon and John Mur phy as they rode back and forth.''Here comes the first of the main line. Try all your best to crush it. It is our only chance to hold.''

No sooner had they said the last words when with a bloodcurlding yell the foremost columns surged up to the works in a immense swarms and poured over using their musket butts and pi pistols point blank, but after battling hand to hand for an hour they were almost entirely cut or shot down. The as cent up to the christian line was very rough, and the smoke which rose from the long rise of ground where the batteries were with their hedious flashes showed that they were now in full act ion. Indeed the whole front line of the foe had been reduced to fragments in about four hours after they had made assault after assault with un abated fury, and so many hundreds had been killed and wounded that the first wave soon gave it up and recoiled, and now for three hours there was a general lull.

After the three hours had pass ed the enemy was seen tovbe advancing once again, and again the terrible sanguinary conflict was resumed and raged with unabated fury and the Angelinians sustained twenty five bloody charges, made in incessant and quick succession. The slaughter was terrible on this occasion, division after division surging up against the christian line only to be cut to pieces and driven back. The struggle was more fearful and incessant than of the noon time and many thousands had fallen at each charge. Never for a moment had the roar of cannon and musketry ceased, and the enemy made their onslaughts in endless succession. The dead and wounded lay in great heaps about the works, and officers themselves on both sides had fallen by scores. Yet despite the fury of the enemys assaults the Angelinians held their ground stubbornly.However as they again resumed the assault the Glandelinians seemed to gradually increase in numbers and rushed forward against the overwhelming numbers of the christians, but two hours later in spite of the most greatest exertions of the assailants the badly shattered Glandelinian forces without means of support slowly fell back their whole line in tatters and their fragmentry columns swept by a furious artillery fire.

Jack Hanley having gotten away after or during the battle of Apple-Or chard had been relieved of his command and Federal not being able to take it, and learning that Pugatorian was not winning his ground as he should, and having all the reinforcements he could spare, he hurled them tward the point at Normas Bridge, and these caused great destruction among the christian lines every time they charged though they were repulsed repeatedly.

In the meantime another part of Buntes army had attacked Pugatorians ri ght wing, while again his tremendous batteries were barraging the defenses of Norma with tremendous broadsides of shells and high explosives , but it could not be forced, and though the christians had succeeded in forcing a portion of the enemys position at this section, the Glandelinians enraged over their losses after they had not only fought one of the bloodiest struggles but also the most stubborn without success were angered beyond description and later when there was a lull in the conflicts the slaughter of the remaining inhibatants in Norma on this occasion was terrible. Twenty thousand children all boys and girls were killed by having their bodies ripped open from neck to abdomen, and even the Glandelinians built vast numbers of ovens for the special purpose of roasting the bodies of little girls, who were put on alive, not to be eat eaten of course but just for horrible torments, and the charred bodies fat fairly ripped open fairly ripped open as far as could be opened were ap aspects of the terrible twrrible scenes where the horrible burning up of children were kept on untill four thousand little bodies with all their ex en intestines taken out had been consumed, and every evil passion of unrestrained human nature was allowed to have its full sway. Children without numbers on this occasion were captured and within a few days time more children were put to death by fire suffi suffocation, strangulation, by the knife, or w sword, or by every possible torture known, many having their throats cut open, as well as their bodies while yet alive. Even to torture children not as yet slain b they broke all their arms and legs, and even cut out their eyes and tongues and cut off their ears. This massacre was worse than the most horrible cannibalism, and yet to add to it all over two l thousand little girls were scourged frightfully, and nailed to crosses or stakes, and then the cruel Glandelinians cut these also open alive and committed the worse atri atrocities than any one can conceive. The Glandelinians opened bodies of little children as fast as they could get them and also took a pride in the number of small human bodies they had torn or cut open-and paraded them through the stree streets just as they were. One devilish Glandelinian gained a great name for h m himself by an act of peculiar atrocity. He forced seventeen hundred children all little girls to build a terribly hot coal fire and to fetch fire wood for heating it. As soon as they had concluded their labors they were bound hand and-foot to trees, and there tortured for many hours, and finally after the Glandelinians had chocked so many to unconsciousness within a few minutes he threw cold water on them to make them come t o, and then bound them tightly with ch chains and threw them into the fire their very own hands had prepared.

Sometimes other Glandelinians had taken their victims, bound them hand and foot after stripping them naked, cut slices from their arms and legs and forced them to eat it. Houses where christian o people dared show resistance were burned with them in it, and at every street the Glandelinians either massacred a man, wo an or child, or threw them into the prisons to be reserved for more horrible t ortures. The streets were fairly 3 washed in human blood.A child was brutally assassinated at every move, and one leader gained some noteriety by binding a number of children and laying them side by side along the street to act as rollers over which a big machine guns was taken for eighteen block.The weight of the gun had crushed the children to death after indescriable agony, who were afterwards like the others opened up, and their bodies with their intes tines hanging out were paraded in every street as they marched on causing destruction everywhere, running away all the cattle, and other animals from the citys stockyards, and slaughtering in a manner as if it was a ll that they could do. The Glandelinians were also instrumental in the murder of two Angelinian generals who had managed to get into the city with one hundred thousand men and who attempted to halt the slaughter of so many innoca innocent children. One of them general Sagh Illinoan a man of celelerit y as a warrior did not fall unavenged. When the enemy approached he retired out of the city and to a line of forts where many of the children had escaped who had escaped the city were taking refuge.By the aid of his three hundred thousand Ang elinians who would not leave him he fought desperately for ten days and to the last moment untill nearly all his men were killed and he himself dangerously wounded. He then retired with the children and the surviving men to a safe point while the assailants crowded into the fort s, when he took a good chance of having set large charges of explosives under the forts and connected with eletric batteries which he had hidden, and by pushing down on the handle he caused a series of explosions that shook Norma to its foundation, and which resembled a series of terrific volcanic blasts from a full grown eruption and threw immense clouds of smoke high into the sky. The uproar was earsplitting at the distance of six miles from it and hear for nearly thirty miles as plainly as if it occured in front of any peson. Every Glandelinian inside or outside the fortifications were literally be blown to atoms the blazing fragments of the forts being scattered in a fiery rain for miles. So you see my dear readers one christian general took a means for veg vengeance for the slaughter of the children-by blowing up the forts filled with two hundred and seventy thousand Glandelinians who were hurled to hell if to say and saving nearly twenty thousand children from their bloody claws. The yelling of the Glandelinians who survived this terrible wide spread disaster when heard in the christian lines awed all the christians who had survived the engagement before the explosion, and when this great yelling was heard and echoed over the plains around Norma like the howling of millions of wolves ad demons put toget her, the children with their desperate despetar desperate rescuers trembled or huddled close to the soldiers or to each, a and the soldiers followed with anxiety the various modulations of Even i the instant it was heard by the animals reposing in the pld plains t hey also started up in alarm, flew in all directions and even rushed into the dangers they wished to avoid. This large party of Angelinians with t he rescued children were riding along the banks of the Norma Run River now disturbed by the s ound of heavy firing in the distance when a water buck started in front of them. The leader dismounted and was following it and after going a little distance stood still, when suddenly the terrific yelling became deafening and three long lines of gray coats appeared, and seeing the christians started furing. A ball from a two ounce r crashed into the shoulder of the Angelinian officer leading the fugitives making a third wound, and after returing a heavy fire for several minutes committing awful havoc among the Glandelinians, the Angelinians driving the children in front of them slowly retreated and the wounded commander was carried by two men. The Glandelinians yelling like demons persued and followed the christians as soon as they had reloaded, and when they were in sight of the Angelinians again, and gaining on them at each stride, three columns swept from a different direction upon the poor christians their musket s rattling most loudly as they rushed upon the rear of the fut fugitives who kpt up a running fight but many were shot down at each step to the horror of the children.

The other foe ed Glandelinians had a fine view of the struggle and saw their comrades persueing t he christ ians and opening fire with mus ket s and pistols in the most ferocious style.

The nearest Glandelinians crept up to within fifty yards, and kneeling down blazed away at the Angelinians.A scores of hundreds fell simultaneously. The others kepy kpt on but soon knelt at a safe distance turned t ward their persuers and opened a fire that brought nearly a thousand of them down, then cont inued on their way.

The surviving Glandelinians determined to get possess ion of the children at all costs co j continued to fll follow but the Angelinians only retired to a short distance to load, then again fired, bringing down another large group of Angelinians. Then they went off again but the enemy returned a most galling fire and again the Angelinians went down by the hundreds. They were dollowed up but the survivors finding good ground only ret reatied again after inflicting frightful losses, and as the foe still fired and adf advanced killing and wounding more of the chi christians the Angelinians halted and formed their horses in a close circlur line with their tails broadside to the persuers and made their last stand at the hors es heads. The Glandelinian leader rushed upon one of the other christian leaders who was not o protected by the intointervention of the horses, and who tried to defend himself with his sabre. The furious grayeoat however twisted the sabre out of his hand by a well directed curve of his own, then caught him by the arms and threw him on the ground, and while the poor man st ill tried to defend himself by drawing his pist ols, the Glandelinian wrenched them from him and flung them out of his reach. One of the Angelinians at that time threw his lance which penetrated the cloak of the y Glandelinian and entered his back. The same man threw another lance but instead of taking the direction he intended it should, it pierced the body of one of the hors es that was standing near. The Angelinians would have fired but they were afraid of hitting their leader. To drive him away if possible they threw a number of big stones at him. Then the Glandelinian left the Angelinian colonel, and rushed tward them. He also ordered his men to shoot down all the horses, but the christians again checked this attempt by opening a withering fire which they now kept up without ceasing. The leader next crept up under the body of a mare and seized her by the foreleg, but with a powerful kick she made him let go his hold. In revenge and by one stroke of his sharp sabre he cut open the belly of the mare and jumped out from underneat h just as the horse fell with the entrails protruding ! T e Then as he was shot down by hundreds of bullets the Glandelinians became confused and discontinued the attack. This was known as the battle of the Slaughter Fe n.

CHAPTER THIRE THIRTEEN.

THE APPALLING MASSACRE IN NORMA.

All this while in the city of Norma the appalling and murderous yells of the enemy continued, followed by the continual shrieking of the victims who were being assassinated. Even to add to this a continuous roar of musketry and the booming of thousands of cannon added to the horrible din it being from some distant battle gcing on.All through the streets of Norma the ch l children were shrieking their death cries, their very forms disgorging blood like rain only to be caught and again slashed by the Glandelinian sabres, while many shrieked in vain;

"The Glandelinians are killing us. Help. H lp. Help. Mann Mama.Papa"

Thw great clamor of the massacre cont inued amid the roar of the far distant battle and the next instant several children rushed into a convent almost speechless with fear, and terror, their eyew bursting from their sockets as they-s hrisked out;

"The Glandelinians.T he Glandelinians. They are sett ing fire to the houses and killing everybody. They have got our sisters.T hey carried them away from our house.Oh please save them.We struck them with knives but they would not let go their hold on our sisters. They will be killed.Oh God they will be killed.Take your soldiers and please save them."

And the wo,en and children rushed about and through the street s shrieking and yelling as if they were mad. But simultaneously the Glandelinians swarmed through the streets, and five hundred of them burst into the convent where sh so many children had taken refuge, wit h their appalling murderous demon like yelling as they flew among the inmates, grap ling with the soldiers there and slaying as many as they could. One little girl Clara Hortense was knocked down by a Glandelinian officeras she tried to defend of one of the nuns from the rascal, who grappled her with his fearful hands and kept pounding her on her breast and shoulders all the while feeling for her neck n tn the darnk darkness, after tearing of her clothing, and having got hold of which he at once lift ed her half way, dragge dragged her backwards tward a large sink, prostrated he body half way over it, while she screamed pite u piteously;

"Help me.Help me. Oh God help me."

After which the fearful Glandelinians Glandelinian got a fresh hold of her neck and then all was st ill, escept that her assailant saw, was her protruding tongue and bulging eyes, and he pressed and squeezed so hard that as her tongue seemed to protrude further he heard the cracking of bones. The child died quickly the blood st reaming out of her ears, nou nose and mouth. Then he tore open her body from throat down to the last point of the belly, placed two small grenades inside her body, one on her poor little heart, and the other on her poor little stomach.

Then light ing the fues e he skipped off and as the bombs exploded she was blown to pisces, her intestines flying in all directions. Another child was strangled in the same way but who wa saved by heher brot her, and she told the story to one of the Angelinian officers afterwards;;;

"When I saw this horriblemassacre in this convent going on I was too scared to move. One of the Glandelinians aft er blowing up that litt le girl with two bombs ordered his men to encircle around the other inmat es and they did gradually e dging in closer, shooting them down o e by one? Presently one of the Glandelinians fired a shot at my brother the ball missing the boy and striking a religious pucture on the wall.

As quick as the victims were shot down they were fairly torno open, their necks being fairly ha hacked frightfully and their heart s taken out and trampled upon. They even did this to the nuns and pries ts. Then a wicked Glandelinian spying me le fly his pistols, but his shots missed me. The Glandelinian frantic with fury were fairly hacking the children to pieces, chocking them, suffocating them, cutting them up to pisces, and piece by piece while yet alive. I was horrified and the sight made me voi vomit. I was trying to hide somewhere when I was badly frightened by a sudden and frightful yell and there was the Glandelinian officer who had so cruelly killed Clara Hortense fairly spring at me his face contorted like that of a demon. I screamed again, and again untill I was hoarse but the Glandelinian with abloodcurldling yell caught me by the shou shoulder and I and he rolled to the floor toget her.Yelling hoars ely in my a ear he shook me as a terrior does a rat . The shock produced stuper similar tv that which seems to be felt by a mouse after the first shake by t he cat.....

Another instance was of little Gertrude Angeline but instead of being a victim of the enemy, was somebody that the enemy tried all their power to avoid. She had re remembered the assassintion of her poor sister and the scenes she had heard of Norma had enrage her untill she fairly acted like one insane. A large number of scouting Glandelinians near the christian lines spying no doubt on the christians was surprised by the appearance of this little child who was firs t discovered among some shu shrubbery at the mouth of some small stream a part of where Mansions first action of the war h ad occured. She had boldly demanded the reason of their presence and not knowing her at first, and thinking she was one of the fugitive children but on horseback, they had assembled with all speed and advanced against her.

Irritated by this she screamed;

"You dare oppose me and you will wish you hand not."

Nevertheless they paid no heed, and she dashed forward upon the nearest grayccat and wounded him severely with a sabre she had with her and shot down six others without mercy. I The immediate attack of the other Glandelinians was successful in rescueing another Glandelinian an officer from her grasp.Finding herself surrounded on all sides , and even seeing no way of avoiding the multitude of Glandelinians except by the river, she defied them to come on, and led her horse to the water and swam across t hese Glandelinians not daring to follow her though some of the Glandelinians tried to shoot her down but in vain. Here apparently her horse much fatigued she halted, but before the Glandelinians at this point could get their firearms ready xh she had forwith made them all her prisoners and forced them all in number about thirty to go with her to the christian lines .Among the prisoners was general Van Clocklin.

On another occasion she had h erself went out s pying, and as she was leaving the lines of the enemy, having captured the most important di spatches several shots were fired at her by the guards, and to two of the shots penetrat ed the left leg of her horse.Rendered desperate by the wounding of her horse she was determined to have reverge, and dari ngly advanced against her new opponents to their surprise and dismay, as they had expected her to flee screaming for help, and singling out an officer in the bunch who was provided with a cutlass, s prang tward him before he could make use of his weapon, and this he was very glad to give up surrendering very submissively as he could not dare to resist her when he saw that dangerous look in her eyes. Another man tried to advance to his aid but she knocked him down with the butt of her pistol, and as another man trid tried to seize her she only laughed, seized his head between his ha her hands, and threat ened to cut his head off if he did not immediately surrender.He di s o without question. She then capturing the rest by pio pointing her pistols at them brought them within the christian lines.Then laughing over her second sux success, she decided to to try her luck once more. Nearing the enemys lines she entered a thicket close by, where she discovered an officer looking over an important paps.She immediately surprised him but s he showed resistance and as he yelled she crushed his head with her pistol butt and otherwise lacerated him so badly in the struggle for the possession of the paper which shesucceeded in getting, that he died two days afterwards. Not long after she was sur pir surprised by two hundred Glandelinians who had sprang out from ambush and immediately surrounded her, but she sprang furiously at every one of them charging her horse so swiftly at them that they scattered in panic.Some of the Glandelinians immediately persued but did not return. Other detatchments seeing her and the commotion she had caused soon sped after her, and she was again s urrounded by a body of Glandelinians four deep all on horseback this time who pointed their sabres so if the child endeavored to break through, she might be immediately killd killed. One of the officers tried to check the fury of the little human tigress by throwing a sack over her head, but it did not good and she sprang upon her nearest opponent expecting her, with a sabre pointed at her in ord er to catch her on its po pi point and throw her into the air.T If the man had succeeded the child would have had her body ripped open instantly but the child had the real craftiness of a maniac, and avoided this attempt of the man by drawing her gun and shooting him down, s prang upon his horse before the others could use their bayonets or lances I mean, stabbed another with her dagger tearing his flesh from his bones. Several of the other Glandelinians tried to close in and inflict wounds on her with

It caused a sort of dreaminess in which there was no sense of pain or feeling of terror though quite conscious of all that w was happening and it was like to me what patients partaially under the influence of Chor Chloroform describe, who sees alo the operation but n feels not the knife. This singular condition was not the result of any process. T he shake annihilated fear, and allowed no sense of horror in looking at the horrified man. When he grabbed me by the neck and chocked me I had the sens sense of pain in the throat, ringing of bells in my ears, the sensation of dizzieness and a clogged up feeling in the throat, then before my senses left me I saw a bright flash heard a deafening crash and then I knew no more. When I came to I was among the dead with my brother bending over me a sabre in his hand from which blood was dripping."

T he Glandelinian had no doubt grabbed her by the throat and had squeezed so hard that her tongue was st ill protruding whe when she came to. To The rascal had not chocked her to death for he had leaped from her prostrate body to attack hw big brother who had offered to shoot him, but his piece had missed fire. This was t the flash she had-s een and which made the crashing report.The wat wanton treachery of the Glandelinians and their cruelty was indeed appalling, and even the cattle ranches outside the city of Norma had been captured as the enemy retreated into the city the cattle being driven off and the ranches and barns of the cattle e catt lemen being used as sort of fortifications-to stand against the besig besieging christians. T o such an extent did the Glandelinians carry their depredations that it was horrible and the devastations they caused was exceedingly terrific. Small t owns and villiages in the vinicty of Norma had been burned by the retreating Glandelinian armies and their inhibatants massacred. Nothing could exact the tragic tales that were known of these horrible massacres, and at a small town on the north of Norma Can called Van Dorner three hundred christians mostly women and childrn children were cut open alive and a district containing several villiages independent of an ernormous number of sheep, goats, and c-cattle were cap tured by the retreating Glandelinian armies, and the inhibatants were burned alive.

T he bravest man it seemed could not stand in the presence of these Glandelinians with a any steadiness, and the children most of them within the region of the enemy were dying of fear at their presence. The vinicty of Norma Catherine was indeed a veritible rd reign of terror. Those who were attacked by the Glandelinians managed to shake them off, but when thet their assailants got them by the throat they could only save themselves by shooting down their enemies. If they were unarmed and could not dislodge their enemiss, then indeed they wwre at the mercy of the Glandelinians. At Van Dorner the massacre was appalling. Several Angelinian soldiers had tried to escape, but the Glandelinians sprungupon them and killed them instantly.

Also an officer and his orderlis was goind through the woods on a tur tour of the enemys positions when a column of Glandelinians passed them so close that they nearly brushed his horse, and some of them giving fort h tremendous yells sprang upon the two christian officers. He Angelinias drew their sabres , but they were down in an instant, and though these Glandelinians were attacked furiously by the Angelinians who suddenly appeared, and though they beat the Glandelinians off with frightful losses in it was all in vain, and all over with the pokr poor officer -and his orderlis, their bodi es having been fairly hacked to pieces.A wicked Glandelinian also sprang upon a little boy who in this situation fired upon him and he fell. Conceiving him to be disabled the little boy attempted t o dispatch the rascal with his pistols, but he came in contact with the Glandelinian who catching him by the throat dragged him some distance along the ground.Having succeeded in drawing a brave of pistols from his belt the brave litt le boy scout fired, and lodged a ball in the shoulder of the Glandelinian, when the graycoat be becoming enraged shook him violently without letting go his hold, but in the struggle to disengage himself from the clutches of thefoe the brave boy who was very strong for his age caught hold of the man by both his ears and succeeded after sometime in throwing him down, or throwing the blaspheming graycoat on his side, while he availed himself of the his momentarily release to draw forth the remaining pistol and placing the muzzle at the bra breast of the graycoat shot him through the heart.He then continued on his way without assistance feeling at the moment little pain from his wounds although he redieved no fewer than thirt y five, from the effects of which he long continued to suffer....

No matter what they tri ed the Glandelinians could not overcome her and soon she had made a gap in their surrounding line by springing forward with n renewed fury and she was soon on her way again tward the christian lines and taui taunting the Glandelinians with her handkerchief and daring them to follow. They did not follow and as they had the puff taken out of them. They wondered if she was an ordi nary child or one of the dreaded an gels of the chi of one of the children they had recently massac red. Afterwards Gertrude Angeline was even known by the Angelinians as "T Go d's af avenging angel."

CHAPTER FOURTEEN.

OTHER ACCOUNTS OF THE MASSACRE.

While the Angelinians were concentrating for the seige of Norma Cat herine other children were reported to have been epers ued by the wicked Glanielinians who rushed furiously upon them from dark alleys. When daunt ed by the cleverness of the children the Glandelinians abandoned themselves whooly to rage. They rushed straight forward with the recklessness of maniacs, smashing, overturning, trampling under foot and crushi ng to atoms everything ththat was unfortunate to be in their way. The fugitives avoided the formidable attacks of the enemy by making degressions to the right or left, but the Glandelinians who can follow any trail soon had them in view again. Over the ability of the wise little children, the Glandelinians flew into fits of impatience and fury, and they became very dangerous. They fired constantly but all the bullets seemed to mi ss. Several of the Glandelinians persued the children on horseback, and galloped furiously upon the fugiti ves.To avoid this charge the child ren by a quick movement to the right or left caused the cavarly to gallop ahead, but the foot soldiers saw them, and the children were under a perfect hail of bullets. The foolish Glandelinians were excited to a paroz paroxysm of restless fury over the fact that these children seemed impossible to be captured. Before one of the little boys could throw a stone a Glandelinian officer rushed upon him, thrust his sharp pointed sword into the middle of the childs chest, and threw him bodily and all over his horses back ripping his body open from top to bottom, and his intrails fell on top of the human fiend. The little girls were trying to stone two other Glandelinians as they approached slowly tward them, and then thought that by making a rush to the side they mi h might succeed in escaping the murderers, but the Glandelinians too quick for that rushed upon the two little girls running their sabres through t heir bodies and tossed them into the air with the same results as to the little boy. Another foolish Glandelinian though he was badly wounded by a child who had fired a shot at him attacked her from behind and thrusting his sabre through her back ripped her complt completely in two and also t ossed her into the ai r.Thes e Glandelinians next went after a mulitude of fugitives who were trying to osd escape from the city and killed as many as they could shoot. They were extremely destructive among the fleeing children and shot down fift y in a single minute, and the Glandelinians cut them in pieces with their sabres. On pressed the Glandelinians after the other fugitives , making all kinds of circuits so as to head them off.They shot more of the innocent children down, and cut them up dreadfully, the ferocious Glandelinians managi managing to slay them all within twenty minutes. Simultaneously a shrill scream reached the ears of the inmates of St Vincents Convent and presently a little girl rushed from the reeds, her face covered with g blood calling loudly for assassinstance to her brother who had just been attacked by some of the Glandelinians.A strong party of Angelinians from the bes ieging lines proceeded to the spot and found the little boy stretched on his face motionless, coverd with dir t and blood hi s eyes starting from their sockets and his tongue protruding in all the express i ve horror of a terrible death death, and as they turned him over on his back his frontal part of the body was found to be ripped completely away, but the interior of the body was empty.

The Glandelinians who had been highly it irritated at the boys sudden i nr intrusion had waved their sabres in the air, and with shrill bloodcurdling yells, had rushed after him firing volleys, and baring down the opposing reeds in their way, while the poor child tried vainly to effect his escape.

f For a short time he h had hopes of eluding his persurs and as the Glandelinians observed a troop of Angelinian soldiers mounted not far away and these had in circum fewv circumference menanced them with gesture s while preparing to fir fire.The glandelinians however being strong in numbe numbers and shrieking with rage made a charge for the Angelinians as if to reach the object of their attack, and despite broadside after broadside of musketry poured upon them the glandelinians managed to hew many of them down with their sabres, but fortunately the other Angelinians managed to get away after slaying fourty nine of the Glandelinians with one volley. The ferocious glandelinians followed the Angelinians foaming with rage to the rising bank of the river, the Angelinians stopping at times to fire upon their persuors, and closely pressed by the glandelinians both them and the glandelinians came upon the slope where and s a strong party of glan Angelinians mostly all cow boy ranchers and Calverinians who heard the clattering shots were prepared, and instantly fired a series of volleys as the glandelinians appeared. Beaten back as they were the glandelinians then returned to the charge withi increasing fury to the little boy and his sisters, who in their eagerness to escape, stumbled and fell, the huge mass of Glandelinians fairly swarming above them, and not seding their intended vict victims, passed over them..... As soon as they had passed, the little boy and his sisters arose and limping with pain attempted once more to retreat, but the Glandelinians seding them wheeled about, and returned to the attack, their sabres were flourished in the air, and the next moment the unfortunate children were struck to the ground.

The little girls escaped but the little boy had been knocked senseless. On recovering himself his situation was hopeless and two of the most cruellest of the glandelinians standing over him and yelling with rage pounded the earth in their own-war dance, and ploughing it with their bayonets.Then the first picked glandelinian took him up, and grabbing him by the throat chocked him so hard that his neck was crushed, and then he cut away his chest and belly and cleaned him out. All this cruel slaughtering happened while Bunte was concentrating for the main portion of the seige, and there was then at the time another battle raging between Mansions army and that of Purgatorians glandelinian forces, and the battle of which was still raging was at its height having raged four days and during the afternoon of the fourth day there was a lull in the battle for an hour.It is commonly called the battle ofHalander. During that afternoon the whole of Mansions line was fiercely engaged. The frightful conflict raged all that afternoon with all its violence and even way into the night and on one part of the christian line it seemed apparent apparent that the enemy would gain the advantage. The struggle was fearful and general the whole battle field being strewn with the dead and wounded. Two more hours of this sanguinary conflict soon resulted in the crushing if the first main columns of the enemy, but the enemy resumed the struggle with all the violence they could assume untill again many of their brave leaders fell. The Glande linians made their charges in endless succession but again and again were b beaten back, the glandelinians having many of their divisions fully desciminated. The struggle finally ceased for the day turning out as a draw but at the same time a sort of christian v x victory, and the losse were considered as I60,000 for the christians and I70,000 for the enemy. Though the fighting ended as a draw it was as I said before in favor of the christians, for the enemy had failed to force the christian lines.....

Violet and her sisters w were amazed at the fury of the war though yet so young in its duration and the number of severe struggles around Norma Catherine. They were even surprised at the ferocity of the glandelinians. Tony Senguine was reported recovering swift ly from his painful wounds, ad and Violet and her dear little sisters were very kind to him, and did so much to aid the wounded soldiers, that they were afterwards called "The Darlings of the Nation."
T heir beauty had increased tremendously, so tremendously that all the Angelinians marveled, and never before had thy such great friends as these Angelinians, while generals Ant onio Senguine and his brother treated t he li ttle girls like pets, doing all in their power for them, and having them treated as some of the greatest heroines of the world. Not an enemy did they have among the Angelinians, or even the fierce and vicious Abyssinkilians, and every difficulty they ran into the Angelinians, were sure to help them out even at all risks. Yt all this did not satis fy the little girls, and though they increased their kindness tward the soldiers their hearts were heavy and sad.....

All of what thethey had heard concerning theglandelinians and what they had seen with their very eyes made them very unhappy. Eva during general Mansions advance tward Norma the wicked Glandelinians had increased thei r fury, and whileagain their assaults were directed against Mansion and some times agai n against punte, a nab band of Glandelinians slipping into a part of Buntes inactive lines from the rear murdered ev ery Angelinian whom they could lay their hands on, destroying the crops belonging to the inhibatants in the Bondons vally outside of Norma, ch chopped down the orchards, and burned their villiages. These operations were committed with fiendish cruelty and wholesa wholesale destruc destruction to property, and woe to the christian women and children no matter who they were or what nationality they belonged to if once they got into the hands of the glandelinians. However the raids upon the chri christian lines were of such a savage affair filled to the brim with th the assassination of able bodied soldiers, the slaughter of regugee women a and children, and the starving of several towns filled with people,murder looth, wholesale assassination, and imprisonment, the destruction of property, and the horrors of the war itself that the Abbiannian nation itself was horrifed. Events followed quick and fast during the seige of Norma Cat herine- in Calverinia elsewhse.Even during the battle of Mansion, anothervgreat glandelinian army moving down from the north after having been landed at Calverine had march ed against the small city of Bondon though the Calverinian and Colsular corps had sent in prot ests in the name of humanity a and civilazation against the bombardment of a city filled with helpless-sick persons, and women and children and other non-combatants, the glandelinians begun a furious bombardment with explosive shells, and this wq was followed by attack after attack against the christian t roops stationed there which raged with the most unceasing fury, the glandelinians determined to massacre the children and the others whether their sickness was catching or not .
T he conflict was especially severe but all the assaults were more or less easily repulsed except the last which drove the Angelinians defending the small city back into the st reets, ni and the glandelinians almost entered the-streets .This assault was also repulsed because no matter how many of the glandelinians po poured into the streets they were all shot down by tens of thousands per hour, and the glandelinians could make no headway. Both sides had machine guns, but the enemy had the most number of guns. The severity of the fighting can be judged by the fatal i ty of fourty thousand in fifteen minutes, that many soldiers killed and maimed in those fifteen minutes, while the conflict in the streets had raged for four hours.
But the worse phase of the tragedy was in the bombardment. The horrible shrieking shells fell everywhere, bursting on the streets streets, in homes in hotels, in public buildings, and many hitting the principal churches. N Noone was safe. It was the strange tragic luck that the helpless innocent women and children were the main victims, and mostly little children at that. A woman with her two little children in her arms one a boy and another a girl running across the street for safty was hit by a shell and what became of the three aft erwards no one could ever tell though where the shell had exploded there was a large gaping hole in the street, and buildings for two blocks were in ruins and razed. At the same time a child entering a convent or mother house was cut in fragments by the high explosive shell, and while a mother and five children in one of the houses were all wounded by the debris while another shower ofthe fragments of the same shell ruined a hosp tal hospital near it killing a nuse nurse, and also a child already wounded. Simultaneously scores of little boys and girls and ebe eva young women in the streets at the same time seemed to have been selected by the flying pieces f f of sh ells for a terrible number of them had ben killed, and injured, many of them fatally. It was indeed inde ed horrible. Hundreds who had escaped tried to reach the Pandora and S Sendon railroad but thousands others could not get away, and scores were killed by the shells every time one happened to burst. Many boom bomb proofs way before thewar had been builded in the houses in which th the men and women and childrn stayed for safty, but in vain for nothing could stand before the high explosives . Glandelinian prisoners taken told that the glandelinian leaders had promished their soldiers se several hours of sack and slaughter, and also booty if thet they took the city, which of course they never did. T his news whether false or true sprad aro nd around and added to the fear, especially after the fierce attacks.The shells shrisked and roared and exploded in a mighty tumult, and indeed the whole entire city was pani c stricken, especially as the fiere fierce onslaughts of the enemy against the christian lines defending the city never ceased.

The people feared that in due time the attacks would secure entrance and then all would be over. They feared the aru aroused savagery of the Glandelinians---loot----rape---and butchering. If they had known what was true that the Angelinians had but little ammunition left, the fear and panic would have become intense. But the Angelinians had expanded their last ounce of ammunition, but nevertheless the glandelinians were a great disadvantage for though the christians could do no further execution with bullets, the enemy time and again only faced bristling walls of pikes and bayonets and after several attempts to carry the position and meeting terrible slaughter at the hands of the Ange linians who weilded their brutal pikes and bayonets with great effect they had at last retired in great disorder.

But this repulse was but temporary. Fifteen minutes they came back with greater force and made a fierce onset. It was one of the bloodiest battles of the war up to now and suffering wholesale slaughter in charging against the bristling wall of bayonets, the wicked Glandelinian columns the most immense ever arrayed against the christians was cut to pieces and again withdrew in great confusion. Thousands of the glandelinian soldiers were killed in a very few minutes, the pikes, and bayonets proving more dangerous than a storm of canister or bullets, and so the assault along this point was given up,and the bombardment in only continued for another day untill another foe army came up. The struggle was recommenced the next day with frightful and redoubled fury.

During the second day of the battle railway and telegraph lines were severed, and more villiages around that town were filled with wounded and dying christians.The Angelinians themselves in driving one of the enemys attacks with frightful deschination of the foe columns captured food sull supply trains, many cannons, and also several foe generals.

While one of the fiercest attacks of the enemy was going one a large force of glandelinians were advancing to reinforce the besiegers on a special soldiers tr train, and nearing this town called Nellie Rickson t hey swept t o the attack but a perfect mob of Calverinians, and Abyssinkilians had arived from another quarter, and the train was besieged, and captured, while the glandelinian assailants were driven back with the most terrific slaughter of all yet and the seige broken.The glandelinian army at the resumination of the battle was cut to pieces and routed for thirt y miles inthe wildest confusion, finally fairly trodden down and almost annihilated before the few survivors managed to seek safty in the highest mountians. It was the grandest christian victory ever witnessed yet.

GLANDELINIANS ASSAULTED BY THOUSANDS OF WOMEN AND CHILDREN AND ASSASSINATED.

While this was going on a considerable party of glandelinians in the disguise as Angelinians were returning from a furlough to general Mc-gollester johnstons army still situated at Flanders and inactive on a special train of thirt y eight coaches and neared a small half burning town called Nellie, and here a mob of fifty thousand women and children all desperate Calverinians each with some weapon in hand fearing that they would be massacred, and regignizing them desp despite their disguise, forbade their passing through the city, knowing they were glandelinians. The mobs even the women and children besides the men from their frenzy and terror had become like raging fiends, and the train was soon besieged by a furious mulitude, who s mashed in the windows with rocks, and even set the coaches on fire. Meanwhile the engine had been detatched from the train and run off, though its flags however were returned. Two officers wished to have a consucat consultation with the leaders of the mob, but of no use, and for a while the efforts of the glandelinian officers by drawing their weapons prevented an immediate attack.Yet they realized that nothing could restrain the mob from attacking the pa party, for the frenzied men women, and children were growing worse, and these armed heavily soon made a headlong rush howling like a pack of wolves and soon every one were slain and the whole train derailed, the mobs shouting''No quarter for the assassins of women and children.''

CHAPTER FIFTEEN.

GERTRUDE ANGELINE GIVES VIOLET AND HER SISTERS A LITTLE(ONLY A LITTLE) EXCITEMENT.....INDEED SOME EXTREMELY LITTLE EXCITEMENT.

During the time when the seige of Norman Catherine was in full away, Gertrude Angeline had again come to pay violet and her sisters a visit and not telling them ant anything of her former exploits decided to take them on an adventure and show them that no Glandelinian no matter who they be can capture them with her as their leader. So on account of her visit Violet and her sisters had a very thrilling adventure, exactly really more thrilling and exciting to the Glandelinians however than to the little girls if I must tell the exact truth, and adventure that any one can be assured the Glandelinians will hereafter avoid-no matter if they be disgraced for- it. The Glandelo Glandelinians whom Gertrude purposely ran the Vivian girls into happened to be the fierce and daring Mc-Hollestinians.
They had went on a certain road to find some wounded soldiers who had been predicted to have been neglected, and had met a horde of these Glandelinian soldiers under general Clarence Horten Baldwin, and some of the Glandelinians seemed to have also been or the Omarian Curdes, Mc-Hollestinians, Zimmermannians and even the fiercer kind known as the Klan-Gargolians.Gargolian Glandelinians belong to a peculiar secret society, and before Heaven itself are Glandelinian soldiers-who if any body once aroused would wish they had not been born. The Glandelinians of this kind wore long regallas and hoods with a great moon on top ad also wore hats over the hoods which shape more like a young girls were of blood red color, and were so covered with flack flumes and feathers that they almost looked like head dresses of Indian Chi efs. Thses these Glandelinians called Gargolians had cross and skulls painted on the front of their regallas and was decorated all so over like some of the highest kind of Fortune d tellers. The Gargolians of all sects belong to many different secret Societies, but all in a body no matter what the color of regallas, are Free-masions, and half savages.
These Glandelinians discovered the little girls first, the little girls being mounted as well as the enemy, and as the Glandelinian girls halted, the Gargolians made a sudden dash upon them setting up the most fearful yells, which could beat those of the very devils themselves. They did not fire however but intended to run the children through with their long lances and sabres. Violet and her sisters saw the only means to stop their headlong charge was to shoot them down as fast as they could fire, and be sure not to miss, so violet singled out their screaming leader, while her sisters took the nearest men, and shot them down.The leader was killed.
The Glandelinians had surely expected to see the little girls flee and scream for help, and seeing their brave stand which was fully unexpected, the Glandelinians were amazed and astonished.The nearest who had come on with a terrific charge and yelling like demons, and seeing seven of their comrades go down dead, every one of them at that, halted and then did not fire.

''Why in the name of common sense don't you shoot them down you fools?''Yelled their main leader Baldwin who kept in the rear.''Why are you stopping like that for.Fire.''

''Its those drated vivian Girls''Shouted one of the men.''You bet we will fire.''
Violet and her sisters with Gertrude Angeline had just dashed into a thicket when they heard an earsplitting crash of musketry, and violets horse went down throwing her head formost. Had they been standing in the road when the storm of musketry came not one of them would have escaped without being riddled with bullets. Seeing however that it seemed apparent that the Glandelinians were afraid to come on the other little girls stood stock still they deciding to give the Glandelinians another series of shots, but at every attempt to raise their small rifles for the purpose of doing so their horses commenced tossing their heads up and down, and entirely preventing the little girls from taking aim.

During their attempts to steady and pacify their steeds, the Glandelinians with frightful yells now came rushing at them again, and the little girls fired at rao random, and whé whether the balls whistled uncomfortably near their horses ears or not they could not tell, but they nevertheless gave their heads such sudden jerks as to throw the near reig rein over on the off side--the curb chains came undone, and the bits t urned right around in their mouths. The huge mass of Glandelinians was less than twenty yards off with their sabres flourished in the air and yelling furiously to the little girls to halt. Having no command whatever of their horses the half frightened little vivian girls dug the long rowels in, when to their dismay their horses sprang straight forward tward the human brutes brutes, and the little girls ty ought it was all up but they leaned over on the off sides as far as possible, and the clashing sabres of the Glandelinians were within a few feet of the litt le girls as they shot through the mass of dis ordered Glandelinians, with such irrestible force that they escaped unharmed and caused incred ible confusion among the graycoats, there being a rearing and plunging of their horses, cursing and sw earing, and the clashing of sabres against one another. The little girls again plied the rowlerowels and was brought again to a s udden stand by three oak trees in a sort of triangle, a vigorous dig, and they got straight through.Only Gertrude seemed to take it all in as fun instead of excitement, while violet and her sisters looked pale and scared.
However Gertrudes arm came so violently in contact with one of the trees as to almost unhorse her, s lewing her right arm behind her back over her left hip, while a branch swished against her neck with suchcforce as nearly to make intolerable pain, while her hair was torn and her ribbon in tatt ers. Gertrude knew not how she managed to stick to her gun with her middle finger only hooked through the trigger guard, her left hand across her chest holding by the ends of the reins, which most fortunately she had in her hands when she fired, and in this fas hion she went at a tearing gallop behind violet and her sisters through a thick tangled brush and underwood mostly back torns and over which her mare jumped like a buck almost throwing her.

He was nearly on his head three or four timesy as the soil was very heavy,, sandy, and full of holes. A score of Glandelinians was all this time close in her wake firing rq rapidly but missing, and she turned and made off in the opposite direction at her best pace. The Glandelinians went tearing after her like the wind, as she had a long start and they were afraid of losing her in the thick brush.As soon as she got to a high pile of rocks which for a time hid her from her persuers, and as soon as she could pull up which she managed after performing three or four circular movements, she jumped off, righted her bridal, fixed the bit and reins and prepared to make a stand here. After giving her persuers who soon discovered her hiding place thirty shots i n which she mowed down the very same number, and sustaining three more savage charges, the last a long and desperate one far from pleasant as her horse had all the puff taken out of her, and she could only manage to hold her own before the human brute brutes to her great satisfaction she held them at bay fighting an actual battle with them, untill she could gallop off once more and locate the scattered friend s of hers.

In the meantime as she found them and started off again for a while unmolested they again suddenly found a troop of seventy Glandelinians crashing after them at a terrific gallop shoutinglustily, and some of them singli ng out Gertrude rode hard in her rear, and as she cleared a path for them she fired shooting down Baldwin. The baffled Glandelinians turned to see who had the nerve to skip their path and shoot down one of their main leaders, when she gave another of them a bullet behind the shoulder and cleared out of the path of the enemy. In rā reloading she and the Vivian Girls lost sight of their persuers, and cantering on their front they nearly caught the little girls, as they had stopped to gallop around just where the path turned sharply and suddenly to the right and the eight sweet little girls were almost under their very sabres ere they saw them. The Glandelinians were lying in wait, and madea tr terrific charge yelling furiously, the little girls whirling their horses like a top, and aw after firing a score of shots, away they went a-tearing with the rowels deep in the flank of their horses as the little girls threw themselves on their horses necks. It was a very na near shave the enemys sabres and lances being over the hindquarters of the childrens horses as they persued frantically.

The little girls went through brush that in cold blood any one could have pronounced impassable, but they did not come off scratchless, their poor little faces and hands were shockingly torn, and their dresses literally in shreds, and Jennie's neck was frightfully scratched, and bleeding freely. The furious galloping of their horses had raised great dust clouds and the poor little girls were almost smothered. To get their breath which they could not endure without 1 no longer, they lessened their horses speed; turns turned, but before they were aware the furious determined Glandelinians still charging were almost upon them. They could not turn in time and therefore the little girls fired steadily and most furiously upon the nearest assailants striking six men fairly between the eyes, and four in the chest, and even bringing down ten of their horses .As the survivors rushed at them pell-mell they again fired and seven of the nearest men were shot in the head about tene inches above their eyes and several others wwe were struck in their chests, four others in their legs, five in their abdomen abdomens, and two others in the mouth, and this lull in the terrific onset, enabled the little girls who were almost covered with blood and dirt to get out of the way before the tremendous confusion would subside.

The Glandelinians seeing the bold stand of the little girls and their accuracy of shooting backed further and further into the brush, and as the little girls were reloading and firing, the Glandelinians made the longest and furious charge the little girls ever saw, they fairly hunted their bleeding fugitives, while their rifles were only half loaded. They rode in a circle in every direction to dodge their wily foes but could not succeed i untill they reached a thick underbrush. They managed to elude the enemy here and started to reload.They had none but conical balls and their guns were becoming foul.They now could not get one down and the yelling on every side of them give them the startling realization that they were in danger of being surrounded. They sought in vain for stones and at length in despair they manged to pick up some thick branches and with hammering the ramrod in, and driving it against a tree at length got the bullets home, but were at once compelled to flee their clothes besmeared with blood from their burning wounds.

CHAPTER SIXTEEN.

RESCUE COMES TO THE UNFORTUNATE FUGITIVES.

Tears ca e into their eyes and they piteously begged God to sa e save them or sent rescue. The enemy came rushing after the bleeding fugitives wit h great fury, and suddenly there seemed to be a rush of graycoats everywhere and the little girls were dragged from their horses Gertrude Angeline having escaped. One of t he Glandelinians had Jennie by the throat chocking her fearfully and the child hung limp and helpless against his broad chest, her eyes bulging and her t ongue protruding. A Glandelinian was struggling hard to run his sabre into Joices body, while Angeline and Daisy, and the other little Vivian girls were als o w struggling hard to prevent their assailants from placing their hands around their necks, but were unsuccessful and soon they looked the same as Jennie did. T hey tried to scratch the faces of the Glandelinians, and kick them in the stomach, but they had grown very weak, and soon with their heads thrown back, and their tongues protruding they ceased struggling. Sudde Suddenly the Glandelinians let them drop to the ground, threw up their arms and well, while simultaneously there came a crashing roar of musketry, and fourty other graycoats plunged to earth. T hen there was a sudden rush of soldiers in purple, and violet and her sisters fainting from the loss of blood and of their harrowing experience were lifted ontl t r horses, and later found themselves in the hospital tent with the Abyssinkilian nurses by them, and who attended to their wounds.It was Gertrude Angeline who had brought res u re scue to them.

Indeed all variety varities of Glandelinians we were becoming extremely fierce and dangerous, and would rush headlong provoked or not provoked at any poor little child which attracted their attention,and would pierce their little bellies with their sabres, ripp them open or carry them off with their heads fronts head downward despite the dripping blood and dangling intestines, tha ghen rip them open further and fling them down with great violence. The Glandelinians losing all control of themselves had become subjected to paroxysmns of uncontrolable fury often ploughing the bodies of their victims in the most frightful manner, and assaulting scouting parties of christian soldiers near Norma in the most fierce and desperate style. Of the children they captured they worked for hours on their torture, nor did they leave them untill they had cut them up frightfully, and cleared their insides out. During the same day Violet and her sisters had their sad and thrilling experiece t h same Glandelinians or a party of the same endeavored t o act the same way tward four other little girls, but the intended victims beda became alarmed and ran through the woods, and made their best of their way tward a large cane brake, about one third of a mile distant . The whole party of Glandelinians persued them, and the poor children were speedily converted int o a pin-cusions, the place of pins being supplied by many lances, and the number and severety of their wounds seemed to have confused their brains for inst ead of keeping straight ahead tward the canes they turned off short and dashed into a narrow gully without an exit. The ravine was so narrow that they broke to pieces many of the lances as they rushed screaming and shrieking for mw mercy, and when they had fairly entered there was barely roon room to turn. The cruel assailants now had it all their on own way and while many blocked the entrance, the others jumped into the ravine and set to work in cutting them up alive. Seizing the shrieking innocents they cut their throats, and as the blood covered victims with their bloo tongues protrud ing hung limp, the Glandelinians came to s udden and uncontrollable fits of anger, and after after hacking them furiously with their sabres and tearing their entrails out, dashed them to pieces against the rocks, while the other children not seized as yet had hid behind the highest rocks having braved the dark than face these blood, thirsty murderers. There was however little hope for escape, for the Glandelinians after venturesing their rage upon the first victims, found the others, who though they took to their heels, and thought themselves fortunate in climbing a tree, up which they tried to scramble, were quickly sei zed and ripped open alive, and had their ribs cut away so completely that the whole of their intestines were exposed to view. The rest of the surviving children who were hehelpless with terror were seized and their necks fairly crushed in the iron grasp of the Glandelinians, who squzz squeezed so hard that the bones themselves were broken and the t ongues of the children cont unied to protrude long aft er they were dead.

T hei r faces were ashen hued and their eyes were starting from their sockets, as the Glandelinians slashed their throats frightfully ploughing open the center untill the intrals of their throats were exposed. Then aft er opening their bodies completely the blood besmeared assassins left the dead innocents lying in the ravine, and proceeded in quest of more victims. About an hour later, the Glandelinians to the horror of the inmates, reached a large orphan asylum, and seeing it was wee weakly defended prepared to make a deadly charge upon it. The Sisters saw there was no time to be lost, and the porters and janitors finding a good number of firearms in the building made good use of these weapons and though they shot the enemy down rapidly, they failed to check the onward rush of the brutes . The Glandelinians shout ing and firing rushed furiously at the top of their speed tward the orphan asylum. The only chance of escape for the inmates was by the rear, but before they could even prepare to do so the r orphan asylum was surrounded by the furious Glandelinians, and they hurled the butts of the r mus muskets with such powerful force against the doors as to sent them crashing in altogether, although they were heavily barred. In they rushed overturning and scattering everything, attacked the fleeing inmates behind their backs, and bayoneted the brave nuns, and even the porters and janitors who opposed them. Other big doors were battered down ponderous as they were, and the helpless sick inmates in the don domort ories were strangled to death, their throats crushed, and their bodies so frightfully mangled and torn open that the beds had nothing hardly except mangled bleeding corpses, the intestines lying a ll over the sheets, and blood flowing in every direction. Their hearts were pulled out by some Glandelinians who flung them at the priests whom were prisoners, but were struck dead for their horrible dd deeds by their religious assassin assailants.

In every direction, in every room a horrible fight raged with the murderous graycoats, and the childrens guardians, even the surviving nuns took part using every dangerous weapon they laid their hands on. But the Glandelinians being bett er armed s oon won and were immediately masters of the whole series of buildings . But both parties had fought ferociously ferociously, the Glandelinians having used their bayonets, pikes, and sabres upon the childrens guardians, and many Glandelinians had either a few teeth broken, or scars, and wounds on their bodies, while scores of them had been killed. Over seventy five of them lay dead. This just irritation wa was sufficient however to a rouse their bitterest anger and rage all the more, and for revenge they attacked the remaining priests and nuns most furiously, with their sabres and bayonets and even tore out their entrails,.To turto tort ure the first child victims they seized, they tore off the skins in s t stripes and strips then using sharp saws sawed off their fingers and t oes , tore off their ears, and even sawed horrible gashes in their arms and legs , and then suffocated them untill they died for want of air, and lastly fairly cut them to pe pieces scatt ering their intestines all over the halls and floors of the orphan asylum.....

The visages of these Glandelinians were already hedious in aspect, with their villainous looking eyes glaring like fire, their fierce cannibal like teeth, the savage claw like hands all rendered them an abject of terror to the children, whose wildly beating hearts could be plainly b heard. The Glandelinians attacked these children with indescriable fury, and the shrieking which was fairly da deafening s oon ceased as the children were chocked to death or smothered and cut up alive. Even whenever the children hid h they were found and slaughtered in the most horrible way, and soon every child found was dead with their bodies frightfully torn open, and if there were other children who hid so successfully as not to be found, they died w an anyway, and a more horrible death, by Fire, for in leaving the Glandelinians barricaded alo the windows and doors of the orpa orphan ay asylum, and set the building on fire fire .

In one instance Gertrude Angeline saw a more horrible s ight than all previously described, and which also came near causing her death. For a mile or two she had wandered from t he direction of the very christian lines, startled by the most heaviest firing she had ever heard since she went into the great war, n and she had traveled along the ba k banks of the Norma Run River which in this part abounded in tall matrushes . Her bloodhounds which s he had with her on this occasion seemed muchvto enjoy to prowling about and exami examining every bushy place, and at last met with some objects lurking among the bushes, wh which caused them to set up a most vehement and determined baying. Gertrude decided to explore the spot with caution as she well knew from the peculiar tone of their baying that there were Glandelinians around butchering children, and the smell of gore was on the air. Having desired the dogs to drive them out, a task which they proceeded to perform with great willingness, she had a full view of the number of Glandelinians who appeared to be Zimmermandians and M ac-pollestinians. Gertrude however was was instantly seen, and she hastily made her escape t ward the river under the concealment of the bushes , but the furious Glandelinians came savagely forward, and Gertrude stood still behind a big rock, and looked at them cautiously.... At this moment she felt that her situation was not free from danger, as the Glandelinians seemed headed for the rocks. Poor Gertrude was unarmed, without any vs visible opportunity of escaping, and it was useless to attempt avoiding them. The only arms she had was a brace of pistols, that only had three bullets apiece.

She stood well on her guard, holding the pis tols in her hands with her fingers upon the trigger of both. But at this instant the dogs boldly flew in between her and the enemy and surrounding the nearest kept them at bay for a few moments by their violent and resolute baying. The courage of those faithful dogs was admirable, they advanced up to the greater number of Glandelinians, and stood making the greatest clamor at them, without the least appra appearance of fear. The Glandelinians conscious of theirvve weapons remained unmoved at their noisy att empts, and soon swung their muskets right and left, making the dogs back up, the graycoats laughing as they cont inued to advab advance.....

At one moment the dogs perciev ing that the Glandelinians would not halt, and kept on advancing were about to actually seize hold of several, but they paid dearly for their imprudence, for without discomposing the majestic and steady attitude in which they advanced, they merely made a slight movement with their bayonets , and at the next instant Gertrude to her sorrow beheld two lying dead.She had six. In doing this the Glandelinians made so litt le exer exertion that it was scarcely perceptin! perceptible by what means they had killed the dogs . Of h the time by which she gained by the interference of the dogs , not a minute was lost. She fired upon the Glandelinians and two of t heir officers fell, while one of the balls went through the side of a private just between the short ribs, and he also fe,ll the blood flowing f freely. But the furious survivors only made a headlong rush ttward the 4 rocks where Gertrude was, when the other dogs made one furious spring and bore three Glandelinians down with fierce growlings and killing them quickly, then to spring at the others, and cause such confusion that it was amazing. Before the dogs sprang she had no doubts that the rascals would spring upon her, but the enemy had been so near that she had been seized with a panic, especially as she was now without ammi ammunition.As she sprang up to run, taking advantage of the fierce fight the dangerous dogs showed, she had started off, but met several new Glandelinians rush ing upon her from behind. Being an excellan shot, and having only one bullet left, and having recovered herself, thought herself pretty cert certain from the position she was in of killing one of them outright. Unfortunately she did not recollect that the last charge in one of her pistols had been some time in it before being shot off, and therefore was damp, sovthat her piece hung fire, and the fa ball falling short , entered the ground close to her nearest assailant. In consequences of this she was seized with another panic, and took directly to her heels, followed by the remaining victorous dogs, but being soon out of breath, ad and wounded, and closely persued by the Glandelinians, she jumped up and over another heap of stones , and there made another stand, hurling heavy rocks as fas t as she kn ew how,vfully reo resolved to defend her life as well as she could to the utmost. Her quick and well aim in throwing the rocks had such effect upon her persuers that they also made a stand, and lay down at a distance of a few hundred yards from the heap of stones and returned the fire with their muskets. The Glandelinians roused by the craving desire to slay her as they did the other children, seemed to fear no dang er, and the stern resistance was repelled by them. The Glandelinians tried to get the better of her by surrounding the pile of roc ks, and succ eeding, sprang and threw themselves forward with a swift rush, but Gertrude had held them at bay with the stones she threw, and by the help of her hounds. It terrified her to think of such a d eath if capt ured alive by these Glandelinians, and decided to hold her ground untill killed by their bullets . The Glandelinians now assembled around the rocks in great numbers, and seeing there was no use to make a stand any longer, she took her only chance by c climbing a tree, and though the shot whisl whistle whistled dangerously around her, she reached the top without harm and thought herself fairly outof their reach. From throw ing down heavy limbs and nuts which grew on this tree, quite a number of the Glandelinian soldiers were severely wounded, about the heqds and should shoulders, but the survivors still maintained their ground, with their eyes fi ery with rage.

Gertrude seemed to be unharmed by the incossant fussilade of bullets poured into the tree by the besiegers, but nevertheless the Glandelinians would not give up, and several proceeded to cut down the tree with their sabres, but got a shower of heavy nuts, and were killed for the attempt, their skulls being crushed. Yet it seemed in vain for poor Gertrude to seek refuge in the tree for several Glande-linians made another atr attempt to climb the treew , and even made attempt after attempt with almost incredible agility, and two succeedd in reachig reaching her.

The thirst of blood, of the Glandelinians became insatiable and the ferocity of the two Glandelinians who reached her was amazing, and knowing the cunning and deceitfulness of the rascals, and what they would do if they reacher reached her much nearer she hurled the nuts fairly into their faces , and they fell headlong to the ground, their jaws and cheek bones broken. But all the Glandelinians were nimble, courageous, and insedious, and the wild, revengeful, and blood thirs ty rascals, made a rush for the tree together. Angeline again let loose a shower of the heavy nuts as quick as she could pull them off the stem. Some of the nuts missed, others hit their marks, and the victims were either killed outright, wounded, or tried to escape.....

At last another of the Glandelinians succeeded in climbing the tree and got too close to Gertrude to suit her. She qui ckly made a bayonet of a branch by t tying a long kni fe to it and waited for him. First she smashed a nut upon his head making hij nutty.The nut had crushed itslef against his ha head but it certainly did not injure him, and came up nearer but she quickly flung her belt which she wore around her waist around his throat quickly t ightening it chocking him hard by twisting it tight with one hand while she recieved him upon the point of her aartificial bayonet which she thrust apparently down his throat, s mashing another nut on his head at the same time with the other hand letting go of the belt.The knife broke off short leaving less than three n inches on the stick.The dread of the Glandelinians was that if they fired at the child to defend him who was exposed to their view, they might kill the man with their own bullets. For a moment there was a pause when Gertrude Angeline who could not ba bare his presences any longer struggled vehene vehemently to draw her dagger, and the little girl soon succeeded.Struggling fiercely with her remaining strength she struck him in the head with her dagger, the rascal attempted to draw his pistol, and again she jabbed him this time in the throat, the man staggering backwards from the branch which he had climbed on to and falling from the tree to the ground broke his neck.Then all the Glandelinians poured in their fire at the gasping child, but the shots only nipped the leaves.

The fatally injured Glandelinian still kicked and writhed but he soon expired. The Glandelinians now set up a terrible yell that resounded throughout the whole forest . In quick success ion they poured thei r most horrid yells. Having recovered from her exertions the little girl awaited the next onset of the enemy with wildly beating heart.

She had pulled off a good many of the nuts, and now she knew that if her aim was not good and sure, and that if she missed the Glandelinians who would succeed in climbing the tree, and should she fail to hit her mark, when they reached her, she would be at the mercy of the ferocious Glandelinians, and in such an unequal combat she would be rapidly dispatched by her ferocious foes, who were more terrible than the worse kind of savages, and whose arms were so strong that they could crush the barrel of a musket. The Glandelinians by this time were very ferocious by her stubborn resistance, and again charged furiously tward the tree only to recieve another shower of nuts. After falling back they again advanced tward the tree, a few steps at a time brandis brandishing their weapons, and yelling terribly. When they were near enough they sprang tward the tree and again tried to cut it down with their sabres, but again they were banged up by the heavy nuts. It seemed to Gertrude next to impossible to drive off any of the surviving Glandelinia soldiers, and many in any case seemed to die hard also, but my dear reades readers must remember that she allowed the beastly men to get close under the tree, before she gave them a volley of nuts or heavy sticks. She always took a slow and certain aim for fear of exhausting her ammunition of nuts. Experience had shown her that when the enemy should discover that she ran out of ammunition, their onset no one could withstand for a sed second. Of she only had a good supply of bullets then she would be all right.Even several slashes upon the frontal part of her body with their sa sharp sabres, and poor Gertrudes entrails would be torn out, her breastw breastbones and ribs broken off, and her skull crushed.

It would be too late then, and flight would be in vain.

Brave little Gertrude Angeline could imagine no party of men so fatal in their attacks upon christian children as this, for they know hot not how to give up unless overwhelmed by rescuers, or by annihilation itself. Gertrude looking with fearful care to the number of remaining nuts on the tree laid still with the first one ready to throw, and waited five weary minutes, waited with with growing nervousness, for the moment when she would relisve her response by firing. She never threw a nut at a Glandelinian at no greater distance than squarely under the tree. At last an opportunity came, and she quickly raised a nut as the Glandelinians sprang forward tward the trees, and then again she let them have it. Two leaders struck on the chest by fairly delivered aim brought them down, not killed, but so badly shocked as to be rendered helpless.One got struck on the head, and he fell forward on his face, his muscular arms outstretched, and uttering with his last breath a hedious death cry, renouncing two souls, half yell, half demon shrisk, and it tingled in Gertrudes ears with a dreadful note of hellish agony.

The countenances of the other glandelinians showed that they thought themselvew themselves in a very serious undertaking, and would have recoiled had not their other officers threatened them.Suddenly as they were creeping tward the tree in a silence which made Gertrudes heavy breathing seem loud and distinct, the woods -were at once filled with the tremendous deom demon like yell of the glandelinians, who rushed up t to the tree with fiercely glaring eyes, and a hellish expression of their faces giving vent to yell after yell.

The yelling of those glandelinians was the most singular and awful noise ever heard by Gertrude, and closely resembled the shouting of demons along the sky, which rebounded seemingly from everywhere. Their eyes began to flash fiercer fire as Gertrude lay motionless on the defensoive, and they brandished their weapons like cannibals, as they again and again sent forth a tremendous yell, and now truely they reminded gertrude of nothing but a party of hellish dream creatures, being of that hedious order, half men, half demons, which she had found pu pictured by old artists, in some representation of the infernal regions. They advanced a few steps, stopped to fire, and while uttering their fierce yells again sent forth a tremendous volley again advancing, and finally stopped when at a distance of six feet from the trunk of the tree.Gertrude was not hit by the shots of the volley, and here just as they beca began another of their yells,she let fly with her nuts with such agility as to down a score of the glandelinians almost at every exertion.Several of their bodies shook convulsively for a few minutes, their limbs moved about in a struggling way, then all was quiet again, and the rascals withdrew a few yards. She had alrwady recieved numerous scratched from glancing bullets.The glandelinians were not firing more regularly without ceasing or advancing,, then one ball striking her in the fleshin fleshy part of her left arm brought her down and then she apparenr ntly lay upon the ground as if dead, or exhuate exhausted by the paining wounds, with her head rested on her arm, which was bared to the shoulder.

It w was at this time than an officer attempted to give her the finishing touch, by turning her over, and tearing open her body with his sabre, but she had only been slightly stunned by the fall, and not painfully wounded in the arm, and instantly springing upon her feet wrested the weapon from her antagonist, and shivered his head into splinters with the blunt side. Afterwards she placed her hand over the injured part of her left arm and even distressed some of her relen t less persuers by the almost supernatural agony of her countenance. !!! Unarmed now, she again commenced throwing stones at those within reach, but to her great consternation she beheld from behind every tree of bush near her, five or six of those furious glandelinians, and being unarmed she thought it full time to decamp which she did, running fast er, probably probably than ever she did before, and persued at full cry, if cry the dreadful noise could be termed by five hundred ugly awkard Glandelinians. She had aroused her persuers to an exciting horror, and had caused them tobecome more magilnant, and their habit of shooting in the wild chace were disgustint thus the reason none of the shots hit her. In this wild state of rage, the glandelinians ver were very cunning, but savage and ill natured and frequently ground their teeth with great fury, as they saw they were gaining but little upon their fugitive. As they continued the persuit they appeared to be in a state of savage ferocity, grindin grinding their teeth, perpetually restless in their wild speed, and agaited by wicked ferocity. Every obst icle in their way they struck frequently with the butts of their guns, and their increas ing fury excited the apprehension of poor Gertrude, who knew that the glande linians by their powerful weapons, were her formidable enemies, and she feard feared that despite all her depredations or desperat ions to stand and der defend her life or to take flight was in vain. A vertible tempest of bullets went howling and whistling all around her. All her attempts ww were di rected to getting to a certain spot, where she could escape, but the enemy seemed to be more than a match for her. Which ever way she turned a score of glandelinians rose up in her path with fixed bayonets and flashing e e eyes, but at last Gertrude was fairly aroused, and quickly snatching a large branch from the ground brandished it in every direction, cracking a few over the head with it. For a moment the Glandelinians gave way a little and seemed as if considering what to do, while Gertrude continued on her way dashing and striking vioke v o violently at any one who rose in her path knocking them down. by a blow and every time another glandelinian rose up before her she ran on all the faster, persued by those behind. Aft er running a short distance she managed to elude her persuers whocgave y up the chace in exhaus tion, and as she still continued on Gertrude soon beheld a spectacle as never before to her eyes.

All of a sudden there arose from the surface of a small valley before her an impenetrable mass of glandelinians which was at the distance of fourty yards from her forming an immense column, comapr ed of many divisions, and knowing that this must be the advancing forces of general John Manleys cruely cruel army, she ducked behind some bushes , her former persuers not seeing where she went. All their yells mi xed together and modifi ed according to their different tunes formed such a hedious noise, that Gertrude was obliged to cover her head to give a little reliev to her ears. They were like furious demons let loose, and their yells rendered her almost deaf, and nothing it seemed could disperse this mass, excepting the main christian army two miles away, which was besieging a vi lliage called Clorinda.A little girl five years old was playing with her companions on a mossy slope near this mob of murders, when at once to Gertrudes horror some of the Glandelinians rushed upon them, and carried them off in spitte of their screams and cries, and soon all was quiet, and Gertrude looking out saw their bodies horribly mutilated and ripped-open. By keeping cond concealed behind the bushes she followed the glandelinians with her eyes and soon noticed them reaching a series of appairenently abandoned villiages sallying forth in great numbers, then looking in a another direction for several minutes to see what was coming elsewhere she turned her eyes again in the direction of the villiages and so to her s urprise a sea of smoke puffs and a stream of Angelinians immense in size slowly moving forward the glandelinians now receding and realized at once that the glandelinians was assailing the christian lines with the intention of breaking if possible the seige of Clorinia by force.

After seeing all this and knowing the direction of the main christ ian lines , she at once proceeded in that direction all the time listening to the steady roar of firing which grew more prolonged, and had only gone a quarter of a mile, when there was a rattle of thousands of far distant explosions, and she knew cannons were now adding to the fir ing. Suddenly she came upon a majes tic looking officer who was with a large group of staff officers all on horse back, surveying the very same scene she did. had.

He had been scoun scouting from one point to another all day, found out by wireless that Bunte was successful in his recent action against Pugatorian, and had also noticed many of the fearful assassinat ions of the women and children and adding to his disgust he had a severe toothache and was excited and enraged, fe fierce of temper and the recent injuries of violet and her sisters though only slight had made him feel like striking a decisive blow for revenge.He blamed the enemy for his toothache. This scene witnessed by the two was many scores of miles away from Norma. All this while this great and king ly dress ed general officer had been encamped here with his immense -- army during the time of the many previous struggles in the vinicty of Norma though his armies had been too far to advance and take any part in them, and during the first few nights had continually recieved heavy reinforcements.Seven brigades had hurried to the border of the long Bondons plains tward the villiages of Clorinia as they were called held by the enemy and besieged by christian forces, and also forces of Abyssinkilians under general Greenswald had followed with heavy pieces of artillery. The battalions of corps formed the right wing of the Abyssinkilians, with three battalions of Angelinians supporting nine batteries of artillery.This great general who she observed was Hanson Vivian himself. He was surveying the actions of the glandelinian forces concentration before him and of the counter attack of the christians in the direction of the villiages, there having already been a dozen skirmishes at other points, the advance of the victorous Angelinians in the direction of the Clor Clorinia villiages being rapid and fight ing for nine minutes had been constant and incessant.

At this same time Hansons main christian army lay in battle format ion below the foothills of the Clorinia villiage.Half way up one of the gentle graded slopes through which a railroad ran was the little town od of Bonbon in flames. On the lowest heights was the main Glandelinian artillery chiefly officered by good gunners, and the guns consisting of one thousand nine hundred in number f formed the chief dread of the christians. They knew that the very next day would see a great struggle. The opportunity for which the Angelinians had waited was at hand.T he christian line along this point was six million nine hundred thousand five hundred fifty five strong under general Hatch Stronger. Another of the christian line was IO,999,982 strong.

Gertrude Angeline as soon as she came up to the great commander, had her injuries attended to, and was allowed after some discussion about her experiences to aid violet and her sisters in their aid of mercy they now being with Hansons army. All that night both sides could see a bright glow of terrific conflargrations, and far above the glow was a canopy where at times strange lurid flames could be seen. This lurid sheen of light would at times increase tremendously, and remain so for a long time, then settle down to a duller shade. Large whirling columns of red clouds resembling the smoke of burning cities, could be seen rising in immense convulitions, and these at times far below and even to its very top seemed to be fairly pierced by tongues of flame. It was an awe inspiring sight, and violet and her sisters always watched the low hills where the enemy were situated, and contimually saw their powerful searchlights swaying back and forth, and occasionally the booming of many christian guns were heard, as their gunners tried to put out these lights, and occasionally succeeded. The glow of the conflargration made the darkness look dismal and uncanny among the hills, and the brightness of the enemys great searchlights was blinding.
The enemy through the means of their powerful searchlights saw the movement of the christians, their preparations for action, the running up of their batteries, and as the six million was only half of what they really had at that one given point, they soon had the rest up and soon by morning the enemy found himself only I2,899,000 strong to that of the christians 56,789,999, and whose lines stretched for nearly thirty seven miles, and about a mile deep in campings and trench-works. Hanson had been surprised when he heard of the recent struggles for Norma and Julo Callio, and of their varying results , and declared that these were some of the most stubborn battles ever fought yet, but he did not know if he himself would fare out so successfully as the enemy though less in numbers had better ground. And also the Glandelinians were not one eighth as easy to overthrow and conquer as he had believed before starting the war on them, and they were he knew so terribly stubborn that they would fight with indescribable fury. It was a wonder how he could ever have started an war on Glandelinia when Angelinia at the time had been fully unprepared for any kinds of general wars, Glandelinia as he well knew being an extremely powerful nation, and more than a one great war could not hardly exhaust her, neither the slightest part of her fighting strength.

THE BATTLE IS ON AGAIN.

The advance of the christians commenced before daybreak, and for an hour the Glandelinian artillery swep swept the valley with incessant fury, and from the opposite sides of the heights of the second row of the hills the guns of the Angelinians responded with a thunderous roar. Under cover of the artillery fire, the right wing of the Abyssinkilians under Puggy Mullans advanced at double quick, swept across a little stream called Garthers creek, and started upward against general Shrip. Shrimpie Flynns Glandelinians.
Before them not yet clearned of the morning mists now mingling with the smoke of battle lay the little ruined and desolated town of Bonbon.
The right of Mullans army advanced under a heavy fire half way up the hill, stopped and waited under shelter of a wood and embarkment.
The center advanced, the Abyssinkilians fording the river, and moving to the railroad at double quick. Once the Glandelinian artillery found the range it swept the red lines which were three miles long at this point untill it seemed as if the Abyssinkilians were extinguished.
Far to the left the battle now raged with great fury. There the Abyssinkilians were moving under open conditions, and the river ford the whole length was swept by a murderous cannon fire. In that fierce onset the mimic rivalry between the Abyssinkilians and Angelinians was intense, each striving with all their might to outdo the other in bravery, and even trying to see who would reach the enemys lines first .
Through the outskirts of Bonbon under a galling fire spreading twenty miles long all at once, the Abyssinkilians and Angelinians poured on, driving back the advanced line of the foe with dreadful loss. After a fierce and bloody fight the town was carried, and the gray lines fell back to their main positions under cover of their guns, delivering a scathing fire and dealing awful havoc in the christian lines. Crouching and clinging to the steep hillside half hidden in the vineyards, the assailants ag rested, panting. The grapr grapes were torn to shreds by the enemys fire, shells and solid shot ripped the earth around them, but soon again they started up the hill, and the Angelinians sprang at the throats of the hated Glandelinians, before the Abyssinkilians ever reached the works. The christian leaders who saw that mad charge declared that nothing like it was ever seen in any war. The wrongs of centuries, the lust of vengeance for the slaughter of so many helpless children sent the assailants forward. They cried laughd, and screamed;

"Down with the Glandelinian assassins.
As they poured upward through the grainfields and the vineyards, the Glandelinian cannon poured death upon them. The hill sides for seventeen miles seemed to spout flame, the shrapnell thundered their salvoes in the air, the Glandelinian cannon roared and thundered incessantly, the smoke thickened untill it grew dark, the humming song of the quick firing guns ripped and tore through the advancing lines, mowing them down by sections, but on they came undaunted. Only a few hundred yards above the cannon roared, the hills being so steep that the cannons could not be depressed to get full effect. The Angelinians and the Abyssinkilians seeing the advantage pressed forward. The officers directing the Glandelinians cursed, swore, used imprecations, reviled the christians and God blasphemed and yelled like demons, and when thouses thousands after thousands of the Glandelinians fell and the others fled, the office officers stuck to the guns, cursing and blaspheming all the worse, and pouring storm after storm of canister upon the christians mowing them down in platoons as fast as they came.
They were hired to die. With a rush the Angelinians and the Abyssinkilians broke through the lines of guns. General Angelician was among the first . He sprang tward a huge Glandelinian artillery officer and drove his sabre at him.
At that instant he fired a pistol and turned to flee. Angelician fell close under the muzzle of the gun, and rising he seized a rifle, and fired again and again. The enrushing Angelinians seemed to swarm in every direction, and genral Greenswald finding him crumpled up close to the great gun he had captured, tore his waist open and finding the wound dressed it amid the flying shot and shell, and took him off from the scene of carnage. The Angelinians still held the greater part of the captured works, supported by the Abyssinkilians, and though the fierce Glandelinians despite their dreadful attacks were unable to drive out the great purple and red lines, the Angelinian soldiers being repulsed before the fall of one of their generals on the left wing, could not get any further. On account of the severity of the deadly withering fire of the Glandelinians, Greenswalds forces which had been the first to lead on the fierce and bloody assault up the hill had accomplished great deal, and being now reinforced by general Sigamores Abyssinkilians, and these under general Sacramen, and now as the Glandelinians once more resumed their counter attack the firing increased with redoubled fury. The captured artillery had been swung around, and more artillery soon being brought up, the Angelinians used every piece on the attacking forces in gray increasing the terrible carnage to a regular storming scene of damanation, and horror. Men along the gray lins seemed to melt away in scores of mulitudes, but nevertheless at this section of the line the enemy were attacking in really overwhelming numbers and an hour after the whole christian line was swept back to their own positions, and now the enemy started to advance to attack the christians a third time and capture their own works. Greenswalds had by this time seeing the rout of his first troops from the enemys positions, pushed forward as many new divisions as could be spared at that critical time, and then the whole christian line blazed with a sudden fire, the whole gray line withered to fragments, and gave way, Federal being compelled to order a retreat. But the Glandelinians however were as desperate as cornered rats or lions, and within another half hour with defiant yells rushed up to the very parapets of the christian works with frightful fury, and after a bloody combat in which the purple and gray fell in greater numbers, captured a part of the christian position on general Bennaths center, and his ov Abyssinkilians overwhelming the enemy twenty to one, nevertheless could not stand the attack of the enemy, their leader was wounded, and the Abyssinkilians retreated but contested every foot of the way and did not fall back in disorder.
In the meantime the Glandelinians attacked the Abyssinkilians under Sacramen but after a fierce and incessant struggle hand to hand for fifteen fifteen minutes the furious assailants were repulsed with the most heavy losses, and driven back to their own positions.

Simultaneously general Houghton came rushing up the other point of the line with more men and aeart illery and these assailed the christian lines resuming the assault where the others had left off, the attack being made with great fury and determination, but despite their brilliant courage and daring the enemy could not make any headway whatever.An assault more re resolute and bloody and quite more vigorous was at the same time made on general Hinchcliffe's divisions of Abyssinkilians, who fighting under cover had but trifling losses in this fierce combat, but the wicked Glandelinians exposed fully to the fierce christian fire and cannon suffered exceedingly heavy, and though they charged again and again, they found that to drive back the Angelinians was very hard, but to drive back the Abyssinkilians was an impossibility.
Again at the same time one hundred fifty thousand Glandelinians attempted to flank a portion of the Avyssinkilian army but they were themselves surprised and nearly fourty thousand of the flankers were either cut down or sought safty in flight. Along the left of the main christian line that afternoon there broke the redoubled roar of artillery and mus ketry, and so sharp a conflict was raging there that Lieutenant general Samsual Sopher was quickly requested to send general Carlsons bri gades of Abyssinkilians to keep off the Glandelinian assailants, and to take command there himself. This bloody occassion soon decided the titanic contest despite that the enemy charged again and again. Though the Angelinians managed to maintain their ground against the heavy attacks and against heavy odds one of general Soh Sophers staff generals Madon fell riddled by bullets.

Along general Sigamores Abyssinkilian front the engagement had also been exceedingly bloody for it being on the center where general Greenswalds had joined his forces between Eldons- brigades of Abyssinkil ians who held that point against the troops of Glandelinian assailants all that morning without giving way once, and also counter attacking them furiously. There was now quite a lull along the whole of the christian lines untill nearly two oclock.Then a more bloody and vigorous attack was made with utmost steadiness on greenswalds lines in person the fighting being maintained on the whole front with more general fury and determination than before, tens of thousands and tens of thousands of the Glandelinians pressing up to the belching christian cannon only to be mowed down rapidly in monsterous masses. Yet the survivors though they recoiled res umed the attack the severe and bloody action continuing without a pu pause for over four hours .However at one part the assailants were held at bay for the artillery fire they met was terrible, but nevertheless the greater part of the assail ng assailing forces still continued the attack with tremendous yells, and assailed the Abyssinkilians with merciless fury, pushing forward again and again in the heaviest columns and drwing drawing all the fire of the christian artillery. The carnage indeed was frightful.The assailantd like during other battles suffered losses out of all proportions to those they inflicted, but supported by fresh troops, they surged again and again upon to the very muzzles of the christin cannon, and after four hours of terrible and merciless fighting, many times hand to hand, co captured a full portion of the works on Greenswalds right.General Madlen as he reached the seemingly blazing works with his own Gla delinians fel, fell dead from his horse.General Gladlin had been killed by a cannon shot, and general Nicholas Johnston though painfully wounded remained with his men in the trenches. The divisions under generals Green swalds and Eldens was now being hard pres sed by the foe under general John Foster and Beppos Abyssinkilians tward seven o-clock that evening was ordered forward and these rushed through the blinding storm, and made furious attempts to drive back the yelling savages along the line of works they had captured, and to restore general Greenswalds crushed and broken center.Itresulted in a great and crushing repulse for the christian line. Thus for the evening the struggle ceased.During the night the positions of the christian line on account of theenemy being in poss ession of a portion had to be changed, and fresh troops and artillery was brought up.The next day the batt e battle was resumed by the enemy and for three hours it had been a matter of complete and great endurans endurance with all the Angelinians and Abyssinkilians themselves, for with unceasing fury the battled raged along this large n new space covered by the works already strewn with bodies, and the lines of adk adjacend works for twenty miles in length seemed to be fairly ripped up by the inerssa incessant crashing explosions of shells.

Every attempt of the enemy to dislodge the christiansduring these three hours of blood curdling horror had been repulsed with merciless fury on the part of the christians, while hundreds of the pretty ba battleflag s of both sides waved defiantly over different portions of the same line of works, while the men on both sides being face to face at many points fought like the very fiends for their possessions, and the yelling on both sides could be plainly heard despite the deafening thunder of artillery and musketry. So furious had the struggle raged for those three bloody hours that for thirty miles the very abysses and mouths of hell seemed to have suddenly appeared within this region and let loose its legions of battling fiends, and simultaneously its sulphurious fumes of white green and blue hues.
The attack upon general Greenswalds Abyssinkilians had been made furiously and most determinedly under cover of the rocking smoke, the Glandelinland moving desperately the struggle here also being appall ing for those three hours. W hiteheads Glandelinians being severely handled as the Angelinians counter charged into their disordered lines cutting g them to pieces, while at the same time another force of Angelinians defeat ed general Jensinsars corps after a bloody fight for three hours, being supported by Lensins Abyssinkilians, who was advancing to reinforce them and repell the appalling charge of the main colwun of assailants who had already almost succeeded amid a/l all this dreadfue carnage in which their men were mowed down in appalling numbers to push Greenswalds entire line of Abyssinkilians back from the positions, almost overlapped them, and threatened them with disaster.
After the three hours of fierce fighting there was a lull as the foe had not made much success.The lull lasted nearly four hours then with tremendous and terrible fury the battle was resumed and raged all the rest of the day without intermission untill nine o-lco o-c lock at night. The whole s tstruggle that afternoon was gneral general all along the line and despite the fearful losses in the struggle the Abyssinkilians and Angelinians held their ground with all their might-and main, and fought with such c u courage and determination that the Glandelinians themselves were amazed.At one o-clock four hours after the lull at the resumination of the struggle a fearful art illery fire had been first maintained upon the enemy while scores -of thousands of Angelinians under general Walter Ponson came up to help Greenswald to repell the furious attacks of the enemy, and though the ranks of the assailants were mowed mowed down as fast as they came, thousands aft er thousands came on in endless succession, and despite the terrible fire of artillery and musketry threw themselves upon the christian lines in red and purple with hedious cannibal like yells, whil while the defenders hammered away with their cannon as fast as they could load and fire pouring volley after volley of six hundred shells per second and though the main line of the assailants during this horrible struggle for that first hour in the afternoon was literally mowed down, the following line had been obliged to push on, but were soon in horrible confusion, but the pressure behind continued to push them forward.
On up to the very muzzles of the christian guns sprang the massive columns in gray who began swarming over the breastworks in thousands aft er thousands, and after incessant hand to hand fighting for fifteen minutes they soon captured this line of works despite the stern resistance they met, and the Abyssinkilians were driven back in disorder.

General Greenswalds seeing that the enemy captured this line of works sent for a body of fresh troops to recover the works from general Isner Hylstaze who had been the leader of these Glandelinian assailants.
The reinforcements nu bered about four hundred and fourty thousand and at two O-Clock the Angelinians and Abyssinkilians being joined by the reinforcements and being rallied-swept forward under a deadly fire, and rushed on tward the works, all the Glandelinians with good aim pouring a horrible murderous annihilating fire upon the advancing christian division divisions dealing intolerable havoc among them, but despite this more and more came forward to reinforce them, and these christian forces swept up to the very works and to the very muzzles of the guns, and tried eve every means to recover them but the Glandelinians massed toget her in gu human walls and for a few minutes held the christians at bay.But though their massive lines were s battered by the destructive insedious fire of the Glandelinians, and their men lay in many heaps on the ground where they had fallen the survivors on recieving more troops again rallied and in solid and unbroken lines they again swept forward tward the works with its belching cannon. They were now within a few yards, when all along the massive gray lines there came a withering flash, and a murderous roar of musketry, followed by three other volleys in quick succession. With a frightful roar another broadside of cannon and firearms a all along the line, and again st iol more frightful was the following discharge of more firearms as the christians seemed to be going down in many thousands everywherw.When the thick smoke began to rise a little the sight of the horrible destruction of life which was revealed was indeed sickening. The dead and wounded christians lay in long windrows and piles where they had fallen, and everywhere else they fairly cumbered the ground. But the surviving purple and red columns reckless in their desire to re-capture the works resumed the attack in more terrible fury, while again and again the enemys works seemed to be swept by withering sheets of flame and the din of the discharge of musketry and artillery was-a like if the very positions had broken into violent e eruption. T he Angelinians pressed forward despite the hundreds of frightful gaps torn in their lines and again they reached the muzske of the guns and surged above the posit ions only to meet a discharge of musketry and machine guns that shattered their whole line to fragments. The zesecond line of assault gave place for the disordered masses of those repulsed and strove to cross the enemys position but also withered before another annihilat ing fire, but there was no retirement or wavering of the rewt as the thrid line came up closely for though they gave back a small distance they only resumed the desperate assault though they recieved the same fire again, for the surviv ors pressed forward once again o in good order, while the tops of the works still held by the enemy was fairly strewn with many tens of thousands of the dead, dying and wounded comrades of the two first annihilated lines.

The slaughter indeed was dreadful.It was now three -O-Clock and still the foe were in possession of the captured works. The enemy now poured over the works with odious yells and swept tward the shattered christian lines still trying to rally coming with the fury of an avalanch. D Forward hundreds of thousands swept with a burst of horrid yells and curses, and the christian musketry in a general discharge blazed for miles long and now they themselves gave way slowly.The three long front lines of the enemy melted away as it they recieved this annihilating christian fire, and the survivors being appalled at this horrible havoc, hesitated but general Isner Hyletz and his officers pricked them forward with the bayonet. The retiring Angelinians kept up a t terrific withering fire as the enemy rushed on, and the effects was terrible on the advanc ing Glandelinians which again checked them for a while.The christians were however succored by the main divisions and soon about five o-clock in the afternoon both sides were at a standstill but after still another hour of bloody fighting the Glandelinians were again driven back by overwhelming numbers, and so fierce had the conflict been that afternoon that the whole line of positions resembled a long volcanic fissure in x severe action the whole batt le field apparently hidden in thick wreaths of powder smoke. Having recovered long before this from the fury of the enemys fire and counter onslaught, the Abyssinkilians and Angelinians massed together and at six thirty swept up the sides of the works pouring tward th the gray lines with a fury that was tremendous, but as they reached the top they were met by the same kind of a withering fire, but neve nevertheless most of the Angelinian survivors swarmed over theworks, using thei r bayonets with good effect, and drove back a good part of the enemys lines with their dead and wounded covering the ground like grass cut by a lawn mow.But a id the dreadful carnage they were added by Gandriffs divisions of Abyssinkilians and also by general Whitehead, and after two more of the most destructive charges, and charging upon them again and again, began to make further successes, while general Gregnswalds no not suffering much from the enemys onset any more as the Glandelinians along his own front was at a stand still, massed his men t oget her, and also began to press on mingling with the desperate gunners, and the very line of intrenchments they were pressing through a -d and over were not fairly packed with the purple coats and the red-coated Abyssinkilians, who again charged yelling their battle cries in defiance of the yells of the enemy. Clean over the line of works they poured and soon drove theemy enemy a considerable distance away from the position, only to incur the full fury of the enemys batteries on the main ridges of the Bondonia Hills. The whole line then fell back to their former positions and night closed the scene of conflict.But the battle was not to be over. It was the purpose of all the christian commanders to force the enemy out of those villiages if it took the last man to make them go, and s so all night long the enemys lines were cannonaded heavily, while the christian armies made preparations to resume the attack on the morrow, bringing up fresh artillery, again changing their positions, and strength ening their lines. On the morrow of the third day the struggle was again resumed. This time the whole of the enemys un line under Isner Hyletzo being also reinforced made another terrific stand against the christian assailants, and the carnage was again resumed and became very fearful this

A time hundreds after hundreds of volleys being fired per minute, and even masses of the christians fell riddled by bullets.The struggle on this day was raging with greater fury now, and as the Glandelinians began to show their most desperate resistance, and even in the bargian repulsed a des perate charge made by overwhelming numbers of Abyssinkilians, and which lasted for fourteen minutes, and then counter charged with such feriocty as to almost drive back the christian center, which was then suffering the most horrible loss.For three hours the Glandelinians pressed them hard, ad and des pite the terrific fire from the Abyssinkilian and Angelinians drove them all the way back tward their new positions, and even from them, and also captured a good part of this new line of positions, and fairly held them though five hundred volleys of shells tore their lines again and again as the main christian batteries let loose their hellstorm of firing.

Tward the afternoon during a lull in the infantry actions, general Greenswalds reformed his shattered and broken lines and with the fresh divisions under Rae advanced again, and again charged forward tward the works to try and carry them.Though the enemys awful fire tore fierce gaps in the lines of the christians, the survivors continued to press on in full array, and as they drew nearer, a part of their line encountered a furious discharge of the enemys firearms and cannonsimultaneously which shattered their columns, and they fell back, but the other columns still pressed on in their furious charge, and the onely along this point by this time having reloaded all their firearms and canno n which now had been silent for ten minutes, opened simultaneously all along the whole line, and the whole surge of Angelinians were almost desciminated, and the very hell and damnation seemed to tear down their whole entire surviving columns as they slowly retired.

There was a lull now of another hour or untill two o-clock and then Greenswald despite his already tremendous losses and the deaths of several of his officer generals sent forward more immense columns to resume the attack, and this time the onely allowed them to come right in front of their works, then they poured in that same awful fire, but point blank this time, tens of thousands of Angelinians were mowed down, and scores of the other advancing regimonts were literally extinguished within fifteen minutes, but the main body not recieving this heavy fire rallied the shattered divisions in their front and soon resumed the furious charge driving the foe clear from the works and back for two miles.

The front line of the christians as they poured over the works in a great human torrent miles long as they apparently were had a narrow escape from annihilation as they advanced under a most galling fire which tore gap after gap in their massive lines, and fairly shat tered them to fragments.Advancing with great energy the main columns for following these crushed divisions tried with great a energy to recapture the works and soon succeeded, then crashed upon the demorilized lines in gray which were retiring hastily in their own front, and swiftly pressed them back and clear to their own main positions with the most frightful loss.

The next day however came the main Glandelinian armies under .. Manley with general Mc-Hollesér Johnston in person.With the presence of this high and main supreme commander the Glandelinians had hopes of success and so on the fourth day with more reinforcements ariving to their assistance began to make the most furious efforts to drive the christians back from the works they had retaken, and this they succeeded in doing after a most bloody cont est raging all day in which five hundred charges were made by the enemy. The Angelinians and Abyssinkilians were furious over this, and as the enemy-again in the evening came rushing forward in frightful array led by fourteen Glandelinian generals with Hendandon leading in person the christians let loose with all their firearms and artillery in one terrific blast upon the charging columns in gray, sweeping their main line of assault to poe pieces , making horrible gaps in their other lines of successive successive assaults and so badly mangled their general line of attack, that at last the Glandelinians began to hesitate and she showed signs of consternation.The Glandelinians however soon recovered from their confusion and rushing onward again like a swarming legion of deo demons, carried the christian positions and barrt batteries once more, and swung the guns around and opened fire once more, while the others soon followed the retreating Angelinians and Abyssin,kilians driving them all the way to their own works, and also capturing them in their vehement headlong charge, and during a storm of fierce fighting in- which both sides seemed to be threa threatened with annihilation, the Glandelinians holding them to the last, and general Bernard Dunn brought up several parks of artillery for the enemy being Kruppt and ca centermeter guns and these almost slaughtered the christians

I4I whole divisions as they retreated. This was the severest blow the christ ian army had been struck, and that evening general Hanson Vivian himself seeing this occur, and knowing that his whole center was in danger of bei being crushed to fragments, did his best to have them rallied, and managed to hold the enemy at bay untill night fall, massing four hundred thousand under Kindernine tward the captured works, while general Prayering brought up nine hundred thousand, and these succeeded in halt ing the retreating christians, while general summer advanced one million Angelinians forward with tremendous fury, and these christian generals with their divisions tried their best to recapture the works, and the struggle became more fearful. The christian losses was tremendous and despite the discouragement of two of their leaders who ordered a retreat, they only recovered from the shock, and resumed the assault sweeping forward with seemingly irrestible force, but again the works and the enemys lines seemed to fairly blaze as all the Glandelinians seemed to open fire with cannon and musketry. On came the survivors determined at all costs to recapture the position, and at last succeeded in capturing a certain section of the line of works though they were mowed down in such horrible numbers that ten divisions were reduced to regiments. The enemy in full force and now also led by Federal swept forward with indescriable fury t o retake these works, and though the christian fire became so fierce and the discharge of artillery so deadly and incessant that the foe div isions were shattered to mere regiments, the enemy yelling like demons stil still came on with great vehemence and violence, and again the brave Angelinians were compelled to recoil li leaving piles upon piles of ded dead and wounded in their short line of retreat. The works were filled almost to the top with dead n and wounded. Inspired by their leaders the foe kept on advancing, but more cautiously now and though they were still shot down by hundreds per second the Glandelinians reinforced by Gandon Gander Vivian who brought up more cannon cont inued to press on and shelled the christian lines with their advancing batteries. Yet most of the Angelinians having taken to cover had rallied before this, Hanson Vivians main divisions supporting them, and they counter charged the enemy likefiends storming the advancing battery, capturing it, and rushing upon the enemy in overwhelming numbers and driving them back at the point of the bayonet, and the others quickly swinging the guns around opened fire ploughing the enemys lines through and through, with a series of f fearful broadsides. Yet tward night fall when it was expected that for the night time the fighting would cease the enemy had again came on this time being led b by general Masculine Marcus. This time despite the coming darkness the battle was desperate and extremel y sanguinary. The enemy made every desperate effort effort to again recapture the line of works, and ten generals fell on the foes side and thirteen on the christian in that dreadful bedlam. Also during this vehement charge seven horses were killed under general Federal, Marcus was wounded, and general Adele-De-Garbe lost six horses. So fierce for fully four hours that night was the discharge of musketry that the woods and the positions seemed to be on fire, and the enemy had ben been as whooly determined to recapture the positions as the Angelinians were to hold them, and rushed again and again again upon the christian line but again and again reaching the main line under general Calsoline who poured in a fire that destroyed two of the divisions of Glandelinians at every onslaught and caused the survivors which recieved also the full effect of this fire to recoil in a panic. So after this the fifth day of the cont est was over.

Both sides that remainder of the night amid occasional artillery conflicts changed their positions, and general Dunbar and Lovechild coming up with four hundred thousand more Glandelinians had finally checked the confusion which had been spreading t o the main line, and rallid these combined forces. On the following day it being the sixth day Dunbar, Lovechild, Federal, Masculine and Adele-De-Garne threw their divisions forward simultaneously to the charge and soon leading in person di directed their main force upon the christian line, but the christian fire was so heavy that the Glandelinians fell by wholesale numbers, Dunbar and Lovechild were mortally woundd wounded, while Masculine was severely wounded, and all his staff were either killed or wounded. These three Glandelinian divisions torn to fragments hastily retired. However Federal at another section of the battle line had been simult aneously pushing pushing forward with seven hundred thousand men, which he threw against the one million christian troops under general Sampson with merciless fury, and though the first division of the foe of about seventy thousand was reduced to fifty by the terrific combined artillery and musketry fire all along the entire christian line, the other forces of Federal still came on with horrible fury and drove in a part of the christian line, the Glandelinian officers being unable to control their men during this charge, they were so reckless and frenzy stricken. The carnage was more dreadful than on the former days and the firing on both sides all this while which had been incessant had increased to redoubled fury as more joined in the conflict.

Kindernines forces were attacked simultaneously, and during the most sanguinary conflict the enemy carried his works, and drove all before them. The furious Glandelinians pressed on carrying other works under a galling fire when a fresh of force of Angelinians under general Buckwick Baldwin the fierce veteran commander arived and repelled the enemy finally driving the Glandelinians back step by step. Federals divisions were also seen driven back, and now the large christian columns pressed upon the recoiling divisions of Glandelinians with such fury that general Shoreder had to come to the aid of Federal, and with the combined forces and seven hunf hundred cannon rallied the retreating Glandelinians, and advanced again driving back the christians with the loss of thirty thousand in fifteen minutes. Such firing as was in this battle was never heard before. Federal in the meantime rallied the shattered parts of h s own forces then nearest the stubborn christian lines and soon again drove back a large part of the Angelinian columns , and as the Angelinians were again reinforced and rallied, the awful carnage increased in more greater fury, and then Federal and and Shroeder who also came up to his aid resumed the attack upon the Angelinian Angelinians and again pressed them back for a mile to the main christian position, whole Shoreder and Shroeder also resumed the attack upon Greenswalds men and drovehis Abyssinkilians back half a mile beyond their own lines of works but suffering horrible loss es during this vehement and violent onset.

At this juncture the Abyssinkilians under general Tony Senguine had be veen sent By Bunte to Hanson with some forces so days before and having ari ved that night with a pa part of Hansions also and covering the retrr retreating forces, did their best also to repell the charging columns of Glandelinians who were yelling most frightfully, but after long stubborn fighting they were handsomely repulsed, the enemy pressing on so furiously that the Abyssinkilians were demorilized, and fully exposed to the fire of the captured guns which caused them to suffer such fearful losses and many of them officers that they were compelled to fall back to the last line of positions which they had left. But this was all the further the enemy advanced and occupying these works which they had captured and giving vent to all their frightful yells, the Glandelinians concentrated, while now all the Angelinian batteries opened a storm og shells and shrapnell upon the massive lines in gray fairly tearing them to pieces. The men were mowed down by malitudes per hour and demorilized as their men lay in deep long ridges the survivors hastily withdrew, and soon all firing ceased.

The Angelinians were thus quite successful in the six days battle but nevertheless the seige of Glorinia Villiages was broken and the enemy retreated clear to Norma and the Angelinians persueing Hanson immediately made preparations to strengthen the seige, with the armies he had in his own command n and then after engaging the enemy in another actual conflict force the main army out of the remainder of the Glorinia villiages, crush the enemy at Norma, March on Calverine, and overthrow the Glandelinians entirely. While the seige was being progressed the Angelinians had reoccupied all their abandoned positions, a and by the help of the glow of the distant conflargrations still burning here and there moved forward slowly step by step tightening the siege f Norma and making preparations to resume the struggle for the villiage villiages of Glorini a and then smash the foe at Norma Catherine and capture the c city. All batteries were pointed tward the enemys lines, more works were thrown up, and strong fortifications were constructed by hundre hundreds of thousands of men, who even used cotton looms and all kinds of broken machinery they dragged out of captured child slave factoris factories and pla pla plantations in some of the t owns they had already captured for abatis and obstructions. Many times the enemys sesearchlights would flash upon the workers which caused great conster nation, and by the frequency of these flashlights the christian artillery never stopped firing all those seven days of preparations and concentration. At half past five the next morning the Angelinians decided to force the other villiages of Glorinia called Eva Dinia, and scouts were sent out to keep a shar plook out for the enemy, and soon saw them driving in the pickets below. It was evident that the Glandelinians were determined to break the seige and were thus resuming the series of battles which had raged so freqquently over so wide a space around Norma Catherine.

On came the Glandelinians in seemingly endless columns advancing furiously up the hills and shouting in voices-the most odious and horrifying, giving forth yell after yell.General Greenswald who had been reinforced heavily during those seven days of preparations saw that the enemy was bound to carry the hill at all hazards. So at his command and at the command of all his officers the Abyssinkilins opened fire with the most frightful effect hammering away with musketry and cannon as the enemy came rushing up seemingly into the very jaws of death.These Glandelinian columns kept up the assault for fully six hours making series of attacks but in vain and they graudally retired and again lulled the series of conflicts. Simultaneously to these great assaults general Cansions Angelinians holding a long line of works fronting Eva Dania was assaulted by a large force of Glandelinians at la half past two in the afternoon after the struggle elsewhere during those six hours had ceased the Glandelinian assailants being under Melby and after a few hours struggle had been defeated with a loss of more than one hundred thousand out of his seven hundred thousand. Cansion, and even Melby the two chief leaders on both sides had fallen j o mortally wounded amid the dreadful carnage.

Indeed the way the outlook seemed to be it was possible that the Angelinians were about to win one of the first fiercest seiges of the war and also one of the fiercefiercest battles and seiges the world had ever seen. For despite all the fury of the Glandelinian assaults here and there general Bunte, the others, and Hanson still retained all their strong positions, and even Buntes own right which had been formely routed had been rallied behind a new position, and fierce engagements on the Normas bridges, on railroad bridges, and for miles along the tracks all along the line had been sweeping christian successes the terrible storm of christian shells during the nightly bombardments blowing the enemys stockades and positions and even munition works to pieces causing gigantic explosions, tearing up the railroad t ies of the tracks running through and past the enemys positions, bending the rails and shattering whole trains of cars and causing immense conflargrations. Even at one point to keep the Glandelinians from making a successful advance the Angelinians themselves had under a terrific fire destroyed many bridges and railroad tracks, this being done at long distances. The Angelinians in doing this formed lines a, along one side of the tracks with crowba rs and poles placed there under the rails, and hoisting all at once turned over many rods at one time. The ties were then placed in piles and the rails as they were loosened would be placed across the log heaps. When a sufficient muber of rails were p a placed upon a pile of t ies it would be set on fire. This would heat the rails so much in the middle that being over the main point of the fire than at the ends s that they would naturally bend of their own weights, but the Angelinians to increase the damage would take tongs and one or two men at each end of the rail would carry it, force it against the nearest trees, and twist it around, thus leaving rails forming bands to armament the forest trees near Norma Catherine.

It was some days later when along the right of Tony Genguines divisions of Abyssinkilians and those under Marcus and Mr Nero were concentrating tward the main sections of the Glorinia villiages when the enemy advanced again with the intention of trying to raise the seige of Norma Catherine. As the fierce savage Glandelinian columns swept on tward them there suddenly came the most tremendous roll of one hundred and eighty thousand muskets at once followed by the volcanic roar of many cannon along the whole christian / line, and immediately lines in gray disolved, and countless piles lay on the ground, or on the hillsides, while elsewhere countless columns of puffing smoke arose from the top of the hill i mingled with the increasing roar of artillery, and torrents of canister, shells, and minnie balls tore through the other por tion of the enemys lines, and back went the survivors in the wildest confusion. Despite some of the success they had made the enmy had as much good luck as the serpent has under the Heels of the blessed Virgin.

A little later the Glandelinians tried their hand in the card play on general Greenswald.Great columns in in gray under general Robert Brooks and also under Shroeder advanced to make a sweeping attack.The attack was sweepingly and most driving success ful as far as that two words go but the batteries of the christian artillery divisions had too good a mark to miss and a stream of shot and shell tore the Glandelinian wave into ten pieces.Some portions of the Glandelinian columns not wishing to lose the success they had gained rallied and continued on, but now to add to the damage general Hackinewlee let go his own artillery fire upon upon the furiously advancing surviving columns of gray, and tore their line to pieces.A portion immediately fell back panic stricken but still the remainder moved forward and attacked the christian forces he here with indescriable ferocity, and yelling with preternt preternautrlal fury, throwing into their distore distorted countenances fearful devilish expressions, and again and again they raised their deafening and appalling yells to one simultaneous angry xry cry of legion-fiend, of rage, and revenge over their scathing losses. Though most of the Glandelinian assailants had been repulsed Hendson Henderson with about thirty five thousand Glandelinians, all of which was left to the huge column continued to rush on with murderous fury, and resumed the furious and bloody attack upon the divisions under Hackinewlee, and though their advanced platoons disolved, the survivors still came on to the assault with the most furious desperation and merciless fury.The fighting indeed was severe and continual, and the A Angelinians inspired by the reckless bravety of their officers, and generals held their position with the same great desperation, during which time though Henderson could not make any serious impression on the massive christian lines or drive them back kept on at the assaults with great stubgorness untill threatened with annihilation they finally gave it up and recoiled. Greenswald reported his losses as three hundred thousand on that bloody day while the enemys was si x hundred and fifty seven thousand in killed and wounded.

But he or the other leaders were not the only ones engaged in the struggle. Baldwins main line was also assaulted, and the assault was so fierce that aid had to be sent to him to help his men hold their ground. Though repulsed once the Glandelinians only came on again, the nearest sweeping close up to Baldwins divisions Atacking them in large bodies and with great impetiously, but Baldwins christians had formed firm and compact lines and the appearance of both sides for fully four hours and a half was hidden from view by the powder smoke so fierce was the discharge of musketry. Eva after those four hours the struggle continued to rage on for hours with frightful and unabated fury, and even the suddeness of each succeeding assault could not disconcert the defenders who at Baldwins command stuck to their positions untill the enemy were glad to give it up.

Remington Standards Abyssinkilians was also attacked by general Brackets Glandelinians and were forced to fall back in disorder without offering resistance on account of some blunder but were halted and reformed by the main divisions behind and as the assailants continued the assault and moving forward in thick columns with massive lines of grenadiers, the biggest guns of the christians were massed upon them, the clamor of the battle roared louder than any battle before, and series upon series of great gaps were ploughed in the enemys lines.For five hours along this section the battle raged with uncoasing fury, the whi whole ridge of low hills as far as eyes could reach being ablaze with a steady fire of musketry and cannon, and though exposed terrifically already for five hours, and though column after column minute by minute was torn to fragments or shot to pieces, the survivors neither fell back or halted and their daring charges. Death and destruction was everywhere. Finally on the seven hour the enemy rallying once more for the charge made a desperate and very bold push forward, and soon Brackets Glandelinians broke through the front line of the christian works and swinging the guns around opened a fr fearful fire, but the Angelinians despite the dreadful carnage and awed at the gallentry of their brave leaders pushed forward to reteke the works, and again managed to drive back the foe right and left. The enemy duri ng those six hours had made thirteen great onslaughts, with the same result.

manner. The critical moment was now ariving when the long lines of works was reached at three different points by the infurinted Glandelinian assailants. Almost simultaneously Hendersonins columns of Mc-Hollestinians rushed clear in front of the positions held by general Mansions army only to be met by a terrific fire of artillery and musketry as to tear this portion of the line of assault almost out of existance. Hendonsons was first near the christians along his front and attacked them with almost superhumnn effort, while almost immediately afterwards Schroeder came up under fire of all the christian guns, while the Gmarians under general James Franklin Gannon assailed Francis Joices divisions of Abyssinkilians with indescribable fury. All of the christian generals seemed to be exposed as the enemy returned the fire but they were not hit.General Solat Solitary at this moment came to his command in time to immediately change front, and he also opposed James Gannons divisions rushing up, almostwith preternatural fury to his positions, and by his appearance the brave Angelinians managed to hold their ground despite the fury of the assault of the enemy..... Yet the enemy during this portion of the bloody engagement had driven the Angelinians on general Jennings left back beyond a high point which they at once occupied, only to find it was a trap, and two quarters of their number were either cut down or captured while the remainder fled like frightened cattle.....Dead and wounded Abyssinkilians and Angelinians lay in many heaps and thickly strewn over the works in all directions as far as eye could reach.

Violet and her sisters who watchd this frightful contest at a safe distance were more horrified at the number of Glandelinians who encumbered the upper parts of the hills/..... Jennings whose trop troops had rallied after seeing the enemy along their part run into the trap inflicted terrible losses on the fleeing Glandelinians, and as they pressed forward saw general Hindernines divisions coming to their aid and to the aid of other christian forces who met the succession of furious and bloody assaults of the enemy, and when finally they did get into position a furious death struggle raged with them and the trappd Glandelinians.Many then surrendered, and the remainder rushed down the hill in precipitate flight. Jacob Baldwin quickly followed Hindernine then came general Kindernine, and turning to the right quickly came upon general Mansions divisions which at the time had also been driven into confusion from their heavy losses, and exhuat haustion of ammunit ion.Kindernine so applied them with five hundred rounds, while Honderson kept pushing forward his reckless survivors to drive the christians back from the positio n they were so stubbornly defending.
Hackinewless divisions were lso also supplied and rallied those not in order and when the Glandelinians were thrown upon their left and center with tremendous fury, they were met with such great resistance that at last for a-time at least after three hours their advance was slightly checked. The Glandelinians renwe renewing the assault upon Greenswalds divisions rushed upward under a galling fire, but for all their sv severe losses they failed t o break the christian line, and their own left was rolled up with the loss of fourty officers of all rank, with tens od thousands of men-.....The fighting during these assaults had been very bloody, and the hill tops were fairly packed with the o bodies of the dead and wounded the furious assaults at all points of the battle line having raged all that day, and though even after the evening was gone steady and determined attacks were continued on the christian lines, the Angelinians clung to their works against every effort to dislodge them, though woeful numbers fell on their side alone.

T he divisions under general Hackinewloe were the first to drive back the assau assailants, and s on the main divisions of the Glandelinians gave way and fell back to their own own main line in s ullen rage. They had failed exceedingly and they realized it. The way violet and her sisters were treated for their bravery during the battle was indescribable. Though the little girls took no means to dare go too near the conflict, to dare command any troops or soldiers, or dare join the conflict which of course they had felt like doing very u much, they undertsood the work of the signal xo corps well, and answered every signal they saw, and when the signal bearer would be killed or wounded, we even took the flag of the color bearer when he fell and would rally the men on to victory, every time they saw the slightest sign of faltering.

Gertrude Angeline herself was different from the vivian girls and once dared to spring in front of the christian soldiers and lead a furious counter charge. Though soldiers fell all around her like flies before the wind, and though shells boomed and nabgled about her every second she lead the led them all the way and came off scathless. ## CHAPTER SEVENTEEN.

SECOND DAY OF THE FRIGHTFUL STRUGGLE.....
'MORE BRAVERY OF VIOLET AND HER SISTERS.....'' AND DEATH OF GENERAL HENDENDON.....

On the next day general Federal undaunted by his recent defeats anything unheard of in his life before to him it was very unusual, for he was a man considered never to be beaten, he decided to try and break Buntes line, while he planned to have Hendendon to assail the christian armies that had been engaged the day before. So this time he advanced over I,000,000 men to assail the christian line, this time with all their fury. Hendendon was in advance with about four hundred thousand men, Shroeder also leading four hundred thousand to attack Greenswalds divisions. Federal under the direction of Mc-Hollester Johnston the main comm commander of all the glandelinian armies was ordered to command the whole body of assailants, and he pushed them fou forward to the attack at five thirty in the morning. Shrods and Shroders divisions apparently swept forward with irrestible fury. Yet for hald an hour general Hackinewlees divisions supported by those of galdwins held their fire untill the enemy came within four yards, then there was a simultaneous blaze of musketry for nearly the length of ten miles, the uproar being like the roaring of hell, and for a while the effects we were very uncertain for the smoke clouds became so qui thick. It was indeed something fearful the way the christian fire was opened and before the real havoc was realized the greatest force of the first part of this attack fell upon galdwins line with great fury, and simultaneously as the surviving foe divisions rushed upon Hackerinewlees Abyssinkilians they made what front they could and continued to hold their ground stubbornly untill the attacking columns of Glandelinians overlapped Joices right compelling his forces to give way.The whole right of Joices division was rolled up but they retired in good order as far as the main position of general germanine vivians, which quickly opened a most destructive fire upon the advancing columns in gray. The glandelinians kept on advancing nevertheless and were soon abreast of Germaines line of works and artillery, but were met by a vertible tempest of musketry and cannon as they came within range, and now during the sharp e engagement matters looked very sharp for thechristians at this point the enemy advancing upon them with irrestible force despite the dreadful fire of artillery from the entire christian line. Germaine vivian after sending aquick message to haston the concentration of kindernins Kindernines main divisions galloped to the rear of Joices demorilized troops and assisted his officers in rallying them, and even directed a terrific fire of artillery, when suddenly the head of Shroeders glandainian troops appeared in ten large double columns rushing tward germaines divisions at a furious trot and moving obliquely to the left to meet the right of the main columns of glandelinians which had swung around in that direction, and succeeding swept forward with irrestible force, carrying all before them. The can carnage now was terrible. The glandelinian troops were unable to be checked, their attack was so vehement and violent and though the murderous christian fire mowed them down in scores of thousands they only kept up their furious charge, and now also general Hackerinewlees divisions were thrown back upon the rear line of works, where they soon made a most furious and stubborn stand.....

But Shroe der and Henderson kept on charging furiously and with the same irrestible force, and when they carnequite near to Jennings line they were met by a fire of musketry that mowed them down reducing the nearest columns of many hundreds of thousands f of Glandelinians to fragments in half an hour. A large portion of the surviving columns were hurled back, but the main troops rallied them, and continued on again with seemingly the same resistless force, regardless of the numbers of the christian defenders, and dashed directly upon the divisions under general Hacinewlees surging above the works, but there was a murderous crash of musketry and cannon mingled with the most wild and appalling yells which soon settled down in the incessant and utmost steady roar of hundreds of thousands of firearms along the whole line, and in less than two hours one third of the devoted defenders, and two quarters of the assailants were lying on the summit and besides the works in piles, ad strewn over the works in dead and wounded together, but the Angelinians had delivered a staggering blow and for good and all broken the vehement attack of the enemy at this point.

Kindernines forces at this time came to the support of germaine and Heckinoless divisions, yet here the enemy had rushed on and captured a long line of works just within sight of violet who was watching the great conflict in horror and excitement, and the glandelinians only held them a few minutes when a greater force of infantry under Baldwin and Kindernine and other officers came dashing forward with amazing fury, and recaptured them before the Glandelinian defenders were aware of the presence of the Angelinian reinforcements, the fire along this portion of the christian line being terrific.Yet at other sections of the line the main body of the enemy still came on and were recieved with great and merciless fury but soon general Hackinwlees divisions despite their vehement stand were driven back with the most tremendous loss tward Kindernines own position, the enemy swarming over the abandoned position in great numbers, and threatening to carry all before them.

The lines of the assailant during this portion of the fierce attack was fairly shot to pieces however, yet columns behind kept on pressing those in front forward, and the gallent Glandelinians now attacked Kindernines divisions in front, and on the right with great vigor. the foe seemingly to advance with the fury and speed of racers, and they soon reached a line of heavily armed works under general Daniel Shoemannia. The Glandelinians were bound to drive the Angelinians from the hills at all costs if they were at all to break the seige of Norma Catherine, adeat all hazards, and though it seemed as if their ranks were mowed down at every step, they still continued the attack, rallying any of the divisions ahead of them which became demorilized, and the assault was continued with vehemency that was beyond description. Simultaneously a most furious and impetious attack was made upon Germaines forces again, and soon though they were really checked by their most horrible losses, and seven generals killed, they rallied and again resumed the attack without having fallen back a step pressing the christians back, while other portions of the immense Glandelinian tidal wave made series of attacks upon the main christian line in which the Glandelinian general Henderson was shot from his horse h s he rode up close to the christian position in the midst of a wl weltering fire, which mowed the enemy down like grass in every direction during each successive assault. Yet though the christian line had held for a time the position was now becoming untenable by reason of the successive assaults of the undaunted t enemy, who whether they knew of the death of their leader or not, did not give up, and so the Angelinians under Germaine and Joice gradually retired and in some disorder.

The struggle between Federal and Greenswald was quite equal in its violence and fury. The Glandelinians along this portion also advanced furiously up the slight rise of ground as fas t as they could move up a hill and though the christian fire cut them down in masses at every step, made one furious charge after another upon the christian line, rolling up their left wi wing in great confusu confusion and heavy loss tward the main positions, held by a part of Hansons main command, pouring in a hot fire as they continued to charge and inflicting more heavy loss.

On marched the enemy forcing general Clide Quimbies Abyssinkilians back with more tremendous loss during this bloody attack than they recieved themselves, when general Joseph Carters Angelinians came up to their support and resumed the offensive, but could not for a time check the furious foe, though they inflicted frightful loss at every volley volley. Yet each attempt of the enemy to capture the works was completely unsuccessful, and yet the heavy and bloody assaults were continued upon these works with unabated fury, and so persistent were these attacks on the front of General Joseph Carters divisions who were holding the works at all risks, that other large troops of Abyssinkilians were brought up in the rear to his support, and met the persitent onsets of the enemy with the most indescribable fury.

Yet the assailants kept pressing on furiously and lapping the right of Carters forces made a sudden and bloodier attack upon it, and though the overlapping assault came unexpectedly, Clyde Quimbie came to Carters aid with resr reserves and soon checked the enemy, the dead and wounded lying in masses or mulit udes all around. Yet the desperate Glandelinians were bound to keep up their advance feeling it an insult b to be checked by the christians, and again pressed on furiously in immense bodies, and threw themselves in heavy masses once more again aeagainst Greenswalds center and right, which assisted by the timely a arival of Ant onioe Sanguines brigades held the positions and frightful was the losses on both sides. Nevertheless a part of this Glandelinian wave moving with irrestible force seemed to be more enraged and determined than checked, for they came on with merciless fury against Mansions lines. Three o of his christian generals Kallestene, Jimmie Horten, and Bronce Engle another Abyssinkilian commander fell riddled by bullets. Federals Glandelinians made vehement efforts to break through Mansions stubborn christian lines the struggle here raging with the most bloody fury and with unabated energy, while fresh assaults were also being made upon other portions of Greenswalds christian line. Nevertheless at all hazards the Abyssinkilians stuck to their works despite the fierce assaults.Yet with horrible fury the large gray columns pressed forward again to the attack, and though their main columns were torn and shattered by the christian fire, they steadily pressed on the ground hang strewn with piles of their dead and wounded once more. Yet undaunted by their losses the Glandelinians continued the attack.

In the meantime general Bunte recieved the fiercest of this great Glandelinian attack. Heavy Glandelinian columns under Hendendon came into full view of his Angelinians and Abyssinkilians, one big column after another, first at a trot, then in quick time, and then in a furious rush tward the christian works.The first sixteen big columns fairly disolved before the pitiless christian fire which met them but the largest columns in the rear pressed forward with indescribable fury, over the windrows of their own dead and dying, and assailed the Abyssinkilian forces with all their might and courage.

The gallent Abyssinkilians despite the odds and the fury of the assault whose pressure was so intense as to bend their whole line backwards, stood stubbornly and manfully to their works, continueing the furious fight in the rear, the enemy keeping up a furious storm of firing at short range with their musketry and capt captured gathling guns, but each onset they made was met by the bayonet and pikes. Kimballs divisions after some sanguinary fighting began to clear their own front, pressing back the assailants and soon the whole christian line at this point recovered their works and soon drove all the Glandelinians out with many windrows of dead and wounded outside, and inside the works.

While this unequal struggle was progressing, the battle with Nero Vemboembers forces of Abyssinkilians supported by those of Kindernine was still more fearful and more determined. After Joice Flallers divisions and joseph Violetins Angelinin Angelinians retired in disorder but under cover of Baldwins batteries, and the artillery fire of Hackineless cannon the Glandelinians under Shroeder ,made furious attempts to capture these works but during the bloody struggle their many divisions were torn to fragments by the christian fire, and swept back with more dreadful loss upon the main bodies of the assailants But as the attacking forces behind the demorilized divisions poured through the immense gap that made the Angelinians under Kindernine draw back from the works, while fresh forces swept up to their aid throwing themselves across the front of the retiring christians or at least columns, and rallying the divisions under Hackinewlees poured a more steady fire upon the steadily advancing Glandelinian columns, who continually rushed to the attack, again and again forcing Hackinowlees divisions and driving them to the main line of works and over them where they broke into disorderly confusion but were soon rallied by their officers who now withstood all the dangers of the battle rather than see the christian armies be defeated. On came the Glandelinian columns in greater fury but this time with very long seried lines, but also with a very narrow front, but extending as far as eye could reach. General Hackinewlees best battalions of artillery were ordered up into positions, but there was a great mixup among the divisions of men and the batteries, and the guns were not brought up to the position in time to fire upon the furiously advancing Glandelinians, which all the while had offered a fair mark for at artillery, and when the guns did come up in about half an hour they came in time, but only in time to be captured by the yelling assailants who swung them around and opened fire.

General Hackinwlee and those of other similar commanders fought as long as fighting was of any use but t o the sadness of the generals the poor Angelinians were deprived of the assassi assistance of the artilley artillery which constituted the chief stre strength and so they could do but little to check the furious onward rush of the revengeful Glandelinian forces who soon began to overrun the entire line of bra breastworks capturing some of the best officers general Hackenbowloo depended upon, six hundred fresh pieces of artillery, and moving down fourty thousand men within fifteen minutes.

So quickly did the whole thing happen that the extent of the disaster which appeared to occur with fatal results could not be realized at once. Shrouders Glandelinians who made this disasterous assault had by this time, by not meeting meeting meeting any further christian fire for nearly half an hour had recovered their formation and extending their lines along the works n now resumed their advance, when Hackinewlees divisions saddened at the terrible blow they recieved rapidly drew back, but every one of Joices line which still held poured in a galling fire upon the left of the Glandelinian columns, but they themselves wee thrown back with the heaviest loss. General Mignon Teytle whose great divisions of Abyssinkilian brigades were in reserve hastened to throw them in front of the big massive Glandelinian columns who were again rushing forward with indescriable fury, and even charging as furiously as they knew how. The two long lines of assailants came surging tward theworks but were met by an annihilating fire which mowed hundreds of their ranks down in quick succession. Yet the attack was still pressed with great determination and bloody fury, and now the carnage was awf awful to witness, the wicked Glandelinians sweeping the front line of trenches their whole length with frightful fury, and though their right and center was still exposed to the most terrific withering fire from the main works still held by the christians on the broad tops of these corpse strewn hills, the assailants still pressed on, their own covering fire of artiollery sweeping all the main approaches to the line of christian works, but nevertheless the main line of the assailants were soon badly broken up and driven back in disorder and with more heavy loss before it came well within range of the christian musketry. However along Buntes main line the entire main bodies of assailants pressed forward and made a very heavy and more bloody attack upon the dicisions of Abyssinkilians under general Girlin which gave way after four hours of desperate fighting, and the divisions under Walter Jennings which had alone retaind their own position untill this critical moment had their right and left rolled up and their center turned after a long and bloody struggle, and was also forced back with terrific loss. As the many Glandel nian columns swept over these works they rushed on furiously after the retiring divisions under general Jennings, and line after line followed, colum following column untill the large and extensive space enclosed by the breastworks and intrenchements captured were soon filled with writhing multitudes of Glandelinians looking like so many girls in their hair attire, upon which Baldwins batteries were now massed, and shattering their line to pieces. Hackenlwlees divisions had rallied and a,s also those of the other defeated commands by this time, and had taken a stand by their second line of works and soon these christ ian officers were watching with great care the murderous storming fire of their own lines which was now becoming so fierce, incessant, and deadly that all the officers feared the men would exhuast their supply of ammunition before this velment and violent assault of the enemy which was now resumed would be half over. The enemy having again recovered their formation was steadily advancing through this fearful st orm of musketry that swept clear through their massive lines, taring them asunder, and mowing men down in thousands like an execution, and indeed all the christ ian generals saw b very plainly, indeed too plainly the terrible and in tolerable havoc that was made in the long massive lines of the furious assailants, and wondered with horror w when it was going to end, and how the Glandelinians could stand such wholesale losses.

Violet and her sisters also themselves wondered what was the matter with the Glandelinian generals generals, and what was it that made them drive their men forward to such inhuman slaughter, which deserved the word of murder instead of mere war. Even while violet and her sisters looked on in abject terror and bloodcurldling horror at the frightful assassination of Glandelinian soldiers, the sleeves of their arms and even their dresses were so badly ripped by thron bushes that their delecate necks, chests and shoulders were co mpletely revealed looking more like children ready to go to their bath in rags than out in the rear of a bloody battle field.

John Jennie herself was nursing a wound in her hand, hr her dress was torn worse than the others, and one of her arms was without a sleeve at all. Joice was also slightly wounded and was in the same condition as violet, and was compelled to also nurse a wound in her shoulder. Angeline had her clothes in shreds her arms and neck bared like violet's. It was the same like with the other little girls only they had escaped without a sct scratch. They had got this way from being persued and chaced through a large thorn hed ge. All the very minutes they looked upon the scee scene of frightful slaughter a very tempest of bullets was flying all around them but the brave little girls horrified by the frightful scenes they could not help beholding and forgetful of all else paid no attention to their great danger untill one of the generals rode up to them saying kind of sternly;

"You children had better get away from this region mighty quick if you do not want to be killed. I'm sure the enemy will carry the works before long and if you get into their clutches you will not be able to say that I did not warn you. Go along now and be quick about it, for my sake and for the sake of your friends."

Recovering themselves the little girls obeyed while the gensal sent an order for more mamunition.....Even the scene the poor little Vivian Girls witnessed was en ugh to horrf horrifying them to the very last moment. In the space of five hundred yards as well as along the length of two thousand yards over one hundred thousand Glandelinians lay in front of the works defended by the brave Angelinians, and on the sides of the hills many of the other hundreds of thousands hd had bea killed or wounde outright, thousands of others being so badly mangled as not being able to leave the slopes. Yet it was amazing to violet and her sisters to have seen as they did the surviving Glandelinians continue the attack in the face of that merciless fr fire. Baldwins gun e gunners were hal handling their artillery in the most splinded manner during this fierce and bloody action, Baldwin himself strengthening the christian line at all points, and also directing the destructivefire of other christian batteries with the grea greatest skill and bravery, though of course the gunners weremany times wiped out by the enemys return fire, with all theartillery horses and drivers and this had happened as fast as fresh men took their places! Besides reaching the front of the attacking columns the christian cannon and musketry fire had also reached thesupporting divisions tearing up their lines in a most frightful manner. The general columns of the Glandelinian assailants during this most bloody action suffered terrible losses, and finally they refused to resume the assault any f r further along this point of the line.

On the christian right where the firing lines extended under Kindernine the assailants under Crated was broken at one point by the fury of the christ ian counter charges which tore them to fragments time and again, the demoralized columns at that point being also driven back with heavy loss, but the torn and shattered divisions were soon restored with heavy reinforcements, and they resumed the assault upon Kindernine but did not yell any more. Terrible indeed was the result of this long and bloody struggle along the entire line of christians commanded personally by general Kindernin Kindernine which during this grand and furious attack and struggle and after presented a most horrible storm of assassinating slaughter.

Along Buntes line the struggle was more desperate and merciless for despite their heavy losses the Glandelinians only pressed forward to the attack again and though checked so many times before now leapt over the works rea trecaptured by the rallied Angelinians and for a time possessed the selves of the intrenchments, their attack being more now more irrestiless despite the galling fire poured upon them, and even reached a secn second line of works which was held by a portion of Mansions men and who had by this time discovered the disaster to the shattered divisions under the other various commanders. The assailants moving forward in the face of a storming fire met with more stern and furious resistance than they expected and again their very lines were raked through and through by the terrific fire along the atire line of christians. Yet the heavy gray columns pushed forward with such impeticusity and ferocity and violence, that though the Angelinians tore big gaps in their lines the Glandelinian survivors only came on and the Angelinian forces were soon hastily retiring at this point, not being able to stand before the concentrated attack of the Glandelinians who under heavier fire of the main christian batteries, cont inued to press forward with irrestible force and how the advancing columns survived the sharp and murderous fire that swept through their lines with the most deadly effect was a mystery.

As they continued to advance the fire of the christiand christians became so keen that it tore line after line to tatters, while all about them the shells: shrieks shrieked and exploded with an earsplitting uproar, the minnies moaning and whistling like a furious tempest as they picked victims by the thousands, the shrapnel and canister shot mowing down hundreds of ranks, but being still in great numbers thw they kept on attacking. Indeed a little more and they would succeed in driving the christians l along this portion from the ridges which had been and still were held so stubbornly. The carnage was even more appalling than any one could ever imagine or think. The advancing forces under general Shroeder now reached a new line of works defended by Kindernines left, and which was constructed with great skill, being arraged with an hatis of old cotton looms dragged out of child slave factories and plantations, and even other kinds of machinerty was added to this, and even consisting of limbs limbs and branches intervoven into one anothe another so many t imes times as to form footlocks of the most dangerous character.On rushed the Glandelinians with frightful yells, and over went many tens of thousands for the stretch of five miles and so many of them were impaled by the christian bayonets, by the dangerous wall of abatis, and by the murderous christian fire that only a few thousand of each section of the Glandelinians returned. It was already coming on tward noon and still the immense battle raged. Kinderne Kindernines strong line of battle appeared through the thick clouds of smoke as the second line of the foe swarmed over the dangerous abatis, and in a few minutes a hundred thousand were either killed or wounded. Tens of thousands more had been owed down by the murderous fire of the christians, the thousands having be been picked off as fast as they endeavored to climb the cotton looms.

Despite this terrific superhuman slaughter the wicked Glandelinians were deter ined to sweep the entire christian lines under Kindernine a back right and left at all hazards, and cause them to suffer a total defeat so that the christian line of besiegers would at least be broken at one point, nd so again and again division after nun division swept on but falling in horrible numbers among the abatis, the carnage steadily increasing as the struggle became more pe pertinacious and most desperate . Shroeder led forward again hundreds of thousands after hundreds of thousands determined to capture the long line of obstructions and drive back the desperate defenders from it for if this could not be forced, then the battle would be lost and the slaughter of children in norma be avenged by the christins if they prolonged the seige.

So regardless of the murderous withering fire of christian cannon and musketry which was thinning their main line terribly, the assaiCants again resumed the assault, and while massive lines three deep kept up a storming return fire, many other scores of thousands of Glandelinians sto strove with might and main to destroy the impassable obstructions, and even being again rd reinforced the brave Glandelinians redoubled their exertions, but as fast as they swarmed over the line of abatis, we even with which was mixed with all kinds of burning fir furniture, beds and every kind of household article imaginable, they were mowed down the firing on the christian side being something fearful, and the wreaths of pall of smoke became very dense and intensified for every discharge of musketry and cannon so that the aim of both sides was becoming very uncertain, but nevertheless to keep the enemy from carrying their position or swarming over the abatis, they kept up the firing in the direction of the attacking lines in gray owing down the Glandelinians as fast as they happened to appear through the smoke or over the abatis and even tried to prevent the foe from taking advantage of the smoke they used hundredxs of grenades and other dangerous hand bombs which were hurled upon the foe.

Meanwhile the Glandelinians seeing that even their reck lessness could not drive the christians back from the works beyond the a abatis and being bound to cross them or die in the attempt, crawled forward cautiously under cover of the ever increasing pall of smoke, and reaching the abatis once more raised their horrible bloodcurlding yells, and charged furiously and gallently up to the abatis but all the nearest no matter how -many there were, were mowedcdown as fast as they appeared once more, the Angelinians during this bloody onset having the advantage over the nearest Glandelinian colwans and made horrible use of all their firearms and cannon but now immense columns of the survivors had already surmounted the abatis.These Glandelinians who surmounted the abatis went down by the thousand all along the line, and even all the Angelinian artillery, masses of their own artillery men and ammunition wagons were down, and gallent general Kindernine was the only mounted officer in sight for seeing the frightful slaughter of the scores of thousands of their comrades the main line having come up at this moment had opened with the rest a withering storm of musket ry and now the whole scene became like a great forest fire at once. A hundred and fifty of his three hundred and fifty six staff officers all generals at that, were either killed, wounded or dismounte, there being at least only fifteen survivors. Violet and her sisters had also taken the courage to go close to this position and view the conflict after having bea warned to keep away from the firing line, and now the,t littlegirls for a time seemed all alone, and indeed shells were bursting with such earslitting detonations and with the roar of dammantion all around them, that they had to get away before they were killed. The wicked Glandelinians seemed to be having full sway despite the impassable abatis for though they could not pass t they were able to cont inue the annihilating fire upon the christian defenders beyond, and generals Kinderhinia and Heda Beeda two Abyssinkilian commanders were killed while three other Abyssinkilian generals Bavaria Lucilleian, and his brother general James Bavaria, and Sp supretendant general Howsen Heldonia were mortally wounded, and the ground along the whole line of abatis was fairly chocked with t he wicked Glandelinian troops, which were all falling in dead and wounded so rapidly that it was like a wholex wholesale slaughter once more.Overwhelming numbers of Abyssinkilians met the Glandelinian assault under general Isner Myletze which were already crossing through the abatis having broken through at several points, and were pressing back the Abyssinkilian divisions under general Whitehead, and when these christian divisions over one hundred thousand strong were shattered in trying to recapture a long line of cannon under general Eclair a new section of cannon was brought up and when these were unlimbered and placed into line thei there being over one thousand four hundred altogether, these broke into fierce action, and soon increased the terrible carnage, opening upon the attacking enemy at short rangeand even one yard away from the abatis at times with withering discharges of double shotted canister and grape. These gathling guns in the maze of all this confusion had been run up to the abatis by hand in the face of the enemys fire, and were fired again and again but their gunners fell so fast that they had to afterwards take better precautions.

This storm of canister was rapid and added by grenades and shells from the higher batteries on the upper summits, and the exultant Glandelinians were staggered from their losses, while the christians all the while gave forth deafaing deafening yells of defiance and derision.

Indeed the fury of the battle not seemed to be at its height along this portion. Baldwins artillery on the ridges higher up continued to plow the Glandelinian columns to fragments and though they were still making the attack withall their violence and stormed so fiercely with their own fire that thicker clouds of smoke hung ove th over the scene and they could not get on or over the abatis for the very christian fire itself was annihilating, and men would be shot off the abatis as fastas they happened to spring for it. Like leeches or demons the Glandelinians however struck to their determined attack, and undaunted by the raking artillery fire of the christ ians did all their best to force their way through the abatis and in a few minutes two hundred and seventy five pieces of the Angelinian artillery cut and hacked by the storming Glandelinian musketry fire lay already unworked with their muzzles protruding over the works near the abatis and the wheels were half sunk in the dust and covered with gore.The horses of all these gathling guns lay riddled by bullets, and slashed open by shell fragmat fragments, while tens of thousands of the ded and wounded christians were torn to pieces and sliced up in the same manner as the butchered children were in Norma Catherine or even by the furious storm of firing as it swept the ground where they lay.

The merciless withering fire of the Angelinians almost wiped out every folumn of Glandelinians that came within range even as they advanced on their hands and knees, the Angelinians closing their own shattered lines and settling down to their tasks, their murderous fire which was poured from three points being now fully directed at the abatis and as each mass appeared among them they were mowed down completely, all their officers with them.As the heavy firing increased still more with redoubled fury along the lineof christians under general Greenswald, two new divisions of Abyssin ilians went into fierce and bloodier action on b the center and right, yet also the main columns of the Glandelinians went hard at work in their attacks, the brave Angelinians bringing up more artillery and hammering away with all their cannon and firearms.All of the Abyssinkilian columns went deep int o the bloody action which soon increased with more terrific fury.The roaro of firearms on both sides was certainly deafaing deafening, and swelled above the incessant explosions of shells, and the thunder of cannon, and many of the first, second, and third lines of the foe were again cut to pieces.....

Yet ghroeder had no lack of men whatever. The losses the Glandelinians suffered now was something awful indeed for the most rapid fire was main tained on them all along their lines the surviving Glandelinians keepingup up their attack and replying their fire with the greatest vigor.Again ten big Glandelinian divisions were fairly torn to pieces by the fire of the christian troops within an hours time and many of their officers of any ranj rank were killed or wounded but nv nevertheless the main force of assailants still made endeavors to drive off the stubborn defenders, but all those as I mentioned before who succeeded in climbing the abatis, or who even tried to were shot down as fast as they could be picked off.... What remained of the many Glandelinian divisions even of the shattered main columns which had already concentrated at this point under the same deadly and galling fire of christian artillery and musketry, and which had planted their tattered colors themselves, were shot to pieces by the withering christian musketry storm.

Finding that the Angelinians were so terribly hard to be driven back the Glandelinians now began to use more discretion in their furious and desperate attack, the Angelinians placing the muzzle of ty eir own rifles through the apertures on the abatis reaching frightful numbers of the Glandelinians beyon'. Indeed this battle was the biggest slaughter on record so far. The withering fire on both sides had been so destructive that all the trees on the top of the hills resu resembled Hickory Brooms, and so badly cut and torn were many others that they fell. Hundreds of thousands of the beautiful trees along the whole line of abatis were so badly knawed off by the converging fire of both sides that they fell with loud crashes catching many soldiers under their branches and killing and injur ing hundreds, and some of these trees falling over the abatis remained there making it st ronger and more impalling at these points. A ll the t rench trenches on the top of these hills and the abatis all along the line for many miles were red with gore, and the dead bodies had grown so thick where they fell they they were almost in windrows. The Glandelinians had suffered horrible losses, the havoc in the gray lines being more terrible than ever before in the battle, their whole attacking line having been t orn, their main wings shatt ered, and they were already falling back at several points to rearrange their mangled lines, and thousands were still dropping as they even fell back. Many tens of thousands of Angelinians themselves lay piled over one another about the works, and near or alongside the abat is, the thousands of dead, and wounded Angelinians laying ten or eleven feet deep near the abatis at son some points and in other places in large windrows on the gore covered grou d ground, many riddled by bullets or cut to fragments by shells, or by storms of canister shot. Thousands of broken firearms were lying beside the works, seven hundred and fifty accouterments, and a thousand boxes of unspent ammunition had been seized by the foe, while countless number of cannot cannon shot, fragments of shells broken and torn foliage, and thousands of shattered trees mingled with the sea of dead and wounded and dying were thickly strewn about.
Never before did the generals ever witness such frightful scenes of carnae carnage and desolation. The conflict still raged at white ha heat however and never slackened a bit, for soon fresh divisions of the foe supporting the exhausted main line drew a galling fire from the christian line at all points and setting series of lines of musketry ablaze, with simultaneous but incessant ii discharges. Under this murderous fire the foe soon resumed the attack, the Angelinians arranging more batteries to keep the foe from advancing too near the abatis again, which before their repulse they had almost succeeded in doing, giving the enemy the same storm of hell. But the attack of the enemy despite their losses was still continued with superhuman ferocity, both sides seeming to lose eight thousand every minute.

Other heavy columns coming to the aid of the main columns of attackers pressed on once more striking against the christian line furiously and st eadily though again their colu ns colu n columns seemed to be literally cut to pieces every time they encountered the christian fire.

Still if it had not been for the prompt arival of General Roswell Bu Buster Johnstons Angelinians Kindernines whole line would have been rolled up, displaced, and driven from his position. Yet though Kindernines brave artillery men and other men were succored before being forced to yeild general Maurice Handon also came to Kindernines support with about fifty thousand men bringing up his divisions as quickly as men could march or run, and thus supported the Angelinians felt confident that their numbers would at last give them success. So when the Glandelinians reached to within ten yards of the cotton looms of abatis a great blinding sheet of flame seemed to leap from the whole christian line there was a most deafening roar which sounded like the incessant roar and blinding crash of millions of guns

Yet Shroeder had no lack of men whatever. The losses the Glandelinians suffered now was something awful indeed for the most rapid fire was maintained on them all along their lines the surviving Glandelinians keepingup up their attack and replying their fire with the greatest vigor.Again ten

and the seemingly countless dead, wounded and dying Glandelinians lay p led up beflo beforethe abatis but on and on surged whole monsterous columns of survivors.An Angelinisiain color bearer while thousands upon thousands of demorilized Angelinians were retiring a c couple of yards for better cover had become chargrined at the fierce defiant yells of the enemy and so unfurled his flag and swung it to the breeze with a yell in return but though he rallied the Angelinians he fell riddled with bullets. But indeed there were others to grasp the flag of Angelinia, andat the sight of the waving flag the Angelinians again rallied, and cont inued their stand with the main line which had not yeiled, but the fierce Glandelinians continued the attack, despite the fact that their series upon series of attacks were stopped by the masive abatis of cotton looms and-other materials which were still armed with the heavy cannon and the Glandelinians meeting a deadly fire could not get the guns they wished to capture, their own lines being so badly shatt ered that they thes themselves were demorilized for a time having indeed suffered the most intolerable loss during this incessant titanic fighting in which they had made the continious advance and charges upon the christian line and all thiswhile their showy colu ns had again and again been ripped and torn apart.

A heavy force of Abyssinkilians and Angelinians under general Murrice Costellio had suddenly come upon the enemy un awares and giving the t idings that Hansons whole force was advancing to -the rescue repelled the Glandelinian forces with tremendous fury. The Glandelinians had already seen that these long barricades were so throughoutly manned by the christians under Murice Handan that to take them was impossible without overwhelming numbers..... Also the news of the ad vance of Hansen which had also reached them and their terrific losses in assaulting the long lines of mixed abatis in their front disconcerted the enemy who were now being held at bay.

Their losses was now heavier and indiscriminate but being driven desperate however by the news of general Hansons advance Shrodedder made a fiercer and longer onset raging it for hours and such a unparielled storm of horror as went on was enough to appall Heaven and earth itself. Despite the slaughter tens of thousands of the Glandelinians under Mc-Hollester p poured upon the works penetrating the abatis at every point and though they were mowed down close to the very parapet, they redoubled the assault as fast as their thousands came up, the survivors continuing their efforts with all their superhuman strength and in the dreadful carnage which ensued Shroeder was instantly killed as well as a score of other officer officers of all rank.Despite this the Glandelinians however did not give up the tremendous assault. Indeed Costellio had lost in this desperate struggle nearly all of his staff and he feared indeed that he would not be able to hold his works for his lines were being cut to pieces. Senguine had sent him a-large force of Abyssinkilians but these could not do any thing for the Glandelinians progressed better now than before and had advanced with great noise and fury and though the other christian columns had been at first hammered to pieces and had rallied nevertheless, they could not do anything the Glandelinians advancing susse successfuly, and yet even Roswell Buster Johs Johnstons divisions had badly repulsed the front and counter attack of the enemy after charging himself despite the fierce fire of the main columns of the enemy and he himself went down mangled and bleeding and his whole force cut to pieces n and shattered beyond reformation was driven into a pandemonium of confusion.
The front lines of the retreating christians disolved rapidly.

CHAPTER EIGHTEEN.
THE SEVEREST ACTION OF THE DAY.
THE FAMIOUS CHARGE OF FEDERAL, AND THE BRAVE STAND OF THE ANGELINIANS..

GENERAL Handon recieved the oncoming human waves with the most dreadful fury, and though their ranks wereshaken badly the Clandelinians kept up their attack with great vehemence and soon rolled up the christians under Handon, hurling them back broken and shattered.The Clandelinians were finally carrying all before them, then Hanson coming up with great forces, by his example filled the retreating christian forces with fresh courage and determination and they rallied and charged upon the still advancing Clande Clandelinian columns driving all of the Clandelinians across every line of works with heavier loss and with the loss of twenty of their best officers.It was impossible to imagine the loud booming roar of hundreds of cannon going off at once as the enemy artillery let go to stop the christian counter charge, and even all the Angelinian divisions under generals Greenswalds, and Kindernine now sweeping forward recaptured other works in succession, but both generals with Maurice Cosillio fell sevsely wounded and were borne from the scene of carnage.The largest forces of Clandelinians moving to their own works to the support of those attacked tried to c repell the counter charge with all their titanic fury and with all their courage and might, but th e Angelinians swept away the bold rebels pressing the Clandelinians back down the hill at every point and the enemy was once again driven back.After this repulse the Angelinians during the slight lull in the conflict fortified the works on thehills, and strengthening them so that they could meet the westonset of the enemy, fresh batteries being put in place, , double abatis being thrown up with all the cotton looms y not yet places placed as abatiss and even barricades of logs were added to the abatis.The moment the Clandelinians had been driven back in their last great onset, all the Clandelinian batteries were opened upon the christian lines, and soon the very heavens was shaken by m probably the most tremendous cannonade of the battle.

For an hour the cannonade kept on with unceasing fury, socen hundred cannon from the christian positions themselves pouring shot, shell, and high explosives upon the Clandelinian positions which extended for ten miles, and at nine hundred and eight hundred shots per minute.The uproar was deafening, and the enemy responded to the christians with all their might.Soon all the range of hills in possession of the enemy seemed abal ablaze as all their artillery broke into action and the very sky was dotted with the screaming shells which burst with series of loud e explosions and though those not bursting flew through the air with li loud whirring noises, while behind them the darkness of a cloud from a cloud of smoke streamed bright luminious trails of sparks as if from fire brands or met eorites and their heavy explosions were as continuous as the explosions of cannons themselves.Indeed the scene was truely awful for never before in any battle yet did shells fall so thickly, surpassing in graduer the most imposing artificial fireworks. The shells that were higher up than the others looked as if the bigf biggest stars in the heavens were driven like snow flurries, before the wind.Theylooked like fiery meteorites thick as hail crowding the concave of the sky q ab above the cannon river riven hills, as though some great magazine of combustion in celestial space were discharging its contcontents upon the two opposing ridge of hills.It was the most extraordinary storm of shells general Hanson had ever seen , seemingly thousands of shells with glowing wakes succeeding each other during the titia titanic cannonae of nearly ten thousand cannon. All the shells left luminious trails or traces of glowing trials after they exploded, the sight being grand and awful illuminating the darkened smoke clouds like countless skyrockets flyg r lying back and forth in two pp possible directions and descending perpendi cularly over thw two range of hills or into the valley between making in their flight a tremendous storm of shrieking noises, and bursting with hundreds of tremendous explosions heard probably for fifty miles and committing awful havoc among the gunners of both sides.

While all this cannonading was going on general Hanson was surprised to see also the tremendous activity among the enemys main lines of infantry and cavarly, and hastily sending a messenger to general Hinderwine to tell him of the enemys preparation for a general charge, rode back to his own lines, knowing that the enemy had resolved to seize what ever advantage the artillery duel would give them by opening a final and descive attack on his main center alone.All the wicked Clandelinians had been roused by their former defeat and in about an hour six hundred and fifty thousand Clandelinians under general Thomas Handon moved forward across the fields in a long line tward Roswell Buster Johnstons position now under Jennings and began a fierce attack and indeed a fiercer one than just repulsed. The infantry struggle was at once resumed again with tremendous and more fiercer fury.All at once a heavy artillery fire of five hundred gathling guns was opened upon the advancing columns of Clandelinians, and the Angelinians now not only held th eir ground o most stubborn ly but mowed the poor Clandelinians down fright fully.Yet despite the frightful carnage the Clandelinians charged with awful impetiousity and in heavy columns upon the massive christian lines only however to meet the most tremendous loss.

Despite it all the enemy still kept up their fierce attack while the yelling of the hundreds of thousands of the rebels was terrific the Clandelinians having after their recent repulse recovered from the shock and had gathered up their stre ngth for the final result and so hundreds of thousands of the Insurgents came rushing up the hill sides, and though the Angelinians allowed the Clandelinians to come within easy range of their musketry and even poured upon them a simultaneous discharge all along the line and cut down tens of thousands of Clandelinians in that one discharge, the survivors were not as yet checked.On pressed the others but there appeared before the very eyes of the u survivors one murderous withering sheet of flame another another.They went down anew by the thousand at every step as it seemed , and the survibi surviving colu,ns became disc disconm disconfited, and appalled by their dead and wounded being piled up in many heaps where they well the Clandelinians did not falter and one section of the christian line had simultaneously drew back from their works in disorder, but the main line had met the assailants with such a stubborn fury and with such courage that general Hanson ivian was indeed filled with admiration. he ground now along side the works and the works themselves were completely red with gore and thickly covered with the multitudes of the slain and wounded of both sides, there being so many cannon heaps that the trenches themselves were filled to almost ove overflowing with the dead and wounded.

Likeall otherbattles just past the very woods on the summit of the hills at this point was badly torn and rent by the streams of frightful shells, and every tree within sight was pierced and cut to pieces by minie ball balls and canister and fragments of shells.In double line nine feet deepthe brave and resolute Clandelinian soldiers came on continueing the attac k with terrifiying yells, the Angelinians with their repeating rifles and most massive batteries of cannon sweeping their exposed flank through and through, and several of the main lines of the rebels were cut to piece pieces.Even then with the most terrific yells the Clandelinians continued to advance.There now came a series upon series of sharp devilish yells from the base of the hill at another quarter, and general Hanson saw through his spy glass long lines of gray coming from below and increasing the speed of th eir furious advance.The Angelinians had by this time increased their tremendous firing with the help of more troops and the nearest of the enemys lines were fairly torn to fragments.Yet the Clandelinians behind advanced on up the hill and finally got to within fourty yards of the summit fairly hidden in thick smoke clouds.The christian cannon glowed in a hedious manner as they were discharged with sledge ha m hammer force a couple exploding from being over heated.Horrible shrieks of the wounded as the storm of canister swept over them could be heard and the frightful rattle of musketry and the booming of the artillery went on without intermission the firing bing so heavy th at it sounded like a sea full of explosions and the ridges seemed as if swept by hundreds of sheets of flame and over five hundred can cannon and nearly a million muskets were discharged with a roar that resembled a noise as if the whole line of ridges had broken out into eruption.Never before had such horrors of war been seen, and despite their v bravery the faces of Violet and hercsisters as they watched the desperate conflict from afar were white with horror at the frightful slaughters All the Clandelinians that came within range were mowed down and it seemed as if all the Clandelinians in the assaulting columns that moved forward up to the works , n and up the sides of the ridhes in that rush werefairly annihilated in divisions.Yet they were a mere handful of killed and wounded compared to the slaughte slaughter at the height of this battle.All the multitudes of Clandelinians that succeeded in reaching th e summit of the ridges melted away like snow before the murderous christian fire, and screams of the wounded were heart rending and appalling.

"This is awful indeed an awful sight" said Violet to Jennie who had come up nearer to see better "I did not believe and would not believe that a battle in a war could be so frightful."

Millions of whistling bullets flew about, shells were still exploding and screaming everything everywhere and as far as the little girls were the firing was deafe ning.The very sides of the hills slopes stretching for miles were breathed in thick smoke clouds having the appearance of a like of volcanoes in antes Inferno and fairly seething with writhing lines of Clandelinians yelling like demons, extending along the whole scene as far as eye could reach, and advancing with indescribable fury.Each time fresh columns of smoke arose from the summit of the hills followed by tremendous flushes and seemingly earth rending explosions which were prolonged and incessant.

"If the battle is so terrible, so frightful, and so horrible, now what would it be at its climax" wondered Violet "This is certainly awful and we are failing to check them."

The battle was increasing with indescriablefury and th e losses was more horrible now.The roaring tempest of bullets, shells and canister swept the gray coats which had reached th e summit down in more frightful numbers, but on pressed the survivig Clandelinians one hundred thousand more going to the aid so the former assailans would not become demorilized, and still more came up until the whole valley below became a vast river of men, where frightful torrents of bullets swept them ta tearing large gaps through and through, yet the yell of the infuriated Clandelinians and th e shrieks of the fresh numbers of wounded added to the din.

The Landelinians in the foremost line which had reached the summit were already surging over the works in the heaviest columns.General Jennings was shot in the arm and head by two bullets, and as the Landelinians went again down in countlesscrumbers he fell on top of a dead officer, and jennings also got wounded severely in the leg and he was borne from the field.Some other officers were placed in th e care of th e ambulances and general Heller was almost fatally wounded when he saved the lives of those in the ambulance by carrying away a shell which had rolled underneath.Both were discovered among piles of dead graycoats and carried aw away from the scene of carnage after the battle had lulled againthe shells were exploding so constantly now that the explosions sounded like thousands of deafening thunderclaps at once and th e scream of minnie balls canister and grape as it swept down upon the stream of Landelinians in the valley engulfed thousands the smoke hiding the h odious destruction, the noise now drowning the shrieks of the wounded, and dying with their earsplitting crashes..All millions of bullets swept the massive line of the enemy in the valley, and millions of christian fire arms and hundreds of cannon which were discharged fiercer and fiercer made a regular hell of clamor and din, that filled the very hils hills, valley and skies with countless millions of deafening echoes.Indeed the din was horrible, the whole line of the assailants being fairly engulfed in the smoke of all kinds of missles.

Indeed there was no abatement in th is horrible massacre, and seemingly the dead and wounded Landelinians covered thecsides of the hills as thick as fields of fallen grass.Also th e summit of the hills was covered with countless numbers of twigs, and branches of the trees, which were cut away by the heavy firing, while the perfect deluge of grape and canister which now made a sheen of smoke as they fell with a thunderous roar among the enemys positions on the hills opposite caused finally awful consternation and th e shrieks was more awful.

Most of the Landelinians who had almost carried the works were now falling back under this deluge, in valley itself was even covered with the hundreds of thousands of shrieking wounded who were pelted by the deluge of canister and shells which killed them by the hundred as they lay there.

"This a is awful."cried peter as the ambulance were retiring with as many of the wounded as they could take with them."But I believe it will be worse when the general fight comes."Let's go away and not see any more.I cannot stand it."

The hillsides were now covered with fearful avalanches of lava beings in purple their counter charge just beginning and masses of the Landelinians who still tried to resist were cut down by the fire of the pursuers.The large multitudes of demoralized Landelinians a retreated in a panic beyond description, their very lines seeming to be of endless length,in population hereafter not proven than very few but retired to their own positions to await the next general attack that was sure to come.During the hill which lasted half an hour the Angelinians cleared away as many of the dead and wounded as possible, and the next general picture exhibited was violet and purple with blood e-streaming from their clothes were found among the piles of dead and wounded Landelinians, the had after an hour of horrible suffering and almost sunked with the blood of their wounds found writhing in potions agonyJohn himself was suffering from a wound in the shoulder but she directed the men the Alfred Jumbo and Jabez and kept lying for five they were dead.They were carried out of reach of the ocean of carnage and far from the direct fire positions where they were treated by the army doctors and then they came to their senses senses restored before an anthem.

"My but you are brave little girls."Jim dewitt said."you must all thereof soldiers together.

"It was already one o'clock, the storm clouds of battle had already cleared away, the battle having raged with this frightful volumes.all this bloody carnage.

It was also at one o'clock when the great tremendous Landelinian columns yet seen were forming for a final attack on the top of the glorious gilt gemin.Nearly an hour passed before their generals formed them into line and again the batteries of both sides kept up a regular bombardment fire.The front of the Landelinian column seemed to be of the whole length of the position gilt ridge or at least forty miles in length, and these were o converged from the more distant woods which crowned the eminits and moved swiftly and steadily but firmly down the slopes and advanced toward the christian Illumdiurnal Regiment ,Jefferson hoped this onslaught, o before in many other battles a great thrill of consternation passed through thehearts of the Federals who watched this great and final advance of the Landelinians which made them a most splendid sight for a brave line and so well fitted to call forth great admiration that the Angelinians wished that the Landelinians were not so foolish and would be loyal to their own flag of Abbimania againstlarge divisions of cavalry, battalions, infantry and dismounted and mounted dragoons of Landelinians all gaygleams under general Tarana gunsion preceded by clouds of skirmishers which were to be the advance guard led the van of the great attackDivisals larger columns of gaygyllions, Kimmerunians, and gis-Kallestinians and Lydians arranged in a long line of battle ten deep formed the extreme right, that under general James Cameron formed the center and Ohio vale yeaian the left.Again like in some other big battles the attacking rebel columns would have to have a ridge of hills to descend, a wide valley to cross and a long line of steep hills to climb and the distance between these opposing forces was about one mile and a half.The columns steadily advanced and soon as they advanced over the distance of half a mile the ridges in possession of the Lydia Abyssinikilians and Angelinians seemed to be swift by a volcano of flame and fire a thousand fold, the sky above seemed swept by clouds of smoke and flame while almost simultaneously the Angelinian artillery broke loose in a loud deafening earsplitting thundering roar and crash and surely three thousand seven hundred and fifty three guns began to pour frightful death and destruction on the advancing Landelinian columns four million strong.Let us come the assailants with advancing Landelinian columns four million strong.Let us come the assailants with more tremendous fury but the fury of the havoc and destruction among the thousands of re ranks became scorching terrible.Hundreds of volleys of solid shot, canister shells, grape and canister balls mingled with chain shot and high explosives crashed through the grey lines with deadly effect and enormous masses of men and even horses were dreadfully cut upbeamings was now beyond describing.Some of the survivors hesitated but an general cheer threatens main divisions of gaygabos advanced against the right wing of the Nationalists all of these christian batteries broke into thunderous action with an earsplitting roar and crash heard for miles and fortunately all three ridges on the right second fairly enveloped in an enormous hemisphere clouds and in sheeted flames and the din of the tremendous artillery fire heard were frightful and more louder the thunder of the large and number of cannons along the entire rings of hills d i miles defeated by the christians rivalling in fiercer grains than any memorable yet during the fire.

It seemed as if Shrewsbury Haughton were being overwhelmed by a huge storm.

Yet the most deafening grandeur of the Angelinian artillery borrowing in numbers became redoubled in fury as the surviving columns of Landelinians continued to advance, the Angelinian gunners fairly hammering away with their cannon, and all of the Landelinians now seemed to be fairly rushing into their destruction.But despite the Landelinians continued on in a firm and mighty step which also was cut in the hour afterhal, and though whole hundreds of ranks were again swept down at the withering discharge of artillery the survivors kept on advancing, but silently, for the first time in the fearful struggle and as soon the Angelinian columns in the face of the awful storm which now swept down in volleys and solid shot and shell and canister in the form of the awful storm which now swept down in volleys and solid shot and shell and canister in the form of the awful storm which now swept down in volleys and solid shot and shell and canister in the form delivered at them by Hansen, and which had the effect of flinging general Schleudera and Reynaud pedersals divisions of fierce ,Zimmermanns and Nie-gallectinians well toward Winterdinez long wedge of christians under general Henry Berger who were well posted with their right well advanced and the position of the ground enabled a/l all the Angelinians to open the most annihilating fire on all the ,Lendelinian columns, not only with their right, left, and centerthe but with cannon? their ideas in the rear.All the batteries of these Angelinians were also in position, and the artillery fire suddenly opened up supervised the terrenic of bullets, by equal terrenic of grapeand canister shot.This galling fire fell all at once upon the torn and shattered and disorganized columns of the ,Lendelinians under general Pedersal, who became terror stricken and broke into utter confusion, Sh Schleuder valiantly striving to rally the men.

In spite of all this dreadful artillary storm and aided by the musketry fire from all of the christian lines which still moved down the ,Lendelinians in multitudes, , Schleudere surviving divisions bravely pushed up the slopes of the cemetery swept hills against the christians whose lines still thund in a blinding manner, and cows were close to the long lines of burgundian, and the Angelinians defending it delivered a still more galling fire which here conditions gaps in the ,Lendelinian lines, but as the survivors rose surging up with indescribable fury, the christians at this point were forced to yield and fell back to the rear, the enemy finally having broken the christian line along this point.

The general pursuit ,retailing was on hand, he quickly rallied the retreating columns, and reformed their lines despite the almost cannibalistic fit discharge of the cannon the enemy had captured, and were held together gracefully the extermination center ,Transylvania fire which they were putting down the people again w by the many thousands.But the ,Lendelinians followed by the gallant Austin had now rushed over the long lines of breastworks and trenches and through hundreds of valleys of dead child and carnivorous dogs, poured upon the long gray lines pi mile adverse by the ,Lendelinian hurrying the ,Lendelinians had planted their red yellow and blue flags on the barricades and were fighting in a manner as if they meant to stay there.

Along north for ten miles on many were fairly covered four deep with the dead, and wounded, and dying ,Lendelinians but yet the survivors reinforced, and despite the enemys artillery fire, held the ,Lendelinians while they other reserves came up, and the battle soon became, fiercer resulting at this hand-to-hand close new battling like the murderous throats in a most desperate hand to hand fight, struggling with the last energy of despair, thousands of thousands of yes in grey and purple from limbs torn gaping and mingling together in frightful death struggle.By the power of exploding cartridges and flash of steel, the uniforms of all the clashing of all the men on both sides merged in this hand to hand struggle were actually heaped and thousands of ,Lendelinians, the stubbornly refused to retire were slaughtered or slept to death at their guns. General Pedersal himself was on the side of the christian north and fired his own gallant bravery the christians could not force his men back, while the ,Lendelinians Austrian gardes under general ,Lendelinian Transit and general ,Lendelinian, which had covered his right had delayed and destroyed the christian force close the in front and drove the reserves from the hill with tremendous havoc. the ,Lendelinians had won at this point at enormously a serious cost, for three to Londers were no longer counted, while generals ,Lendelinian, Pompeius, Pedersal myers, Ex ,Lendelinian, Barry ,Lendelinian, ,Lendelinian Prussian Hansen, Austrian ,Lendelinian Oppenfolley, Austrian Gardes ,Lendelinian Lendelinian, Christian ,Lendelinian and Ferdinand Hayden Hill wounded the three being mortally, and the rest slight, while three ,Lendelinian colonels and five of the christians were killed. Of the ,Lendelinians this charge,Sixteen thousand which had advanced with the same courage had fallen to advance any further or succeed of the ,Lendelinians they had cut the ,Lendelinian ultimost grass, and his whole command in that effort with had been killed cut up and destroyed, and Schwaiger himself was seriously wounded, and three of his staff killing generals Christian Hayden, and Sam Hill Hayden ,Lendelinian Pedersal Pennsylvania ,Lendelinian wounded, ,Lendelinian Pedersal Pennsylvania ,Lendelinian wounded, ,Lendelinian General Pedersal and many slain, being also of ,Lendelinian staff.Several thousand men wounded and many slain were of the ,Lendelinian ,Lendelinian ; upon the north belonging to ,Lendelinian and shared by the north and shared by the strength of their alliance the ,Lendelinian thousand ,Lendelinians were present heavily fortified and supported the last king of north striking driving the christians back at this point also.This horrible struggle had up to this hour raged over twelve hours and being one of the fiercest struggles of the battle yet.The enemys entire losses up to now were unpredicted but believed to be much heavier than the christians.The numbers were indeed frightful.

During the time that general Raymond ,Robertson Pedersal had been assaulting the christian army at pendleton gillis to prevent Thurman advance on ,Orion ,Athey and his purpose to reinforce gleneden general ,John Hinday Edmund with still a bigger army had been pursuing his course toward the ,Lendelinian of the ,Julio gallic Section of ,Orion ,Athey but very cautiously, and hearing of the slow repulse and defeat of Thurmon christian army at Apple Orchid or ,Lendelinian Gillis, nevertheless feared for his own safety and that of his army, and budged his other generals further away to move their armies nearer to ,Julio Gallic so as to minister ,Athy more cash from recapture by the christians.He had all this while directed startling changes in the horrible cruelties enacted by the ,Lendelinians in possession of ,Julio

Gallic and other portions of ,Orion ,Athey, and some of the besieging christian divisions on which had made a ,Florentstack to try and put down this terrible reign of terror had been defeated on the nine day of the battle of ,Lendelinia gillis by over whelming numbers of the besieged thrown upon them by general Hargesterian the led his troops despite his serious wounds during the furious action.,Lendelinian ,Athey a mile away from ,Julio gallic was also in the possession of a part of ,Lendelinian ,Lendelinian but at the hand-to-hand had fled before their arrival, there was no slaughter of women and children going on there, though there was a lot of ,Lendelinian of the property, and destruction of many houses and public buildings.All the soldiers had been marveling at the fury, and stubborn length of this furious seige and series of battles ,Orion ,Athey fought for the possession of him, though of course the the christian soldiers looted upon ,Lendelinian and ,Lendelinian with admiration for her so gallant effort in one of the most cosmopolitan ways, and a upon ,Lendelinian and her insurgent armies with disgust and contempt.At the approach of general ,Lendelinian's grandsons vast ,Lendelinian army general ,Lendelinian had withdrawn most of his troops from ,Lendelinian, toward the small town of ,Lendelinian northeast of ,Orion ,Athey and near the ruins of an old fortress, the ,Lendelinian parts of the enemy ,Lendelinian encamped near the old orphan asylum where ,Lendelinian her ,Lendelinian had been in before it was shot out by a ,Lendelinian ,Lendelinian, and general ,Lendelinian had withdrawn to this point and had set the old orphan asylum as their own headquarters.General Pedersal ,Robert ,Lendelinian as the ,Lendelinian general with his christian armies had also retired and besieged out of sight near the old ruins and where they had the full ships of the fiery ,Lendelinian stopped by a sport of musical troops to cover their retreat from ,Lendelinian, this day ,Lendelinian himself did not attempt to make any attack on general ,Lendelinian ,Lendelinian but only strengthened his own lines as best he could and reformed his own shattered ,Lendelinian lines.,Lendelinian headquarters was established near the enemy where ,Robert and her children had the enemys camps from some ,Lendelinian system of ,Lendelinian.All the telegraph wires current down at this point and all the long lines of ,Lendelinian which had been standing on a evening at this point were now in possession of the enemy and had been made into a long barricade in which the ,Lendelinians could take their defense if assailed by other ,Lendelinians ,Lendelinian or ,Lendelinian.

Yet any attempt of the Angelinians to withdraw ,Lendelinian position would cause a general stampede and as the enemys position was more accessible, general ,Lendelinian ,Lendelinian ,Lendelinian ordered his troops forward a little to the right and took ,Orion ,Athey further nearer prisons to his headquarters, and if ,Robert and her children could hide only keep him here they would defend here to the last ,Lendelinian of the pretty children of ,Robert and her children were still in the old dormitory ,Lendelinian looking through the glass had found the starting which came to them ,Lendelinian and had to him, for he recognized that this could stand now had separated him from his own loved ones by ,Lendelinian and the more wanting his return when he is to survive the bloody and ,Lendelinian slaughter.He ,Lendelinian would never see them again for in charge had no ,Lendelinian how that some day they would fall victims of the ,Lendelinian enemys.

It was already the next morning when general ,Lendelinian heard that enemy, thousand captured children were held prisoners near the line of ,Lendelinian were used as barricades and that the child prisoners were near the little ,Lendelinian grandchildren therefore resolved to take this line of ours and rescue the children at all costs, and hoping that when he broke the way of battle ,Lendelinian ,Lendelinian would come to his help overthrow that a general action in ,Lendelinian upon enemys army at ,Lendelinian would be would be crushed, ordering his left to charge on the line of ,Lendelinian.

Upon believe he had made these orders a force of ,Lendelinians had attacked the christians under ,Lendelinian night and during the struggle the battle had raged four hours during that night in which both sides lost over one thousand in captured and unknown forces in killed and wounded.At the same time ,Lendelinian ,Lendelinian from ,Lendelinian ,Lendelinian enemys enemy had been preparing for a fierce ,Lendelinian battle, and early in the morning them the christians advanced to attack the advance guard of ,Lendelinian upon upon ,Lendelinian ,Lendelinian ,Lendelinian ,Lendelinian bridge,Lendelinian ,Lendelinian ,Lendelinian were captured of course and on hearing of this ,Lendelinian new that ,Lendelinian had to make a fierce attack for the army ,Lendelinian ,Lendelinian and were waiting for a battle, so as to strike as to the line of ,Lendelinian reinforcements as suspect had the ,Lendelinians were found to be in strong positions having still over nine ,Lendelinian, nine hundred thousand men and two thousand cannon.

However it was the christians who were to be annihilated hour after the night had advanced against @ 1 ,Lendelinian, Shermanville by a christian in order he had received made a desperate attack on the ,Lendelinian under general ,Lendelinian-Lendelinian attack was driven with terrific fury and bloody determination, and the battle toward nine o-clock became general all along the line, for a time ,Lendelinian ,Lendelinian kept up the assaults with the greatest determination ever witnessed by in his ,Lendelinian, the ,Lendelinian under general ,Lendelinian gave repelling the assailants with great riflemen and succeeded in holding ,Lendelinian in check.But ,Lendelinian was not checked for long,@ determined to drive back the christians at all costs and again with redoubled numbers of men renewed the frightful onslaught but met a fire which mowed down his front lines in horrible numbers.

But rallying his columns he again led them them to the charge and being rein forced by Biskmalls glandelinians swept up to the christian lines with t he same fright ful fury.the Angelinians again met them with all their strength but were seem forced to abandon their positions and were driven back with the loss of a ga of XXD,000 men in killed and wounded in four hours. CUSTOR GUNNON came to their support with his one hundred and twenty thousand well and one hundred and fifty cannon and rallying Gunns Angelinians crashed down upon the enemy in a fierce counter charge driving them back for a mile and with the most horrible loss.But support came to the enemy and the reinforcement held their ground and so fiercely an dirmly contested every inch of ground and ripped the ranks Lines through and through with their deadly fire of musketry that drove them into confusion.

On the left the battle was more terrible.Hardy had directed Chargos upon t he christians here with such vehemence and such great stiffness as to break through at some several points causing awful confusion among the purple ranks, but the coolness of general gunnel gunn kept the main lines from retreating, and there the hot rolling ground with a hot fire upon the enemy that they were forced to recoil from the overwhelming onslaughts.

The center had fiercely driven back the assailants with tremendous losses after making a series upon surges of counter assaults.but still the enemy were not disposed to give up and again returned to the assault with the fury of desperat desperat Despite struggle the men waging along the whole entire half of Schmalls christian army or line the enemy making assault after assault though they were repulsed time and again.Yet taking up a agonie of dead lay silent while the line of work works very fairly covered with the gone Angelinians who had fallen. But for hours the Angelinians stuck to their positions causing dire havoc to per cental of the enemy, but the advanced columns of the assailants were suffering so elevated general Gunnalls men were compelled to fall slowly back fighting their line of work to the enemy while along the main christian center the long lines of swirlscanned to be ofttimes so fierce was the flash or discharge of cannon and musketry.But the plains before them was filled or covered with corpses of the glandelinians the same as with the enemy.Unforgivable fury and woe the shells were poured over and hundreds of thousands of Landelinians covered the whole interior of the christianworks ordering back the defenders the losses being more awful.The fury of the assert caused more and more carnier slaughter among the christians at this point and now th e condemned threatened to spread to the other columns the glandelinians having gained such hooigan hooigrat in their furious advance that they overlapped Jennings force before they were aware of their danger and trapped and pounded variously by the assailants they broke into a terrible rout the enemy following and shooting down the purple ranks in the most frightful numbers.General Schmall seeing this threatening disaster ordered up all the artillery which soon were and ope opening fire-ovred the enemy down in tons of thousands.This terrible reception demorilized the glandelinians for a few minutes and general Gningres christians pressing forward in heavy masses assailing the retreating glandelinians with a fury th at was beyond describing cutting the column to pieces and scattering t the survivors beyond rally.

Thousands more were dowmed down in this assault by the advancing christians and the glandelinians were staggered and the rest also losing the same marvellous fire were compelled to withdraw in o confusion.The enemy were still pressing o in on the left wing of the christians but Gnevenier division having been reinforced and rallied poured a withering fire upon their restless assailants while the other division other divisions not yet engaged arrived to their assistance, and now the firing of the christians grew grew so fierce and deadly that again the enemy were completely checked.But they returned the fire with great determination.It was already half past twelve and still with unabated fury the battle raged and the christian right had not been driven back once during this struggle and indeed they could not be driven for their position was impregnable.They were behind series of long stone walls and here the enemy came on again to fall every and assembled these deadly stone walls with dare devil recklessness.The Angelinians again poured in an incessant fire upon them thinning their lines rapidly, then while the assailants were in great confusion charged down upon them and drove them back to their former works with the most horrible loss.

All the positions that the left and center had abandoned the Angelinians now regained after charging fifteen times and held them against the same number of frightful assaults of the enemy, the rebels piling in derision and defiance, and some others also gave forth yells of exultancy at each time they surged them the ranks only to be driven back ag again with horrible slaughter.

General Gnes Hardey himself again led some of his divisions to the assault and pushed Gardner division after division in the face of a shrieking tempest of bullets and a growing storm of smoke and steam and cannon, general Schmall seeing forward all his available divis ions to repell this heritage assaults, and and soon thereupon continual forces stricken them and drove them back to their main posit ion in a complete rout.Schmall of the enemy and his Angelinian assailants with the same fury but when the glandelinians another charged the ones on the christ ian side was not almost disastrous.

Glandelinians forces were overlapped his whole extreme right, but the whole Right was completely rolled up after three hours of very stubborn fighting until all the available manpow and reinforced h forced the direction of the Glandelinians men, three generals with his forces had rallied.Gnevenin had dropped his extra and looking up with startling announcement that generals may columns were up on the run and the instant pulling of the enemy enemy crushed his exception to the south, then east, and west, he could see the heavy columns of retreating Angelinians extending for miles and afterthe long ,sustained deadly pulling of the enemy commander and marter, the glandelinians seeming to be almost upon the backs of their very Angelinians.The great columns of retreating Angelinians were now much closer and the cannoneers became hipster with quicker aimin from exploding shells and crushing musketry and cannon.His eight v ons on almost unbearable and Gnevenier instant told him he must rally these retreating columns but how could hede it?Everything seemed now to be chaos, confu , sion, and flashing fire of musketry for tens of miles all around the line, and shells were exploding over there while his ears were ringing with the clamour of the yelling of rallying, roaring and thundering cannon, and rattling the long retreating lines of the christians were drawing all the fire from the recreating glandelinians and the once beautiful fields and lawns and sun swamps were becoming a regular field of dead and wounded purple coats for many miles in every direction. every christian column trying to rally, every leader muttering awful loaths as they kept on retreating the west carnage being now a writhing mass of purple and greycoats in a pandemonium of confusion and hand to hand fighting.

Gnevenin indeed was at a loss of what to decide every step the main line of pursuers were coming nearer, the firing of the pursuers growing fiercer and more destructive.As the heavy murderous fire of his men cut down rows in the surging lines in grey he heard the fresh thundering of cannon and knew that general Schmall was trying to rally the pursuers of his right wing.The pursuer pursued Angelinians were running toward Jennings column who had to slacken their fire for fear of mowing down their own comrades and the and surrounding Glandelinians were now upon them.Gnevenin was uneasy for the women and children many of them were hemmed in from flight near his divisions and to save the children he must rally thembgo he withdrew his own forces to a higher rise of ground nearer to the-fresh divisio and while his men poured a continuous fire upon the advancing foe gnevenin went into one of the houses and finding a way t the roof by the direction of several of the children climbed to the top with a large flag and unfurling it swung it to the breeze in the face of Schmalls men, and though he was seen mortally wounded he did not stop until the Angelinians were rallied, and turned the other way to meet the charging columns the were all armed to the teeth and looking for blood.

Uttering loud yells the Anglinians, even gamecnian men scattered in every direction in an endeavor to surround the ,londelinians, and the rebels meet ing this new and mad rush of the Anglinians and hearing the yelling anxiously waited their awaited the attack of their rallied for and the fighting became more fecrce and bloody bullets flying-thick an and fast.

Again hundreds upon hundreds of glondelinians fell every second, but many more of the Anglinians dropped and Gamecnian successor seeing that the Anglinians were being wanted again, and several of their divisions annihilated, made a fierce charge i with the rest of his men a and the enemy almost assembled on all sides, realised that further advance was useless and withdrawal any of their own number had fallen painfully wounded in h this vehement assault and many more killed, and the attack of these two christian divisions demoralised them and they again retreated clear to their main line.The other annihilate were a sun greeted host also, but John Mauley soon led his whole force into action and for the rest of the day the battle continued with frightful fury,But being heavily overwhelmed the Glondelinians were compelled to abandon the assault and a contrgal over their defeat and of the arival of a portion of Commentinius Arenburgs army the ,londelinians fell back.the enemy however were still entrenched in a strong position,Gidmoll after winning as he did, did not with to make an assault on it without Arenburgs orders, and he never thought of doing so but he made preparations to flank the enemy out of it, and did this by-sending a force under Galwin Phelan around the christian right, y by way of ,arundocallis junction to reach the rear of the enemy.Before re reaching there however it being now two o'clockinthe the last regular, Phelan found the enemy fortified in his way, and as he was cautiously and fiercely attacked he was compelled to resume the battle reporting to ,idmoll that he had been frustrated.

The ,londelinian troops were also fortified on the left of this position, while several divisions of ,londelinians kept marching further and forth or around the left tured Gainsgrave railroad, but Gamecnian soon found he was being harassed in so rapidly that he was compelled after hard and furious resistance to draw off and ,arundocallis junction was left in possession of the Anglinians who continued to advance however,During an important point this strategetic junction had been strongly entrenched by the ,londelinians for occupation and had been made a secondary base of supplies and as a mark of frightful and counter attacks made it impossible for the Anglinians to advance any further or to move the entire Cruden by the route or would which they would have to move up to upon to turn Gamecnians out of his entrenchments.Even then a glondelinian force stood their ground at the Bunns of Barbeth Creek and also at a farm called Lumm galanTanka where they held strong entrenchments.

At this latter place crew two hundred and thirty four thousand ,anglinians under general ,idmoll ,arter Haller continued fierce and determined assaults after having got his Anglinian forces up close to the enemys positions, but the first cavalry of casualty failed with frightful harassment during the progress of the struggle general ,idmoll ,atisfied with his men gained ground to the left and the Anglinian cavalry on his right gained still more between the enemys rear falling upon it with frightful fury,After a titanic struggle when Gamecnian found that his forces were being enveloped commenced this gentlan attempts Anglinians now made strong preparations to threaten the railroad leaving a strong guard in the entrenchments and intending to recross and come in on the railroad again at ,arundo and Gatherine creek, but Gamecnian frustrated his plans, and fell back to the Gatherine creek, but the ,anglinians again before he was aware of the facts, the christians having gotten many possession of the Gatherine creek both above and below the enemy,the glondelinians were again flanked out of their position or so confined by so many flanking movements, that they after fierce and more bloodier fighting fell back across the creek, while other force made a desperate stand at the Carbelldis hills.

Those hills were also abandoned after a fierce fight, and the ,londelinians retreated again but were heavily reinforced at ,ulthamnum Greenwards and here they gave a very strong opposition all th o way across and along a line of battle ten miles in extent, and expelled attacks which swept across the plains, and in addition to this there were Gaelic ,ogue against the christians frightful counter ensemble.The enemy himself had now again assumed the offensive attacking the whole lines of christ ians furiously, and pastor Haller Anglinians were the principal ones engaged or capping the desperate assailants under Gamecnian, and the contest raged with more indescribable fury, and despite the strongness of their first two hours assault and which raged in general fury, the ,londelinians were again forced to fall back, the losses being calculated on both sides.

Simultaneously general Gamecnian had kept his outer entrenchment on his left after a sanguinary struggle in which both sides had changed in endless succession, and the christian lines were again advanced.This part of the struggle did not have a single lull for a moment and not once did the tremendous roar of cannon and musketry cease and with endless successive charge followed charge.All this while under a most heavy cannonade bit glondelinian foe forces had moved out passing the left flank of the christians which was then in motion to get a position further farther in the rear of his ,londelinian army and now the struggle became more desperate still.At first the fearful struggle went on in very much favour of the ,londelinians, the Anglinian troops being somewhat surprised and also overwhelmed.

Y, while the christian armies were advancing for a final attack under a ripping art illery fire they were struck in the flank by such heavy numbers that they were completely enveloped.But the Anglinians had become too thorough veterans to be thrown int o irreparable confusion by an unexpected attack on their rear even when off their guard and seen again they were in order and engaging the enemy bravely, entwith the advantage of now knowing where their wicked and murderous antagonist was.ch ,he field of battle continued to expand until it embraced about twenty five miles of ground and again whole lines of both sides were ripped to fragments in the bloody charges, and though the ,londelinians were holding all their positions, they were unable to advance any further,o ,idmoll advanced with the christian troops yet no not yet engaged to get upon the rearmost east of the enemys position and to also charge down upon the flank of their positions, and in a fearful struggle he was successful and at half past four rolled up their right and center, and again the enemy was forced to abandon his positions and fall back and being hard pressed, retreated further continuously however finding still hold his ground and so did ,idmoll.

It was while during this battle that general Glondelinian primates the commander in chief of the Glondelinian center suddenly while pressing from one column to another was dis dismounted with a broken leg and was while his horse was killed under him and his fall caused the Glondelinians to lose one of the ablest, boldest and best generals the nation e. could ever boa boast ofHe never did of his wounds but he never could rally enough to go back in the field and then be restored had to resign,his command and general John Hinley took his place.From in these struggles general Hinley Haller grew in his repute the following in the two rhythm about the leaves as for;

"By one total losses in killed, wounded, and missing in this part of the battle the estimated eight,ty one thousand and the enemys losses the same and according to general ,idmoll;

"The enemys attack, the brunt of which fell upon my unfy exhausted army was heavy, and the disparity of forces was so great from the first that in the foremost charge made by them the ,londelinian viscount ,idmoll Kingdom and ,ilbarnica and thirty one Glen f Grampian Anglinians as prisoners, representing thirty nine different regiments, eight brigades, and seven divisional commanders were who which fell dead or wounded inside the very enemys lines."

From during this while : after the fall of ,ilchelster ,ulverton, and while Jon Mauley who took his place later on strove with might and main and with his main forces to drive back ,idmoll's ascendancy, general Hinley made an attempt turned the other southern of the christian lines the enemys right flank thus causing all kinds of havoc, the sights o confusion tearing down spears, destroying crops or crops corn fields, thousands of cattle, sheeping and all kinds of cattle and vegetables, thousands of cattle, sheeping and all kinds of cattle and vegetables, and tearing up railroad tracks burning farm houses and barns or quiet country there, destroying property, burned children children's and strength

In the time the battle was raging a Glondelinian army under general Gumb-bell was also making to the support of general Hinleys glondelinian army which was opposing the attack of general ,idmoll and a portion of his army advanced into a country house where stood Alsops orphan asylum or a building really not for pr orphans but for children unable to be supported by parents already reduced extremely poor by the ravages of the war, this asylum being three miles and a half away from the battle fields,o ,londelinians the orders besieged the place.Imagine the terror of the children, and the consternation of their very elte minds when they saw the ,londelinians moving on the asylum in overwhelming numbers.The harvest of the children in the asylum in the north wings consisted for boys were eighteen years old old and who in the latter part served as generals in the war on the christian side;

'Robert John ,ouge, Jon Logan, ,ondel ,ouren ,ouse, ,ond ,ul ,ourton Throne, Stefan ,ighlinger, ,ulthem ,ohnson, Full ,ohnet ,ouren and ,ondel ,ouse and they duffid the enemy and tried to stop the confusion among the rolls,Hard were also the brave little girls among these boys, ,ondo ,ouse and ,ondlon ,ohnson who let or in the war became as great heroines as the ,ouis Thronedlon, and they appealed to their attendants to get their weapons and make some resistance.The attendants saw that in order to save the children they must hold the enemy at bay so they quickly secured all the weapons in the asylum and started firing upon the enemy while several others prepared the location into lines entrenched them out by the rear where the enemy could not get at them without falling into three of peries Ivy.By the time the enemy carried the asylum though sixty of them were killed and a hundred wounded for their success all the children were cut with the rest of their attendants but the ,londelinians scorned the building through and through, and even set it on fire ,they also went to the adjoining buildings sacked them, and the Central Infirmiary and sacked them after driging out all the no after a desperate fight of twohours in which a thousand ,londelinians were slain, and set them on fire also and massacred the men they captured,then other buildings belonging to the asylum known as the Idle Infirmary and the boys and girls Cottages and the asylum school building were rushed and sacked and eleven hundred children massacred before they could get away.It was cut in the open where the Mandelinians butchered them all/ fairly cutting them to pieces and the ground was cumbered with the bloody carpses.The children of the asylum alone escaped for the time being w but were,without shelter or food, and their homes being razed by the fire.Even now the Mandelinians were swarming over the lawns and p[ ]m, tearing down more fences, destroying the land laundries , engine house and a hospital causing the helpless child inmates of the latter building to be burned alive.About two thousand Mandelinians were sent in search of the children the had escaped from the main building, but Henry Arcadi and William O Neil saw the danger and hastened the children towards the trusty trolly tracks and while keeping a look out pulled plugged together to form an ambush.The enemy had come upon the buildings from the north.By the time the fugitives reached the trolly running to the town of Lincoln (calvertain) not far away, the two thousand Mandelinians were seen to be coming in a rush, and quickly hiding the children, the 6th ette nin about three hundred and sixty in number hid in ambush, armed with repeating rifles and many with fourt y fives.Though far less than the Mandelinians,they had perfect confidence in their trusty weapons and cautiously l[illegible] the Mandelinians led by colonel Gumillin.ere enough they ran into the trap and the attendants opening a withering fire upon them caused the startled gangsters down by the hundred.Demoralized , the Mandelinians thinking they ran into a body of Abbesinian soldiers in ambush, At first retreated a little in confusion, but their leaders rallied them and the survivors rushed to the attack with appalling fury surrounding the[ ] a the attendants on all sidesbut their hidden ammunitions again caused a fire o e destruction that another three hundred rebels were shot down and the survivors were compp compelled to flee, most of the children screaming, and raising an uproar in their fright at the vicinity of the vampyres.

"Now quick boys." cried Henry Arcadi."We have not much time to lose for they will surely come back afterwards with greater numbers and then it will be all up with us if we don't get off sooner."

From there they were they could now see the enemy entering the build burning the Schoolhouse across from the burning asylum and others surrounding over a large large lawn of or mansion extending from a large stone house to rdy on the railroad lines beyondthe Mandelinians here were running in tens of thousands and suddenly they met a force of Abyssinians of the soldiery and a de desperate struggled struggle raged with fright[illegible] fury the roaring of the rebels firing being now splitting to the attendants and weeping children the more being gathered together again, the attendants and children being more brave and proud planting themselves on all sides of them and keeping on down the trolly tracks under cover of the many treestumps firing from the school house could be heard and the sound of firing rolling heavily extended elsewhere but that it was about the attendants or even the frightened children could not tell.

A number of the Mandelinians however discovered the fugitives after leaving the tunnel which ran under ground to the burning school from the main wing, and seeing the others they were cutting the bonds, leaped out with them and started firing towards the fugitives.But though the shots came from thousands of Mandelinians they never struck for the fugitives were protected by a mass of bodies and unless bruckfully in what helped make the firing heard in the direction of the rebellyvers. The attendants perceiving that a considerable detachment of Mandelinians Mandelinians were rushing toward them across the lawn lawn, and having escorted the Abyssinians repelling them on the tracks, ordered the children to run as fast as they could to another point of the railroad tracks not yet in the possession of the enemy.They obeyed running as fast as they could in separate masses, filling the air with their thousand a childish shrieks, and seeing fresh Mandelinians converging over the railroad tracks, now halted in consternation, especially as the Mandelinians began firing, their streamers of smoke hiding their lines out of sight, the bullets whizzing the leaves of the trees from their branches and several of the children were hit and badly wounded.The some children had however experienced this kind of peril at the very outbreak of the war but this matter worse, the other Mandelinians who rallied around this neighborhood having spared the buildings, and being less desperate in their chase, but these Mandelinians were bound to capture the fugitives at all costs, beginning to burn them from the school itself was now a mass of flame and thousands of Mandelinians were fairly swarming over the lawns, setting other houses on fire about the railroad tracks, Lincoln was afire and the rebels now stopped a train which appeared coming in on the other point ,commanding all the soldiers and men and children and also women in the carriages, and wrecking the train but sparing the engineer and firemen as they were Mandelinians.Even now Henry Arcadi could see general gumballs main army coming and new general gumball in the lead, and therefore knew whose Mandelinians it was, and so was more determined to get the children out of their clutches

So they made towards the lawns facing the coast where the Abbisamia, Zeminia and Galverine railroad lines were, pursued in full fury by regular platoons of these yelling human fiends in grey.Yet the attendants bringing up the rear held a number of the enraged Mandelinians at bay with well aimed shots,who enemy returned the fire and ten of the attendants fell killed and Henry Arcadi was mortally wounded.At the same time other pursuing Mandelinians coming on horseback galloped on with reckless fury filling the surviving attendants with great contempt and though they managed to shoot a good number of the enemy down with a loss of nearly fifty more of their own number and with William O Neil killed the other rebel horsemen, and thousands of thousand feet came on and the attendants seeing that the children were far ahead already and had disappeared plunged into seeing that the children were far ahead already and had disappeared plunged into the underbrush followed at full cry by the Mandelinians.Those very ones Mandelinians Mandelinians or a part of them not in the pit pursuit after ripping up many miles of the railroad marched on the very term of Lincoln but have a strong portion of pickmells army was entrenched and though the Mandelinians made assault after assault the Angelinians here under general gumballs Penny fought grimly, desperately against them, the Mandelinians thronging them upon their strongholds with valorious shouts and even beginning at last to surmd the note of victory to the christian lines weakened from the incessant rebel fire and onslaughts.Men were falling among the christian lines why hundreds, bleeding and dying, while the rain of the Mandelinians mingled with the shocking prayers of the dying cursed of the Mandelinians mingled with the shocking prayers of the dying Abbesinians and here and there some unwounded christian survivor raised a cry of encouragement and here and there some unwounded christian survivor raised a cry of encouragement and here and there some unwounded christian survivor raised a cry of encouragement

Violet and Jennie Vivian were well enough now to walk around though it was only four days since the battle of Apalo Orchid and they and their other sisters were as saddened by a the sad awful sight of desolation ,and watched the glow of the burning freight cars, villages and tilas and distant bridges and burning asylum buildings and farms and haysacks.As the main body of Abyssinkilliams were now coming up coming up far in advance they saw forms of all sizes loom up before them but by the sound of the voices they realized they were children, and though in panic some of the bravest Abyssinkilliams had started suddenly a furious fire of musketry, thinking it was an ambush, they instantly ceased.But the officers in charge gave forth ringing challenges in just the same.

''Don't fire.We are fugitives''Exclaimed a voice.''Our buildings have been razed by fire at set g by the foe and we are out here with about seven thousand children who were saved from these murderers.Who are you Soldiers, and would you please give us shelter and food!''

The Abyssinkilliams not wishing to be caught in a trap, ordered them t all to stand where they were untill they were able to see whether the man was speaking the truth or not, and by the flare of lights, seeing it was so notified general Gompaine by sending his signal lanterns and flashlights in the same manner as fire flies would in the darkness, and the general came up on the gallop followed by Commentinian Arenburg himself.And being told that the strange multitude was Commentinian Arenburg ordered them to be placed in his rear, Gompaine to send them under strong escort. Violet and her sisters or dorothy Gale as soon as possible.Commentinian Arenburg himself then be heard the words.''I believe.poisons that many terrible things are about to happen for if Shecmannia or Stanley receives reinforcements to narrow my victory on federal or holding him at bay untill I arranged will all be in vain though I have succeeded not in holding my ridges but carrying his also.There may be a sea tiemsen of the long struggle and I wish them out of harm way.''

The children were placed in the re rear and Jennie garner and Angaline Jones wishing to stay by he are great general they had heard so much about, received their wish and a good t ight example of tight hugs and kisses from the great general as well, while the soldiers cheered them almost deafe.A few moments later after most of the children were rapidly transported to the rear, scouts brought news now now that a great part of Stanleys Lincolnians arriving to support Farrugertian and Furgar Farguterian at ,Avian ,Stanley or Julio Cullio had come up toward Shecmannia Shecmannian forces also and that thereforces about equal in strength as the christians or a little more,concentration Arenburg saw that the children could not be sent right away to Angaline Agathon or dorothy Gale, for a the enemy was everywhere, so they were to stay in his army untill somethings in the situation came, though at their pleads, Shecmannian and his brave boy friends were allowed to become young lieutenants in the army though they were told they had to go through a hot p ell pout practice and we were to take locations from the government earthworkings.

The enemy in had retired in all their forces toward Julio Cullio and gave Farrugertian and Shecmannian devised to flank the enemy out of his position before they reached the city, and even in the night preparations began, but the work was tedious and the lines that were to be maintained were very very long.But the Angolinian r troops were gradually worked around to the east untill they struck a railroad between the ruined asylum and the burned town of Lincoln and ordered all the non-combatants to go to the rear so that with neti nothing would happen t o them in case the enemy would so deliver a heavy attack.The enemys lines also were strongly fortified as well as three north and west of the townsAt Commentinian Arenburg at gunpoint ordered the aforesaid as close to the enemys lines as possible and in order to hold them with the smallest possible number of men, the plan being to diebtch an army to cross by the right, and try to get upon the railroad down north which run toward the city of Avian ,Stanley or Lew Julio Cullio section and try to capture the ,Lincolnian ex army of Shecmannia. The movement by the right flankwe was commenced but the enemy suddenly struck the right flank of the christians with great vigor and indomitable fury, but the Angolinians resisted all the assaults, and inflicted a great deal of damage upon the enemy and killing general Cundall in the frightful carnage and destroyed his army.However these assaults were confirmed without intermission all that night.The enemys losses in these unsuccessful assaults were fearful,and the repulse of the assaults left Shecmannian forces close up to the positions of the Lincolnians extending from a point extending directly east of the city around by the west and north of it for a distance of fully fourty miles, the whole of the enemys lines being stronger than supposed,however when one of the christian forces endeavored to get upon the railroad to a right whereby a part of Gompaines was in command they failed on account of vehement and general assaults Shecmannian left and destroyed it nearly up to his lines and this for the time being cut Shecmannian off from all communications with Angolinia Agathon.

Yet he responded to this attack upon his main line of communications by directing a fierce and herculean onslaught upon Ascountants, and drove overwhelming numbers against him.The struggle was fearful, and so fiercely was Ascountants engaged and so heavily was he overwhelmed, and seeing that Shecmannian also was making a flank movement with as large a force as could be got together to some point, hesppealed to Adele-Go-Garbo for help.Adele-Go-Garbo came up with his army and contested the bloody ground for four hours with superhuman effort committing a horrible storm of slaughter, but in the struggle all of Ascountants military stores blew up, and Ascountants with his own communications also destroyed by Gompaine was forced to yeild, though Adele-Go-Garbo still held his ground, and his line of battle seemed to be a regular storm of small conflagrations from the fierce discharge of musketry and cannon.At the retreating of Ascountants army, the Angolinians made a charge and took possession of his works, and ratified Shecmannian whose army was striking sudden sledge hammer blows of assaults upon the enemy entrenchd near the asylum,seeing that he was successful in his attack, general Shecmannian sent a large force to destroy the railroads southwest of the captured works where the enemy had retreated from n and threw up stronger positions.They were then to go east if possible to release the christian prisoners about the region of the Shecmannian ville and river, where he heard great rending reports about the hardships these prisoners were now enduring.They were treated like dogs forced to live in sheds, and were hardly fed when inside the stockades.Almost any failing was known to be fatal for the child prisoners among them who were reported to be slaughtered by the score every day, and Shecmannian even thought that if they could even be turned loose upon the country, it would be a great relief to them.

Violet and her sisters were with them Angolinians who were to attempt the rescue and their most earnest prayers filled the soldiers with great enthusiasm.

The revolt was commenced on the last day of August sometime after the battle of Galo-Gildinia by the help of the moonlight and much damage was inflicted upon the enemy by the de destruct ion of army cars, of trains trains of cars electric locomotives, army wagons, manufacturies of supplies, railroad bridges, the driving of many herds of cattle and the destruction of many small villages of scattered glandolinian camps held by the foe.The they marched along the banks of the Shecmannville river and made a fierce attack on the stockades and prisons, and though repulsed returned to the assault with frightful fury.But the main forces of the enemy came up to this point and after very severe fighting almost surrounded the christians and the attempt proved a failure.In this fierce attack general Jensen phast on who commanded a small division of Abyssinkilliams was captured by the enemy but he succeeded in getting away after inflicting a good deal of damage upon them.He had also taken some prisoners but afterwards encountered a largely superior force of the enemy and was obliged to let his prisoners go free and get back to the christ ian lines as best he could and with men he had left left .

He had left in fifteen minutes several thousand men in dead and six thousand in wounded and nearly five thousand in captured out of his twenty thousand and when he came into the christian lines, and reported that general Shecmannian and all but himself were lost, and on account of Violet and her sisters being among those captured.Jensen was then preparing for a general attack, upon them Shecmannian came in with a small detachment, and with ,Violet and her sisters, stating that the rest were lost.

It was on the early morning when with the effort to make Shecmannian retreat from Stanley west sixty thousand of his glandolinians to make a general raid and half the number of these glandolinians advanced on a fer ley on South west Jensen garrison and about five hundred feet from the South was a small tent and a cabin, and the ,Lincolnians prowling heard it like Indians now a tiny prett y maiden of seven years creeping along beside the tent wagon, glancing frequently and rapidly behind it and darting around the corner of the house.Evidently as they got nearer, a frenzied sound, embraced by her brother came pelting around the front of the tent, hesitated for an instant, and started around the house in another direction.Just then the laughing little maiden had divined divined his purpose and started to retrace his steps her steps in attempt to conceal the house in his rear.She stood her dark shimmering curls scarcely as she caught a glimpse of he his retreating form and uttered a whispered shout,

''We can't catch me,We can't catch me, can't can't catch me can't''

A little sinewy hand seemed to shoot out from nowhere and stifled even a whisper from her lips.She herself,lifted up into the air and looked in the horrible disguised face if a dangerous ,Lincolnian guilinda gorailler Gargylion.

Quick as a rat I lacrobe, and all vigilant in his movements the marvel of the glandolinian provinces had arisen from among some cops brush and one of them raised her glorified glaring with the h stared of a demon at her as he made back to his comrades with one hand covered over her mouth and nose.Screaming any amount the glandolinians to spring up, and the boys shrink by one still more piercing as the captor threatened to cut the childs throat on account of her struggles for air had aroused all.The child mother had rushed from the little cabin and her hands were lifted to the overstriddking heavens in ''God Heaven pity'' agony of supplication and despair.The little child suffering from suffocation struggled frantically and the boy screamed louder as the cowboys came rushing onto.But it was worse than folly for the cowboys to contend against such demons in human form the shot them down all while the women and boy already captives watched with despairing agony the slaughter of the brave cowboys who had ridden out to save the women and two more the slaughter of the brave cowboys who had ridden out to save the women and two were the slaughter of the brave cowboys who had ridden out to save the women and two children.The uproar and firing was deafening, and the ,Lincolnians themselves fairly encumbered the ground as the luckless cowboys shot them down.The Lincolnians were now getting fairly worsted as several more cowboys arrived and joined Indians were now getting fairly worsted as several more cowboys arrived and joined Indians were now getting fairly worsted as several more cowboys arrived and joined Ind

The child was already unconscious for she was smothered and the glandelinian then took away his hand and grabbed her by the throat.The cowboys were now driven into a frenzy and there was no need to say the terrible words of the ensueing results for the dejected attitudes of the cowboys as they fought man to man like frenzied demons least of their reasons from torments, and the captured women uttered no sound so great was her sorrow.The little cabin, the tent ,the cowboy remains were set on fire, and all the cattle and horses driven off.The women was more smitten than captives had ever seen her before.,here were the two tiny arms, the touch which transformed that earth into heaven for her.,here was the rosy little mouths she had kissed each day since they came into being,her eyes fell upon the boy in possession of the glandelinians,-sobbing bitterly, and then at last her great up sorrow burst into'tears as the glandelinians being reinforced by the cowboys being reinforced by soldiers, reinvested dropping them off for feligund by the frenzied cowboys and the christian soldiers.These glandelinian drugnitudes were certainly fieres and terrible, and it was only wished soldiers the would desiere that war on women and children was Salvation the little girl recovered the glandelinian who had her in his gregor grasp, committed a deed that was horrible.He clenched her throat then a frown could have done and she strove to pull away his horrible grasp but the harder he clenched herwhile struggle thereat was crushed in his firm grasp and the big sight of her face was sickly, at blood streamed from her nose mouth, and eyesight least her hands hung down, her chin touching his sinewy hands, her feeble struggles became less from frequent, and her mouth was wide open while her t ongue protruded all its length, and her eyes started from their sockets, seconds after untold agonies were too much for her tender heart and she quickly died, her hand thrown for back and blood streaming from her mangled throat.When the fiend let go of the childs throat, her tongue still protruded, and her neck was crimpulsen and lifelessWhen the captor took out his dagger cut out her eyes and o t ongue before the very eyes of the frenzied mother, then undressed the little girl until she was naked, cut her eyes from the o chin observed and tearing out the intestines threw the bloody corpse at the fainting womanHover before had any of these glandelinians seen such or observed such a bleak or frightened boy and just because he was scared one of the glandelinians decided todo the same thing to him.Despite the frenzie and screams of the frenzie mother and her endeavors to prevent him from seizing the boy, other glandelinians came o the rescue aid and the boy was in his grasp.Despite child struggled vehemently, beating at his face with his fist and also tried to bite himthe glandelinians however grasped him by the throat checking his as hard as he did his sisterogain struggles grew grew more feeble and at last they ceased altogether his tongue protruding like his sisterogthe main division of the dirty reviews now came up and thecowboys and soldiers was forced to abandon the squatter attack and retreat, pursued by thousands of the glandelinians fiendlikeThe soldiers ripped up railroads again, crushed trains and butchered the survivors, and destroyed every farm they came to.Thousands of the glandelinians at i ts same timecame upon a line of stockades filled with formerly rescued children and defended by soldiers, the glandelinians assailing these positions in overwhelming manners and when they were repulsed twice despite the fury of their attacks, surrounded it, carried it by battering them down with cannons and then the ensueing slaughter was frightful.

In vain the puny innocent children tried to escape, pleaded for mercy, and screamed screamed, but the glandelinians slaughtered them as fast as they could pick them up, and as the survivors hid themselves, surrounded the stockades and set fire them them to them and waited to catch any one who should escape.All who escaped their haires were burned in the fire, and the few who attempted to escape were coised and fairly hacked to pieces.The murderous raiders protested on their work of destruction, destroying twenty trains of the freight cars, two more orphan asylums and killing all the fematen in the most brutal manner.

Then they came upon a small villiage guarded by a small part of Hunsen greatly outnumbered army and after a sanguinary struggle lasting four hours, the glandelinians o drove these christians beyondin frightful losses and captured the villiage making all the buildings, and setting them on fire, after slaying h undreds of the women and children who had not escaped with the otherswho had miles more the raiders returned on their work of destruction, and after a series of covers skirmishers with large divisions of Hunsenian soldiers and even cowboys fell back to the main lines.Upon morningthe following day enraged and alarmed over these h orrible atrocities general Hunsen ,Vivian decided to try once again to give general Hunsley and Federal a good beating and made haste with a go good part of his forces to strike the fiendish blackwhiter on hour of marching general Hunsen came upon a large division of christiansThe surviving inhabitants of Wichidaia were still in peril and many of those who had escaped the savage ravenging fury in the recent slaughters had went to the christian commanders many times asking fortelp, but received answer thatthose who did not flee to the christ ian lines when there was yet time were really lost, for the enemy could not be forced from their positions in a week and that those who were ill remaining were to do their best to escape themselves if possible and not to go to general Gutherine or any section of Vivian ,Ickey either, for probably vivian wishey would never fail.

General gunsen himself had torn up all the railroads running inard and into Vivina Wisky Wisley called now the"City of Murder" and this way done,in his effort to prevent any more of the glandelinian armies from getting to ,vivian ,ickey and general by rail to reinforce the rebels there.General gunsen immediately provoked General Federal to give his battle in full force and after two o hours of feinting and movements enough to harass the enemy, Federal was f orced to send his forces for forward to the storming with fury, and soon another battle was on for the possess ion of Wichidaia.The divisions under general Marten Delgney received the full shock of Federals attack, while general ,ewell Baxter ,dustless men under their new leader advanced to support them, and"soon the enemy was meeting a severe resistance.The Angelinians kept up a heavy fire upon the enemy who was advancing in silence.From the assailants and a stream of fire fourty miles long shot from the christian lines as the Angelinians poured a deadly storm of destruction upon them.As they silently neared the christian lines the firing became terrific and Federals whole line within four hours was torn to fragments and buried back with horrible carnage.Thousands now advanced to the attack to do what Federal failed to do, and as the divisions of glandelinian Angelinians advanced and closed in on Shermanside, his army of assailants became surrounded by sheet sheets of final flame from their destructive gun fire.The their whole front line was withered and dissolving away, and eight of their main columns were torn to fragments, while also Shermanside left wing that was shattered to pieces, and the survivors were compelled to break into confusion and flee, while officers and thousands of men were falling on all sides of Shermanside. It was carnage pure and simple.

Shermanside divisions being crushed to fragments and driven back in the most terrific struggle, ,Sidwell, Abdale-Sparks and ,pendrake decided to try their luck, to retake both th o columns under general ,Grim, ,Sidwell and Connerdinian Brockway,pendrake hurled h imself like angry storm wave upon gunsendinian Angelings line but was crushed to fragments within embers and ruined, and Abdale-Sparks army was almost annihilated simultaneously and again there was a blizzard rolling up of the glandelinian Brockwaidwell then hurled forward his whole force with the most indescribable fury and desperationthe heavy b ck batteries of the christ ians sat on at the other on their hats, most breathless after bombardment of shells and canister which long tearing through glandelin lines like a hurricane, but the survivors sought even deeper into the long fourty mile of fire and carnage, and both sides manoeuvre and clashing for a death grapples the Angelinian contenders did the most awful havoc and soon glandelin lines also in danger of complete annihilation, and already cut to pieces at several points were thrown into hopeless confusion, and soon badly mangled and shattered were driven 61 into a total rout.Angelinian forces behind were badly used and so badly that they could not be returned again for several days.Sidwell sanguinary struggle had raged for five hours and which had resulted in a great victory for the christians who had captured 7,?? glandelinians as prisoners thirty eight thousand of which were unwounded.All this while the news of the danger of the remaining inhabitants in the big city of ,Vivian Wisley himself had spread like wild fire and general Hunsen despite his confidence in their courage feared that Wisley himself would never be captured on time to give the millions of people women and children and old men from extermination.A great effort was made to call the christian generals to even greater their and Angelinia help but when they did try to respond the enemy were by too strong to be even driven off from their purpose to cut the Hunsens besieging army in the rear and the besiegers were in great danger.All the churches were full of women and children imploring God to send help but the glandelinians in the streets scouting them, arrested them and even the preacher for the 8th time since the arrest of Gilbert and her sisters children in the city, were filled with terror stricken millions of women and children.Scores of citizens were seen hanging from every wall, window housetops, and steeples but the enemy only tore them down and arrested all those who were caught put flag them up.The enemy knowing of Hunsens approach threw up longer lines of battle, and all this while Hunsen in his advance t o Wichidaia support was still destroying farms and villiages and driving off cattle but on doing so home.to the cowboys who were ordered glad to give their cattle to the christians.The glandelinians under Hanley in their retreat retreat halted near the scene of yarnh or short territorial from there and taking position on h igh ridges of hills constructed batteries with thousands of signal stations and powerful searchlights on each hill.

Violet and her sisters after all their sufferings had been covered with dirt and were taken instead o were eight, looking more like children than never did anything else but keep driving.Being a hill in this furious driving campaign and series of battles which had occurred for three months already, Hunsen had her sisters tiring of the girl decided to take a bath in the Wichidaiand he bathing river.In the shallows of which were clear and pleasant where the water was placid and not dangerous for in certain parts of the golden river it is dangerous to bathe on account of of being within sight of the enemys lines where they could easily be scourgeouring plently of good clothes and soap and towels they left the en camp guards by a score of soldiers and made for the river which they soon saw through a ci clump of bushes shining like a wide stream of silver in the light of the moon, it being now dark.

They soon reached the river and two hours later seven smiling little girls with their spot less litt le bodies was had clean to snowy whiteness were laughing gayly, and even loudly ,even spalshing each other with water, and even chasing each other about the creek, when a sudden fusillade of shots rang out, and all of their guardians fell sprawling.Then t they saw dark forms like horses mean mounted some dashing down toard the river bank and saw it was a party of ,landolinians who had been out scouting, and cool setting up a hedious yell as they saw them shot down their guardians and galloped toard the little bathers at break-neckspeed, being more tempted as the little girls were naked save for a strip of cloth around their loins and always not being able to resist the temptation of cutting naked little girls open alive.Violet and her sisters immediately dashed into the deeper portion of the river and then around to the shore at a distance further down toard a clump of bushes where they had their pistols and clothing, but the persuers wheeled their horses and dashed toard the bushes yelling like demons. violet and her sisters had no time to p pick up their clothing or weapons for the enemy were upon them.However violet and he sisters quickly found a ledge of rocks and hid behind them preparing t o fight to the death.The little girls were nearer to t he christ ian lines then the ,landolinians thought, and realising this violet and her sisters dashed from the rocks,-and set up a series of parising shrieks to attract the attention of th e companies.The ,landolinians observing them dart from behind the ledge of rocks, dismou tdismounted and scattered, determined to surround the little girls and close from them, and soon as they saw him or sim landolinians creeping toard them from the rear on hands a d n and knees, they the little girls realised they were surrounded.

Violet and her sisters were helpless because they were not armed, for the landolinians were not so many in numbers, and if they only had their ve weapons, they would have managed to shoot them untill help came.Violet and her sisters managed to stone a good many of the ,landolinians, but the rebels in front now charged up to the ledge of rocks, and though violet and her sisters each sang at the rebels with long branches not beyond their strength to use hacking them down by turn or twos ion even, others took their places or the fallen crept to their feet, while scores were grouping up in their rear.Violet and her sisters were hatred burned in ,and bullets were flying thick and fast for the ,landolinians the were further ther enemy were heaping up a fi fusillade to bring down the desperate children.

Yet not a single shot struck the little girls who themselves brought down many a greycoat with their boomerangs.One of the leaders a captain was struck down by a brush held by Jumnie and his face, badly torn which infuriated the landolinians who closed in manner and poured murder upon the little girls forming a regular tropeDown the ,landolinians were shots scrapener the little girls, quickly pouncing upon them with fiendish yells and dragging them despite their struggles from the rocks, and toard where the horses were tethered.

Violet and her sisters still struggled but the ,landolinians bound their arms and feet with stout cords, and threw them over the backs of seven horses mount as they were, and mounting on the same horses but behind the girls set off toard Sahumania Shoemanias lines, the ,landolinians laughing over their successfully exceedingly beautiful prizes as they galloped off, only to collide into a party of Abyssinillians and a regiment of Angolinians under general Gurumbe ,brian who had been out scouting.

A fierce s, skirmish ensued which resulted in the defeat of the poor Angolinians who were overwhelmed.The Abyssinillians attacked th em with utmost ferocity fighting like savages and striking with all their might to seize the children from the rebels but during the struggle the rebels in possession of the ,brian girls rushed away down the pond-galloping off toard the main lines eluding their unmounted persuerance of the ,landolinians who was riding on the horse carrying Jumnie was shot down by a bull fired from an Abyssinillian and if it was not for three of the ,landolinians who rode in between the horse would have run away with Jumnie and killed him.The rebel lines were soon reached and th e children were taken before a general with long flowing hair the at first appeared to be general Fadpul Fudsrul, and he sent them to general Shoemania.

"These 7 little beautiful beauties are the greatest spies of the christian armies and a hundred million dollar reward is offered for them for their capture dead or alive."Was that the man said

When violet and her sisters saw general Shoemania they could truthfully say that he was not as ugly looking as many Angolinians said, he indeed being a very handsome looking man but being very haughty and hen he i having a very brutalish and majestic and r proud appearance scowled fiercely on he saw violet and her sisters,(but at them) and then his scowl changed to a smile as he said scornfully, and with evil wonlust look at them,

"Well so they are spies, and the ,brian ,irls at that?" nd what beauties they are indeed and the why are they whoistands.So they are the Angolinian Princess's as I see!"

And to their surprise he quickly grasped the little girls one by one, roughly dragging them from the men and cast them into the tent.and then before the little girl heroines knew it they were each almost crushed to his heart or chest their little chests against him and he hugged them long.Then almost embracing them into a happy sleep he went on and said to the men who had scattered them!

"You blockheads if I had known you were a lot of cowardsand butchers I would never have taken command of any army here, or even taken part in the war itself whether the nationalists are right or wrong in their cause.that in the name of heaven did you bring these little girls here for and even without any clothes on,and were they spying when you caught them?"

"I'm not sure whether they were spying or not."Said the officer who had le the party who had captured the little girls."they were in bathing in the ,ream ,un when we came upon them unexpectedly.But they are the seven Vilan ,iri Abbiolenian princess's, and they are also famious spies, and the cliperest kind and deserve immediate death, for they would surely get away again if held long."

Shoemania only smiled and said!

"I have my greatest doubts if they are spies, or dangerous even at that, and that you men are just wishing to see them murdered because they are seven of King ,vians daughters.Well let me tell you, y and goldmain ,ackmell go hand in hand on the same road, ad any man of each of our commands who are caught slaughtering children like Gamiella army did, they will pay the penalty of death or disgraceful disch g d discharge from the army.There is no use to argue either, for I do not give shit one cent what ,manley says, he is any how a mere puppet and not fit of the duties of a generals.I'm going to keep these little girls with me for a while,and then I' ll take them before ,ackmellami have them transported back to the christian lines where they rightly belong.You men had no business seizing these children,es especially the way they are now without even letting them put on their clothes.You are dismissed.go on and be quiet about it."

The soldiers walked as they withdrew, but the moment that Shoemania was about, even for one minute some of the soldiers rebelled and managed to overpore the guards at the tent and again binding the prisoners, hand and feet and gagging them so they could not scream, mounted their horses and proceeded for general Ackmellamis headquarters as fast as they could ride hoping to get there before Shoemania would discover their race, but it took them nearly two hours to get there.Then dismounting the ,landolinians took down their captives, unbound them, and led them up the steps of the building.Violet and her sisters fearing immediate death at the hands of these strange commanders, tried to get away, but two of the ,landolinians leveled their muskets at them and said;

"We will take no monkey shines yo little shrimpies.Either march up these steps or you will be dragged up."

They obeyed panting fiercely..marching up the long line of steps and to a door where a guard let them in, and the ,landolinians entered a reception room with their prisoners and waited for ackmellamis.

But who should come not only ackmellamis, but general Jackpine Jumnie or ,mack-Mac-the-Sword and Adolf-Gumperts followed a few moments by three other leading hostile general officers ,their prisoners.Violet and her sisters recognized them all, but general gave them a fierce and deadly scowl saying as he rushed out of the room;

"I'd sooner die and let my soul burn in hell than look upon them breath of hellish.These ,brian ,irls are too innocent looking for me.By I hate them.They are more than ,vampyrellas."

"What have you got there now?"said ,ackmell-the-Sword ,ack-in the hand.

"We made a lucky capture."Said one of the soldiers"We have the most famious Anglolinian spies ever caught.They are going to die now."

"We quit here, can't go on Gack."Said ,ackmell in a fury.

"Ja,ja."laughed Adolphe-Gumpte"We they are going to die whether they are spies or not.All that is certainly funny eh?" ,ackmell?"

"I saw this capture myself but said nothing about it at first ,ackmann-in-the-Sand with a long laugh louder than Adolphe-Gumpertz."and they were spying on us eh? the way they were spying on us was simply foolproof.They were not swimming in the ,ream ,un ,iver on the christian side of the shore and playing with each other, then these soldiers deliberately shot their guardians in cold blood and let his rescued these little girls naked as they are."

"We came upon these christian dogs unexpectedly, and though they us may be guiltless of spying, they are responsible for the deaths of our own army of s men whom they shot down many times during the war already, and who returned them in these times."Said the leading cap captor.

"A That shows they got some grit."Said ,ackmell while the other three seemed to look with a sinister expression at the little girls."and as they were not spying when caught, I'm going to save their lives and see that they go back to the christian lines."

"They must be put to death."cried the officer angrily."And if you refuse I'll take these young striplings before general ,ohn Manley."

"That is the way to talk."Said one of the other wicked generals."ackmell and even Shoemania are too easy on christian kids and do all their best to save them all and refuse to let their own help in the slaughter.The best thing to do with them is to take them before general John Manley and he will have the little snipes b put to death"

"Hand them over here and be mighty quick about it too."said general ,mack-Mac-the-Sack, while general ,mack-Turtle-Head, and Accountants, and also Adolphe-Gumpertz executed their approval, and advanced toard the little girls.

"Here little cupids come with me."g said Accountants."We will take you in our own charge."

The wicked officers b began to protest vigorously.

"Go to the fiends will you "shouted Adolphe-Gumpertz"Do you think we are going to be trifled with.If you slaughter the ,brian ,irls King ,brian will slaughter all of us and kill our own women and children.Bring the ,brian girls over here and don't delay either."

Bicknell himself was not discouraged especially as he was backed by his aides and said angrily;

"Why you seem to forget I'm in command here.If I can't have a whole bunch of children brought before me by a whole lot of accessories without this kind of argument, I'll fairly set them free, if I have to eat or shoot you all down.And I'll have you all put to death any way if there is any further argument for this bungle you have committed.If the Vivian girls were destroyed general or ring Robert Vivian their father who would take swift and terrible revenge and all our own children would do to their deaths and the whole of Landelinia exterminated or annihilated. You generals will be dismissed in disgrace if you argue with me further.and their shooting down as many of their recent perverse.How that they are so brave as the Angelinian soldiers themselves and that their girl who is here also is true.Bring them into my own room and do not any another word, or a you will do so at your risk.I'll take no argument from any of you disloyal generals."

"Accountants and the others escorted as the other soldiers had to give the children up and one of the disloyal generals seeing the order turned round and said;

"I will report this affair to Stanley."This is most treasonable, harbouring enemies of Landelinia, and, and, and-"

"Report to Stanley and you won't live to give no more reports away."said grosch, in-the-mask while the others escorted."He had no business o to bring the seven Abbissenian Princess's into our midst and you have bungled everything by doing so."

Accountants and Adolo-De-Garbo led the children into the room the other leaders shutting the door after them.Then they were alone the famous Landelinian generals were struck and amazed by the beauty of the little girls and of their loving manners, and innocent and daring ways, and stood staring at them for fully three minutes and then Adolo-De-Garbo said;

"How in the does did you little girls happen to be captured when bathing in the dark.Anyway you were indeed foolish to be so far from your own christian friends.We know that you were merely not spying on us."

"We are no spies."Said Violet."and we could not do so if y told to, for is is generally for us to do that kind of work.and we were not far from the lines at thatwe were in the river near the shore bathing, and even having fun with each other when the soldiers suddenly came riding into the river and kidnapped us. We of courseare merely afraid of these ketchers and do confess that when we were able, and w ere armed we did shoot a number down but never killed any one yet."

"butchers indeed"agreed Bicknell to himself."My own and many of my officers are a whole lot of accessible and now I'm sorry that I ever took command of the armies of the gingerbut now it is too late, and if I would resign I would fall into serious trouble with the kind and he would charge me without with accessibleand besides as I believe our cause is just, I might as well fight it out as long as the war rages, or untill I fall, but I'll never fall down the wrong path or be an enemy of od either.It's no sin if you fight on the side you believe in right, but its the sin of murder and assassination to kill poor helpless children, and I mean to save these Vivian girl princesses no matter what will befall me for dl doing it. Once I be disgrd disgraced, God help them then, for what then will the armies do without me.He indeed I will not get into trouble for saving them, and I know it especially as my friends with h me here takes part with me.Then turning to the little girls he said;

"You little girls were not spying when you were caught so we are going to grant you, your freedom but we'll have to send you out of the lines by a roundabout with me to the bathroom and I'll find some clothing or good disguises for you.Though we are on opposite sides we are friends nevertheless andallegiance....."[illegible]

Suddenly the door opened with a swift bang and Shoomania came rushing in wild with rage.However he recovered himself as he saw the children and said;

"How in the does general Bicknell, my friend did you get these little Princess's of Abbissenia"They were in my tent only a little over two hours agoMy guards as I found were overpowered and the children gone.I thought we had been too beset by Angelinian spies who carried them off."

"Why three officers and twenty privates of your command brought them here, or at least we took them from the rascals."Said Bicknell in surprise, while Accountants, Adolo-De-Garbo,, grosch-De-Thebrand and Prussic-In-The-Neck began to look suspicious.

"Why look here Shoomania, did you also harbor these little girls with intentions of setting them free?"Asked Adolo-De-Garbo.

"How did you happen to guess the truth?"asked Shoomania with the same suspicion the others felt.

For a moment there was silence among them all, every offer looking at each other.Then Bicknell turned to the little girls and said;

"Go into that bathroom and put on the clothes I have procured for you."

Then he turned to general Accountants and said;

"Summon those two officers here who just went out."....

Accountants obeyed.He went out after saluting and making a profound bow.Bicknell and her sisters were thunderstruck over this occurrence, and though they obeyed, they were greatly awed and could not find word to speak.

"If you wish to escape you little girls will have to dress up as little boys, and make yourselves as dirty and as homely looking as possibly so as to disguise your beauty.Most of the were among us rebels ather pretty children, and would be suspicious when they saw your sweet faces as they knew no boys could look as you do.You will also have to change your girlish manners as long as you are within the camp, or they will also know you are girls in disguise.They are pretty clisk y can tell you."

He handed them some boys clothing and then he turned to converse with his other generals.When the little girls came out of the bathroom, he painted hadious marks and signs on their clothes, then gave them wigs big enough to cover up their tightly tied up hair, which they did themselves, and also false faces.They put these on and soon they were al already, looking more like little imps in boys clothes.Their disguises were quite uncomfortable for the little girls being a little too l large but it would save them from detection just the same.Then he wrote down on a white sheet of paper;;;;;;;;;;

"These littlechildren are not to be detained, and must be shown where the christian lines are, for they wish to see what is going on there."

general Waldenia Bicknell.

He then blew a whistle and several Landelinian officers came in saluting.Bicknell handed the note to on one of the officers and ordered him to do that was written therein.At that moment general Accountants came in with the two officers he had been sent after, and glancing at the supposed boys, and saluting Bicknell said;

"The Angelinians are advancingAdmiral Vivian and Generalissimo Shoubury leading them in persons."

The officers with the supposed boys withdrew taking them outside, and by the way they walked at once detected them.Accountanmed also noticed it but said nothing.

"You are no Vivian girls"one of the escorts said."but you are not in danger though we have detected you and will will see that Bicknells orders are obeyed.We would embrace you if we dared,but that would bring suspicion, and we would be detained despite Bicknells note."

They were brought outside, and as they went down the steps the dull booming roar of cannon broke the stillness.

"I think there is going to be a resumption of the battle soon."one of the Landelinians saide

"And we must hasten."another exclaimed.

"I did not like the way general Federal, the just passed us looked at our charges."Cried another."They have detected them and probably is suspicious and will make trouble."

They were now passing through a regular city of tents and the officers were saluted by every private they met going to the front.Some of the privates looked with suspicion at the supposed boys, but they paid no attention only preparing for the coming battle.As they were nearing a group of officers, Violet and her sisters recognized one of them as Black Brooke and another as Ernest Mylstee, and soon another learned up before them that appeared l like a Shoubinare spirit out of hell he was so hadious and had such a black hair and beard.The sight of his face was enough to make them shriek shriek and they realized it was general Raymond Richardsonia Federal.Federal was talking angrily to the others they were a part of his staff but the one who appeared to be Ernest Mylst we walked away.

"I tell you these supposed boys are the Vivian girls, that general Bicknell set free in disguise."Federal was saying."for there have been no boys allowed before his headquarters to day.We must detain these officers, coming this way, and seize them and their charges."

The officers in charge of the Vivian girls saw a suspicious face or look in the faces of the generals and one of them came forward and said something. Then Federal came up and demanded;

"Let me see that paper Bicknell signed."

The officer who had the note submitted it to him saying that it was Bicknells orders.

"I'm chief commander here next to Stanley"Said Federal tearing up the paper and if possible Bicknell shall answer to me on a charge of treason.These are the Vivian girls in disguise and they are to be given over to me in disguise. Let me have them."and he leveled two revolvers at the officers."You also are under my arrest."

The noise of the distant firing was increasing and all the private soldiers were now rushing toard their positions and now there could be heard a continuous crashing of fresh artillery which almost deafened them.Though Federal leveled his pistol at the officers the y one of the had the paper said;

"You may be superior to Bicknell but I will not give these little girls up to you though you shoot me down in cold blood."

"All right then."Said Federal with a sneer.I'll place you under arrest on the charge of treachery and of rescuing prisoners.Here some of you men seize them officers, take away their sabres, and shoulder straps, tear off their buttons and place them in the guard house to be shot at sunrise to morrow morning."

six men proceeded to oby obey, when general john Manley came riding up on his white horse and demanded to know what was the matter.

"These two officers are trying o b to take the vivian girls to the christian lines"Said general Beddorall."These masked boys arethe vivian girls in disguise".

"I don't believe a word of it thundered general Manley"You quarrelsome officers go to the front with your divisions to hold off the Federals who are advancing. You officers in charge of the sve seven boys, give them up to me, and I'll see them safely through our lines."

Suddenly however an officer who seemed to violet and her sisters to be general Desmonis picknell came riding up with his men and seeing the boys said to Manley;

"Who are these boys.?I'm kinda suspicious of the way they walk!"

"They are the vivian girls"Said black Brooke also riding up." boy are in disguise as general picknell tried to set them free."

The one almost looking like Baldonis picknell himself gave a sudden start and for a moment there was silence then he recovered and said;

"You are mistaken ,lack Brooke.I did not set them free.I never saw them to nigh night.I fear it is my brother who is the treacherious one for he harbors theenemies of our cause, and probably set the vivian girls free.From now on I s will never speak to him or darken his doors again."

John Manley at once realized it was true and said;

"Place the soldiers who escorted them into the guard house and see that they do not escape.I will see picknell to morrow in person.Place the vivian girls in a tent and have them well guarded or even in the same guard house.Forward men."

As John Manleys troops marched past, a number of ol other soldiers took hold of the vivian girls and marched them into a large pecorn like house a few rods away, and there they were placed under a very strong guard.Yet the little girls were not discouraged, and the nearest scar of battle gave them confidence, and also they were bound to get away at all rowks.

"God has helped us before in our difficulties, and he will again."Said violet.

"and why did we learn to break jail for?"

She examined the lock on the cell door and produced a chisle or file and a small hammer which picknell had hid about their persons in case they would be suspected and re-arrested.

"Jennie dear ,you go to the window and see if any of the ,lamdelinian rebels are around."Said violet.

Jennie obeyed , while violet watched every at the locked took quite some time before they man go managed to break it, and could not do so either without making a lot of racket stated it, but no one however heard it, and so the lamdelinians were not aroused.At last the door was open, and violet peering out saw the sentry walking up and down thehall with his long musket shouldered.violet at feist was puzzled for she did not know how to tackle the man, v e was tall and strong,and armed with a brace of pist ols and a sabre besides the rifle, and looked like one of these strong armed fine figure faced villians we see in moving Pictures or Gen Comedies.Yet she was bound to get away with her sisters at any risks, so she went back to them and said;

"There is a heavily armed guard outside in the hall, and it is impossible for me to overpower him alone, and yet sixteen men could not do it he is so strong and big.Also I do not care to fire carelessly, and the shooting would only arouse the others, and besides I do not care to do any shooting as bad as he is for I pity him, and do not want to kill him unless he tries to kill mesge I will ask you to help me attack him with a large stick, and overpower him so that we can get away before the others are aroused."

Her sisters realized this at once and agreed, the six other little girls slipping out of their cells, and each darting to the dark corners of the corridors. When the guard was close to them violet and her sisters with the fury of a bunch of wild cats sp sprang upon him simultaneously and the impetious impetuosity of the attack before him to the g floorviolet held her hand tightly over his mouth sh so he could not yell, while her sistersstuck away his guns and cartridge belt before he could get to his feet.The glandelinian was enraged to think that seven little girls were able to overpower him so quickly and struggled vehemently to arise, and bit violet's hand fearfully, and he would have succeeded if jaine had not clapped one of the pistols to his head and said;

"Please keep still mr man, or I will shoot you no matter what the consequences.We are bound at all risks to escape the clutches of you rebels, and we shall.Ten wicked glandelinians make war on little girls so we are justified in making war on you."

Violet took off his mask cloth and thrust it into his mouth(the rebel soldier making a fast face at the dry taste of the cloth) while her sisters bound him hand and foot with a rope they an saw hanging on the wall.Then with great difficulty and almost almost w straining themselves with the effort, they dragged their two hundred pound vi victim to the darkest corner and left him there, violet placing the two pistols in her pocket, and the belt inside the waistband yet they were not to have such a easy time of geting away at that, for in the center of the hall was a barred gate, with two guards standing there, on each side, equally as powerful as the first guard, and violet and her sisters realized that they were going to have a hard time to escape.It was a good thing that the backs of the guards were turned for if they had seen the prisoners escaping, and binding the other man, they would a have fired and killed the little girls without warning.

Creeping up the first two of the four guards on t at the gate they ca aimed their pistols at them just as they turned and said seriously;

"You two come over to the dark corner with us, and if you make the slightest sound it will be the-last you will be able to make."

The surprised glandelinians saw a determined look in their eyes, and they obeyed, but when they reached the corner one of them accidentally stumbled over the other fe llow and fell to the floorwith a crash his gun og going off at the same time, the bullet hitting the fellow guard who also fell dead.The two guards remaining at the gate quickly turned to see what was the matter, but instead saw two pistols staring at them, with determined faces behind them.Violet was standing to the guard who had tripped and fell, gagging and binding him, the man having been rendered senseless by the fall.Very fat it was the s hat that did the mischief. Seemingly from nowhere grayscoats came rushing in and seeing the little girls opened the gate, slammed it look behind them and made a rush for violet and her sisters. But violet fired at the nearest fr bringing them down with flesh wounds in the legs or arms, and the rest being filled with consternation halted.

"Why you impudent young rabbits."One of the fellows began, when violet interrupted him by saying."Yes we are rabbits and look like them too I don't think. Have any one of you fellows got the keys to the prison gate.?If so, and if he values his lifelife would be mind handing them over to one of my sisters.?"

"Bat you young snipes"—

"Yes we are young snipes and snipes that strike suddenly."Interrupted violet.

"I want thesekeys.I'll shoot you all down like dogs if the one who is in possession of the keys does not give them up right now, and I mean what I say."

A glandelinian Sergeiler in an officers uniform, handed Jennie who was nearest the keys, and she tried them on the doors, while violet kept the rebels at bay with her pistols.At last she found the right key that opened it, and telling her sisters to follow her she and as they did so she s looked it after and all darted for the ends and violet shouting down the other two guards who rushed at them, and they dashed and sidesphere was a hue and cry inside the guardhouse, and scores of glandelinians were rushing out from the other halls and rooms the leader of one could shouting;

"catch these vivian girl Princess'esthey are prisoners, spies escaping."

Other glandelinians rushed from their tents to intercept the fugitives, but th e litt le girls had had off in anot another direction and had only ran a few hundred feet, when a partyof glandelinians or what v appeared to be her sisters recognized Germine Fielding and at first felt a sudden thrust to their hearts for they had thought he traud traitor and was trying to intercept them from escaping, but in fact general germaine fielding during one of gamous fla charges which had been repulsed, in covering his retreat until the dreadful carnage, had seen violet and her sisters pursued by the enemy, and with sparty of gray uniformed Confederates dashed reckless ly among th e glandelinian camp to save the vivian girls.There was a fierce and bloody fight, but nevertheless violet and her sisters were so lead by the gray coated Confederates and carried out of the enemys lines, pursued by thousands of glandelinians, the sound fire and shot therefrom, in hundreds.?For they had outflanked their pursuers the same that general germaine fielding rode up to violet and her sisters and asked;

"How in the world did you come to be captured?"

Violet herself t old him how it happened to be, of the kindness of the five better glandelinian generals these names.they mentioned o

"Most in-surprising "Said general germaine Fielding."I t did not think it of general picknell capchis aiding officers."

As they rode on germaine fielding observed through his glass on , th at general Jennen vivian was gathering his staff tred divisions for another assault upon the enemy ahi said;

"Your capture by th e enemy had caused the outbreak of this battle n and Jennens first att ack had failed."

Fielding discovered that the pursuers w were led by general black Brooke and noticing that the rebels were getting close, halted his men and formed them into lines of battlewhen the th came the enemy, yelling like demons and really led by general black Brooke.

"Violet, you and your sisters, had better go to the to rear-and stay there until you can get back to general Jennens lines."Begged germaine fielding."I wouldfeel bad if you little girls were captured again."

Violet and her sisters cheerfully eby obeyed, galvan Jennen directing them where to go.The pursuing enemy were now within musket shot range, and they were soon meeting a blaze of fire that mowed and tore great holes in in their lines and mangled the their columns and the glandelinians breaking into terrific confusion retreated into the reare It was true that the enemy was attacking the enemy over the kidnapping of the vivian girls for the glandelinians or Confederates who had encountered the rebels by the creek after the foe were carrying them off, and having been worried in the fight, and failing in the pursuit, had rushed to the christ ian lines, their leader quickly reporting to general Jennen by wireless trel telegraph that violet and her sisters had been carried off by the glandelinians.General Jennen was in his headquarters, when general Jennen who first received the news rode up and told him of their capture.

At once general Hansen had summoned all of the officers of his divisions and giving forth the alarming news had ordered them to assemble one million man and to move forward to the attack to rescue the vivian girls as soon as the forces were assembled. This report soon reached general castillio and consentinian Arenburg, and castillio alone moved forward his own one hundred thousand men to help Hansen in this fierce attack. It took four hours for this immense division to be formed, but when they were, Hansen taking the lead rapidly advanced them toward the enemys lines with the one million one hundred thousand men, the attack being made at twelve thirty o-clock that night just as general Hanley had come up during the qy qurrel quarrel with general and the other generals. The whole christian force in th at terrible murder advanced against the glandelinians from the south from Consentinian Arenburg moved with the rest from the centre General Hennings who was far in advance of the christian column, met a solitary glandelinian, who one of the Angelinians knocked down with a sheated sabre, wounding him and taking his prisoner. The whole christian force in a line of battle ten miles th extent advanced in fierce expectancy clutching their weapons so -"On to gorms Catherine, for e o Vivian Victory God is with us, victory."

And shouting their heavy war cries, the Angelinian columns in perfect waves rushed toward the glandelinian positions with the fury of starved w vultures. The rebel sentries had seen the swarm of assailants sweeping toward them in these fearful numbers and fired a volley of shots to give h the warning, and at the once summons scores of thousands of soldiers mostly half naked ran wildly to their positions, and opened fire with all their vigor. But for them it was too late. However those first line of works covered hundreds of thousands of the Angelinians, the ones pouring in everywhere literally yelling like the very fiends themselves. It was at this time that many Hanley and the other commanders had rushed heavy columns to the point of danger, and in an hour hundreds of thousands of the glandelinians even many who were sick or wounded rushed to their works, while th the captive women and children within the lines darted blindly from the tents, shrieking wildly in fright at th e horrible corruplitting crashes of musketry and artillery which now became incessant.

On poured the Angelinians, meeting the glandelinians coming toward them in a fierce hand to hand fight, their being the e thousands of bayonet bayonet thrusts, sabre blows, and musket shots, and all met the same greeting, until within fifteen minutes, the Angelinians were being slowly pressed back w by a horrible wall of g ibes, and bayonets and sabres from the enemy himself.

General Julio Marini drew his sabre and rode back and forth among his lines while the men of his command were going down in thousands, and called to his troops to rally and give the glandelinians all the fighting th ey wanted. A fierce rush of gray coated Mic-Gallostinians met him and his forces, and soon his men were cut down all around him like grass before the mow, and he said the dreadfully carnage was mortally wounded, while everywhere now, the very earth and sky seemed in flames and shaken by the most tremendous racket of battle. General Richardson Logan, a glandelinian, had managed to escape a fierce rush of Angelinians Auxiliaries, and as the frenzied pursuers stumbled and fell in the close mix up of gray and purple, he espied behind a small wing of men who were displaying a tumult of b bayonets and pikes, sprang through the breach, and fled for aid, and scarcely had he gotten away, when there was a more savage uproar of musketry, the very heavens seemed to flash sheets of fire, mingled with the wild uproar of shrieks, curses, and blasphemies, mingled with hundreds of thousands of shots going off in one prolonged roar and crash, and the clashing of bayonet against bayonet, or pike against pike, and sabre against sabre. He now came upon a multitude of advancing Campion furies, and as their pikes and bayonets were brandished in the air, he turned and gave wing to his renewal of his flight, this time headed for t he Angelinians, with a score of the furies close at his heels while he shouted again and again;

"Come on my Guerian friends. We will give the christians a good storm of resistance and drive them off forever to victory."

In the fierceestacy of his exertionation when he saw his Guerian furies even pressed back after an hour of hand to hand fighting, he leped upon a hubrack of the brush breastworks, and threw himself over it in the face of the fiercely battling Angelinians with the agility of a little boy, and grasp ing a fallen glandelinian flag he turned and looking back, swung it to the breeze where he saw the fury of battle and the butchery of the glandelinians glandelinians in the fierce onset and of the agonized gestures of the many mortally wounded.

He turned again in horror and literally plunged on among the Angelinians, the Guerian furies following with devilish yells, cutting their way through the bristling wall of bayonet bayonets and pikes and several other glandelinian generals James Perkins, Magicam Clinton guy also joined, and so fierce did the glandelinians make t he onslaught, that they managed to how the christians down in the most fearful n numbers with all their weapons and the victims of the battle already lay in immense heaps.

The uproar of the wave revelry that rose from the main body of the assailants was awful, and they only managed to press the glandelinians back, when more and more Angelinians came up and threw themselves against them. However the ferocious glandelinian soldiery maddened with fury, and drunk already with the blood of so many thousands of children they had slaughtered, rushed anew against the h christians like the mighty surge of the tidal wave mangling the men in purple they cut down, literally tearing out th eir eyes in the fury of the bayonet fight and sometimes throwing th em into the air at the point of their pikes. The Glandelinians continued the assault i with greater fury than before, the hounds of hell seemed to be let loose by hundreds of thousands, and the savage Glandelinian soldiers like wolves in a sheepfold rejoiced in slaughter, and no great was the christian losses that the generals were being discouraged, and several of them sent word to Hansen that he must rest aid, or order them to withdraw, one or the other, for the slaughter was being becoming fearful intolerable as d and the bloodyeyed glandelinians with blood shot eyes, and weapons bared continued to press hard upon the christians, and those who will may point to themselves the main horror of the combat. It was at this time that the rest of the angelinians came up on a swift pace, and seeing the fierce resistance and counter assault of th e glandelinians, Hansen cried as he pointed to the long lines of gruppents, as his reserves filed in array with kindling eyes and hearts trembling but not of fear;

"Look" he cried. "There are the glandelinians who have tried to murder all the children in Galwerkingshire are the glandelinian dogs who have made us suffer for it, and who have kidnapped the poor daughters of qing yivian, and we must rescue the little girls at all costs or die in the attempt. And if the glandelinians kill the yivian girls I'll give Hanley no quarters."

With vehme anger, fierce and derisive, but half supressed, the fierce Angelinians demanded to be led onHansen then gave the word, and once more christian forces were thrown in the attack became so fierce that the glandelinians began to yield. Then as Adolo-De-Garte was advancing to the rescue with his forces a startling c cry rang in his ears;

"To arms, to arms. The Angelinians under Consentinian Arenburg are coming up on our rear."

It was the voice of one of the wounded generals brought to the rear, and who had seen the assailants in front pressing Hansenmiles and Hanleys gray columns back with vicsent force and vigor as well, the Angelinians in the rear advancing in wedge-like lines with heads lowered and weapons to the charge. Gallops Adolo-De-Garte had brought his main battalions into position, and he immediately sprang his own lines about, and as soon as the first two lines of broken Glandelinian columns rushed past in the utmost confusion, the artillery with its guns facing both front and rear were discharged again and again in terrible broadsides upon both portions of the Angelinians, and down went the christians in murderous columns of fifteen thousand. Adolo-De-Garte artillery men were able to discharge in excess of shells, and high explosives and grape of canister, which tore christian columns a in hundred thousand strong to fragments, and mangling them

The flanking forces under generalissimo Arenburg was too badly torn up to have proceed in that murderous storm but the earth nevertheless trend rumbled forward to leaped th e ditch and drove their pikes and bayonets through the breasts of the commanders, and many other thousands of glandelinians fired breast to breast. Simultaneously many other thousands of glandelinians were cut down, especially as masses of men surged to the support of the commanders. The loss th e christian columns to pierce without counting, while the other battering arming within another half an hour, also opened upon the Christian thousands, and that portion of the christian line was literally torn to pieces, and the ground for miles p that deep with the dead and wounded. Thousands of big guns served to fairly blast the air in furnaces of flame and smoke making an unexplaining volcano of flame and fire. Still heavy in numbers however th the Angelinians on across on with undaunted and hard destroying yells and for a time as Adolo-De-Garte, and accountants were wounded, and Brush-De-Garte-Black also a guide behind the glandelinians of those three divisions which were also rendered to pieces and often threatened with annihilation, and as they could vast multitudes of christians pressing past their artillery they broke and fled in confusion, and through larger columns of glandelinians under general-in-Chief Hansen came up and intercepted them, throwing themselves in the path of the fugitives and trying to rally them, it was in vain. Hundreds of christian regiments for an hour but finally surrendered and wounded, with generals Brookshire killed, grievously wounded, Hanley, Polken, Wade Hamlin, Richardson Riverbrook Vickers, Malcolm, and gladiolate were riddled with bullets, and even Pemberton colonel, and Dale cosmopolitan, and also Bellwether and Georgetowning who came up with large divisions also met with annihilation within two hours fighting and were also slain with the destruction of their commands.

General Hansen's generalissimo was also wounded on Hanleys right, and his men of one million men driven into confusion by Consentinian Arenburgs assault on his rear and flank, and seeing that flight was in vain, refused to surrender and all his men died fighting.

Meanwhile the whole forest seemed to be in a hellish uproar and f r and near the sur viving 6 glandelinians were wild with excitements and gave the Angelinians such resistance that soon they could advanceno further and though it seemed as if victory for the glandelinians had trembled in the balance, Manley soon managed to bring up a large force on the right of his line and the resistance to the christian assault was increased in redoubled fury, general Shermannia himself being bound to hold the Angelinians at bay,even if he could not drive them back.He also also was anxious to stop th is horrible slaughter, which he knew was caused by the kidnapping of the yivian girls, and therefore saw that the only way to stop the onset and hold on, untill Manley could bring up his main forceand then hurl back the furious assailants before the whole gray line would be decimatede All kinds of weapons were used against the christians, one glittering like after another being out and torn upPart of Shermannias divisions had been sever in a wooded district, and from here an annihilating fire of artillery and musketry threatened annihilation to the assailants who were surging forward again and again at this point.There Shermannia himself was unseen by the attacking Angelinians and he observed a strong party of Abyssinkilian Yankies issued issueing from the woods at a different point, crossing the small branch of th e pic-Shirt her gun and advancing to strike the glandelinian flanke On this he sent general Good a Gonsolous Mis-sure, and Mis-Gook Quick with their divisions to station themselves in a point well hidden by trees on the flank of the glandelinian position.ehe with stra whose men with strange infatuation had stopped their fighting at the approache approach af the flanking christians,the Angelinian leaders pushed on with one million one hundred and sixty th ousand yankie Abyssinkilians, reached the edge of the large open ground under a storm of lead miles long, and then rushed forward with all their speed like a huge torrentdat that moment a deadly blast, of grape canister and shells, high explosives and thousands of storms of bullets blazed in their faces and before the smoke cleared to show the frightful havoc of the three hundred and thirty thousand caused dean by thi this discharge, the glandelinians counter charged and were already among themwhen the deadly fire not them the surviving Abyssinkilians a panic seized them, and as they could hope for no mercy, at the hands of theirfurious t iger like assailants, they strove to stand through though to e their consternation was immeasureably multiplied,those who did not escape after the bloody clash hand to hand, with pil pikes, bayonets, sabres, and musket and pistol shots, and even fighting with teeth, boots, and pick axes, the surviving Abyssinkilians retreated fleeing in a panic i into a part of the woods remote from the furious and victorious glandelinians,but here a dead/ deadlier foe awaited them, for a host of Guerian Yankies and Scoolers leaped up from ambushe,then rose up hedious warwhoops, which curdled the most baldest blood and blanched the manliest cheek.All these Ab Abyssinkilians were either taken or killede The victorious glandelinians were now pressing on in overwhelming numbers at every point their advance being like an extensive whirlwind visitation, to revage to ruin and vanish into oceans of slaughter.Five big attacks were made against the christians still advancing under gustellis, untill these line were literally cut to pieces and also driven back.It was at th is time that Germaine Golding had discovered a force of glandelinians chasing gals&wand berserkers, and who had made a desperate charge despite despite the risk of annihilation, and succeeded in rescueing them.It was then Hanson was preparing for the second general onset, after raging this one with unceasing fury that night, that general Reid Golding brought the little girls before him, and telf told of their experience and how they escaped.

Hanson was indeed glad to see them, and embraced them as if they had been gone for years, but nevertheless it did not turn his intentions from directin directing the second assault, and two million men more were being re made ready, the first two mi llion five hundred thousand having been fairly reduced, to only four hundred th ousand survivers in these few hours.Hansons remaining army had also been pushed up by Shermannian Bromburg, and it arrived At the mink of timeas it were and gradually the enemy seem ceased his attacks and slowly real recalled was southwards.The worse the christians at the region of Julie Gallis and Vivian Vickey was like gates and gris Angels wrenting the rebel themselves.This great battle caused Hanson to fear no arival of reinforcements for the enemy and he tightened his seige, and Hanson also hearing of the city of Gondinia being menaced decided to do all he could by stopping any ravages there, and therefore decided to takecharge of Calverinian rebels , mingled with Angelinians, Abbissinians and so on, and strike a battle at Manley before Federal could rejoin him for Manley was re treating t ward Calverins.Federal also was retreating after the defeat at the great battle of Apple Orchid which had raged for fully ten days.Hanson believed it possible to wre st the city of Calverins out of the hands of the foe and if th is could be done shecould crush the foe invasion of Calverinia, and end the warlike armies, but that the Glandelinian armies under general Rusbuna Manley, one of Manleys brothers, had met with horrible disasters in the battles there.It was evident indeed that Angelinia Agathia was protected by the fortresses at garvsky Galeand Betsy gobbin and Gotham, and which could not be taken.Crowley was also besieged by bigger christian armies, and had been attacked night and day for many months already.

It is true though he did not win much of a victory at Apple orchard after all the stubborn fighting , nevertheless Federal had fought long enough for gaeral John Manley to escape general Hansons clutches and advance away with what he had of his own army and go direct to Calverins to bring on the big Army of Glandelinians there with the purpose of stoppo stopping Hanson should he intend to advance northward any further. Enemy successes were surprising even to the world it is true, but id did it do did not do much good, and indeed the situation of the glandelinian armies operating against the Angeli ians in the west was critical.

Slanderlinia had been opposed so stubbornly that god alone could describe it, but has any one ever s tried to stop an advancing tornado from tearing aga n against a poor unfortunatetown or villiage that happened to lay in it's way.If so I'd like to know who he was. Slanderlinia had crushed every opposition he met most disasteriously, and rumers was that he had con tinually recieved reinforcements and was advancing headlong tward t e the town of Mary Ann which was situation at another quarter of the Mc-Hollester Run, while another christian army was fast advancing northward with the intention f of seizing the Ava Maria heights at Osmondonson, or Eva Crania, and that anoth another christian army was moving forward to seize Jennie yivian, and also to prevent general Buebaums large glandelinian army which had been disasteriously beaten at Angelinia Agathis to retreat tward Jennie gurner.

So despite the slight victories the enemy had gained in the war so far it was evident that the whole Glandelinian invasion had been met with a dreadful crushing disaster.

General John Manley, had begged his father to move forward his own aarmies, but he could not advance, as his army was demorilized from frequent cavarly rinds of Concentinian cavarly cavarly and of great fires that menanced his army, and general Manley saw indeed that the city of Calverins was in great danger of capture. If Calverins was captured it would open a great path for the rush of many mighty christian armies upon Mc-Whirther and yivian Vickey, and worse of all would cause the fall of Glandelinia immediate ly and the capture of his own army. His own son who was also called John Manley and whom Hanson had his slight quarrel over the blind man, had refused to take command of a glandelinian army being fully in favor of the Angelinian cause despite the fact that he was Hanson Vivians worse enemy, and so did not do anything for the behalf of his fathers cause, and Manley in great fear hastened to throw all the ar mies possible to stop Hansons and gladerlinias advance upon Mary Ann.

Madge Evans the side city of Vivian Vickey was als th also threatend threatened by the advance of general yivians christian army and the Glandelinians at that section attempted with the energy of furious des peration to hold off all advances in that dire ction and as quickly as possible, concentrated a large force of Glandelinians at that section of the Mc-Hollester Run under general Calmarinia Shoemannia, and placed the main commander Calmannia Shoemannia to take possession of Mary Ann.The great second Mc-Hollester war storm was threatening.

Hanson learned of the concentration of the Glandelinian advance under Melfort, and struck at once destroying this glandelinian army in a series of driving harassing encounters and raids, and pushed on for the main goal at Saxten Run, while general yivian was adva advancing tward Madge Evans from the rear. Osmonson was captured by general yivian and the enemy in fleeing had burned the town to the ground but had forgotten to blow up their most important munition works which had been captured by the christians besides twenty yards of railroad yards of cars and provisions besides many passenger trains loaded with troops that were all taken prisoners.

General glanderlinia of the enemy had been discouraged over this state of affairs, and had refused to advance to the support of the Glandelinian army at Calverine, and so had resigned his command, and ginger snap was put in his stead. In an engagement which place was not mentioned Gingersnap was severely wounded, and never able again to lead armies.

Disaster was facing the Glandelinians at every point, and general John Manley felt that if Calverine was not held from capture al, all would be off with the Glandelinian cause, and it would be crushed down completely.

Buebaum Manley was requested to come to Mc-Hollester Run and reinforce Manley and he was already advancing, but it was evident that if he ever could reach there it would be a miracle. His army was watched by ten large christian forces, and he could advance but cautiously and slowly. Manley thought that the best thing to do was to have the great christ ian fortress, next in strength to Angelinia Agathia, called Gondinia captured and if this could be accomplished all would be well.So he sent general Samuel Augustine to besiege it with one million glandelinians, and he did not know that 65,444,000 christians defended this place.He was thus sending this small force of Glandelinians to besiege a fort ress guarded city defended by overwhelming numbers. Augistine learning the strength of the chris christians there reported the fact to Manley but Manley did not believe it and ordered him sternly to do as he was bidden. Bondinia as we'll see in the next chapter was also another disaster to the enemy. The christian armies were suffering in the war slight defeats, the enemy were facing disaste disasd disaster at every st step. Was this a very good outlook for general Manley.If so ask him!

Manley tried to find out how strong the christian armies were that were marching against him but he could not ascertain for the fact that no secret service men or spis, could make any success in spying on the fierce christian bulldogs as the Angelinians were called. The Glande linian commanders were really heartily sorry that Glandelinia had brought on a war with Angelinia.Angelinia had for fourty years seemed to play a little timid girl against a ruff neck of a boy over the child slave situa suti suitation and this had made Glandelinia believe that Angelinia power ful as she was with the junction of her sister states Abyssinkille, Ane Angeline Vine, Concentinia, Domdobia, Tripongonlia, Tripoligonlia, and Abbisannia was-afraid to start trouble over it or even to wage war, that she was afraid of Glandelinia completely. Glandelinia of course became over confident and believed that if any war would break out with Abbisannia herlef over the cruel situation Angelinia would have backed out and refused to even raise a hand. Yes Angelinia would step backand refuse to raise a hand.Who started the war. ANEE -ANGELINIA. And Angelinia started it right too and more quicker than the Glandelinian nation expected. If it had not been for the two mediators that came to Hanson and Governer vivian from Protestentin and Condencia or Condennencia as she is properly called, there is no doubt that the war would have started long before the Crowley massacre was ever though t of.

Angelinia did not simply start a war, and intend to i stand up for her possessions.She dared even worse than that.She dared to invade the country of her foes, after the battle of Jennie Wren town, and for a time had caused the Glandelinian nation such terror that the king had to at once draft immense armies to force back the christian enemies, and only after desperate efforts could this be accomplished, mingled with the disasters of failing to set a single foot on Angelinian soil.

Many of the other christian nations had also thought that for some reason Angelinia was afrad of Glandelinia because she stood the child slavery in Calverinia so long.But what was the reasons? Good reasons. Why should Angelinia pitch in without asking the aurthority of Governer Hanson vivian. Governer Hanson could have if given time stopped the child slavery without war.And the war is not over child slavery, and never intended to be.Who would stand it to see a scoundrel go into his house and murder his wife and children. No one would. Neither would Angelinia stand for the massacre of children at Crowley and Jennie Wren town, especially when many of the children and even women were of the nations which were Angelinias most loving devout Catholic friends? Angelinia a struck the revengeful blow more suddenly than Abbisannia struck at the war of eighteen fourteen one and Glandelinia when-struck was fully unprepared. Thus the reason that the northern part of Glandelinia was crushed like an egg shell before the Angelinians on account of blunders of their new and unexperisnced commanders had to give up the invasion. Angelinia had the same opinion as Hanson.It would have looked very foolish to start a war over child slavery when both the governers with the help of the King of Abbisannia could have easily crushed the child slavery without war. And the Calverinian rebellion and ch l child slave rebellion had been making such good headway that the child slavery was already crushed be yond recovery for a time just before the Crowley massacre.This child slave su situa si sut suitation in Calverinia scared wicked Glandelinia and it was believed that this was really the cause of the attempted invasion of Angelinia at Crowley and Jennie Wren town which was the fart further the enemy got.And now who could save the besieged Glandelinian army at Crowley? Not even the biggest Glandelinian armies could cross the Angelinian borders to even attempt it.The king of Glandelinia had already three times begged the Glandelinian commander at Crowley to end the horror he was suffering by surrendering the city city to the dreadful Angelinian besiegers but the fu fool refused thinking that in due time aid could reach him.Aid never did reach him.

Crowley on the Glandelinian side was a worse reign of terror than during the french revok revolution may even worse than the reign of terror that had ensued at Norma Catherine and Julo Callio combined.Woe to the Glandelinians who were captured by the fierce Abyssinkilians. And disre garding the fearful havoc caused the Angelinians day and night made a per fect inferno of hell over the city of Crowley with the continuous fire of their batteries of artillery, and it seemed as if all the Crowley region had really deene decended into hell.And still the Glandelinian commander refused to surrender.

Angelinia could really declare before the world that a great number of severe battles had been great repulses, and so on, but all witnessed and war correspondents declared different, and one made the statement to his king thus;

""The Glandelinian situation in Calverinia is horrible. Angelinia proves herself a formidable foe of all wicked tryanny-and of enemies of God.Horror upon horror ensues among the unfortunate Glandelinian armies, and it seems now as if all would soon be settled because the city of Calverine is in dagedanger, the enemy have suffered disasters at Angeline Run, and Erminie creek, besides at Mc-Hollester Run or Abbisann and there cannot be reported any good Glandelinian successes anywhere the Angelinians are pushing on everywhere with the irrestible pressure of a gigantic typhoon.The Glandelinians fight desperately, obstinately, and with the one energy of despair, but the Angelinians win the battles.

Jennie Wren town, many battles in Glandelinia, Angeline junctin junction, and Easter Starring, and even Eminie Creek, and Apple Orchard though declared christian repulses all spell horrible disaster for Glande linia, and though Julo Callio was captured by the Glandelinians under Purgatorian, Purragotiorian, and Manly, nevertheless it did no good de despite the reign of terror there, christians have rushed like wolves upon their prey before any preparations could be made, and the Glandelinian armies at these two places are just as well off now as the besieged Glandelinians at Crowley. Hanson and the others are a advancing very successfully, and general Manley frantic with despair and horror over the destruction of his soldiers has fled in panic to Calverine with the intention of throwing upon the advancing christians large armies at Mary Ann before a greater disaster occurs.

All this is positively true, and evident proofs could be obtained anywhere desired.Angelinia I can assure you is already victorious, and Abbisannia who is preparing has not even sent an army forward yet, exept her desperate attempts to capture the fortifications of Mc-Whirther.And another thing general Manley like the old dunce and fool he is has sent one million men under Augi Augustine to besiege the second Angelinia Agathis called Bondinia, which is defended by impregnable fortresses, and over sixty million Abyssinkilians, Calverinians, and Angelinians. If Bondinia can be captured so can Crowley.""

Your best aid and war correspondent;
George Franklin.""""

None of the nations dpobuted doubted this statment, and all believed that a frightful disaster had happened to the wicked Glandelinian nation at Crowley and Julo Callio already, and that if Calverine would be captured the horrors over there would be over. Sad to say when the great battle occured on account of a blunder the battle was not quite a success, Calverine was not capture, and Manley had succeeded in escaping.

And indeed on account of the situation at Vivian Wickey the conditions was growing worse, and children in the nations only hoped that Calverine would be captured.If that city fell so would Vivian Wickey, and their happiness would come back. Manley was indeed more apprehensive than ever when he learned that general Shermannia at Glanders had suffered a disaster, and was compelled to move off from the Mc-Hollester Run, and he dreaded the consequences if this great commander failed to reach him in time to reinforce his army at Mary Ann.

Hanson in the mean ntime was advancing his armies as fast as he could, but nevertheless he learned that his brother was far in the advance and that Federal and Blanderbusses Glandelinians were running from him like frightened sheep.

"It takes my brother to show the enemy what he can do." Said Hanson with a lauh laugh when he found that these reports were even by beyond exazzerating and that Federal had been wounded in an engagement at Essonia when he attempted to flank general Vivian to stop his precipiate frenzied advance.

'General Berner in his report to Manley declared that the Angelinians were advancing like a wild sea of fiends without wings, and that the cause was believed already lost. Maybe fiends could not advance as fast as the Angelo armies did. Maybe they could not even race with the Angelinians. Well what could be said about the situation, now.

Violet and her sistors thought it was great. They liked to see the war end as ps speedily as possible, and they u yearned to return home and not have to witness any such battles any more. In most cases they did like the excitement on of the conflicts, but then the conflicts as they heard were growing too severe and there was no telling where it would all end.....

During Hansons advance upon Mary Ann a large force of Hobbonites Hobbotinites had banded to blow up the great town of parliament. A great series of tunnel ways had been dug under this important town full of people unconscious of their danger, and these were being filled with high explosives. General Hawkers was the one who ordered the attempt of this dastardly deed, and ten men were fixed upon to set fire to the great mine.

The ammount of explosives in this mine was enough to blow up a vol whole range of mountians completely, and if it had been successful it could have easily checked the christian armies in their advance and cause one of the most shocking dia disasters that ever occured. There were about thirteen thousand Glandelininns in the p o plot, and it was colonel Higens who caused the ruin of their plot. He discovered the preparations of blowing up the mine, first warned the people of the town to flee and then conveyed the news to general Vivian who happened to be nearest to this town at the time, and the Angelinians looking into the case stopped the attempt promptly. When the news of the approach of the christians came the chief officers fled like the cowards they were, but the wholetroop of privates were captured, and assassinated by the Abyssinkilians, and the officers of the Glandäinians were caught and also killed.

Thus in a bloody manner the dastard plot was prevented, and great stores of shells, high explosives, immense quantities of T.N.T and other high powdered explosives was captured by the Angelinians when they reached the town itself. The Angelinians now felt more bitterly against the Glandelinians and decided to strive all efforts to crush their armies before the city of Calverine itself was captured.....

Indeed Manley had started to w wish that he had never brought his Glandelinian armies into Calverinia. For it was evident that the fierce Abu Abyssinkilian armies came pouring in ove over the northern Boundary line of Calverinia, plundering the towns supposed to be in possession of his best armies, and which were supposed to support him with great supplies of provisions, and even killed the soldiers in many forays, and committed these fierce raids so often that the Glandelinian soldiery up north lived a life of terror..... Even Abyssinkilian fleets attacked the for tifications of seaports belonging to the Glandelinian possession in their own native country by sea, and Manley felt that his whole cause was in such dire distress. that he sent a message by way of Mc-Whirther, and sea to the King of Glandelinia for more help entreating help in which it said;

"The christinn Abyssinkilians chase our northern armies into the sea, the seas thrown us back upon the Abyssinkilian barbarians and they have only the hard choice lefr us to for those armies to either perish by the sword or perishing by the waves. Even Calverine is threatened by overwhelming forces, and the Calverinian country is in danger of being taken from us."

Wherever they appeared the fierce Abyssinkilians plundered and burned towns in possession of the Glandelinians, and once they beat the wicked Glandelinian general Eggbertle in battle, and once Eggbertle beat them in battle, but the Abyssinkilians cared nothing for being beaten, they only came back over and over again burning and plundering and laying all the northern possessions of the Glandelinians in Calverinia waste. They even seized general Edmi Demund and bound him to a tree, and when they tried to force them him to tell them the strength of the Glandelinian forces and he refused thay thereupon shot bullets at him, and finally struck off his head.

General Ethelredber was also captured by the Abyssinkilians and suffered the greatest tortures ever methood to man on account of his recent butcheries of the Abyssinkilian children, and of the degrading treatment of the blessed sacrament .

It was also the 4th ammunition column

This Glandelinian general before he had been taken had fought nine small battles with the Abyssinkilians but eve every time had been worsted and the Abyssinkilian armies had already spread themselves all over northern Calverinia, and so routed general Alfreds Greater Glandelinian armies that this Glandelinian general was left alone, and obliged to disguise himself as an Angelinian, and took refuge in the cottage of one of the cowboys ranches of Calverinia. Here general Alfred while the Abyssinkilians sought him far and near was left alone for ten days, and he was finally trailed dow down by bloodhounds and captured, and sent to the internment camps.

In the meantime general Devonshire, and Devonshire his brother, made great headway against the Glandelinians in the far northwest, killing in one of the battles one of the main chiefs of the Glandelinian armies capturing six hundred flags, and scattered the enemy throughoutly.

The loss of the standards troubled general Manley himself greatly for he believed it to be enchanted, for the flag had the picture of a devil dragons, and it was his belief that when the Glandelinian armies were vic torious in b battle, the dragon seemed to stretch his wings for preparation to fly, and when defeated by christians he would droop. He had reason to droop now for Hanson Vivian was preparing indeed to crush him back from Calverine. General Vivians army had defeated the Glandelinians at the battle of Pane, th the foe leader being under general Anite Christie and besieged them so that they could not escaped, and so forced the first surrender of the Glandelinians in the war.

General Shoemannias Glandelinian army after three days of hard marching, and opposed at every step, suffering great hardships, from storms, from army wreck at the battle of Crusade, from hunger thirst, and fever, upn in the path of the burning fore fire storms of firest conflargrations, and upon the burning sands of the Calverinian deserts, and from the inconceivable fury of the Angelinians and Abyssinkilians the valiant Glandelinians finally reached the vinicty of general Manleys concentrating army at Mary Ann. Shoe mannias men however were still resisting and fighting day by day bravely but this good success of the christian advance increased the general desire of general Hanson himself to hurry to the aid of general Vivian and hem Manley in if possible.

The Mc-Hollester Mc-Hollester forests were a horror to gonral general Shoemannias retreating army at this dreadful time. The horrors of this forest, from the tortures and death fearful ambushes brought upon thousands of retreating Glandelinians, made the fugitives believe the forest was enchanted. General Richard Duke Robertson of Shoeman nias right grand division was killed by a sharpshooters bullet in his forest fi , and general Shoemannia himself once recieved a wound when his army for four days fought an inferno of battle in this woods, a battle which such damanating firing as to start the trees and brushwork of the woods afire. When a portion of general Hansons army was fighting the enemy at the small battle of Lewes Windsor, Violet and her sisters had attempted to spy on the enemy despite the horrible danger they were fa facing while the enemy for thirty miles were shooting like mad men and tratearing the whole country with an inferno of shell explosions, but the Angelinians would not let the children do so, and pelted them even with mud and small stones, and forced them to go back within their lines to safty. The fight though a small battle was only I mean small in ai size, and severe indeed in character and raged two da ys, but nevertheless the Glandelinians were routed, being chased for fourteen miles in two hours so swift was the rout, and simultaneously another division of Glandelinians who had attacked athe christ ians at Simon were also severely defeated. This division of Glandelinians fought well and desperately but was also forced to give in, and the main Glandelinian general at this point was captured.

There was six more days of advancing for Hansons army, and then August 24th he gained the great battle at Helen Crecy. In this battle with the Angelinians the foe who took part had this time more soldiers than the christians who at least engaged and well led and were horribly defeated and routed, the enemy general Philip Phillip wild with rage and grief killed himself to escape capture. It was stated by the war correspondents to the nation that within four hours h Hanson had used ten thousand cannon in this battle with good effect. General Edward of a part of Hansons advancing comm command blockaded by sea and land the city of Banbusher, and the troops there though again overwhelming the christians were shelled and stormed into surrender.

General Whilliamsburger zimmermann had also been advancing northward in the extreme west and fought a fierce and bloody battle at Norman Glendower where the chief Glandelinian general Hothead fell mortally wounded, and his army of men and cavarly fled leaving all their artillery behind. This fight had been fierce and the loss on both sides very great, but the foe had been crowded in so small n space that they had scarcely room to strike againt large cavarly forces on their horses could hardly flounder in the mire, and the artillery could not be dragged up into position, or be retaken when the retreat commenced.At the begginning of the fight however the christians had been forced back with heavy loss, but the losses of the enemy was dreadful, and the losses thinned the enemy ranks so heavily that near the end of the fierce conflict.the enemy leaders who survived had only a mere handful of men left.One Glandelinian general called Henry though his second name was not mentioned was fe lled by a blow from a Angelinian musket butt, and the helmet he wore was cleft by the sword of the Angelinian Angelinian general Alencoln, but mortally wounded as he was he struck to it , b but in the end the Glandelinians were routed, and forced to flight. Over I,III,000 Glandelinians lay dead on the field, and more than one hundred generals, pric princes, and great Lords of the Glandelinian gen armies were among the slain. There was a supporting army of Glandelinians t that came up however when the first division had been routed with such dreadful disaster, and the battle was resumed again, and the enemy flung themselves in the heaviest masses against the christian lines, but twenve twelve thousand Glandelinians who had attacked a portion of the christian lines from the direction of three small towns and forts were annihilated, and these positions, and fort after fort taken amid an inferno of firing and slaughter, and general Normandy of the foe was killed as he tried to rally a shattered division of Germans.

During the third section of this tremendous battle Zimmermann laid seige to pauphains, and its fall he knew would lay the country open to him to enable him to move on to general Hansons aid in the advance on Calverine, but though in the battle Zimmermann was victorious yet the fact that this town was saved from capture was a miracle.Zimmermann led a force of a million men to the town in a driving assault, but few men came back after the horrible slaughter, and Zimmermann was for the time hurled back from the walls of the city, and he had to then continue the seige and which thus delayed never was able in time to arive to Hansons support which if he had succeeded in doing would have terminated the situation of the Calverinians right there, and Calverine and the whole of Hanleys army would have been captured, and the war speedily brought to an end.

Zimmermann however after abandoning the s seige for a while with the intention of trying to resume his advance and not be delayed however gave Federals who whole Glandelinian army a desperate battle at Martinque, where after three days of bloody fighting the Glandelinians took such a panic, and I fled with such swiftness, that the whole world afterwards called it the "The battle of the running demons. In the fierce rout this Glandelinian infantry alone took only two days to cover over a hundred miles without a moments pause, thousands dropped with exhaustion on the way every hour, all guns were abandoned, and the Glandelinian cavarly was o scattered from the main army and retreated to the distance of fourty miles in five minutes so swift did they make their horses go, and the fact that general Zimmermann was not able to follow up his advantage just now, and yet the enemy to continue such a headlong rout was indeed amazing. Horses died as fast as exhausted men from overrunning in the wild confusion and panic.Zimmermann captured all the Glandelinian artillery mumbering ten thousand cannon, and great quantities of ammunition and muskets, and pistols, besides all the provision trains of the enemy, and other army privisions besides all the tents and stores of the great camp. Hundreds of thousands of the Glande linians lay dead that day on that bloody battle field, and among them great numbers of the Glandelinian nobilityies and gentry. Even the main Glande linian general had been slain.

While all this was going on a great conflict raged at sea. There were about eight thousand one hundred and fifty ships of the enemy that advanced to raise the bolackade of Angelinian ports along the Angelinian coast so that Glandelinian armies could land there and at the region of the sea port of Angeline on the Angelinian seas there staged the greatest sea contest that was ever known, and only fifty four ships of the enemys lived to creep home while not one Angolinian ship which was able to move twice as fast as th the enemys was even battered. The Glande linians had fought well, but their huge dreadnaughts nevertheless were no match for the small and quick Angelinian ships of green colour which resembled the American batt le ships a good deal but somewhater longer. The fugitive ships flew off to the south the Angelinians clinging to their rear and captured the remainder before they survived and escaped by a treacer treacherious trick and got back home.

At the same time that the recent campaign had been going on there broke out among several Glandelinian armies a great and dreadful plague with a fury such as had not been known of plagues for three hundred and fifty years, and killed in a few weeks hundreds of thousands of soldiers.....

It was also the

Most of the Glandelinians had deserted from terror of the plague,, other troops were shut off from other armies houses in the plague stricken cities were closed up, gr grass grew in the streets, rows of houses stood empty , but within the sixth month after just before the great battle of Eminis Creek the worse was over but in that space of time it was reported that millions had died of the p plague.

Then even when the plague had just passed when out broke the greatest fire ever seen seen before forests were ablaze, two big cities larger than London burned to the ground, and the blaze was so extensive that it made the night as day for nearly a hundred miles around.

The Glandelinians had worked hard to try and stop the fire set by the christians, pulling houses down, blowing others up with powder , but the fires only x ceased when everything had been consumed and there was nothing else for the fires to feed upon.The war at this section was a terrible massacre. Battlefileds were more terrible than any number seen in any wars in the United States or Europe, and the sight and the smells of heads and limbs half buried, the hissing and bubbling of informal cold rems of rivers caused by gigantic forest fires, and the tears and terrors of the fugitive Glandelinians was dreadful beyond all description.The Glandelinians were treated horribly by even Angelinians when captured and caught butchering children, nuns and priests. Eighty Glandelinians had been hanged,, whipped to death, sold as slaves in great numbers, and other Glandelinians mangled alive, steeped in caldrons of boiling pitch, and quick lime, and even ten, and hung up by the road sides, in the streets of captured towns, over the very churches with the inc inscription over them;

"This is what we do to Glandelinian assassins, who murder Priests, Religious sisters, and helpless women and children, and who derage degrad the Holies of Holies in our Catholc Catholic Churches."

Most readers no doubt have read and heard of the horrors in the great French Revolution.Many and terrible they were, but there was nothing worse done by the maddened people of Angelinia to the Glandelinians at that awful time when caught doing their horrible misdeeds as murdering christian children, and committing shocking Crimes in the Churches against our Lord, assassinating priests, and so on. After all this hanging, beheading, burning, boiling, mi mutilating, exposing, transporting, robbing and selling into slavery the Glandelinian prisoners, it did for a time terrorizing terrorize the Glandelinians that for a certain time all massacres of the helpless ceased.

-If war is considered hell it certainly was hell, and hell for the Glandelinians and not the christians. Gn General Hanson had heard of these horrible atrocities committed by the Angelinians to the enemy for the butcheries of children and was asked by the government of the Calverinians if he thought they did wrong and he answered in writings and even public speakings when any opportunity presented itself;

"These Angelinians did right.If the Glandelinians will go on butcher ing priests, helpless, women and children, and degrad the Blessed sacrement of our christian Catholic Churches, and committ any kind of outrage tward almighty God, such as blaspheming the sacred Images of the Blessed Virgin, and Christ then there is no one to blame for this reign of terror brought upon themselves but the deeds they have committed. Let the Glandelinian Glandelinians cease their wicked rattices, and assassinations of the help less and the Angelinians will cease their atrocities tward them.If they will not stop these cruelties then I don't intend to stop the Angelinians from doing so either, and I'm wondering even myself why I do not turn my army loose on all the Glandelinian prisoners like a raving mob of butchering demons.If the Glandelinians think it is right to murder Catholic Sisters, Priests, and other religious socks, and helpless old men women and children, then it is perfectly right for the Angelinians, to do the same atrocities tward them. I do not for one instance rep reluke the Angelinians over in the northwest for what they committed though it has shocked the world, and neither would the nations either, for they knew what had occured. Just let the foe start that around here and I'll turn my army loose on a regular delivery of Glandelinians for the prison wardens.

It is not necessary anywah way for any children to be slain in this fash ion, they have nothing to do with the war, and neither have they caused it. If the glandelinians hate children then they must be crazy, and ought to be sent to a world insane asylume.''

Violet and her sisters three days later during a halt of the christian advance attended a great Mass just before the final advance of Calverine was begun.It was a Splindid Mass and they lead some fervious prayers in behalf of the christian armies and for the speedy terminating of the cause such as these three;

It was a grand Mass and indeed inspired the soldiers who attended with greather enthusiam and for better chances to obtain God's blessing...''''

It was also the big ammunition supplement for the [illegible]

The advance of the christian armies had been swift and terrific and though at first general Vivian had been in the lead of the advancing christian armies, it was Hanson and Gladerlinia who arived within sight of the city of Ma Mary Ann first, and started concentrating his own armies along the Mc-Hollester Run, while Gladerlinia seized the gaxton Run.
As soon as change of positions was posible Hanson started to concentrate large armies and artillery on the Calverine Hills, at which on the top was a series of long stone walls miles long.These Hanson decided to make as an impregnable position, while he ordered genera Gladerlinia to march a part of his force tward Abbie-Ann and concentrate there.

Manley learned of the arival of the two christian armies, and hoped that something would delay general Manleys advance for this christian general with the same last name at least was some miles ahead of general Vivian.But the advance of this christian army was not delayd and both he and general Vivian came up almost on the same day and started to throw their own armies into position.

So now Manley was concentrated against the biggest christian army that he had ever faced, or ever dreamed off and generals Accountants, Adelo-de-garbo, and the others were not yet up to him at all and he begged them to hasten their advance declaring that he was facing an overwhelming force.
He sent spies out to learn the strength of the christian armies confronting hi , and also of the strength of their hastily thrown up positions and found out readily. This made Manley still more apprehensive, and he begged Leonia Meldonia Bicknell and Shoemannia to hasten to his aid with their armies, and for two days repeatedly sent messages to the other commanders begging them to hurry up with their advance.

General Vivian wished to attack thefoe immediately, but general Hanson was not as yet fully prepared to make any attack and declared that he would do so as soon as opportunity would present itself. And it was Manleys a intentions of attacking himself as soon as the other four armies would come up, but they arived so slowly that he was flabbergasted.First came Bicknells, then Shoemannias each a week behind, and then came the others, and now Manley was well prepared for any engagement that would come and he waited for signs of an at christian attack. But in the council Hanson had found it best not to attack immediately but to watch proceedings and get his batteries into better positions before he did so, and then to seize the enemys front line of works w e when night time came.

In the meantime the enemy under Augustine had been marching closer to Bondinia, and the people of the town hearing of the approach of these Glandelinians had either fled northward to the protection of the armies there, or taken refuge in the fortifications defending the southern portion of the city.
Simultaneously more attempts of the enemy had been made to take Angelinia Agathia and had been repulsed, and it was seen that the fortress being able to stand all attacks was soon aba abandoned and no more attacks were made there for some while. Manley did not feel sure that he could repulse the christians at Mary Ann, and feared that if he couldn't something would go wrong altogether. He had a large map of the Calverinian country and he studided it carefully, and by observations saw that one of the great fortifications of Mc-Whirt her called the St Dominean fortifications was not as strongly guarded as should be, and that if something should not be done promptly all would be lost. Evangeline grania, and Norma roseanna were exact gateways to these fortifications and should the christians once gain possession of these Mc-Whirther would fall. Osmondonson was the outer limits of these great fortifications, and guarded all approaches to the small town of Marcocellio, and also guarded all approaches to the Catherine Decis river which was called Lieghburg Landing. Mariachanelo was another another town guarded by a portion of the works called the Marcucian Stockades, and covered or guarded by the fortifications of Marcucian, vivian, Angeline, Silverbell, and Bel Ildare, and so to be more careful he ordered general Huebaum Mc-Whirther who was then marching through the city of Mc-Whirther and vivian wickey to reinforce the garrison of these places, and also to try and take possession of the hills surrounding the region of Osmondonson called Ava Maria heights.
Oh what a bloodcurdling horror was to ensue here within only a few months more.Here occured the bloodiest seige of the war, and some of the blood lost and most frightful battles also.

General Huebaum Mc-Whirther immediately started to do as he was commanded, and his advance was begun on September I.

Hanson Vivian had however been wise, and had sent before this large christ ian fo forces to oppose fiercely any efforts of the enemy to reach Eva Crania by land or sea, and had s also ordered the christians to mine every inch of the approach of the way, and Jacbaum Mc-Whirther had three mines exploded under his armies which created fra frightful slaughter and then thought he had enough, and became more cautious and took the longest and safest route and that was by the Vivian Hills and also through the valleys and over the Bondon Hills.Huebaum had an army of fourty five million men, and he hoped and expected to be reinforced by Jacbaum Manley as soon as that general could arive to help him. There were so many advanc advances and desperate movements made by the opposing forces, that the world was entirely awakened and was watching every indecent as an owl watches for a no use.

The war was growing simply furious, and it was already reported that in the b last battle that Zimmermann had fought and routed the enemy so dis asterously that the Glandelinian losses had been nearly nine million in killed wounded and dying, but it could not be hardly be confirmed though to Hanson and general vivian general Zimmermann shocked them by reporting his own losses as I6,III,987 in killed wounded and prisoners, though later Zimmermann found the losses to be very much below that horrible number and that he did lose only 7,898,000 in killed and wounded and that he lost no men as prisoners.Most of the wounded were able to retur return to service in a short time.

Protestentia and Condencia were horrified at the ferocity of the war, and planned to send their kings over to the two nations on another mediation, but this did not seem useful and it was abandoned. All the christ ian nations were shocked, and surprised also over the terrible disasters that it was reported that the Glandelinians suffered, and of the numerious disaster ous defeats they suffered.

The Glandelinian armies were all crowded northward already by the overwhelming christian armies, and it was believed that if there was any es cape at all from the effects of a general disaster all the Glandelinian armies would have to fight with the utmost desperation. It was Manleys pur pose to have the small town of Cedernine seized also, but then he discovered through secret service men and spies that this could not be done as the two flanking cities Collyer and Stanck were also great fortresses and guard ed and protected the city of Cedernine and could sweep as a broom all approac hes to the little Cedernine city. Surely at Calverine or Mc-Hollester Run Manley and his armies were seriously handicapped, and Manley saw that there was nothing else to do but settle it and go at Hanson and either throw him back or be forced into a surrender.

Bondinia he hoped to h be won by his Glandelinian general Augustine and if he could not capture the place well then Manley decided to recall him back to Mary Ann and reinforce him.He decided to hold out against making an attack untill he saw actually how the battle of Bondinia turned out. If Bondinia was a success well then he could also hope for a great success but if Bondinia did not fall well then all hopes of defeating the christian enemiesnow confronting him would be out of the question...

He learned that the whole christian army concentrated before him was over 65,000,000 strong to his 55,000,000.He declared however that his army was nea nearly equal in size to general vivians or Hansons, and that he had the mo most guns, and more provisions, and also unassailable positions, and that the christian intrenchments could be easily carried.When he tried to take them he did succeed at several points it is true, but he found out to his sorrow that they were a great deal harder to capture than any position he had attempted to capture bef re. before. Hanson had IO,000 generals under his command and a vast army indeed and so did Manley and the concentrat ed positions extended for over thirty eight miles in an unbroken chain and armed with over eighty thousand eight hundred big cannons.He had also other cannons and field pieces, and machine guns a total number of IOO,000 cannons altogether.Manley had three hundred thousand cannon and was only able to use fifty thousand in the whole battle while Hanson was able to use all his artillery and did with horrible effect too.

General vivian had fifteen million cavarly men and Hanson five million and the rest of the good soldiers were infantry. Manley had fewer infantry but more cavarly than the christians had, better positions and better guns and ammunition and then yet he did not win a con complete battle and only a slight victory or advantage which only was worth while enough to enable him to escape southward and retreat for Evangeline Crania.

It was also the big ammunition supply depot for the Hanson had also while concentrating on the enemy made a movement once again for a position of the enemys at Norma, and with an intention of showing Manley what he intended to do Hanson had hurled his army like a tidal wave upon a Glandelinian position at Norma.A desperate struggle raged, and for a good while after fourteen hours of fierce and sangun sanguinary fighting Hanson had repulsed the enemy when they counter charged, set fire to all their stockades, and gained a full possession of their works, but on the next day he was coppelled to resume the battle as millions of Glandelinians Glandelinians suddenly came upon his army like a roaring screaming cyclone and swild the frightful carnage that portion of Hansons army after a nother full day of fighting was hurled back from the captured works, and the enemy was again in pose possession of their own works.Hanson tried three tremendous onslaughts upon the position but was repulsed with frightful desciimination.

Manley also learning of general Augustines slow advance had ordered Federal to move upon the town of Bondinia himself, but general vivian having forced a portion of general Manleys army to withdraw from Norma Hansin wi whipped the Glandelinians in a desperate battle at Bondinia near the town of Pouncee-gee-Woolia, destroyed one half of Federals army and sent theremainder flying back to their own position , and Federal and three of his main aiding generals were borne off the field severely but not danger ously wounded..... Violet and her sisters had simultaneously been during the christian re pulse at Norma Hansin he been in danger from the enemy but Hanson had succeeded in rescueing them by making a wild Hurculean onslaught with one million cavarly which tore a whole Glandelinian infantry force to fragments, and scattered them far enough to enable Violet and her sisters with their guardians to escape.In this fearful cavarly charge Jack Evans who was then a captian in the army, displayed great valor and seemed to the Glandelinians as if he had been a raving devil.He slew twenty foes single handed, and his cavarly routed a whole division of Glandelinian va cavarly without suffering a single loss.

For a time without general Hansons knowledge general vivian learning of the enemy moving again upon Norma Hansin had struck heavily at the foe under smash-in-the-head at Lundinia Lane near Bondinia, and general vivis won such a crushing-victory that God alone could describe correctly the dreadful rout of the Glandelinian forces.They fled like a force of stampeding cattle. Manley was apprehensive, over these movements of general vivian who was driving ahead, like a crazy demented longiglomsnean creature as to say and was forced to withdraw a good part of his army from the positions at Mary Ann where general vivian already struck, and sent several bigger armies to intercept general vivian.

To many it did seem evident that these battles though which of very small description were nevertheless exceedingly severe and bloody and which exacted for at least the enemy a woeful toll of lives was just the commencement of the great battle that raged along the Mc-Hollester Run on the last day of September.....

MANY CALVERINIAN TOWNS ARE DESTROYED. HUNDREDS OF LEVEES WEAKENING FROM FROM THE CONCUSSION OF THE GREATEST EXPLOSION EVER EXPERIENCED IN THE SOUTHERN PART OF CALVERINIA AND ANGELINIA?

During the advance of the christian armies tward the city of Calverine general Hanson vivians army had reached the region of Mc-Hollester Run near the great Saxton Junction when great reports came in that a great explosion had been made by Angelinian engineers with the purpose of stopping the advance of one of the bigfest Glandelinian armies in the world which was advancing or hand been advancing with the purpose of helping general Manley and his other Glandelinian relel chiefs to repell general Hansons advance onthe city of Calverine. The whole Mc-Hollester Run valley was wad disasteriously swept by the concussion of the explosion and the states of Angeline Vine and Immaculate were hardest hit by the concussion and many small towns then in possession of the enemy were hit.....

Twenty eight glandelinians were known to have been killed by the exp,explosion of the probably most gigantic mine the christian engin-- rs have ever produced in the whole war the dead having been known by the effects of ..ager reports recieved over crippled telegraph wires during the proceeding night after the christian armies had halted for a time in its advace advance.

According to the reports more than three hundred thousand glandelinians we re inju injured and IO,000,000 rendered without shelter of any kind and flood swept at many points on account of the breaking of river levees caused by the concussion. The known death toll was dis tributed as follows;;;;;

Genoa Calverinia----------IO,000.

Irvingtonia Calv----------4,000.

Alexad ria Calv.----------2,000.

La Ploma.----------2,000.

Hidalgo Calverinia.----------2,000.

Warsawn, Calverinia.----------2,000.

Newtonia, Angelinia Northern----------2,000.

Brookland Calverinia.----------I,000.

Fithianna Northern Angelinia.----------I,000.

Fortification of Louna Calverinia----------I,000.

Newton Calverinia.----------I,000.

Accordingly to the way general Hanson Vivian had believed and declared it did seem that when comm communication would be restablished it would be probable that the death list would be much higher among the enemy affected by the great explosion. The ex l explosion of the mine which was placed under the town of Irvingtonia in Calverinia by thousands of Angelinian enginee rs early that morning before caused a d path of death and destruction to a great and wide extent and caused the greatest flood ever experienced in southern Calverinia. The explosion produced an extensive trail of destruction one hundred and twenty five miles distant into Angelinia itself.

THOUSANDS OF HOMES ARE CRUSHED...::::

Thousands of homes in the wrecked town were blown high into the air in a ma-e maze of splintered wreckage by the force of the explosion and the fragments of the houses were tossed about by the viberation as if made of paper and blown before

It was also the big ammunition supplies sent for the intended big campaign in the near Eastern Part of Calverinia which was stored in many of the biggest deports and - and large ammunition factories and mills. the wind n and those not blown up crushed in on their occupants from the force of the blast and concussion. Railroad tracks ne ar by, steel girders and railroad bridges were wrecked as if swept by a terrific hurricane of tornadoic force and in one instance an entire villiage consisting of many houses and in possession of about II,I50, Glandelinian soldiers was practically obliterated and though the soldiers were buried under wreckage no one was killed here though all were badly injured many probably fatally. And this town was about fifty miles away from the scene of the great mine explosion.

BIG TOWN WIPED OUT.

The concussion according to reports that general Hanson Vivian had recieved effected its greatest force on the large town of Hedrick Calvgrinia, fifteen miles northeast of Vivian Wickey where it was believed ten thousand Glandelinians were killed when the concussion of the explosion literally wiped that big town or small city off the Calverinian map if you please to mention. The blast of the concussion struck the town of Hedrick at 4. A. M. in the morning the viberating shock shattering houses in many towns in a radius of probably five hundred miles and leaving terrible numbers of dead and a still more horrible number of inhured in its wake. The concussion of course was only of a seconds duration but nevertheless it happened to do all this havoc.

An hour an a half later while thousands of Glandelinian soldiers were rescueing injured from the piled up wreckage and searching for the many bodies inthe ruins a cyclonic attack of a great force of di ristians broke upon the Glandelinian armies in this vinicity and the rescuers were driven out of the wrecked town the Angelinians opening fire andkilling and wounding many of the rescuers seriously injuring others and completely demolishing the remnants of the destroyed town left by the concussion of the explosion. Those then picked up from the wreckage by t e the Angelinians we re sent to the christian camps as prisoners of war.

OTHER TOWNS AND V LLIAGES SWEPT BY DESTRUCTION FROM THE CONCUSSION OF THE EXPLOSION.....::

The Calverinian town of Laploma or La Plemoa adjacent to Hedrick and the small city of Brookland occupied by one of the higg i highest Glandelinian general in that location also suffered severely from the viberation and great fragments of rocks and a storming torrent of wreckage and earth and every other substance dug by the great mine explosion fell upon those towns. In that section the force of the 4xplosion shook the ground so heavily that Summitvillie in Calverinia a hundred miles away, St Matthes Matthews, and Wheelington and also Gastonia suffered heavily.

Indeed the loss in property was reported to general Hanson to be heavy in each town or small city, but there was no loss of life in the later latter four though many were believed to be injured or maimed and diabled or shell shocked and deafened by the te rrific crash. General Johnston Grovertonia a glandelinian general and M Manleys most reliable telegrapher for the Glandelinian armies operating in the whole of Calverinia was killed when hit by a falling rock at Hedrick. At the town of Stancklin Sloaner two big churches guare guaranteed completely cyclonic and earthquake proof were leveled to the ground and the big house near it probably-one of the priest houses was rais raized and every house in the villiage damaged. Glandelinians had been in possession of these but nothing was found by them in the churches for which they could insult for the brave inhibatants when the enemy approached had carried away e - everything with them as they fled.

Twenty eight Glandelinians were known to have boon killed by the exp,explosion of the probably most gimantic mine the christian engineers have ever produced in the whole

The damage of the churches alone was believed by general Hanson who fred recieved the reports to be estimatable at I,400,000 dollars....!! Predictions were made in Southern Calverinia, that following night that the Levee of the great Stanck River was demolished by the concussion of the explosion though that river was two hundred miles away fromthe scene of the blast and many of the Glandelinians themselves fearing of the results of the rising floods appealed from Manley for sank bags to build a levee about the beleagured Glandelinian army effected so disasteriously by the explosion but none could be procured as no one could approach the region after the disaster. Even a Levee on the northeast side of the great Stanck River ten miles north of Hedrick Calverinia broke froubthe concussion of the explosion and thousands of acres of farm land was flooded and any one there could see immense crowds or swarms of Glandelinian tents and ammunition and provision wagons floating in the flood waters.Both sections of this region i are in the western half of the Angeline viner State of Calverinia.

CROPS IN POSSESSION OF THE GLANDELINIAN ARMIES THERE RUINED.:::::

Accon Accompanying the explosion a heavy del ge of earth and fragments of stone and even water and sods of grass and every other material blown upward for eight thousand feet by the explosion in falling upon farms in possession of Glandelinians k illed countless live stock,blighted orchards and the spring crops and threatened thousands in the lowlands of Calverinia with a repetition of the disasterious floods of I84I hwhen the levees of the Stanck River, Mc-Hollester Run and the Erminie were broken or leveled and breached by the shock of the blast. Even in Northern Calverinis the fierce s effects of the explosion brought death and destruction to sections already suffering under another flood which had been rising when more level es were broken by foe raiders. Five wo re killed near the scene of the explosion, scores of hundreds were seriously injured and hundreds of thousands of acres of farm lands were inundated when the flood broke loose immediately after the explosion. Angelinia, Abyssinkilo, and even Abbiennia so far away as these states or countries were also felt the force of the tremendous explosion, and the effects which was followed was believed to be from the concussion in the air for over all of Calverinia and Angelinia that following night came a deluge of rain and hail and a series upon series of violent thunder storms which lasted throughout the whole night adding to the ferocity of the floods already caused by the explosion..... Belief that the East Mc-Whirthian Diky of the Stack Stanck and the Mc-Allister Run rivers honeycombed by falling fragments thrown upward by the mine eruption and weakened by the de dreadful s viberation would soon give way before the approach of the next morning and if it did it would cause a flood that would probably carry away with it three hundred and fifty thousand homes and if flooding industrial and many other plants were IO,000 Glandelinians had employed themselves to uphold the rebellion if endag endangered would paralize the Glandelinian forces in that location and never then could they advance any i aid to general Manley and prevent general Vivian from capturing Calverine and Vivian Wickey. Hundreds of thousands of Glandelinians had been put at w ork fighting the rising tide of the floods and sixteen million five hundred thousand sacks had been piled up at many a leak along the levees of the Cedernine Creek before the flood in that location was beginning to be stopped.

Thick such a disaster to the Glandelinians so early in the war. Can you believe it dear reade rs. What would come to them later on.!

FIGHT TO SAVE ARMY LIGHTS...:: AND AMMUNITION.::::.

Thousands of steam siphons captured by the foe at the time of their advance had already suppanted centriful Centrifugal pumps which however were not capable of keeping up with the waters pace at all. Water had reached the windows of the highest houses in the towns as far as the fourth floor in many section of the flooded region but at some points the siphons were keeping even with the flood flow.

It was also the big ammunition supplies sent for the intended big campaign in the near Eastern Part of Calverinia which was stored in many of the biggest deports and - and large ammunition factories and mills. Following the progress of this war the Glandelinians also maintained a big e prrison at Chicago. [illegible] who were in this [illegible]

The stage of the flood near Peoria(Calverinia also within possession of this vast handicapped glandelinian army was reported still rising being at least twenty four inches high in this location. And here was where the explosion actually took the greatest effect leveling the town and even whole forests of trees literally to the ground and causing landslifes slides on the high hills in that vinicity. The great Mc-Hollester Run River and also the Norma Run and their many tributaries xswolle; by the waters of the flood rushing into them and still wsw swollen by the incessant rain of that fearful night caused a rise in them also but they did not seem probable to atiepmt as yet to overflow their banks and the levees of the Norma Run River were reported to be completely intact and not affected in the leastby the viberation of the explosion.

At Rome)(Calverinia ten miles north of Peoria(Calverinia) Four cote Cottages razed by the concussion of the explosion and which had stood on the bans of the Norma River were seen floating in its waters the wreckage having crumpled into the river as the buildings fell before the concussion. In Rome(Calverinia) and in Mossville(Calverinia near by town also-called Sanderton and others were reported to be completely under water and that the Glandelinian divisions which had been in that location h had been forced to abandon everything and flee before the flood without ever even a gun to their name.

DESPITE THE PERIL ONE GLANDELINIAN REGIMENT WON'T MOVE ..::::

Glandelinian soldiers working on the many dykes prepared all kinds of rafts on which to make their esdr escape in the event of the expected break that may come at any section of the levees. An increase of noises and the greater number of even shell explosions during a certain battle the Glandelinian officers said, woul make the break inevitable. Every-home and every encampment in the region of East Peoria had been abandoned by the Glandelinians troops that following nightafter the explosion,;; except one great division of fierce Immermunnians. General John Mortonia a great Condencinian who now an old man had served the Glandelinian army of the wicked nation for fourty years steadfastedly refused to leave the flooded destricts and their flooded encampments. Two skiffs and other boats were tied to pillars of the front porch of his headquarters.

''No christian Dogs have ever dr ove me out of any place yet even with fire and flood at that....''He said.....!!

FLOOD CONDITIONS WORSE IF YOU PLEASE TO SAY...:::"#$%_&'()('&_

Following the great explosion flood conditions in the region of the fearfully beleagured Glandelinian armies which had been advancing to the aid of general Manley continued to grow worse and it was evident if it did not subside soon the Glandelinian army would have to go back and their efforts to rescue general Manley and save him from the horror of a fearful battle would be out of the question. Poolernia and Liverpoole (Calverinia,() a village above Havana Calverinia- was effected by the concussion of the explosion and flood at the same time and the Glandelinians there was co pelled to call for aid while three hundred thousand men fought desperately to fight levees of many of the rivers in their location. Generals whose divisions were in the Langelier, Lacoy, Curtian Vallies and West Mantanzas districts of Calverinia and whose troops and artillery men have fled their positions and encampments before the surging waters of the floods were supposed to be shipped extra tents and other supplies by the Glandelinian State Nay National guard but these were captured by christian troops and never reached the handicapped Glandelinians.....

Twenty eight Glandelinians were known to have been killed by the exp,explosion of the probably most gigantic mine the christian engineers have ever produced in the whole

Five hundred thousand san bags were sent to general Meredonia to bulwark the Mc-Kee Creek Levee this stream running into the Stanck river, and where the water of the bursted levees was rushing everywhre and causing the flood to rise nearly a foot an hour. These sandbags loaded on a train were discovered by Angelinian engineers and the train was wrecked after a bloody skirmish and the sanbags dumped into the river.

At the town of Liverpoole(Calverinia) dikes of four districts were interlocked and a desperate battle with water and Angelinian snipers was being made at that point where a break would mean the flooding of the entire country. The Angelinian snipers at this location had been repulsed but nevertheless it was greatly feared that notwithstanding all the effortso on the part of the glandelinians these levees would break any moment as they were badly t n tumbled down by the viberation of the terrific explosion which as it was said dug a crater a mile deep in the ground and six miles wide and which was also now filled with the flood waters.

Relief that was being rushed in hisndered by the ferocious socalled''christian dogs. If the christians are dogs are not the Glandelinians pussy cats!

Glandelinian relief organizations were rushing aid to a portion of the belengured glandelinian encampments near Contra,lia where countless unsheltered Glandelinians and many injured were suffering. Half of the houses in all the towns in this location were destroyed-by the concussion and the wreckage swamped. Here no aid as yet could reach them as glandelinians reported the danger of the near approach of many strong foraging parties of christians who were watching out for every relief train and that every relief train would be wrecked and their contents destroyed.
The Angelinians were taking drastic measures to overthrow the bloody rebellion before it got too far under headway.

The effects of the great explosion seemed to have swept close to the ground for the distance of one thousand five hundred and twenty five miles causing damage to a distance of three hundred miles wrecking everything even forests from the terrific viberation. The entire villiage of Naples( Calverinia) and even Chicago Angelinia had been abandoned by glandelinian regiments these glandelinians having retired to a hill side after the south levee of the Stanck river gave way before the concussion of the crash and loosed raging torrents into the already leveled towns.Two days afte r the terrible disaster to the Glandelinians water continued to rise at all points as no efforts could stop the floods and water continued to rise at Carroltown (Calverinia) forcing scores of thousand of glandelinians from their flooded camps.
In this region more than seventy five thousand acres of rich farm land bef between the towns of Ware and Gale( Calverinia) thirty miles from Cairo were in danger of floods by weakness of the St Ann levee fifty five miles from Cairo and which the Angelinian engineers it was reported were making an effort to demol sh under heavy fire.

TREES SAVE HUNDREDS OF GLANDELINIANS?!....:::

Hundreds of glandelinians was reported killed and several thousand injured at Newtown (Calverinia in St Peters County near Calverine Run by the force of the explosion early in the morning. Hundreds of marooned glandelinian soldiers some of them officers and one of them a general were rescued from tree tops to which they had clung for twenty four hours near Beardstown(Calverinia). They had been given up for dead by their comrades. The general was Dodds Grovertonia twenty two years old and the other highest officer was Colonel Lower Francisanna a Zimmermannian.

All along the southern stretches of the great Stanck River immense forces of Glande inians and engineers directed by officers were still fighting to forestall a severe break through shaken levees, threatened by the additional shaking of the ground caused by some battle no dout raging far away near Bonidinia. Hundreds of thousands of glandelinians in this location were shelterless or without shelter and fooldless also in the stricken commo communities.

AS TIME PASSES FLOOD DAMAGE GROWS.

Z Scores of millions in damages were added to the havoc created by the flood in southern Calverinia caused by the explosion. An accurate estimate of the damage in lives or property among the glandelinians in the flooded section could not be made because Angelinian and Calverinian engineers destroyed telegraph and telepo telephone lines along their own path of advance all the way to the flood regions. One whole squad of glandelinian officers was reported missing from their headquarters near the town of Centralia (Calverinia) Searching parties organized in the confusion following the explosion and flood still were hunting for missing glandelinians and officers in several Calverinian towns and frw frequently exposed everywhere to the deadly fire of Angelinian snipers and b bushwackers.

The Mc-Holleste r and Pandora Depot at Ir Irvingtonia(Calverinia ten miles west of the explosion was wafted into the air by the concussion as though it were made of paper and hurled two hundred and fifty feet. The structure two hundred and fifty feet long was fire proof made of concrete and brick. The platform and flooring was shivered by the concussion like glass.

LITTLE GIRLS BLOWN FROM THEIR BEDS:

The known dead among the glandelinians at Irvingtonia (Calverinia) a tu town of three thousand persons but now occupied by glandelinians were general E.B Ridgebalder, General Hansonia Schosserlertonia Valentine, Colonel Litteraller, and general Charles Anderson with one thousand dead among privates. Ten little girls in one of the towns held as child slaves by the Glandelinians there in a town seventeen miles from the explosion were violently blown from their beds by the concussion way into the christian lines under general Whilliamsberger Zimmermann whose engineers had caused the explosion. Six of these little girls were found in an orchard some distance away from general Whilliamsberger Zimmermanns headquarters seriously injured. However a search was still in progress for the other little girls who had been blown farther. Some freak to the concussion of the explosion indeed. His christian army is ten miles away from the handicapped glandelinians army, and twenty miles away from the scene of the explosion and thirty miles from the time from which the little girls had been blown.

Among the dead Glandelinians in the town of Indianin(Calverinia) Was general Hasty Jones 67 years old a Zimmermannian near the town of Franklinport, killed when the headquarters in which he was sleeping collasped by the concussion, and colonel Mehannia Phillipian66 years old drowned when he fell from a staircase into the flood when a shell burst over his building.

Five hundred to a thousand feet of the Mc-Hollestor and Pandora tracks were washed away near Beardstown(Caoverinia)Heart of the flooded area cutting that town off and that section of the whole Glande indian encampment off completely from aid of any sort from other Glandelinian armies and the country to the north. One other railroad line was still in possession untill the christians got hold of it and then it stopped operations for the foe lines. The Senden suspended services for four days and every train that had come through the flood jammed with Glandelinian-refugees were either wrecked by Angelinians hiding in ambush or seized and all the Glande indians made prisoners. Fifty more houses in that regionwere rendered untenable in the last of the flood.

The Newton portifications near Chicago(Calverinia ) Continued to be garrisoned to the ama e amaze amazements of the christians themselves who trove to demilish it also and despite the fact that it was in thirty six feet of water. The Beardstown river levees was reported to be thirty six feet in level who managed however to dam the river with levees and prevent them from a llowing the flood to spread. The crest was expected Wednesday six days after the explosion and believed to probably reach fourty feet as river men among the foe armies declaired.

TWO CALVERINIAN COUNTIES SWEPT BY THE CONCUSSION OF THE GREAT EXPLOSION...

In Rosaryville Cunty County and also Marion County((Calverinia)) the concussion of the explosion did by far the greatest damage estimated at 2 420,000,000,000 dollars damage to the Glandelinian property and unconfirmed reports recived at general Hansons lines said that nearly two million Glandelinians had ben killed in the town of Hidalgo in the Rosaryville county. Many miles of the tracks of the great MC-Hollester and Pandora Railroad Lines and those running through the town of Meredosia-were washed out by the sudden rush of the flood, cutting the villiage and the whole Glande indian army in that section off from their only communication with Brownerton County across the Mc-Hollester Run River.....

In this part of C l Calverinia especially in the town of Indiania thousands of houses were blown down by the sudden air blast caused by the concussion in the atmosphere trees by the score of thousands uprooted by the earth viberation,and many trains carrying provisions for the Glandelinians were derailed and many wrecked disasteriously with deaths and injuries among the train crews, and many railroad lines in the possession of the enemy forced tocsuspend operations. The South Bend Division of the Abbieannia, Bondinia, and Calverine railroad was completely cut off by the washing away of the big iron and steel bridge over the Mc-Hollester Junction River in that section.

Ten great electrical plants of the Mc-Hollester Run Valley Electric Companies also in the hands of the enemy at Farmersburg((((((Calverinia)))))) was deatroyed by heavy christian shell fire from the Angelinian Zimmermannian battieres of Whilliamsberger Zimmermanns command and ruined further by fire and flood at a loss to the Glandelinians of $35,000,000. The Mc-Hollester and Stancklin Railroad tracks and those of the Amois and Cedernine and Lucillis Ricksen Railway at or in Akronia County(Calverinia) were under twelve e feet of water and thousands of trains of fright cars were seen floating in the water. Here a camp of a one hundred thousand Glandelinian c tents and a million dollars worc worthof provisions wwre swept away by the flood.

PEORIA BRIDGES OUT....:::PP

Wepr away by the racing current... An additional two hundred and fifty feet also badly wrecked by the viberation of both land and air was being carried away piece by piece. Thousands of Glandelinian volunteers worked frantically to keep the heavy wreckage from loding against other structures and other bridges and adding to the danger already threatening but they had a very hot time of it for they were continually pestered by christian snipers and ambuscadersi f if you please to mention.

The injured Glandelinians shot down by snipers while at work were scattered through out a half dozen towns hit also by the storming shower of wreckage thrown up so far into the air by the explosion. Hundreds of big fires were also raging everywhere. Six sixteen Glandelinians were injured by two Abbieannian snipers in ambush at Marshall Stanck and ten were killed. All these Glandelinians were at work trying to repair some of the damage houses. Other places reporting heavy number of killed and injured from severe sniping were the towns of Lake Centrallia, Nashvillianna, Walnut Junctionia, and Shookvilleanna.The force of the air and ground shock caused by the tremendous explosion of the biggest mine in the war also spread wreckage of conglomerated description through Putnamma and Claytonia co nt Counties. A fearful swath was cut through the town of Springbrook (Angelinia near BedFord by a terrific conflargration started by the concussion.

TWO OTHER GLEN GLANDELINIAN GENERALS KILLED BY DROWNING...::

Near the town of Warsoonia(Calverinia) two generals a with their two divisions were caught in the swirling torrents of the sudden flood and drowned as they were on the way to the main line a terrible calamity indeed. General Herbert Holmquister was drowned in the flooded farm lands wh n his encampment was swept away and thousands of his comrades were also drowned or without shelter near the wrecked town of Port la Louna in southern Calverinia. Two other generals were injured severely one perhaps fatally when the breaking of a levee from the concussion caused a dreadful washout which wrecked two captured mail and express trains between the towns of Pandora and Peoria(Calverinia) also near Fosteranna. General Charles Watsonia another Glandelinian general commander of the Fourtheenth Inginoers wounded by a chri christian sniper not far from the flooded district was not expected to live. Traffic was blocked in this location for permanently time. Traffic also on the Rock Island and Mc-Hollester and Sendon Northwestern Railroad entering the city of Peoria was blocked for good by washing out of the right of way just north of the city when Angelinian wreckers destroyed a great Levee with the purpose of washing away all approaches for Glandelinian armies tward Calverine and Vivian Wickey.

The washout was discovered by Glandelinian section gangs continuouly par patrolling the right of way and efforts were made to repair the damage so the train from Manleys provision section was able to enter the city of Peoria but when the damage was finally repaired the train with all the provisions and allthose on board was in possession of general Zimmermanns christian army. Think of how the enemy indeed was being mortified by being so beautifully humbled by the christian troopws.HE. HE. Ain't that a joke dear readers on the enemies of God.

had been abandoned by the Glandelinian army as a result of the water and great conflargration and explosions of thousands of mines per day, the water being two to three feet deep over the tracks. Glandelinians by the thousands were also placing sandbags and bags even filled with rocks and gravel along the many bridges and turn pikes and ruined levees to the town of La Crescent ( Calverinia) to prevent greater washouts and though their work was being successful they were nevertheless badly harassed by Angelinian snipers and even at times forays and fiercecattacks by infantry covered by artillery. Ain't that beautir ul to behold.

GLANDELINIAN SOLDIERS AND OFFICERS USE RAFTS.:::::::

ST LOUIS(CALVERINIA) APRIL I7th.I9I2... More than a score of thousands of Glandelinians were marooned beyond their encampments and in the towns in the southwest section of the country south of this city when a large creek levee also was demolished by the concussion of the explosio m explosion and the water flowed over and imundated the lowlands for nearly two hundred miles making indeed a vast lake of water ten feet deep.Many of these Glandelinians marooned-on house tops, or on tree tops and hills surrounded by water w re rescued by Glandelinian soldiers, officers and military police and others rescued themselves made by rafts made of doors', logs and wagons tied or fastened together. Soldiers usually used improvised rafts. Many times it happened that some of these rafts were do dislodged by rushing torrents and soldiers and rescued dumped anew into the muudy waters? Thousands of acres of ground in this location were under water and at Aldridge about eighty miles south of the explosion the water covered av about one-million two hundred and seventy five thou sand thousand acres. The crop damage about Aldridge in southern Calverinia was expected to be about 22,-000,000 dollars. Also more than fifteen thousand acres of land cultivated by Glandelinian soldiers and christian prisoners for Glandelinians xause in southern Angelinia or Calverinia I mean just west of St Louis was also under water and washouts from the Angeline Run river whose levees were also leveled by the mine explosion or its viberation interrupted service on the Evangeline St Clare railway about fifty miles westof the scene of the blast and reports from Farmingtonia said the flat riverin Calverinia was shaken fairly over its banks by the concussion at West Elvins and that the whole Glandelinian army in that location were swamped so fast that few escaped the trouble of seeing who could swim the best and many millions of tents were floated away. For a certain time the flood was blackened by swimmers but many were able to save themselves though many others overcome with exhaustion and exposure in the cold water had to be rescued, and during the rescue work a railroad bridge across the Stanck river collasped and killing a number of Glandelinians who we re still trying to swim out of the flood.

GLANDELINIAN AURTHORITIES FEARING THE MEANCE OF THE ENRAGED CHRISTIAN AURTHORITIES ORDER CALVERINIAN SLUICE GATES TO BE CLOSED.

All Sluice Sluice gates on the Margert Sanders-Dam were closed after the noise of the explosion had died away by order of the Glandelinian government engineering office at the town of Calverinia junction near Calverine it being stated that action was completely imperative to save the lower river of St Paul from the town of Neonahin to Green Bay Section from being tampered with by christian engineers and guards were placed all around for fear the angelinians would attempt to dynamite or bomb these and rake a still greater flood. There was no tel ing what the Angelinians would do when they were so throughoutly aroused as they now wee were..!!

It was also the big ammunition supplies sent for the intended big campaign in the near Eastern Part of Calverinia which was stored in many of the biggest deports in - and large ammunition factories and mills. Following the progress of this war the Glandelinians also maintained a big c garrison at Chicago who were in this cit

This probably will increase the seriousness of the situation at this section and up river points for a portion of Zimmermanns Abbicannian armies were in this location and their generals were watching their chance to mine this locationalso and caused the Glandelinians another serious disaster. It was also claimed the Fox River and Lake St John which were shaken into surges by the concussion of the distant explosion would have their own levees and dikes dn dynimated by suspicious characters of or christian engineers and so guards by hundreds were placed here also and signal stations to boot. Four towns in this locatio were hit by the shock of the explosion that fatal morning according to dispatches recieved by general Manley not recieved untill twenty four hours later due to crippled telegraph and tenephone lines and also due to christian spies and foa forg foraging parties. The towns of Atlas, Ozarkanna, Francis purmor and Manitou Atlanta were the ones affected by the strong viberation. The property damage was estimated at one million one hundred thousand dollars but forturately for the Glandelinians in that location there was no loss of life though the number of injured was not estimated.

ANGELINIAN SPIES GETS PA PLANS AND SIX THOUSANDDOLLARS FROM ONE OF THEHEADQUARTERS OF ONE OF THE WICKED GLANDELINIAN GLANDELINIAN GENERALS WITHIN THE FLOODED DISTRICTS..!!::))(('' 7/2/1

While the ferocity of the flood was in progress for the second day after the great Mine explosion Angelinian spies, (numbers not given here) e entered the half flooded headquarters of general Hickoncilina Breswther shortly before noon stabbed and probably wounded a number of the Glandelinian guards and two officers, and escaped with sixty six million dollars and most valuable plans and maps which were in the possession of the Glandelinian generals.

When the wounded soldiers and officers we re discovered by other Glandelinians they we re removed to the Glandelinian Base Hospti Hospitals and shotgun squads aided by bloodhounds and o en aroeplanes and signal stations and baloons and details from every section of that part of the Glandw inian encampment were sent out to research o for the escaped spies. The guards when the spies broke into the building put up a battle when the leader of the desperate spies drew his gun and commanded them to thrown up their hands. While they were struggling some of the other spies drew their bayonets and long knives and plunged them into the bodies of the Glandelinian guards. The sentries then sank helpless to the floor. Then the Spies rifled the entire house and gathered up all the important papers and rushed out the front door. After that they had been persued for six days but were never overtaken and had shot down three hundred of their desperate persuers and reached general Hanson christian lines in safty if youplease.

SOR SPRINGFIELD.. CLAVERINIA.-- Sono Seventeen persons were killed, scores injured and one general missing after the force of the explosion had caused its concussion to sweept the territory about Centralla and Irvington(calverinia) accodring according to a report recieved by general Black Brooks from general Omar J. ? Mc- Mackenia shortly before eleven o-clock to two days later after the outbreak of flood caused by the explosion.

At Centralia(Calverinia) from fourty to eighty Glandelinian officers were reported killed one body being picked up and hurled a mile by the bi vic viberation, between between fifty and seventy five were injured many probably fatally, and property loss even to the Calverinians themselves estimated at hundreds of thousands of dollars . within tow two days.And all this resulted from the explosion whose concussion hit so many towns in southern Calverinia.

The concussion lifting and wrecking houses of all kinds within possession of the foe as well as barracks and other army buildings in the vinicity of Irvington six miles north of Bondinia also caused a path of dewt destruction through sections of northern Angelinia, in the vinicity of Walnut Hill and Shookvillie. In many places despite the flood wreckage burst into fire which added to the terror. More than fifteen million Glandelinians were reported without shelter. The terrible explosion was not without weird freaks of all kinds.. In the Calverinian town of Irvington all the outbuildings of the Ava Maria Orphan A sylum were tumbled into ruins. But the main buildings in which several thousand Glandelinians and their officers were sleeping was not affected by the concussion.

It was also the big ammunition supplies sent for the intended big campaign in the near Eastern Part of Calverinia which was stored in many of the biggest deports and large ammunition factories and mills. Not one of these Glandelinians were injured though many had been awakened by the terrific crash of the distant explosion and shaknout of their wits by the bi viberatin viberation. OTHER GLANDELINIAN RELIEF TRAINS ARE SENT TO RESCUE, BUT CAPTURED BY THE CHRISTIAN RAIDERS.

One orders from general Baldwin Lansin Altersonia commander of one of the Glandelinian Twenty Third Battalions with headquarters in Irvingotina special relief trains carrying many Glandelinian doctirs and nurses was rushed through tward the stricken area, but were seized by Angelinian raiders and all taken prisoners. So most of the Glandelinian injured could not be sent to near by towns in possession of the Glandelinians but had to be sent to the army base hospitals near the r ined ruined town of Centralia. The effect of the shock was severest within the whole Glandelinian encampment. Two daughters of general Loganburry Valentine Ploll and vivian Angelinia Loganburry one nine and the other eleven were hurled through the window of their bedroom by the viberation just as the building cri crumbled. One was found dead a mile away. The search which had been continued for two days for the other child was successful but she was also found dead. Even then to re ports recieved by the Glandelinian aurthorities bodies of two other children belonging to some Glandelinian officer of ,o lower rank were taken from the ruins of a fortification before daybreak and the body of an und unidentified officer who was probably a general and who was about fourty years old was found three feet from the dead bodies of the two children.

HALF OF ENTIRE NUMBER OF GLANDELINIAN FORTIFICATIONS TOTALLY WRECKED.

Half the number of Glandelinian fortifications about two hundred and all strong earth quake fortified houses were damaged or demolished by the convuss ion of the distant explosion. They each housed IO,000 men for a garrison. The entire Glandelinian encampments were cutoff from the entire world by the ripping down of telegraph and telephone wires by the biveration. Among others injured among the Glande inians are general Gus Droder and Ernest Norstradam who was take to one of the base hospitals suffe ring from a broken back when thrown down by the shock. Near Walnut Junction one officer whose name was not known was killed by a stray piece of wreckage hurlting through the air and another officer was fatally injured according to information reaching general Newton seven miles to the south of the main foe position. Large property damage indeed was done for the unfortunate Glandelinians.

At Nashvillianna (Calverinia the shock of the explosion demolished a strong Concrete fortification which was a mile long and two hundred feet high and a small village of fortifications flanking it also suffered severely but here however there was no loss of life or any one injured according to reports given to higher generals.

other section of the Glandelinian army in the Evangeline . St.. Clare River valley flood suffers three days after the actual disaster occured. The third day rampage of the war made flood was on. Two thousand feet of the free bridge of the ivianin se t section crossing the river together with many hundreds of feet of track of the Mc-Hollester and Pandora Railroad above Mossvillianna(Calverinia were washed away during the following night . Huge forces of Glandelinian soldiers laboured throughout the whole three days in an attempt to save the Mc-Hollester and Pandora Right of way near the town of Eva St lair which had been threatened by the flood for more than a day. The Mc-Hollester and Pandora Train due in Eva St Clair at IO 30 A.M. loaded with Glandelinian soldiers was halted by an divis on of Angelinians two miles above Mossvillanna and all the Glandelinians on bo rd were taken prisoners.
A Glandelinian par patrol had attempted to signal the Glandelinian train of the grave danger as it approached but they did not accomplish it on time.

IOO!OOO IOO,000 ACRES OF CALVERINIAN LAND STIL FLOODED.
AIN'T THAT NICE AND DANDY!!!!!!

Under the concussion of the immense and beautiful explosion one of the most immense levees of the Evangeline St Clare River broke flooded one hundred thousand more acres of wheatlands. The new danger on the fourth day of the flood was a possible shut down of gas plants within possession of the foe. Glandelinians in countless numbers had been working and fighting the flood waters ever since the first break in the leeve but they had indeed a most hard time of it for angelinian snipers fired upon them constantly from concealed places. Even Glandelinian artile artillery men toiled for over four days to save their ammunition and other privisions from ruin. Much of the provisions was however very seriously damaged. Unusual trembling of the ground from some strange cause nevertheless continued throughout the four days and further damage was predicted along the valleys of the three m immense rivers. Even a large strip of concrete road on the Ivy Trial from P andora to Bondinia was washed out early during the sixth day of the flood while more than ten miles of it was completely flooded to the depth of thirty feet. Ain't that great?

GLANDELINIANS USE TRACTORS IN BIG FIGHT AGAINST THE MAGNIFICENT FLOOD. MAGNIFICENT INDEED IF THE READERS THINK SO.

Large forces of Glandelinian soldiers under frire fire from christian snipors and hundreds of tractors struggled throughout the six days to save the main dikes of the Norma River. Millions of sandbags and rock ballast were dumped along the d: dike by the car load. AAdditional tents were furnished marooned Glandelinian soldiers for shelter while many buildings on higher ground were thrown open to Glandelinian refugees. Proerty damage around the region of Mossvillanna alone was believed to be nearing the points of scores of millions of dollars to the loss of the Glandelinians . At Little Child(Calverinia) it was estimated damage resulting from floods of the Norma and Erminio Rivers would be about IO,000,000 dollars. Two hundred thousand Glandelinians between Grand Child and Great Child(Calverinia twenty five miles apart and also shaken down by the concussion of the explosion were il isle isolated on a high elevation and besieged by a large christian force. This is something good.
Wreckage,debris, and earth earth were hurled over many towns not damaged by the concussion of the explosion and heavy damage from flying or falling objects of great weight was reported from various sections. In Calverinia City(Calverinia a hundred mile miles from the explosion great showers of stones falling and driven before a high wind then blowing like a hurricane broke millions of windows.

It was also the big ammunition supplies sent for the intended big campaign in the near Eastern Part of Calverinia which was stored in many of the biggest deports and large ammunition factories and mills. Following the progress of this war the Glandelinians also maintained a big c garrison at Chicago. Many of the who were in this city

One other general officer on the f e sinde side if you don't moind was killed when his headquarters was blown away by the explosion which happened near his headquarters the shock here leaving a trail of unroofed houses for many miles. The general hose whose name was Hasty Johnson was trapped when the explosion occured and the concussion leveled his house and demolished it. General Charles Dick near the scene had a very narrow escape when a frieght car on which he had been sitting(on the roof) was hurled onto the floor of a bridge by the concussion with such as force as it send it through and it landed in sixteen feet of water. General Dick broke a small window in the car and and again crawled to the top where he pers perched for two days in a vain hope of aid reaching him. Finally half starved he saw a cloating log approaching tward him which he finally grabbed and allowed himself to drif tos shore.

)(('' GLANDELINIAN FLOOD VICTIMS FACES FAMINE...!!!!!:))((''

Even to make matters worse for the Glandelinians whose encampments were flooded the y were now being threatened by a famine. Even to make matters still worse the mighty Mc-Hollester Run River had started a maddening flood from the continual cloc collaspe of levee after levee all of which had been weakened by the concussion of the recent explosion and the entire flood had already inundated nearly 20,000,000 acres of farm land. Hundreds of laden frieght trains belonging to the foe had been swept from their tracks and sent tumbling like toys of children miles and scores of miles into the fields. Each street in the ruined towns and small cities were swirling rivers twenty feet deep into which so swift was the curent that it was ece exceedingly dangerous to take an any kind of boat.

I,IOO,000 homes possessed by the Glandelinians caught.

More than one million one hundred t o thousand homes in possession of the wicked Glandelinians had been caught in the path of the flood. The Glandelinians in this community were huddled together in houses on the two highest points of the many flooded towns where the waters of the floods lapped. Even to make matters worse on the seventh day of the flood it was raining heavily which caused the flood to rise still more.

STORY OF FLOOD BY AN ANGELINIAN EYEWITNESS.

One Angelinian soldier who had went on a two hundred mile spying and scouting trip and on a Glandelinian train passed through the flooded disctircts. His story went thus;
I have just returned from a return trip from the flooded Glandelinian encampment under general Izener Myletze where I went to get moving pictures, still and other of the flood and of the crti critical situation of the Glandelinian armies there. I went into the city of Pandora on the last Glandelinian train that entered. I came out by boat. The last train ran over the Mc-Hollester and Pandora railway tracks across one of the oldest levees. This was a stout old veteran of dikes which the Nationals did not make any attempts to demolish. It was more than than sixty five feet high and fifty years old but still the flood was over it six fee t. Horrible tragedy tottered on the edge of this flood covered levee as the train went slowly over it. There were over six hundred soldiers on board with child slaves all refugees from the flood. I boarded the train and left it just outside the first flooded town it entered. Three quarters of an hour after the levee over which that

Twenty eight Glandelinians were known to have been killed by the exp,explosion of [illegible] engineers have ever produced in the whole

Sendon train passed was swept in two section by the pressure of the tremendous flood. Had it happened sooner it would have caused a train tragedy that would horrified have horrified the very christian as well as Glandelinian mtion. It was reckoned that the flood waters rising at times six inches an hour for a day at least had reached a total rise of sever sevety five fast at the time I left the despairing Glandelinian encampments without being discovered by any Glandelinians. Everywhere I had a view of the flood I could see scores of thousands of men in gray and blue working desperately to repair levees that had been broken down by the concussion of the blast. Thousands of frieght cars full of rocks and sand were run to every point where anew levee threatened to give way. ut the flood waters just picked up these cars and flung them around carelessly. The current was believed to be over a hundred miles an hour. It sucked and pulled pulled at the foundation of many of the strongest houses and dragged many of them toppling into its dirty depths. Glandelinian officers seeking to save their army sto k stock were building li ttle dikes in front of their headquarters. As fast as they were buil built the flood tore them down.

A GLANDELINIAN GENERAL WHO PLANNED A FOOD RE IEF CAPTURED BY FORAGING PARTIES OF CHRISTIANS...!!!!

General Peters Wesleyanna and other Glandelinian officials after a round of complete inspection ending in the high places where over a million soldier refugees were gathered made emergency plans to bring food and other provi priv provisions into the foe camps by means of fleets of motor and other kinds of boats which had been made ready to fight their way to the nearest point to which food could be taken but this was for the time being frustrated by christian foarging parties by the capture of the unfortunatel Glandelinian general. ome great idea of the fight ahead of these motor and other boats could be gained from the scene witnessed by even many christians was that many of the big Glandelinian warships and other battleships then in the river to help in a seige and used to battling the roughest weather of the stormy Mc-Whirthian Seas had been dragged from their courses by the current of the flood and piled up on land many miles from the rivers. One of the biggest of these Glandelinian dreadnaughts came to rest on the Evangelinia St lare Public Park near Pandora. This shows what christians can accomplish when they are at war with a nation they do not like to be whipped by.....

It is or is not to be estimated for full but nevertheless this may be probably the worse disaster of the whole war, that at least have ever struck the foe side . ven Northern Angelinia had predicted before was affected by the concussion of the explosion with the damage ragi ranging into millions of dollars. This part of course was the christians hit but it resulted in no fatality. Nevertheless in an area extending from Bond nia, southern Calverinia to orthern Angelinia, and from the northern end of Angelinia to ortheastern Angelinia, and from the southern end of Angeline ine State to Lake Mc- ollester the effects of the great explosion and flood vented their fury upon a vast district already sorely stricken by a great and tremendous flood of only two weeks before caused by the Angelinians under general Marinidia dynamiting a huge dam of the Empress Lake.

Hundreds of thousands of fragmentry reports recieved in all part s of war stricken Calverinia up to a late hour of the ninth day of the flood indicated a loss of life among the flood beleagured Glandelinians that was likely to reach fifty or sixty thousand a list of inu injured that will probably total several hundred thousand more, and scores of more millions of dollar damage to towns and many farm lands.

But of it all southern Calverinia and northern Angelinia seemed to have been singled out for the greatest of the explosion and flood havoc. with great levees of dozens of wide and deep rivers a s already destroyed by the concuss ion of the explosion u till they bursted all Glandelinians who had fled from hundreds of towns to higher ground were forced to stand helpless watching the terrific floods demolish the few remaining houses and many fortifications within the flooded Glandelinian lines the floods sparing nothing whatever in its path.

It was also the big ammunition supplies sent for the intended big campaign in the [illegible] near Eastern Part of Calverinia which was stored in many of the biggest deports and large ammunition factories and mills. Following the progress of this war the Glandelinians also maintained a big e garrison at Chicago [illegible] who were in this city

As it may have stated before the explosion occured on a Sunday morning. The Glandelinian army nearly a hundred million strong under general Isner Hyletze was then on its way tward Calverine with the purpose of making a junction with general Hanley with the purpose of stopping general vivians advance and had halted inthe region of EvEva St Clare. hey had just about settled down that saturday night and were still comp comfortably encamped when on the no morning the explosion occured and appeared to many Glandelinians like a eruption breaking from the surface of the ground. The violence of the noise caused by the explosion could not be described in any way but the Glandelinians nearest to the scene were as shell shocked and rendered unconscious. The explosion sent wreckage flying for miles across and u p upon all farming districts for several miles in the vinicity of the foe camps, all the heavier material thrown upwards by the force of the explosion descending with dynamitic for e upon many towns in the region especially around Cen tralia and rvingtonia (Calverinia and completely wrecking what the concussion had spared. In a sector a hundred miles square around the scene of the explosion little was left when the explosion had died away in its deafening reports. The complete destruction wrought in all cu communities was typical of the entire country from there to the foe lines. A birdseye view of the immense districts would have revealed miles of hard roads absolutely obliterated, countless telephone and telegraph poles and wires hurled about in a hopeless tangle, wide areas of early crops destroyed, mil many miles of railroad tracks and small culversets uprooted, houses, stores, firt fortifications and farming buildings crumpled and the debris stretched far across the land scape landscape, countless bodies of horses and other aninlns as well as cattle and mules pounded against embankments and broken walls of houses and forts, river banks broken by concussion and the streams of water pouring across plowed ground and broken timber and spies of churches and roofs, and overturned wagons and splintered furniture all piled up in weird heaps in the streets of the explosion affected towns. Trees were twisted out of shape or standing inclined in all directions and at once after the explosion thers had been thousands of acres of land in a dozen or more Calverinian counties in calverinia under water. even many small towns in possession of the foe sent word to foe generals by courier that the y were nearly wiped out and all army pro provisions gone and that the Glandelinians the re were facing famine.

-hile wreckage and dirt and ruck mud and grass, and stones and gravel and the like covered the region ten miles from the explosion to the depth of several inches other places and many towns had been pelted with heavy stones and rock fragments which smashed windows and caused heavy damage to crops. Six inches of dirt and wreckage was reported to cover the streets of one of the towns not reached by the ensueing flood.

EXPLOSION TOLL THROUGHOUT DOWNSTATE OF GLANDELINIAN INFESTED CALVERINIA..:::::::::::::::

Pandora(Calverinia) Relief workers from other Glandelinian encampments including a corps of Glandelinian Red Cross workers were sent to the explosion stricken region caring for those among the army without shelter and a great number of injured following the explosion early that fatal Sunday orning which practically cresed all towns in possession of Glandelinians from the map of Calverinia. Seven unknown officers were killed in Irvintonia and nearby farms in possession of the foe, and about tni thirty five others were reported to be seriously injured. The damage caused in Anglinia alone was estimated at about three hundred and sixty five thousand dollars and about fifteen million homes and buisness houses were known to have broken windows and shattered doors, especially in the region where the shock of the explosion had been felt the greatest the town of Marion being the hardest hit fit.

Transportation by any road in Angelinia was r practically at a completely stands i still due to wreckage of trees and telegraph poles hurled down by the concussion which followed the explosion and much relief work there was being seriously handicapped.

Twenty eight Glandelinians were known to have been killed by the exp,explosion of the [illegible] engineers have ever produced in the whole

The Abbicarnia, Bondinia, and Calverine Railroad met the wrmergency the day of the explosion by operating special trains carrying nurses and doctors from Angelinia to the Calverinian boundary line and returning to Angelinia with a few injured Calverinians thay had been found.

A disaster to the Glandelinians also happened at the town of Indianapolis (Calverinia where twenty five Glandelinians met death and more than two hundred and sixty were injured many seriously injured where in this small city property loss to the Glandelinians was estimated at more than one million dollars.

All communications had been cut off, all railrways and all highways were still flooded and it was believed that the death and property loss to the foe wu would be much more higher when more complete reports were available. Heavy strange earthquake like c shocks continued in all parts of Calverinia for several days after this disaster and in more than a dozen instances small shocks threwnted to develop into disasterous quakes which would leave more death and ruin in their wake. This was caused no doubt by many tremendous explosions and battles occuring at many points of Calverinia at one time. There was scarcely a single Calverinia stream that did not have a levee in the region of the explosion damaged with disasterious effects by the concussion of the explosion. The flood stages exceeded the high marks of other floods of olden times when rivers left their banks from too much rain. North of the town of Danville and Indianapolis(Calverinia) to summitville (Angelinia) the shock of the explosion also caused heavy damage to property but no loss of life however which was fortunate for the Angelinians. It was generally the Glandelinian army in the location wui which had sufferedcso immensely.

WASOUTS CRIPPLES MANY RAILROADS IN POSSESSION OF THE FOE.

A tremendous washout at Eva St Glare on the railroad by the same name, another at St Anns Station on the Sendon Railroad, and a still more tremendous washout on the Mc-Hollester and Pandora caused the most tieup of all Glandelinians trains or trains supposed to be in possession of foes and trains that were stalled in six feet of water had their roofs covered with six inches of debris which fell from the sky after the distant explosion and a levee on the Mandanda River ten miles north of Vincennes( Calverinia also broke when damaged so bad by the shock it could not hold against the rivers depth any longer. Springfield and Springville Calverinia twelve miles west of Cantonia was nearly wiped off the Calverinian map by the shock of the great explosion.

FLOOD MENANCE GROWS. MAYBE IT HAS TO GROW.

Flood conditions two weeks after the outbreak of the disaster still continued to grow worse to the consternation of General Isaer Myletze himself as the many leveled levees still resisting before also began to break and give way. Liver Manzelle a small villiage abvoe Havan a(Calverinia was the las latest town in the possession of the Glandelinians to call for aid. A shipment of tents was rushed there only to be captured by Angelinians. Tents were also sent to Havana for Glandelinian troops of the Langelier, Lacey, Curtainvalleys, andWest Mexicanna districts who had flee fled their fortifications at the spreading of the flood. Levees protecting these districts however were reported to be still holding but all encampments and ammunition and artillery had been removed besides all army live stock while three hundred thousand men fought to save the levees within the distance of eighteen miles.

It was also the big ammunition supplies sent for the intended big campaign in the near Eastern Part of Calverinia which was stored in many of the biggest deports and - and large ammunition factories and mills. Following the progress of this war the Glandelinians also maintained a big Garrison at Chicago. [illegible] who were in this city

The Glandelinian Red Cross(I did not know they had red crosses) was notified by long distant telephone that the leves at Mc- Cantler just north of Pandora (Angelinia was ruined by the concussion of the explosion or leveled and expected to break at any moment and the that hundreds of Angelinians men women and little children were soon fleeing their homes. Should this leves give way as the messagecadded fifty fifty thousand Mc-Cantler homes would be inundated. But it did not thanks be to the Blessed Mother and her Son.

RAILWAY TRACKS GONE. WHY DID THEY GO AWAY?

Tracks of the Angelinia and Stanck railroad between Valley Town (Calverinia and Naples were washed out for five thousand yards ans all traffic for the Glandelinian provision trains at this point was nil. Five million five thousand secured sandbags were sent to Meredosia(Calverinia) But later the workers here were hindered by attacking christian troops and all the sandbags captured with a number of prisoners and two trains. All Glandelinians who had their shelter in Naples had been driven from the town by the suddenly rising waters most of them being compelled to take refuge in provisioned tents on hils hillsides within full view of christian batteries of Zimmermanns army and in danger of being shelled. It was said by many Glandelinian officers that the south levee at Naples had broken letting in fresh floods. At Corinthtown near the junction of the Norma and Mc-Holleste r Run Rivers the waters pouring through the stretches left by broken levees had forced entire divisions of Glandelinians from their trenches and encampments and here the Glandelinian red cross and army officials were also rushing aid as rapidly as possible but keeping a wide berth from any prowling christians. The same kind of assistance was being sent everywhere it was asked for by the Glandelinian general.

WAR FLOOD AT RECORD.

Other reports brought to Glandelinin commanders said the flood had reached the highest stange on the sixteenth day flooding nearly six million two hundred thousand acres of fertile farm land whether in possession of Glandelinians oe even christians and their allies and causing intense suffering among millions of Glandelinians and some number of Calverinians driven from their homes. New Levees broke at Beardstonia(Calverinia flooding thousands of more acres of corps crops. In some places the water was believed to be a hundred feet deep on fertime soil. Heavy army live stock loss was reported among the Glandelinian armies and every building in the encampments was under water. In every town within foe lines Glandelinians friven from their possessions and positions were camped in huts or tents on higher ground out of reach of the flood. Danger of disease because lf of in sanitary conditions was being fought by Glandelinian doctors and health authorities.

THINK OF THE FIENDS AN EXPLOSION WILL CAUSE.....

The concussion of the great explosion sweeping the large town of Chigano with nearly six million soldiers in possession and also its main esuburbs caused the death of one Glandelingan general injuries probably fatal to two others and minior injuries to thousands of Glandelinian privates astonished all the Glandelinians who witnessed the effects of the shock and made them realize they had some strong christian enemy to contend with t hat was not to be reckoned with if you please.i In this city of Calverinia property damage will b believed by Glandelinian aurthorities to ammount to milions of dollars if they have any with them. houses by great numbers collasped at the shock and viberation and cornices were seen to fall, telegraph and trolly poles were snapped off and the spires of a great number of churches toppled over and crashed either into the streets or into the roofs of the deifices. The glandelinian general who was a wit victim in this grand city of Calverinia was general Boobboonia Jacobsonia who commanded a glandelinian cordland division. He and his orderly were returning to the headquarters for generals selected in thecaptured city from the chase Cathloic cSchool in possession of the beautit beautiful lande inians when the sudden shock of the explosion caused the cornice of a tall building at I920 Garfield Avenue to fall stricking them both on the head. The general was buried beneath the falling br debris and instantly killed. His orderly was struck by a brick and sustained fatal injuries. He was taken to what was before the war called St Elizabeths Hospital but now known as the Fourty First Regimental Hospital oi of Immor-anda.

General Brandewiner anothe r glandelinian officer of very high rank was saved from electrucution when a high voltage trolly wire torn loose by the viberation fell upon him at Wentlworth Avenue and Twenty Second Street if there iw such a street in that city. His body immediately was enveloped in a beautiful blue flame and death seemed certain. Another glandelinian who was a private wearing rubbers and wearing gloves of rubber also which protected him from the current seized the landelinian general and broke his contact-with the wire. General Brando was severely burned and attending physcians of the glandelinian ninth corps said his chance of recovery was slight.

A number of glandelinian soldiers out on the river of St John were reported lost when it was believed the lake was lashed into mountainous waves by the concussion of the explosion and that their boat had be on either swamped or captized. General Joseph Jacober who feared it was so had notified the army river coast guard that these soldiers had failed to return from their trip down the river. He declared that he feared they had been drowned. Signal stations and glandelinian life saving stations along the river front were notified and life boats were dispatched for their rescue but no one was found and neither were there any boats found to have been captized. One great Catholic Church was occupied by two thousand scoffing glandelinians when the shock of the explosion caused its thirty eight foot spire to collaspe. The glandelinian officer who was with them was giving a wicked adress and pretending to be a priest, and the glandelinians had actedas a congregation and had occupied the pews when the disastor occured and from the spire falling on it with great force the whole roof collasped and all the glandelinians were killed under a ton of wreckage. The crash which with it broke however gave the glandelinian officer warning and he managed to leap to safty just as the avalanch of debris fellThough no ore shocks came it was feared nevertbless that the remaining cone of the great steeple might fall. Glandelinian firemen were summoned and others also and scaling the walls threw a barricade of boards about the ruins while work proceeded to get out all those buried under the debris. Fully two thousand were killed or injured by this disaster.

EFFECT OF EXPLOSUION WIDE SPREAD.

The path of the effective shock of the explosion was wide spread and Chicago Calverinia was nearly two hundred miles away from the scene of the ba blast at that get your hat. General George Knappertonia was slightly injured when struck by a skylight which fell from th roof of a half razed hotel. Gol General joseph Flanderton and a number of his followers and a cavarly troop with him was cut by a storming torrent of glass falling from windows of many high buildings when the concussion occured but none of them were seriously injured nevertheless though they did get some patching up. General Bennet whilliamberger and his orderly were also cut by glass from a broken window which gave way before the shock on the second floor of a Great Calverinian Temple. Two other officers probably colonels were injured in the loop section of the calverinian city. General Thomas James whillias near Oak Park was struck by a brick which fell from a building when he was going near I08 south Wenthworth A e Avenue.

Flying glass from a window at 3II West St Peters Street cut a private glandelinian soldier by the name of Peter Angelonini so badly that it was feared he would bleed to death. Glandelinian cavarly were called to I897 La Salle Street to remove a large part of a Cornice loosehed by the viberation. General Angia Giagianna with his troop of Zimmermannian horsemen was bruised when a artillery cassion he was driving just for to showoff was turned over in front of his headquarters by the viberation.

WHERE THE EXPLOSION ACTUALLY OCCURED, AND HOW MANY GLANDELINIANS WERE BLOWN TO PIECES OR KILLED OUTRIGHT BY THE BLAST..::::

The great explosion actually occured within two miles of the enemys lines the Angelinianengineers having actually placed a series of immense mine galleries under a half wrecked town and when the explosion took place thousands of landelinians in the town above the mine were e killed or blown to pieces and thousands of others were buried in the ruins of buildings and barracks which was also destroyed.
It was also positive that II,800 glandelinian soldiers were buriened in the ruins of their barracks the landelinian soldiers at the time being at their morning meals in the barracks when the great explosion occured... even to make matters worse fire started among the ruins and the glandelinians of the stricken area fled in terror. The explosion caused a fire that caught glandelinian war material which resulted in another and smaller explosion. One great rock fragment fell on a large Barracks believed to be the building which six hundred glandelinian soldiers had been buried. Hundreds of railways stations within a hundred miles was destroyed by the concussion and all the barracks of glandelinian soldiers army camps and all other buildings were totally destroyed. The death and injured list were only among glandelinians.

To make matters worse a glandelinian Central News dispatch from glandelinia reported that a score of ammunition dumps belonging to foe armies throughout the whole of southern Calverinia were also exploded by christian raiders causing among many glandelinian armies enormous loss f life. Bondinia is loss ty an than one hundred miles northeast of the scene of the explosion and the shock was also felt there so keenly that everyone foes and christians l alike got the biggest excitement of their lives though no damage was reported in this location. both in this location though it Calverine the Calverinian volcano had br vlown up or broke into eruption thus causing an earthquake. Bondinia threatened by foes was a city of I,I00,000 inhibatants and strongly fortified by christian batteri s on hills and many fortifications and breastworks of fifty feet in height. It is believed to be the most important river port of Calverinia outside of Evangeline St-Clare. Though rivers run through her giving mickey with her two sections of norma Catherine and Julio Cellio was the most fenious seap rt in that world and had the first next to Angelinian Agathis the strongest fortresses in the world.

MORE DETAILS OF GREAT EXPLOSION WHERE THE GLANDELINIAN ARMY. THINGS MUST BE LONG IN DESCRIPTION IF IT WAS TO BE INTERESTING AND THRILLING, DON'T YOU THINK??????

Near the scene of the great explosion disaster four thousand carloads of high explosives shrapnell, bullets and ammunition and dynamite stored near a long railroad station near the point of clap ppana Junction caught fire from a conflargration brought on by the explosion and all this in turn blew up with a great roar killing seventeen hundred more glandelinians and wounding thousands more and virtually destroying all that the first and main explosion occured. This happened a little after the great flood began.

Indeed by the greatest of all disasters at this point at lease and by the effects of the dwense flood one half of the vast Glandelinian army under general Isner Hyletz were rendered without ammition, provisions, and shelter..... It had been believed at first that many victims of flood and fire and from ruined houses would have been Calverinian women and children, but later when the enemy had withdrew on account of the disaster and retreated Angolinians who investigated saw that no one among Calverinians had been injured and that most of the total destruction had occured among all cities and towns which had been held by the foe. The victims of the disaster the refore were all Glandelinians and some child slave whome the Glandelinians had within their lines besides the daughters of the Landelinian generals who had been killed by the blast. A number of great Churches in which Landelinians had been forming into certain kind of forts in the town of Antonville had collasped under the force of the detonation while many other barracks IO miles from the scene of the explosion in which many soldiers were still sleeping were either partly wrecked by the concussion or completely destroyed by fire and flood. Always three tings things must happen at once is not that so.?

Immediately after the explosion fire and flood broke out in various parts of the country as already stated and the panic stricken glandelinians had been compelled to floe to nearby hills and mountians within full view of christian enemies and exposed to their batteries from which they watched their barracks and other buildings either burn or become unindated by the flood.All Telegraphic and all kinds of Tepechinic communications from Bondinia to northern Angolinia with the outside world had been cut off. Those beleagured Glandelinian armies had been consisting of Ho-Hollestinians, Zimmermannians, and Omarians.

The first news of the tremendous disaster had reached the town of Belgradior(Calverini where general Isner Hyletz had his headquarte rs with his generals the news having reached him from refugees who managed to reach the safter portion of the still remaining Glandelinian encampments thirty miles to the northwest of Stanck town. Several Glandelinian relief unites were immediately organized by the general and strong forces thrown forward to prevent Angolinian soldiery from interfering with the rescue work which would be stat started as soon as possible. Sixteen Woman doctors of the Glandelinian hospital for wounded ho soldiers at Velertonia left there for the stricken districts as soon as news of the explosion was recieved but they found the region unapproachable on account of big fires and wildly rushing floods. They were headed by general Lovejoy of Glorianna(Glandelinia) and by another officer by the name of Colonel Love Too Much Pleasure. They on ariving expected to negotiate the hundred mile length of bad floods and almost quick sand like roads but this was impossible and to reach the scene with more safty they had to go over the hills and higher grounds and through dense half burning forests and finally reached part of the stricken Glandelinians in the evening after the disaster.General Brewster Whillimstonia who conducted a Landelinian Military Training school in the centre of the stricsk stricken Glandelinian region had not been heard from since the great explosion.

General Lington Alexander had sent a message of sympathy to the ic victims and cursed and blasphemed the christians and general Isner Hyletzes other geners generals were dispatching a large force of Glandelinians for the immediate relief of those without shelter and to restore or o order among the panic stricken. Even from all points of the section not effected red cross sent relief workers.Even nearly a million soldiers and gendar es were engaed in restoring leveos and effecting rescue work. The exact number of Glandelinians killed outright, and then added by those who died in fire and flood may never be known as Isner Hyletze would not mention his losses in any reports whatever and war correspondents of many nations come to see him was turned away with the answer;

"If we give you Foreign War Correspondents information it will probably reach some christian dog of a general and we will doomed. On account of this disaster no reports will be given. But you may take any amount of pictures of the scene you want . but no information about or our condition or the condition of the army will be given."

It was also the big ammunition supplies sent for the intended big campaign in the near Eastern Part of Calverinia which was stored in many of the biggest deports and large ammunition factories and mills. Following the progress of this war the Glandelinians also maintained a big garrison at Chicago [illegible] who were in this

The roll call of the Glandelinian soldiers was being made however, however, however, and some of the Glandelinian generals declared that the number of missing troops already amounted to more than 400,000. This was h over six weeks after the disaster and when the foe army had left the region the flood refused to recede but grew worse as all efforts to restore the levees was not only unsuccessful but completely frustrated by christian foes who dyn dynamited other levees to make it more harassing. General Williamsberger Zimmermann who was fully responsible for this flood and disaster was afterwards known by the foe as "The Ruthless" or the "Terrible Wrath of God."

He had ways of making a vast for army retreat without a single battle.

Before the foe lines retreated however many hundreds of thousand Glandelinians had been digging in the ruins of the terrific mine explosion at Bondinia which had laid waste to so large a district of the country of Calverinia and disabled a bigger army than any ever seen killed and injured nearly a million and started big fires still burning by the hundred and making the worse flood the whole world had ever heard about according to dispatches sent all around the world by war correspondences and reporters. Hundreds of child slaves were found by christians after the foe retreated buried in the ruins where the explosion did its worse work. Many soldiers who were in the same building with the children were also killed. The hundreds of children all found to be little girls only were buried in the ruins of a large mill or child "lave building which though probably not completely demolished by the concussion was nevertheless leveled by great slabs of stones found among the ruins and it was also seen that I,800 soldiers were buried in the ruins of their barracks near by which were also demolished by the falling stones and thick masses of earth.

Details of the actual number of children who had been killed were lacking as the Angolinians who came upon the scene could not estimate but it was declared that the death toll among the children was very large. Many of the Glandelinian soldiers having aroused the children at an early hour in the morning were fixing up for the child slave breakfast when their barracks and the child slave place was destroyed by the torrents of rocks and stones and in this place also a large number of Landelinian officers were known to be killed. Within the Glandelinian encampments there were sixteen railway star stations belonging to as many railway lines and all these were demolished fires breaking out in several places the foe survivors fleeing in panic as the main stretch of woods adjoining the scene of the dangerous explosion and out of reach of the flood was endagered by a conflargration.

NOTICE.....( The similarity of a foregoing dispe di dispatch to one from general Hanson Avian on the day after the explosion which reported the blast exactly within the christian lines at Mary Ann in the southern part of Calverinia, when a great mine and ammition dump blew up simultaneously makes it seem possible that both relate to the same disaster. Mary Ann is about eighty miles northeast of the Explosion and whose houses were razed by the concussion but fortunately no Calverinians were killed or injured though rendered homeless.No Flood reached them and rebuilding immediately started the day after.)

During fires produced by the big explosion some ammunition cars also exploded about half a mile from general Isner Hyletz's headquarters killing about two hundred and and fifty Glandelinians and wounding nearly IO,000. The heart of the city in which he, his officers and a part of his army resided was completely destroyed and half of the force completely shelterless. The majority of the victims were mostly officers of different rank besides privates and a slight number of christian prisoners. A headquarters building in which a great number of soldiers had been working collasped under a rain of rocks and car fragments and barracks of buildings near his headquarters in which eight hundred thousand soldiers were at Mess if you please to have some was destroyed and many of these soldiers killed injured, or shocked and buried beneath the wreckage...".

The majority of the soldiers not killed were buried alive in the wreckage. Immediately after this third explosion great fires br ke out in various parts of the city. The panic stricken Glandelinians(maybe they were cowards) fled to all the nearby woods and mountians from which they watched the entire city burning. To all parts of the immense Glandelinian encampment all the topographic and other communications was cut off with the outside world and all the Glandelinian signal stations were also destroyed.

The first news of the greatest part of the disaster caused by the explosion, and that was the flood reached general Hanson Vivian Himself from refugee war correspondents who managed to reach his lines after a weary travel through a thirty mile stretch of floods on boats or on horseback and over muddy roads and through a maze of debris and falling wa wires and other conglomeration of wreckage. It was believed that six American soldiers were among the refugee war correspondents who had left from general Hansons lines at the time of the news of the explosion and though they had been expected to reach the stricken regions in the evening they finally came back to general Hansons lines with the statement that the region was a unapproachable although they had gone over fifty miles of bad roads and through partly flooded and burning woods.

Colonel brewster an american who had came to Angelinia from New Your york city and who had been sent to Calverinia to see the actual scenes of the rebellion was scouting in the center of the beleagured Glandelinian army when the great disaster came and has not been heard from by any of the angelinians since the explosion and flood. General Hanson declared that if any one else of the americans who would be so foolish as to go near such regions after the disaster would not reciece recieve any sympathy from him if anything happened and gave strick orders that no one was to leave his lines. The last reports are to the effect that many prisoners among general Izner Hyletze were conepplod also to the rescue work of endangered Glandelinians. At first it was also reported that loss in life among Calverinians and Angelinians way out of the enemy zone had been heavy on account of ruined towns but as far as civilians are consermed no loss of life really occured though there was really a considerable number of homeless and injured reported from northern Angelinia alone.As it was believed the concussion of the explosion affected general Whilliamsberger Zimmermanns army a perfect roll call of the soldiers was being made but it was said however that the number of missing troops only amounted to a little less than three hundred and that little damage anywhere had been found among the christian lines, and that also they were on too high a rise of ground to be r a reached in any wat way by the flood. Was not that good.

Most of the Glandelinian victims of the great explosion were buried beneath the ruins of the scores of devastated towns and small cities of Calverinia and conflicting reports from all sections of Glandelinian army first said the explosion had occured among the christian lij es lines,, but it was not so though r probably the tragedy was the worse kind for the history of the Glandelinians themselves. The millions of soldiers the reports stated were having their mess at breakfast very fast indeed, when the explosion occured. Did it? All were trapped when their barracks collasped from the concussion but not all of them were killed. why weren't they? Hundreds of thousands of other Glandelinians throughout the entire number of ruined towns were also trapped and many of the them killed by falling structures.

One great rock which t rown upward by th explosion of the mine fell on the roof one of one of the headquarters of a Glandelinian general and all in that building were buried in the wreckage but nevertheless none were killed though quite a large numberwere injured..:::: As written before all railway stations within the foe lines were destroyed. Fuller details of the explosion would be beyond my power to write. Nevertheless all of the Glandelinian armies in Calverinia and elsewhere were greatly excited over the disaster caused by the angelinians under general whilliamsberger Zimmermann, which had befallen one of their first biggest armies.

At the outbreak of the war these towns and the whole region had become the base of the Glandelinian armies advance against the Angelinians at Calverine.

It was also the big ammunition supplies sent for the intended big campaigns in the near Eastern Part of Calverinia which was stored in many of the biggest deports and large ammunition factories and mills. Following the progress of this war the Glandelinians also maintained a big garrison at Chicago. Many of the soldiers who were in this city were also believed to be killed. The population of this Calverinian city was a little more than New Yorks in America but held at the time of the explosion over five million eight hundred and sixty five thousand soldiers for the rebel cause. It covered the same area as Chicago , New York, and London put together and had an altitude of one thousand feet above the sea level . During successive Glandelinian campaigns in the eastern part of the country because of their situation at the intersection of many roads many of these towns became important centers to the foe. The location of Chicago (Calverinia) caused it to be made the headquarters of many of the highest Glandelinian generals. From the beginning of the child slave Rebellion untill the explosion it was the captical scene of Glandelinians and its importance was as commercial as military and had a greater railroad center than any city known in that world. Since the early part of the war especially with the Glandelinians in possession it increased considerably. On account of the flood however when the Glandelinians were forced to abandon it, it fell into the hands of general Whilliamsberger Zimmermanns army and later it never fell into foe hands again. General Whilliamsberger Zimmermann by this had saved general Hanson and His brother general Robert Irvian from being struck by a bigger Glandelinian army than they ever at th s time intended to contend with. Many consulates for the foe were located inthis city. The volume of commerce during the war before its capture by Zimmermanns christian army was largely due to the export to other foe armies of all kinds of ammunition, dry provisions, grain, flour, cloth for uniforms, hides and bones and all manufacture goods and shoes and every thing of limitless description. At the time of the disasterous explosion within the foe lines, the christian army under Zimmermann was about ten miles northwest of the foe lines, and the similarity of the dispatches from the two immense armies and their proximity led to the belief at first that the explosion had actually occured at Bondinia.

CHAPTER NINETEEN.
THE LONG STRUGGLE AT BONDINIA/BEGINNING ON SEPTEMBER 10, AND ENDING ON THE 28TH.1918.
HARSON VIVIANS ENCOUNTER WITH CALMANNIA SEDMANNIA.
THE FIERCE BATTLE FOR THE POSS ESSION OF THE
VIVIAN GIRLS. The large Calverinian city of Bondina thrust out like a mighty butt ross into the Angeline river which running from the northeast finds its way into the Mid-gollester run river, strange and grim of aspect, for centeries breathing wars from its walls and battlements of heavy stone and iron had been for the beginning of the war besieged by a force of over II,000,000 Glandelinians under general Samuel Augustine, whose besieging armies was defended by strong earthworks, and palasades, conducted of stout trunks of trees set in a triple row in the American Syl style of long ago. The outer and inner ranges incl ned inclined untill they met and crossed near the summit, while the upright row between them aided by transverse braces gave the whole an abundant strength. Within were galleries for the besiegers, rude ladders to mount them, and magasines of small gang-gang-shells to throw down upon the heads of the christians should they make an assault. The christian positions were of the same material, of the same works but stronger still and more extended. The seige had been going on since the beginning of the war and now it was September 9th. The enemy finally became impatient and hearing of ganleys failures to crush the vivians general augustine decided to capture Bondina by storm. However when a hundred thousand of the enemy made the first attack on the besieged city, they found themselves anticipated by the Angelinian defenders who fired on them with cannon and muskstry, one wounding one of their generals Ha Galscois by name, killing four thousand men, and wounding nearly nine thousand in an hour of severe fighting. Then they counter charged these defeated Glandelinian divisions, drove them back to their own works, in a total rout carried a portion of these, and captured all their cannon and fire arms the rebels left behind in their retreat, and even the ammunition and many prisoners.

Yet on the twelvth day of the month a large force of Glandelinians could be seen advancing furiously tward the barricades, and being some two hundred thousand in number, the boldest and fiercest warriors of Glandelinia. They advanced through the forest with a str steadiness which excited the admiration of the Angelinians. The Angelinian sentries growing more anxious called out with loud voices for their comrades and opened their ranks that the main column of defense might pass through. They i did so, and advancing forward, halid and stood revealed to the gaze of the enemy who beholding the war like array in their path stared in mute amazement. When the Angelinians saw them getting ready to charge, they leveled their muskts and aimed straight at the nearest men. The volley brought down thousands, and enraged at this the enemy set up such a yelling that one could not h ave heard the verse thunderclap, and all for the while for hours furious charges were made by the Glandelinians, while shots were delivered in perfect storms on both sides. This struggle raged all th at day and in the last charge the Glandelinians were greatly astonished and confused to see their ranks mowed down so quickly in spite their being under the cover of so m n many thousands of trees. As the Angelinians were increassing their deadly fusellade one of the christian batteries m mowed a wide gap in the enemys ranks which so increas ed their consternation and astonishment that re seeing their comrades lying in heaps where they had fallen they abandoned the assault for the night and fled into the depths of the forest the Angelinians dashing after them. Thousands of the Glandelinians were, i killed and thousands more wounded, and over twenty thousand taken prisoners, cannon, provisions, and baggage wagons were abandoned, many weapons being flung down in the panic which secured during the flight of t he Glandelinians for the ir own works. No first day of the conflict had been complete. The next day the Angelinians in front of Poverty Row which the first line of works were called on account of the horror suffered by rebel prisoners, saw havy smoke rising from the forest about three miles to their right, which indeed gave the appearance of forest fires, or some other serious conflergration. The officers and generals looked at each other in dismay. The enemy, as they feared were burning the woods to drive them out of the advanced positions, and soon though far as it was, flames seemed to be mingled with the smoke. Suddenly a cry arose;

"The enemy. The enemy."

The Angelinians refused to fly however and in the third desperate conflict many had their flesh torn with bullets, a ball pierced the heart of a leading officer, a colo colonel and he fell dead, gasping the name of Jesus.'

The Glandelinians overwhelmed the garrison at this point point, and rushed through the gaps with yells of victory, stripped and gashed the lifeless bodies and scooping their blood in their hands bathed their faces in it. They also set fire to a line of stockades at this point and the garrisons were consumed within the buildings and forts, the visitors taking nearly seven thousands prisoners whom they murdered on their line of charge toward the main lines. In their advance they came upon a single stockade and with a yell as of a legion of daons, the Glandelinians burst in upon them and cut down four hundred and fifty men, and also seven hundred women, and nearly one thousand children refuged there, killing many many and re reserving the rest for a worst fate. They entered by the weakest side there being no exits on the other side, and not one Angelinian escaped. The whole was the work of a few minutes. The Glandelinians left a at strong force to guard the stockades, and secure the retreat of the main body in case a reverse came, then smearing their faces with blood they rushed in the dim light of the early dawn, tward the other stockades of the main line of christians about a league distant.

Scarcely had the sun risen, when like a troop of tigers, the wicked Glandelinians rushed to the assault. Yell echoed yell, volley answered volley. The Glandelinians brought to bay fought with the utmost desperation, while the Angelinians with cannon, swivel guns, rifles and pistols, killed and wounded thousands of the assailants. Twice the Glandelinians recoiled, and twice renewed the attack with unabated ferocity. They swarmed at the foot of the palasades, and many hacked at them with th eir axes, untill they cut through them at several did different points at once. For a time there was a deadly fight at these breaches, and here were two priests promishing h heaven to those who died for their faith, one giving absolution, after confession, the other Holy Communii Communion.

At length the Glandelinians broke in and captured all the surviving defenders, set the stockade on fire, and the helpless women and children, who were caught in this death trap were consumed in their burning dwellings, excepting twenty chil ren who were captured, the Glandelinians wrecking their prenatural vengeance and fury on the little innocents, beating them savagely with their cu clubbed guns, and several proceeded to torture them, while the rest swept on tward the main line burning the neighboring encampments, and hunting their flying ffugitives. As they continued to advance th ey fell in with a band of Angelinians who were sent out to reconnoitre, set upon them with great fury, killing many, driving th e rest to headlong flight, and as they plunged in headlong terror through the woods, chased them to within sight of the main christian lines, who hearing the firing and the yells rushed to their rescue in great numbers, and attacked so fiercely that the Glandelinians were held at bay, but more and more of the rebels following behind came to their support, and the Angelinians were compelled to run for shelter behind their own works, followed closely by the enemy and now ensued a furious struggle. The christians defending this line, made good use of th eir cannon and muskstry, fighting like devils and driving back the assailants again and again. The houses inside the palasades were set on fire, but t he extensive palasades around them were still standing, through breached and broken, and the Glandelinians rushed in with mad reckless fury. But the desperation and the fierce courage of the Angelinians caused them to recoil again with great loss, and one of their principal officers wh was severely wounded, and nearly a thousand were killed on the spot in a minute. It was the Glandelinian general Frank Orange who was wounded. The struggle soon resumed with redoubled fury, even when the day had closed. Yet the numbers and persistent fury of the Angelinians, prevailed, whole columns on both sides lying dead and wounded around the shattered or inside the shattered palasades, which the Angelinians had so valiantly defended. On the third day the fourteenth of September the enemy before attempting to make another assault and press the advantage they had gained found time for an act of atrocious cruelty and ferocity. They planted stakes on the bark houses of to the unburned captured stockades, and bound to them those of their prisoners whom they meant to slaughter for revenge of their repulse, male to fel female, from old, to age of infancy, husbands, mothers, children, and soldiers side by side. Then as they left they set th e stockades on fire, and laughed with savage glee at the shrieks of anguish that arose from the burning dwellings. They loaded the rest of their prisoners with their bagag baggage and plunder and brained many who refused to march with them. An old woman who escaped out of the midst of them of er one of the burning stockades, made her way to the christian lines where she found seven hundred thousand preparing to advance against the enemy. Seeing her on the march tward the victorious enemy but evidently with no great eagerness to collide with their dangerous enemy too soon soone well armed as they were with long bayonets and pikes, while they had little o besides their short rifles and swordless muskets. They found as they advanced the dead bodies of Angolinian prisoners killed during the night retreat, and others bound fast to trees, and half burned by fagots piled heatily around them. The bloody ground was strewn thickly with the gray coated corpses also, and as they reached the ruined stockades, they saw a spectacle of horror, for among the ashes of the burned houses, and fortifications were scattered in profusion the half consumed bodies of those who had perished i in the flames.

In the meantime a line little girl was led apart and bound to a stake, and despite the her petitous appeals the incensed Glandelinians scourched her from head to foot. Then they cut away her lower lips, and thrust a red hot iron down her throat. Then they tied strips of bark smeared with pitch about her naked body then set fire to the bark that enveloped her. As the flames arose she threw her arms upward with a shriek of supplication to heaven. Also rest they hung around the childs neck, an an iron collar, heated red hot, and boiling water was poured slowly on her head. Then they cut strips of flesh from her limbs, and devoured them before her eyes. After a succession of other revolting tortures, they cut out her tongue when she was nearly dead, then they laid open her body, and the Glandelinians came in a crowd to drink the blood, while one of the officers tore out her heart and devoured it.

In the meantime the old lady came in sight of the enemy, and the Angelinian leaders set their men in ambush, butbthe enemy were too strong in forve, and tgough they were met by a serie series of tremendous volleys, which were fired with a astonishing rapidity and precipitation the surviving Glandelinians came on eager for revenge.The Angelinians barely had time to escape to the main lines when the Glandelinians only made a hasty and desultory attack, but were quickly and disasteriously repulsed with dreadful loss.but they made another attack which was general, the many who did not fire rushing up and piling blazing faggots against the palasades, but so brisk and steady a fire met them, that the whole line recoiled and at last gave way.They came on again and again, and again were driven back, leaving many of their u number on the ground, but covered this time by the fire of their batteries, they re tried it again and continued the assault for two hours but again were beaten back after terrific slaughter.It was maddening to see grand projects thwarted by the Angelinians, but they were forced to digest the affront as best as they could and they might and as they might,and they harassed the Angelinians, with a spattering brisk fire of one hundred thousand muskets hour by hour, and attack, after attack was made, and the many hundreds of thousands of Glandelinians kept up an unceasing uproar of yells, mingling with the incessant roar of musketry and cannons.Again they rushed forward to the attack screeching like demons, and firing, but the Angelinians were still at their post, and every loop hole darted its series of tongues of flame.Besides muskets the Angelinians had heavy musketoons of largecalibre, which scattering scraps of lead among the throngs of Glandelinians op often maimed scores of them at one discharge.The Glandelinians astonished at the persistent vigor of the defense fell back discomfited.The fire of the Angelinians who were themselves completely under cover, had told upon them with deadly effect.Three hours were were away in a series of futile attacks made with little consert or vigor.Yet again the Glandelinians seen advanced to make a general attack, and in spite of the withering fire this time they reached the palasades, and the survivors cru crowding below the line of shot, hu hewed furo furiously with axes ad pikes to cut their way through.The rest followed close swarming like angry hornets along the ten mile palasades, hacking and ta tearing to get in.One of the Angelinian loaders had crammed a large musketoon with powder and plugged up to the muzzle muzzle.Lighting the fuseinserted in it, he tried to throw it over the barrier, to burst like a grenade among the crowds of Glandelinians without, but it struck the ragged tops of the palasades, fell back among the Angelinians, and exploded, killing and wounding two score, and nearly blinding a hundred others with the smoke.In the confusion that followed, the Glandelinians in that portion of the assault succeeded in getting possession of the top lop lop loop holes and in thrusting in their u guns began to fire upon those within.In a moment more they had torn a breach in the palasades, but nerved with the energy of desperation, the Angelinians sprang to defend it.Another breach was made, then another.Six of the officers, and two colonels fell in the midst of a withering fire, but tens of thousands of the surviving Angelinians fiercely kept up the desperate fight at the breaches, storming their assailants with the greatest energy, and throwing themselves against the throngs of Glandelinians, striking and stabbing with the fury of mad men, till the enemy despairing of s taking the stockades in the face of the murderous volleys that mowed them down by the tens of thousands retired, delivering volley after volley, and shooting down large groups of the poor christians.The rebel artillery then opened on the palasades but the gunners were picked off so rapidly they had to desist.
The third day of the struggle was over and a burst of triumphant yells from the Angelinians proclaimed the dearly bought victory.Searching the piles of corpses, the Angelinian field nurses and surgeons found many wounded of both sides, but thousands had scarcely a spark of life and they died while being attended to.

During the dawn of the fourth day, the sixteenth of September and concealed by the murk of a dashing rain during a severe prolonged thunderstorm, nearly one million fifteen h thousand Glandelinians silently posted themselves about the thousands of houses of another point of the advanced christian line, and began the most frightful massacres ever committed before.
The houses were burned, and men women, and children indiscriminately butchered or assassinated.At five o'clock in the morning the troops in the encampment head a cannon shot from one of the stockade forts.They were at once ordered under arms, and soon they saw in the mist of the curing rain a man dashing toward them, the just escaped from the butchery.Then several more fugitives appeared, chased by a small band of Glandelinians who retreated at sight of the soldiers.But pillaged several houses before their very eyes.The stormy day was well advanced, before the main forces of the murderers arrived.
Their leader ordered them to the attack.The raided houses despite the rain, were still u burning, and the bodies of their in inmates were strewn among them, or hanging from trees, where they had been tortured.All the villages near the chr christian encampments were wild with terror.However no general attack was made d either on the stockades, or the main christian lines this day, and such of the fugitives as could reach it were safe, while the besieging Glandelinians held undisputedundisputed possession of the outer works, the open country, burned all the captured encampments over an extent of twenty miles, and large parties roamed for over thirty miles, pillaging and butchering.During that miserable night, st upified and p speechless, groups stood gazing from the stockades, at the lights that gleamed along the distant edge of woods, where their parents, wives, or husbands, or chilfren agonized in the fires of the Glandelinians, and scenes were incited of indescribable and nameless horror indeed.

All through the night the Glandelinians roao roamed in large hordes hr through the woods p spreading universal terror, while the greater part of the prisoners were however reserved to be distributed among their own confederate lions, -and there tortured for the devilishness during these exploits and onsets, the Glandelinians however ha had met with great looses, and that fifty fifty officers of low or high ranks had been killed in the third days attack, and yet all the prisoners who had been captured defided their captors, and fought with such ferocity that it was necessary to shoot them down.Even the troops and inhabtants of the pondinia encamp encampments seemed to have been paralized with great fear.The Glandelinians had carried off more than ninety thousand prisoners on the third day alone alone, besides about two thousad more who had the good fortune to be killed on the spot.At night a reinforcements advanced to the support of the christians from the main lines, but the unfortunate reinforcements were set upon by an overwhelming host of Glandelinians, and cut to pieces in full sight of the christian lines.Many were killed or captured, and the survivors who escaped were placed under shelter by the Angelinians.On the eighteenth of september in the morning, frequent skirmishes took place which lasted an hour.
When two hours later a large force of Glandelinians were seen to be advancing, and the Angelinian leaders realizing the meaning of this movement, sent three hundred and thirty thousand sharpshooters under general Lowell galley to hold them in check, and more troops followed in support.The main body of Glandelinians in the meantime massed their batteries upon thentockades, and prepared to cannonade it but the fiery Angelinian general watched them n and his troops gavethem the first volley.The enemy replied furiously, opening fire with every piece, they could bring to bear, while the christian batteries replied and belched flame and smoke.
All the morning the cannonading and attacks xontinued with unabated fury, and during the rest of the day with redoubled vigor.The precision of the Angelinian gunners, or the q quanity of their ammunition was terrific while the precision of the rebel fire was certainly dev defective, for their fire fell harmlessly within the town, or spent itself fa far in the rear of the christian lines, while the christian gunners hit every mark, doing frightful havoc and killing many Glandelinians, and damaging their cannons by tens of every hour.The enemys guns suffered severely, and the rebels gave over the hopeless conflict until the next day, though during the rest of the evening a desultory fight was kept up, and in the night the enemy again withdrew.On the nineth nineteenth heavy firing was heard in the north along the left wing of the christian christian lins, and now advancing upon the center at pistol shot range were two hundred and fourty thousand Glandelinians, who were firing as they advanced.The women and children in the stockades cried and screamed without ceasing, while all the christian cannon were opened upon the advancing foe, but the Glandelinians rushed forward to dislodge them, and the attack was fierce and the resistance equally so.The Glandelinians like before assailed the gates of the palsad palasades with axes, hatchets, and and pikes, and at last a crowd of Glandelinians burst through the breach, while the Angelinian officers shouted to their soldiers to hold their ground at all hazards, and then with more valor than discretion, drew their own pistols and cocking them, snapped them at the breasts of the foremost Glandelinians, however they missed fire, or the Angelinian officers would surely have killed them on the spot.Amid the screams of the terrified women and children, the Glandelinians literally seized these officers, and bound them fast.
Nevertheless in the firey first fury of their attack, they dragged out and murdered nearly three hundred of the children alone, and several women who were their nurses or maids.They killed them on the outside, while a frightful roar of yelling, shrieks, and gun shots sounded along the extensive palasades, as the Glandelinians burst into most of the houses ,killing all the men whether they made resistance or not, butchered all the women and children found, and seized and bound the surviving soldiers.
Some of the villiages escaped in the confusion, and either fled half dead with wounds toard the main christian lines, or sought refuge in more fortified houses and forts.At d either points along the palasades, the enemy made many attempts to break in, but again and again were driven back with frightful losses.On this the wicked Glandelinians gathered in greater numbers before this position of palasades, showered hundreds of t thousands may millions of bullets u on it, and with cannon and musketry and flaming musketry tried to batter it down or set it on fire.After several hours they were again repulsed with the loss of several thousand killed and ten thousand wounded, including two colonels, one general and a seargent.The assailants then made a re resolute assault to overpower the defenders, while most of the women inside the stockades now behaved with better courage, and helped the men load w or loaded the weapons while the men used it others to fire with.A small stockade and some houses were set on fire, and though the main stockades were soon burning , the gallent defenders still kept their assailants at bay, who had however murdered sixty more children, fifty girls and the rest boys in cold blood.
With great fury the Glandelinians kept up the attack, while several parties killed cattle, hogs, and pigs and sheep found in the captured stockades, and gathering such plunder as they could secure.But rescue seemed to have come for fifty thousand Angelinians prived from the main line, and these rushed upon the enemys flank, and put the Glandelinians toflight recovering a part of the plunder.

The Angolinians drove the flying enemy before them more than three quarters of a mile across the meadows and ran in headlong pursuit, killing a considerable number. Meanwhile the main body of the enemy was advancing, and they rushed to the support of their flying comrades, sweeping upon the persuers and delivering a most galling fire. Hundreds of the Angolinians were shot down, the rest driven back, but there was a no panic the rest of the Angolinians facing about and answering the fire as they slowly retreated. When they reached the palasades they made a final stand, covering by their fure such of their comrades, who had fallen within ran orange of musket shot, and thus saving them from the murderers. The Glandelinians ag again made desperate efforts to dislodge them, but during the fierce fight, nine thousand fell killed, and twelve thousand wounded. The numbers of Angolinians carried off as prisoners by the first assailants, were one hundred and thirty, and the number killed in the struggle was four thousand men, and three hundred children, who were smothered in the air tight cellars of their burning homes. Though the desperate desperate Glandelinians were ag again repulsed, they again swept forward to the attack, and with frightful fury, and yelling and firing as they came on. Two more of of the Angolinian generals recieved mortal wounds, but fired more than ten times at the landelinians as they lay dying. Five colonels, and six lieutenants were also badly hurt, and hun hundreds of men fell but the Angolinians still stuck to the loop holes, and opened such a heavy return fire upon them that the Glandelinians recoiled, demoralized over their heavy losses. The Glandelinians yelled like v wolves , screamd like enraged cougers, and made the woods and battle field reches with their devilish cries, and the firing on both sides was deafening.

The main divisions of the enemy, again attacked the palasades in great force, but the Angolinians maintained such a stubborn defense, that the enemy was again compelled to withdraw and they retired during the night.

The struggle on this day had been more severe, the fields for miles were plowed by the cannon balls, and shells from the batteries of both sides, and the walls of the palasades shattered by the exploding shells, sacked villiages, and blazing houses and surburbs, the lamentations of women, the screaming of children, being murdered, and the fury of the maddened Glandelinian soldiery.

The next morning on the nineteenth, the Angolinian sentinels observed the Glandelinians bounding through the forest, but they sounded the alarm, and the Christians inside the palasd palasades crowded to the defense, and opened a murderous fire upon the head of the Glandelinian column, while the Glandelinians again screeching, and yelling like demons, returned their fire with their batteries with good effect. Yet a random shot from one of the Angolinian gunners struck down one of the best leaders of the Glandelinians, and as he was their chief gene general the courage of the Glandelinians was staggered by his fall. As general Daniel Lodge also fell, general guerren gale, second in command, rallied them again to the attack, and while he with the Glandelinians made a fierce onset, th e Angolinians opened a deadly fire through the lop loopholes on the right and left, , and in a few moments all was in confusion.

The advance guard of the Glandelinians fell back on the main army, and every trace of subordination vanished. The main line of the rebels soon opened fire, and extended along the whole length of the gray lines from front to rear, the forest resounding the volleys and yells of the enemy, and all the loopholes of the ten mile christian palasades and other positions were alive with incessant flashes, the lead flying like a blizzard, and the gray coats went down by many hundreds.

Five horses were shot under the next to the chief leader of the rebels, and five times he mounted afresh, n and again led on his men though they were mowed down like grass. All the Glandelinian officers for the most pa part displayed a most conspicious gallantry, and frightfully the battle raged. The assistant chief leader rode through all the indescribable tumult, calm and undaunted, while his officers at armed and shouted. Two zero horses were killed under him, and four bullets pierced his uniform, but he escaped without a wound. several Glandelinian calm colonels were shot through the body, and general [illegible] ready was also severely wounded. Of eighty six officers of all rank, only twenty remained unhurte nd of sixty thousand Glandelinians who made this fierce assault more than twelve thousand were killed and over fifteen thousand wounded in two hours. No haves among the Glandelinians was terrible for of their whole number scarcely one fifth left the field alive when th e assault was finally overgone suffered more severely than the one columns who had made the first assault of this day, and now the Glandelinian troops being move mowed down in ranks seemed completely without their senses. They huddled together like flocks of sheep, and happy did the soldier think himself who could wedge h himself in the midst of the crowd and place a barrier of human flesh between his life, and the shot of the Angolinian marsk marksman while many were seen eagerly loading their muskets, and then firing into the air, z and shooting their own men in the insanity of their terror. It was awful indeed. This slaughter lasted three hours when at last the survivors as if impelled by a general impulse rushed tumultiously from a place of carnage and with dis d dastardly precipitation fle fled tward the main line under generao Monogahe he routed troops persued their flight untill they reached the rear of division of general Mongahs army, and even then their senseless terrors did not abate.

This division also caught the infection. Cannon, baggage, provisions, and wagons, were were destroyed, and all fled together, eager to escape the aqful shadows of those frightful ten mile extending stockades of the nationals, whose horrors haunted their imagination. The other Glandelinians had assaulted the stockades in the weakest points the previous days, with one accord, murdering and pilliaging with ruthless fury, and turning the frontier of the vast encircling christian line into one wide scene of havoc, and desolation, so now they had brought the fearful calamities upon themselve s the persuing angol Angelinians had now gained the rear of the retreating foe with a force of about one hundred and fifty thousand, when others came to join them. Those who remained behind, labored with all their energy and of alarm to repair the damage done to their palasades. An hour elasped, when from the distance was heard a sudden explosion of musketry. The excited soldiers suspended their work to listen. A rattling fire succeeded, suspended, and deadened among the woods, but growing louder and nearer, till none could doubt that their comrades', had met a fresh force of the enemy, and were being defeated. This was indeed the cases Marching and rushing on through the thick woods tward the enemys positions the Angelinians had fairly ran into an ambussade, where the retreating Glandelinians had been rallied by their reifercing comrades, and lay in wait for miles to recieve their persuers. From the whole stretch of wo od woods on all sides rose an appalling shout, followed by a storm of bullets. One of the Angolinian generals ob Folwell by name was shot down, another by the name of general James Penn shared his fate, many other officers fell and the ground was strown with dead and wounded soldiers. The surviving Angelinians gave way at once. Some retired in immense bodies along the roads or through the woods, while the grater part spread themselves through the forest, opposing a wide and extensive front to the enemy fighting stubbornly as they retreated, and mowing down their persuers like grass, but the Glandelinians despite their losses, pressed them closely with shrill cries, while the main divisions with steadier advance bore down all before them.

Through the forest far and wide, rang a cyclonic storm of shot and shriek, mingled with the deadlier rattle of countless thousands of guns. Retreating and persuing, the combatants passed northward tward the main christian line, leaving the ground thickly strewn all the way with dead and dying.

A fresh detatchment came to the aid of the Angolinians and soon the persuit was checked. Yet the retreating Angolinians were not the less rejoised, when they could descern through or b between the brown columns of the woods gre gray streams of the enemy in great force, where the blast of their bugles and the deafening roll of hundreds of drums, was heard recalling their scattered men for the probable final assault of the day. During the absense of the routed Angolinians, the main body of the Angolinians had covered the front of their palas des with a breastworks of logs and abatis, behind which the hundreds of thousands of marksmen latflat on their faces shoulder to shoulder in a long line. The preperation was not yet complete, when the defeated troops appeared, issueing through the smoke filled woods. Breatholess and perturbed, they entered the stockade and lay down with the rest, and the army awaited the final attack in a frame of mind which boded ill for the result. Soon the edge of the woods which bordered the extensive open space in front, soon became swarming with the columns of the gray coats, while bayones bayonets glittering among the foliage shining like countless icicles on a January morning. The Glandelinians marched to the edge of the clearing in columns and formed in an extensive line confronting the Angolinians at a distance of a hundred and ninty yards. Their complete order, their gray uniform , and bristling bayonets and pikes, wore a startling sight to the Angolinians who raised but a feeble cheer in answer to the shouts of their fierce enemies. Happily the Glandelinians made no immediate attack, but opened a distant fire of musketry throwing volley after volley volleys miles long in against the christians, who just now not wishing t o waste their ammunition, did not responde. In the rear the Angolinians were prote cted protected by the Main line who were massing their batteries, but on the three remaining sides, they were hedged in by the flash of musketry and the clouds of smoke. The fire of the enemy for the great hand little effect. Therefore the Angolinians recovered from their first surprise, and every moment their confidence rose higher and higher, and their shouts grew louder and louder. Leveling their rifles and muskets at last with cool precision, they returned the fire which thinned the lines of the enemy frightfully and galled them beyond endurance. Fifty cannon were soon brought to bear upon the rebel lines and morasses which sheltered the enemy, and the pieces were served with such skill skill, that the assailants were confused, by the crashing of the shells among the g trunks and branches of the t rees, and some of the their columns gave way at once. Yet the main columns at the vehement efforts of their leaders still persisted in the attacks. From noon, until half past four oclock the firing of many hundreds of thousands of muskets pe minute were scarcely abated, when at last the Angolinians behind the breastworks showed signs of wavering. At this with a general shot the Glandelinians broke from their position, and in a long wave rushed upon their enemies, striking them down with the buttos of their muskets and bayonetting many and driving them panic stricken into the stockades like deer with frightful loss. The Glandelinian columns pressed their sudden and vigorious attack, upon the stockades, but every loophole again showed its flame and smoke, and the foremost of the assailants were forced to withdrew to a s safer distance. All night long the assailants made repeated attacks upon the full line of stockades, and the next following morning was a scene of ceaseless ambuscades, surprises and fierce forest skirmishing and artilleryduels aglaere.

And all that night and all that morning the deafening rattle of rifles and countless muskets and the cries of hundreds of thousands of men gave no rest of their echoes. And amid the dreadful carnage both sides toiled all day, digging, setting gabions and dragging up cannons, which opened a new fire at each other as quickly as they were brought and placed into position. All day, grapeshot, shells, and round shot and canister swept the trenches and crashed through the palasades, while the Angelinians returned the fire with the same frightful effect. General Franklinia Hypocrite of the rebes had been cut in two by a cannon shot, while directing his gunners, which demorilised the assailants, but nevertheless they held to the seige and attack all that next night and the next morning, being reinforced by three hundred and thirty thousand men, and now they planted their artillery against h the stockades, and beat down its ramparts and dismounted the christian guns, until the Angelinians after a brave defense were forced to abandon the fortifications, and the Glandelinians rushing in assailed all the women and children, who could not get away and follow the Angelinians, cutting them and the Angelinians down without mercy. At ten oclock the assailants fell in with the other body of the retreating christians and in the bloody conflict tha that ensued, general Abercrombie the favorite of the Glandelinians army was shot sho dead and the Glandelinians account of the loss of their leader, became disconcerted, newer fresh rebels came up the Glandelinians recovered and after reforming prepared to storm the main christian lines, and advancing to the attack, they saw before them a long line of breastworks of uncommon height and thickness and which extended for thirty miles, the christian armies were drawn up behind it, their heads l alone being visible as they leveled their muskets against the assailants, while a hundred yards in front of the works the ground was covered and felled with trees with sharpened branches pointing outward. However the signal for the assault was given, the Glandelinians rushed forward to the assault. A tremendous fire met and smote the whole gray surge from one end to the other with gaps. Thousands fell in one single rush. In vain the gray coats, screaming with rage, howed with their brandsi broadw broadswords, and pikes, among the branches, struggling fiercely to get at the Angelinians. In vain the Glandelinians with their deep tones tossed shorts, rushed on in heavy columns and surging against the works in many hundreds of thousands. A fearful tempest of market balls, grape, shells and canister met them, and two hundred and fifty Angelinian gatkling guns swept the ground for all the length of the line of charge with dreadful carnage. Hundreds of the Glandelinian officers and tens of thousands of men fell but the survivors forced their way through the branches, past the long ma went, climbed the breastworks at all points like a human wave, and leaped among the Angelinians, but they were cut down, bayonetted and shot by many more thousands and thirty thousand were captured and massacred by the Angelinians. The Glandelinians fought for two hours with this determined valor and superhuman desperation, and when this line was repulsed brigade after brigade division after division went against the christian line, only to be reduced to fragments, this Angelinian position being the front of the main line seemed impregnable, and fat length having lost many tens may scores of thousands of their comrades in slain alone, the Glandelinians drew off leaving thousands of their dead scattered scattered on the ground for the very twenty or thirty miles of their most extensive charge in this part of the fire. These fatal lines of the christians did not daunt the enemy however, and receiving more reinforcements made attack after attack, suffering the crushing and mangling of many brigades, or the destruction of whole columns and did not desist untill over ninty thousand of their six hundred and ninty thousand had fallen dead on that disasterious day. Over two hundred thousand of them were wounded.

On the twenty second of September the Glandelinians resumed their assau,t but the christian gunners were inexcassable, and they fairly thore tore the enemys lines through and through with a plunging fire of m uskotry and shells mingled with grape and canisters. As they neared the christian lines anew, the batteries again began to dartsheet after sheet of flame, which extended along the whole christian line, then the main line of works burst out like volcanoes, and the undulating flashes ran like lighting along from every position, and the strong long surging enemy lines ten deep and miles long were shattered by this wither with withering annihilating fire, and the vast very air seemed filled with every manner of combustible, mixed with shells, looking like fireworks, bombs, grenades, while all the christian cannon, swivel guns seemed loaded to the throat, and the effect among the enemys advancing lines was indeed terrific. The Glandelinians at the sudden seemingly eruption of long positions, the din of the thousands of explosions, and the showers of grapeshot and canister and shells that rattled among the tree tops, recoiled in consternation, but the main body however pushed on. The cannon fairly blazed with redoubled fury, the shells hissed and roared like a hurricane, long lines of musketry twenty miles or more in extent, spouted sheets of flashes as long. Yet on moved the insane reckless assailants, and one columns after another rade assault after assault, all that day, carrying a portion of the thundering line of batteries time and again and even forcing the christian line out of their position, but every time they were met by reinforcements, and hundreds of thousands hundreds of thousands of Angelinian sharpshooters attacked them in the rear, and the other batteries not taken showered shot shell and grape upon the rebels driving them back again with the most unendurable loosse.

At night there was a full moon, the storm of shells and round shot and high explosives upon the christian lines, and the next day eighteen hundred dwelling houses in the city itself and six great cathr cathedrals, and nine convents were burned by the exploding shells. At eight oclock the assaults were again resumed, and for a time the christians on the center were driven back with still heavier losses upon the main columns in the rear, who stood their ground and at last repulsed the assailants once more, while the christian batteries played on the left wing of the enemy with an effect extremely annoying. All the mornorning elsewhere there were ceaseless artillary fights, between breastworks, fortifications, and batteries, and during the following night the officers and men watched the cannons flashing and thundering from the heights of the Glandelinian positions on one side, and those of the Angelinians on t he other, and th e shells sailing through the sky in fiery semid semicircles semicircles. Often the gloom was lighted up by the glow of burning houses in Candinia kindled by these dairy shells. One of the Angelinian officers on the twenty fifth of September 19XX very nigh pa paid dearly with his life for spying, while he stood on the top of his first line of works. He was hastily ca, called by one of his under officers, when throwing his eyes about he saw a Glandelinian creeping under the eastern extremities of the breastworks to fire at him.

This obliged the Angelinian to retire as fast as he could our out of the rebels reach, and making up to the officer to thank him for his a attention, he told the officer that the gray coat had snapped his piece twice and the second time that it flashed in the pan at the instant he turned away from the breastworks. Another officer less fortunate had a leg broken by a shot from the opposite cliffs. An hour adter after this the lower town of Candinia was again set on fire by the Glandelinian batteries, and a hundred and sixty houses were burned in a very few hours. In the front of the upper town nearly every building was a ruin. At the generals hostpi hospitals wh which was remote enough to be safe from the bombardments, every barn, shed and garret, and even the convent and churches, were crowded with the wounded christians, and the streets were covere d with dead and wounded women and children. Two Two christian batteries each of two hundred and fifty guns were still massed upon the ensmys lines, sixty more cannon were primed, then a battery of more than four hundred and fourty heavier pieces began a furious cannonade upon the enemys entrenchments, while one hundred thousand Angelinians dashed swiftly forward, and the crisis of the night came. The batteries across the christian lines, the distant batteries of the works covering the christian charge, the cannon along the entire christian line opened together with redoubled fury and violence fairly shaking the earth with the deafening din and uproar. All the Glandelinian batteries rep replied, and amid the deafening roar of more than fully a thousand cannon, large purp purple columns about ten of these, altogether, each about fifty thousand men in number moved swiftly forward to the support of the one hu hundred thousand with utmost precipitation, without order, and without waiting for other reserve columns of ten thousand to come up, and made a rush for the Glandelinians like a long tidal wave with the purpose to attack the redoubts and palasades and force the seige to be broken. The enemy after dissolving two or three of these monsterous columns, were forced to abandon these works, but t he foremost of the assailants had no sooner gained their prize, than the thronged he lights above for miles blazed like volcanoes with musketry and cannon, and a tempest of bullets and shells fe, fell among them mowing them down in thousands. Nothing daunted, they dashed forward, again, reserving their fire, and str struggling like demons to climb the steep a ascent while with yells and shouts of;

"down with all christian dogs, and hurrah for child slavery, and for their deaths and tortures, and to the dogs with the christians" the Glandelinians at the top poured upon them a vortible monsterm of musket balls, buckshot, stones canister, r shell, grapeshot, and even gang gang shells, and rolled down an avama avalanch of big stones, and dead and wounded in multudes together rolled down the slopes bi in mortal agony. On pressed the survivors, many already bleeding from smaller wounds, and at that instant the whole of the enemys main line burst into flame and the baffled Angelinians mowed down in threes of their mos monsterous columns, drew back into the redoubt they had captured, and seeing the madness in persisting in the attack, finally retreated. Yet every hour the christian fire grew hotter, until at last three thousand christian cannon vomited death and destruction upon the main of the enemys lines. The rebels still responded with the most tremendous fury, and within the battle line farm houses and villiages of camps were a laid in ashes, and at the following night the lights of the blazing houses and fields of grain could be seen for many miles. Near a small creek during the night there was a severe skirmish skirmish followed by atrocious cruelties. A stockade at one point had been capd captured by a surprize attack, and here afterwards one thousand bodies of children with their bodies torn open, and with every trace of their entrails gone, were found strewn on the ground with with with eyes cut, and tongues protruding, and throats opened terribly. General Lewises guns being at last in pos position, presently opened fire upon a wall that was not built to bear the brunt of the heavy shot, but th e christian battp batteries almost silenced them, and on the morning of the twenty sixth, his gunners were harassed by repeated and furious attacks, which raged all day yet the gunners held with persistent bravery, untill their ammunition was spent and all the horses killed, and then they withdrew.

The christian lijes was still watched closely by the glandelinians who constantly assailed it with petty attacks.Not long after on the twenty seventh, the Angelinians again advanced upon the enemys lines, when a horrible burst of yells arose in their front, and the glandelinian guns burst in a general discharge.Half of the first few columns were mowed down, and the appalled survivors shrank back aghast.The great confusion even reached the main body,and the whole recoiled toget her, but their leaders raised their voices clear above the din of battle, ad advanced to the front, rallied their men, and led them forward t o the attack.

Again and again the glandelinians poured in their deadly volleys and again the Angelinians hesitated, but their chief leaders shouted from the van and in the madness of mingled range rage and consternation, they charge an charged and ran across the meadows n and up to the heights beyonde.It seemed as if not an enemy was th ere to oppose them.In vain the furious soldiers sought their enemy behind fences and entrenchments.The active glandelinians had fled.Yet still their guns flashed and their cannons further off roared with undiminished clamor.The Angelinians pushed forward amid the dreadful carnage, and for every pause the retiring enemy would regather to re new the attack, firing back hotly upon the front and flan flanks.There was sharp firing on both sides, a greater force of the enemy having appeared but the Angulinians v nevertheless pushed up the hill and drove them from the woods at t he point of the bayonet.There was also a scattered and distant fire along the whole line of the enemy, which again developed into deafening volleys mile m miles longe.A perfect storm of bullets was al again poured upon the christians.Having proceeded in their advance for half a mile, the Angelinians reached a poi point where close upon their front were many barns and outhouses, with many strong picket fences.Behind these and in a newly dug trench close at hand lay a multitude of glandelinian gathling guns manned by their soldiers.The gunners suffered the advanced columns to pass un unmolest unmolested but when the center and right came opposite their ambuscade of artillery, they raised a frightful yell of defiance and poured an annihilating fire among them cutting down nearly three quarters of the two wings of advance.The surviving men had well nigh fallen into a panic.

Breaking their ranks they crowded upon one another in a blind eagerness to escape the furious storm of grape and canister, and but for the presenceof their leaders, the retreat would have been turned into a flight.The enemy marked the chief general Falcon for his extraordinary bravery, and h gave him two severe wounds. Yet his exertions did not slacken for a moment.Some of the soldiers he rebuked, so some he threatened, and some he be beat with the flat of his sabre untill at length order was restored, and the fire returned with great effect.The incessant of flashes of the guns of bot h sides was again incessant and more appalling, while many hundreds of thousands of voices minbl mingled in one terrific yelo among the glandelinians alone and confused the fadu faculties of the men and drowned the shouts of their commanders.

Nearly a thousand of the poor landelinions had taken possession of a large farm house from the windows of which many as possible poured down a hot fire upon the Angelinians who tried to force their way in.Major General gurand with five thousand Angelinians made the attack, some bursting down the doors with axes, and then rushed in massacring the gray coats and setting the house afire.

General Joe Francis was also ordered t o dislodge a large force of rebels from behind some neighboring fences and small barns.He charged them with his division, and himself fell mortally wounded in the attempt.The landelinians gave way however and now the fire of the enemy being much slackened, the retreat was resumed.

No sooner had the Angelinians moved forward anew, than a large number of landelinians threw down their arms and surrendered.At a little distance lay a seargent helplessly wo wounded, raising himself on his hands and gazing with a look of despair after his retreating comrades.The s ight caught t he eye of general Sampis.That gallent soldier in true heroism ran out amid the firing to rescue the wounded man, when three shots s struck him and he fell dead.Few observed his fate, and none durst turn back to recover his body.The Angelinian detatchments pressed on greatly harassing the glangeli landelinians.Their losses would have m been much more severe, had not major general Aurand taken possession of a line of barns and outhouses and the embankments of a railroad and by covering the retreat of the Angelinians.

He entered hem with some thousands of his men, whilemany panic stricken Angelinians broke in after him in their eagerness to gain a temporary shelter.These out outhouses and barns were strong ones, and as the Angelinians soon discovered, many women and children had crowded in the shelter of the cela cellars for refuge.Wi While some of the soldiers looked in blind terror for a place of concealment, others piled packs of furniture and all else within their reach againstthe i windows and doors to serve as a barricade.Panting and breathless, their faces moist with sweat and blackened with gun powder, they thrust their muskets through the openings and fired out at the yelling assailants at intervals, a bullet flying sharply, whizzing t hrough a crevasse strikingdown a man perchance, or ripping harmlessly against the partitions.Major ge eral gurand stood on a trap door to preventthe fright ened soldiers from seeking shelter among the women and children.A bald grazed his head and buried itself in the wall.The screams of thechalf stifled women and children below in the cellar, the quavering yells without, the shouts and sinless curses of the soldiers mingled in a scene of clamor and confusion and it was long beforethe authority of general gurand could restore order.In the mantime general gaulint with his advanced party had moved forward about half a mile where hecfound some orchards and enclosures by means of which he could maintain himself untill the center and rear of his christians could arrive.From this point he detatched all the men he could spare to occupy the houses below and as soon as the soldiers began to come in from the rear rear he was able t o re inforce these detatchment s untill a complete line of communicat ions were esa established with the main line and the retreat effectally secured.Within an hour th e whole force had arived with the exception of general Aurand and his men who were quitenable to come of, being besieged in the houses by over five thousand glandelinians.Fearing for their safty general gaulino proceeded to t he houses wh with a large force, directed by the firing, and where they opened a withering fire which swept the enemys lines and completely scattered the assailants.Aurand and his party now came oiud and marched or retreated down the road keeping up a constant fire upon th the enemy who appeared again, and united with gaulino who resumed his retreat falling back from house to house, joined in succession by the parties sent to garrison each.The glandelinians followed, whooping ,yelling and hot hooting in great numbers.Yet the christian batteries were trained upon them, and whose volleys of shells literally blew all the houses t o pieces, and committed such havoc among the enemys lines that they were compelled to retire.

On the twenty eight came the final attack made by the christians themselves.As they advanced in heavy columns or heavier columns ever seen during the b ttle three batteries plied with them wih orrents of grape and canister, shells and high explosives and five h undred and fift y thousand landelinians fullisiladed them in front, and flanks.Over all the plians, from behind breastworks, and knolls and the edge, on top of hills, puffs of smoke sprang incessantly from the guns of the landelinians.Skirmishers were thrown out before the lines to hold the christian assailants in check, and the soldiers were ordered to lie down on the ground to avoid the shot.The firing was the liveliest on the christian left, where score of thousands of sharpshooters got under the edge of the declivity of the thickets, and behind breastworks whencothey mowed down ranks of the christians.Two hundred field pieces fired upon the c advancing Angelinians, with shells, round shot, and grape and canister, but the survivors camecn, uttering loud shouts and firing as soon as they were within range.

When the Angelinians were within fourty pas paces, the cord word of command rang out and a sharp crash of musketry rang out all along the line.The volleys were delivered with remarkable precision.In the battalions of the center, which had suffered worse ff from the storm of bullets by the landelinians,, the simultaneous explosion was afterwards said by the Angelinian officers to have sounded like hundreds of thousands of big guns in a sudden cannonade.

Several more resounding volleys follow along the whole gray line, and then there was a furious clattering storm of fire that lasted for twenty five minutes.When the smoke rose for a minute a ni miserable s ight was revealed. The ground was paved with t he dead and wounded, the advancing masses of christians having stopped short, and turned into a frantic mob, shouting, cursing, and gesticulating.The order was given to charge.Then over the fields rose the cheers of the glandelinians, moc mowed with the fierce yell of the lower classes.Some of the glandelinians pushed forward with the bayonet, many advanced firing heavily.The clans clansmen drew their sabres and dashed on keen and swift as blood hounds.

At the christian right th eir columns were broken to pieces.A brisk fire was still kept up chiefly by the sharpshooters from the bus hes and cornfields where they h ad lain for an hour or more.both the chief-leaders on both sides had fallen.As the Angelinians retired to th eir works, the glandelinians made a fierce counter assault along the entire twenty miles of the christ ian lines, and their guns opened a counter fire followed by fright ful musketry discharges, and now the whole christian line poured a perfect fire, and soon an army of dead lay upon the ground.Yet the survivors swarmed ove r the works, and thechristians began to give way everywhere, and the glandelinians felt sure that another day would give them the possession of gondinia.

The day whilethe last severe action was going on near glsidinia over the capture of violet and her sisters a battlestorm more violent than ever known before was heard to howl, roar and thunder through the forests of Galverine for many miles shot and shell of every description fairly tearing down the tress for countless masbers.Most forlorn was the flight of thousands of inhibatants in the battle stricken city of gondinia, and when night closed on the fearful sight what dreams of te rror man may not have haunted the helpless women and children who crouched bezeath the cellars.It was the night of the twenty eight of september.Floods of grape and canister fell like drenching rain upon the Angelinians, who labored as they could to push on and as the full night came on the battattle increased in great violence.Despiedes pite the fury of the hurricane of battle general vivians army which defended gondinia having also known of the grave situation at vivian dicky, via garma and gulio Gallio, and knowing that if gondinia would be captured there would be no hope of ever retaking vivian dicky, general Vivian decided to strike a terrible blow by moving his full force of fifty million men around the stubborn besieging eb enemy, by the way of the gic-Thirther un, e go tward the Rio-gallester gun and come upon the rear of the assailants and aid the besieged and save th em before it was too late.And so his own Angelinians continually pushed on in their own fierce attack, now toiling across inundated marshes, formed by recent rainstorms, waist deep in bulrishes and mud, now filing through the open forest to the moan and roar of the distant storm of battle, now hacking their way through palmetto thickets, and now turning from their paths to shun, pools, quagmires cypress swamps, of hammock, matted with impenetrable bushes, brambles, and vines and quicksand.

Yet they were closely perupersued, and soon were cut off from escape, surrounded and all of the Glandelinians cut down none recieving any quarter.The little girls were therefore rescued.The loss of the christian side was about one thousand five hundred in killed and wounded out of twenty thousand men, while the rebel loss was about one thousand six hundred none being taken prisoners.Then the Angelinians under a hot fire from the enemys batteries in the distance, retreated to their own lines.Violet and her sisters after relating their experience to general Hanson vivian, went to their own quarters, disguisted because their attempt had been a complete failure and horrified in the results of their capture by the enemys.

General Hanson learning of King vivians advance around Vivian Dickey and tward Galverine sixty miles north, and of his bloody conflict at Landinias Ln Lane near Gondinia, decided to see what was going to take place, for since general Manley was preparing to retreat northward feared the rebl general would do all in his power to intercept his brother Robert vivian, and so he decided to go out and scout and watch Manleys intentions or preparations.He immediately collected a score of general officers and five thousand men and though many other generals tried to per persaude Hanson not to go for it was extremely danverous, he told them to mind their own buisness, and started for the direction of the enemys lines.

"I'll get back all right" He said determinedly, "and I would like to see the Glandelinian Glandelinian skunk I'm afraid of, and I'm going to atr attempt this at any risk so do not try to hinder me or I'm liable to get angry.I'm not in a humor to be monkeying with any one just now, the way the situation of the war is, and I will stand for no interference, not even from my own superiors themselves if they trid to do so and were here.It's my duty to do this and I'm going come what may.So mind your own buisness."

The officers and soldiers who were with him, marveled at general Hansons manners, as he led them tward the bushes out of range of the enemys batteries, and searchlights and conse aled them and h imself from the enemys view. He drove off a herd of cattle and pretending withthe halp of his disguised men to drive them tward the enemys lines, and by this was able to make the insurgents think that he and his own men were some of the Glandelinians returning from a big forage.go they did not open fire with their guns, and he alone all of a sudden came upon a large group of men wearing gray uniforms, and seeing their faces observed that two generals wit were with them, being Calmannia Ghoemannia and Dicknell, and some of the other generals who had befriended Violet and her sisters.Even at that distance what a sight met his eyes.As far as he could see in the moon, moon, moonlight, was nothing but a seemingly el endless city of tents, long lines of breastworks, with hundreds of mounted cannon prepatoray to move to the rear, men working in removing tents, puting out camp fires, lines of batteries on hills moving of, fortifications of every kind burning, and wagon trains already going.He saw that he could go no further for it was exci exceedingly dangerous to go through the enemseenemys lines, espocially in his uniform, for he was not disguised though the men wevere with him, and yet in the far distance he could see long lines of lights glimmering and going out to relight again, and this was believed to be children buring at the stake.Even where he was he could see miserable looking child slaves within the rebel lines, being driven to night work by the Glandelinians, while immense columns or long lines of little girls and boys wereentering or leaving the smoke covered city of tents, guarded by many Glandelinians armed with bayonets, and the sight of this strange preparation for the retreat general Hanson never forgot.The sadness of the children, and th eir pleading wi wi wistful looks could not be described.Yet he saw some of them fairly raise their eyes tward heaven no doubt imploring God to save them from this terrible hell like bondage, and even slaught er.To save himself from detection by the generals who were standing in a group talking in low tones, general Hanson had to hide behind some wide oak trees, and at the conduct of the innocent slaves which he saw through his powerful glasses, he realized that many of these hardly had four hours of sleep at night.No doubt the death lists of th ese innocents amounted to tens of thousands as he heard general Ghoemannia say to one of his officers, and at this Hanson had all he could do to supress his rage.After he had observed these horrors for an hour, general Hanson started to retrace his steps, when s all of a sudden he encountered a group of officers, who stopped him and said;

"Who are you stranger in purple red u j uniform.What are you doing in these lesal localities?I believe you are a spy.and I will have to take you in."

"Do you don't if I can help it." Answred Hanson.and he dashed off. Calmannia Ghoemannia in the other group saw him dash off and cring that he acted suspicious opened fire and upon many of his retreating men bringing down three of the officers.Even now aware of Glandelinian officers and hundreds of men came running up, and seeing Hanson and the soldiers dashing off at full speed started in persuit firing rapidly, and bringing down his officers and men at every shot.Yet though his followers were being destroyed, general Hanson seemd to bear a charmed life, for he escaped and dicappeared among the foliage, some of the Glandelinian batteries opening fire, upon the spot where he had been seen running before, and following him up at g closerange, and four times he was missed by high explosives, which brought down hundreds of his christian followers.Hiding in a large bush Hanson peered out, and saw many Glandelinians searching for him in al all directions.

He det ermined to fire or use his strength if the Glandelinians came too near his hiding place, and therefore looked over his pistols to seeif every chamber was loaded.The Glandelinians in the foremost part of the swarm approached nearer, while distance flashlights flashd to aid them sweeping their bliding glare over the spot to give them aid.Yetthey did not even overlook the bush among which general Hanson was hiding, and one of the Glandelinians decided to set it on fire, and did so, and Hanson seeing they were too many t cope with successfully in a burning brush, darted away, but he was sen and there was a general discharge of musketry, and several balls h gave him flesh wounds on the shoulder.Despite his wounds he quickly rushed down the slopes of a low hill, another storm of bullets whistling closeabout him, and observing a perfect swarm of gray coats coming down at breakneck speed tward him, sprang behind a tree with fifty of the surviving men who had still followed him, and all of these from their shelter opened a withering fire bringing down scores of the e persuing Glandelinians at every shot.The Glandelinians in front halted for a moment but those in behind pressed them forward and therefore the rebels continued to descend, some returning the fire just as briskly, and knowing that he and his men would soon be surrounded, general Hanson again ordred ordered the retreat, and they therefore ran down the hill the rest of the way, and though the Glandelinians fired one heavy volley after another ,any of the bullets only went wide, some went through Hansons purple coat, which was as big as an overcoat, and a score more of his men dropped.Still the Glandelinians still the Glandelinians continue to dash down after him, yelling like demons, and shouting to him to st o; stop but Hanson only laughed and cried back;

"Can you stop me, you dirty gray backs, who defile your fingers nadand hands with the blood of innocent children?Don't you know if you will catch me you will catch me in another world and not here, and you will not be able to take me alive either."

He then sped on and seeing the tents of the christian armies in the far distance, ran all the faster, followed by his th irty surviving men, theenemy rushing after him as fast as they could, but not firing any more as he they knew he was out of range.But now one of the batteries was traind u upon theside of the hil from an angular rebl position nar by, and Hanson was confused when several shells exploded above and close to him.Yet he managed to get xo some shelter in a steep ravine, and the screaming shells only swept over him without do n doing any damage.As he soon left the ravine when the shelling stopped he drew nearer to the christian lines, but his persuers were not discouraged, and were gaining fast on him.He fired at them, bringing down six, and continued on his retreat the thirty soldiers following him also firing upon the rebels, the enemy yelling and firing in return and dashing after him still.They persued him up to the very christian lines, and would have succeeded in overcoming him, but a large number of Angelinians dashed up to his rescue, and drove off the rebels after a furious conflict, capturing fifc five officers ad nearlyne nearly thirty men.

"They chased me like bloodhounds." said Hanson with a laugh."I told them they could not catch me, and I have kept my word through the protection of Jesus Christ."

Several of his officers came up w i while he was preparing to move his own army and he said;

"I told you I would get back did I not?But I had a thrilling time of it.If it had not been one for one of the rebels, I would have beenable to get here without trouble of any kind, but he had to show me up as soon as I was starting away from my hiding place.and as I ran Calmannia Ghoemannia saw me and tried to shoot me down see that the soldiers are prepared as quickly as possible for I fear Manley to moving from his position as I have heard from the conversation I overhard that most of Manleys army is going to leave Gondinia, and will to morrow morning be thrown across the Mic-Hollester run On pontoon bridges and will move north ward tward Galverine, and that he may throw his army forward to attaci- my brother Robert vivian who has been reinforced from armies advancing from Dorothy Gale after his defeat at Gondinia, and so we may be called to come to his aid, for he cannot cope with Manley and Lucillie ickson alone, and the enemy is too strong in force.See that all tell their confession to the priests, and recieve their Holy Communion before the morning dawns."

Then saluting he went inside his own tent and the officers went to obey his commands, for even before four -o-lc o-clock in the morning the army may have to start its march, and make preparations for another battle which will decide probably on the fate of the three cities of Gondinia, vivian Dickey and Galverine.Violet and her sisters also had confessed to their own priests, though of course they had hardly any sins to tell and were allowed to recieve Holy Communion every day.They had been disgusted over their recent f failure in their spying trip, and so Violet and her sisters decided to try again before the morning dawned, for the prop prospect of the coming advance they would not get any sleep for some time.This time they did not put on any disguise, for they now realized that disguises were useless, when within sight of such e enemies, as thee these Glandelinians could read them through and through.

As they bent before the rainy tempest, the water tricl trickled from their hats, crept clammy and cold betwixt the uniforms and the skins, and when they madetheir wt wretched bivouac their bed was the spongy soil, andthe exhaustless clouds their tents .That morning found the vanguard in a deep forest of oaks and pines, and evergreens less than a mile from the besieging forces at gondinia, and all around was one grat great morass.In pitchy darkness, ddeep in weeds and water, worn with toil and lack of sleep, drenched to the skin, th eir provisions spoiled, their ammunition wet, and their spirits chilled out of them they marched in shivering columns praying all the while t o the blessed Virgin or to God.Groping and stumb ling in the dark among the trees, roots and underbrush, bufft buffeted by wind and rain, and lashed in their faces by the recoiling boughs, which they could not see they soon lost their way, fell into confusion and most of the army came to a stande But soon a glimmer of returning day came t o their aid, and showed them the dusky sky, the dark columns of th e so surrounding trees.General Vivian ordered his officers to order the men under pain of death.They obeyed and presently emerging from the forest, could dimply on the twenty eight of September disce discern long lines of gray not far off, moving on toward Gondinia.Though frequently annoyed on the next day by ten furious counter attacks, the advance of the christians was unchecked, and the enemy though being reinforced every day like the christians, who were always increasing in numbers from other armies moving to their aid, were compelled to resuse their withdrawl withdrawals.King Vivian now advanced on Gondinia and the whole gray linethere poured a stream of fire upon the first wave of assailants.The havoc was indescribable but general Baldoldi whose division was threatened with annihilation was compelled to withdraw, and at the same time general Wolfe attempted to flank the enemy out of the their strongpositions.But that encountered strong forces at these points which attacked these generals most furiously and t though they held their ground for four hours these commanders though having overwhelming numbers, from ignorance of the strength of the enemy, were compelled to retire, and the rebels not satisfied pressed the advantage, attacking general Gendhamsans lines with the most merciless fury and crushing it to fragments in a very few hours with the leader martally wounded.Meanwhile greater christian forces were thrown against these great Clandelinians columns while over three hundred Angelinian guns swept and tore the gray lines to shreds, and the main line until the most terrible carnage of the war at Gondinia especially, for here, though almost unbelieved one undred thousand fell within fifteen minutes. But the main forces of the Clandelinians not realising the greater strength of general Robert Vivians christian army, was soon carrying all before them, and in the frightful carnage fourty eight great christian generals went down mangled and bleeding.Indeed it was for this part, one of the bloodiest battles of the war for really now over nine million four hundred thousand Clandelinians were thrown against the christian lines with sledge hammer force, and also for a time over ten million christians for nearly three hours, cut to pieces and routed for ten miles were in the most greatest confusion.

The cause of this was that the first few days, before King Vivian came within sight of Gondinia, over sixty million Clandelinians under general Gaten and general Colonial Ga Gandebookinia had advanced to reinforce Manley in his endr endeavors to stop Hansons advance on Norma Catherine but wasxsent northward by Manley to help general Gallen to capture Gondinia and therefore had encountered the big christian forces advancing northward.General Vivian did not know of the disaster untill nearly two o-clock when several officers came up to him reporting, that over twelve million, six hundred and seventy eight thousand of his men were already down in killed and wounded, and that another great division of his men were already cut up and routed, and that the battle was lost, unless he could do something to stem the tide of the enemys victorious advance.King Robert Vivian was fen frenzy stricken, and for a time did not know what to do sothere was only one o hope a forlorn hope at that(got your hat) and that wx was to mass his main batteries, and throw his main forces upon the enemy.He also wanted to know the strength of the foe, but no one could never tell, and even officers who came in with reports that were not exaggerating, he knew that over five million were really killed and wounded, but that over twelve million had been taken prisoner by th e enemy. It took him an hour to get his main batteries into action, which soon fussiladed the advancing rebel lines, tearing them to fragments, while ten million men were thrown against them in series upon series of big columns.Yet all was in vain.there seemed no hope of checking the enemys advance, whose covering artillery whererecshelling his lines with thirty five thousand shells per hour.Five thousand christian cannon did their best to hammer back and again tore the enemys lines to pieces, but the advance of the foe was not stopped, and so Vivian within a few hours had thrown his whole remaining force against the advancing foe.The struggle now was fearful, and almost pseternatural but notwithstanding the heavy assaults of many millions of men, the Clandelinians held their formations unbroken, and soon rolled up Kin King Vivians right wing with the most intolerable loss. At night the furious battle still continued at several points, but the Angelinians holding their really superior enemy at bay managed to withdraw, and make a stand at one new point.

On the morning King Vivian was again compelled to retreat, slowly southward, having indeed met a crushing defeat.After fieri fierce fighting from house to house the Clandelinians captured the city of Gondinia the Clandelinians being 56,789,335 strong and indeed the whole city was in terror, but nevertheless though furious fighters as the Clandelinians were they did not dare continue in their horrible massacres and so the remaining helpless non-combatants were not molested or even deprived of their belongings and without doing any damage of any kind on the twenty ninth of September hearing of theapproachov of a vast christian army under Whilliamsberger Zimmermann the Clandelinians in consternation withdrew from Gondinia and tretreated northward, to th e great relief of ge eral Vivian.

even after general Hanson Vivians repulse at the series of battles of Gondinia and in th e night battle in his efforts to rescue Violet and her sisters, he had intended to make another assault, and had been preai preparing to do so when his chief advisers advisers warned him that the enemys positions was unassailable, and that he only would me with disaster that he would never r ecover from so he withdrew and so more fighting went on thereafwaring however that Manley was withdrawing from Gindinia on account of the near approach of Whilliamsberger Zimmermannians army and of General Vivians advance and fierce attack at Gondinia, Violet and her sisters decided to take the chances of going to Norma Catherine or any portion of Vivian Vickey and see if any more of the people were slain there, not n knowing that no one could ever get there at such a distance it was and in these times so Violet and her sisters waited untill night time before going, for yet the two opposing armies were so close toget her, that it was impossible to get through Manleys lines in the day time, and impossible just now to spy on the enemy at all times.No signal stat ions could be builded here, not even on either side, an on account of the frowning batteries, and sharpshooters behind the long stone walls on Culverinia Hills, and the batteries on Mt Catherine in possession of the christ christians.Even the boyscouts on either side dared not appear within range of the e canj cannon which were belching flame andsmoke.

At pitch dark Violet and her sisters disguised themselves as Clandelinian boyscouts, and set off toward the west.They had difficult work despite the darkness for the flashlights on the enemys positions were flashing back and forth incessantly, and once they came near being struck by the dazzling glare of one of the lights.Every now and then several batteries seemingly in front of the brave litt little girls would flash and roar with ear splitting crashes and detonations, and many times shells and e grape exploded dangerously close to them.Yet they managed toescape the searchlights of the enemy, and their thundering batteries, but in nearing the rebel lines they obe observed a seemingly endless city of tents, loom ing up before them in the darkness, and also s saw many guards walking up and down, and strong sarh searchlights were flashing the whole ground to view, so that no spies orvany hostile person could pas the sun sentinal lines.Seeing it useless Violet and her sisters were about to turn back, when they were at once seized from behind, and found themselves in th e hands of several Clandelinian officers, who at once took the little girls before general John Jadkan Manley.

"These little striplings were spying on us, or trying to get into our lines one thing or another," said one of the generals.

"So they are spies, and in boys clothes eh. Who are they I wonder. Bring them closer so I can see their faces."

The Clandelinians who had charge of them di did so.

"The Vivian girl Princeess of Abbieannia," gasped Manley in consternation. "The daughters of the great Abbieannian King known as general Robert Angelis Vivian. Well this is a very important capture indeed. I have even promished a great reward for them, and even as I have to execute spies without any trials whatever, or even chances to say their last words, or prayers, I will do the same to these. Take about six hundred men outside in the field and see to their executions. I would assassinate them if they were spies or not, for I would give anything to full fill my terrible vow of revenge on general Hanson Vivian my bib bitterest foe so badd bad they are not his daughters, for then I could strike the blow more heavily."

About six hundred men were collected "(for is it take six hundred men to shoot seven unarmed children,) and with these the little girls were led outside the lines. The Clandelinians who commanded the executioners, decided to put them to death by torture, and by fire. The seven little prisoners were bound up to seven trees, all seperately, and the Clandelinians were about to start in with their torture, when a large force of Angelinian cavarly appeared which had been out scouting, and Colonel Costellic w o was ibb inthe lead and seeing what the enemy were up to and who the girls were, charged the rebels, cut them nearly all down, and rescued the little girls, and retreated just as fourteen cannon opens on the spot, where they had been slaughtering the six hundred Clandelinians before. But this was not all. The surviving Clandelinians raised a hue and cry, rousing the Clandelinians back in camp, and over a thousand Clandelinians on horse h orseback went in persuit of the daring abductors, who as they were told outnumbered them a great deal. They met on the edge of the woods, and made a fierce assault upon each other. The struggled raged desperately for nearly an hour and a half and in the close melee some of the Clandelinians succeeded in getting the little girls again, and being worsted retreated, keeping up a furious fussiladge. But another column of mounted christ ians appeared in their way, and soon the Clandelinians were compelled to change th eir course of retreretreat .

they succeeded in getting within sight of the tents of the enemys lines a second time and discovered as Manson had thht hasty preparations for a retr retreat was being made, and that artillery,baggage, wagons, and other trains, artillery and gun cassions and large troops of soldiers were moving off tward the north, under the tremendous roll of drums.As they came upon a high rise of ground, they heard some voices below, and though as yet not having any intentions of spying on the enemy, they could not resist the temptation to hear what these men were conversing about, a and so they leand over cautiously and looked down.The moonlight revealed to them several glandelinian generals there-there, and one was general Federal himself, and the other general ohn Manley their probable bib bitterest foe.

They hard geneal Manley say to Federal;

"Thosechristian dogs under general obert Anflic ivian are henming in on the city of alverine by his time, and something must be done, while we at the same time securethe safty of the portions of ivian ickey called orma Catherine and ulio Callic, so that in case of fearful engagement all along the river of ic-Hollester gun, where it is threatenening, the Angelinians would not succeed in regaining possession of any p portion of the city or of alvering for once they doit all w b will be up with ur caue cause, for then the National aurthorities will crush us.If we could only strike ivians main flank and rear, androll u his whole army or capture itand the king, We could accomplish something probably worth while and win a great victory and thewhole war besides.My plan is this;;;;

violehad pushed against an old rotten log in her eagerness to catch more plainly what the generals of the landelinians were saying, and from the force of her pressure against it it rolled away from her, breaking large twigs, which made the loud sounds, and whe the landelinian generals turned to seewhat it was, they saw a long log rolling down the slight rise of ground, and dashing headlong for them pell-mell.hey tried frantically to dart out out of the way, but the log was much q quicker than they, and Manley and ederal were sent sprawling, the log rolling over the mathe imprecations of the landelinians was frightful and also the obscene language and blasphemies thky utterede

"onfound those infernal logs or anything."Gissed the main general as he staggered to his feet, much bruised and batterede"It seems as if nature tries t o interfere with our plans."

"It must have been started by o some one, and it came from the top of t hat mounde" said Federal with awiry looke.As he said this he start ed for the rise of ground swift ly, the other generals cursing and swearing like demons.Violet and her sisters saw them coming and knew they were not in any moon to be trifled with, and moved away, and when the glandelinians reached their hidingplace, they saw no one there.

"There has been more than six persons here all right."Muttered Federal."for here are their front pr foot prints and they have gone that way." One of the generals, as the flashlights glared blindly tward the hiding places of the little girls, several little girls were just seen darting into a thicket, and simultaneously fo-simultaneously v burst forth thegear of artillery.

"h They are the ivian girls."exclaimed Manley""nd they must be caught.We must get the little devils dead or alive.Arouse the men in the rear of the camp quick." General Shoemann fired a number of shots and raised a hue and cry, and soon private soldiers came swarming about them.

"Watch those little imps"Said Manley.""hey a re the ivian girls."

The landelinians yelling like demons rushed after them, firing rapidly, and a st orm of bullets passed dangerously close to the little girls, and the distant cannons boomed with renewed fury, the shells bursting around them with bright blue flashes, and their detonations though yeyards away from them were earsplitting.Also aperfect swarm of landelinians now rushed after them as fast as they couldA score of the landelinians out of a column that was moving northward, came rushing in front of the fugitives, but the little girls seeing it was the only way to gregat through brought some of them down with well aimed shots, wounding them severely, and violet dealt theanr nearest who rushed at her a hard blow in the head knocking him head over heels with a l loud yells.Th Yet the landelinians behind were coming on swiftly, the whole column being aroused, and swarming up from three directions, to capture them.Two of the landelinians now overtaking the li little girls, sprang at violet and Jennie with a shout, but they also were shot down with severe wounds in their legs, and three morerushing up, were brought down in a heap.But t he little girls were more in a deadlier peril, for now the landelinians were closing in round the fugitives on every side.Yet they rushed tward the masses accidentally in front of them, muttering some prayers, and firing their pist ols, hammering away and bring down the foolish landelinians in considerable numbers wounding them all.This caug cu caused a small branch to be visible, and the little girls picking up long sticks, rushed through stricking right and left and causing great confusio .Yet as they sped on the furious landelinians recovered, and seeing them escaping co continued tnethe chase with louder yells.A bullet struck Jennie in the side of the neck, glancing off but leaving a pi painful wound, and police received a wound in the hand.The landelinians pressed on after them, and now a detatchment of cavarly appeared su u suddenly from an unexpected quarter, and immdiately captured the little girls, slinging them upon their own horses, and raced off, when there was a blinding flash of musketry, and a score of the cavarly men fell from their horses y and then a large force of winkie Abyssinkilians ap eareds.The landelinians quickly responded, but the Abyssinkilians rushed upon them, and then

bot h sides were mingled in a confused hand to hand fight, but the landelinians being worsted, and suffering heavy loss, and seeing that these Abyssinkilians were but the advance guard of a vast army coming up, sped away with the little girls still in their grasp, and the Abyssin, AyAbyssinkilians in hot persuit , the Abbissanian general crying to the greycoats to stop.Yet the landelinians had been reinforced, from another section of the pers uers, and they hastens on with the Abyssinkilians behind thes, and were about to turn and face their persuers , when suddenly along a p intheir path along a cross road, appeared a large division of purple coats, advancing with precision, and most of these seeing the landelinians and seeing who the persuers were, and also the prisoners, at once left the ranks without recieveing any commands, and set upon the landelinians without any commands with terrible violence.The landelinians being placed between two fires, were furious, and fought like demons.They mowed scores, of the christians down, clubbed many more to death, and after desperate fighting managed to make a tremendous gap in the christian lines, through which they retreated, after delivering a withering fire and a tumult of bayonets, which for a moment checked the fury of the Angelinians.But thousands of the Angelinians followed and opened fire againMany of the gray coats dropped, but the survivors continued to retreat. they soon outdistanced their persuers, knowing the dark recesses of the woods, better than the Angelinians, and s no sooner had they reached the opening of the woods, when they came to a glen fairly packed with the advancing christians, and those seeing the landelinians becape became confused for a moment, but the others opened a terrific fire, and then made a rush with fixed bayonets, mingling with the surprised landelinians in a horrible mixup, of pikes, lances, bayonets and sabres and pistols.In the terrific melee, a number of the Angelinians had managed to secure violet and her sisters from the landelinians, but from the rebel lines another force of landelinians had come on at hearing the firing, and rushed to the aid of their comrades, and the fighting grew more fierce and sanguinary , the Angelinians in possession of the little girls, struggling with the fury of desperation and with all their might to prevent violet and her sisters from being re retakene.But now Calmannis Shoemannis appeared with a great force of landelinians, and the new comers seeing their comrades hard pressed by heavy columns of the christians, opened a destructive fire upon them,and then also charged among them, and the panlemonmain of hand to hand fighting in the dim light of the moon was a scene of slaughter never to be forgotten by the ivian girls.Hy sannibals at clost qu quarters in a fierce combat could not make a more scene.

The Angelinians who kept up a galling fire at close range, or fought pistol dules and bayonet fights face to face, mowed the greycoats down in frightful numbers, while the landelinians being impelling in hundreds by bristling rings of bayonets, and sabres, in were in a great confusion of fury and consternation.But soon another detatchment appeared coming down the road, joining the seemingly endless line of christians, and now the landelinians fought like enraged lions, held at bay in a corner, but amid the fearful carnage though even being worsted, sos of the landelinians managed to recapture the little girls, and seeing anotr another force of Angelinians approaching from another direction proceeded to make their escape, their comrades opening a murderous valley, upon the Angelinians behind moving down one thousand in thate that fearful discharge.But general oswell gaster johnston, who was in command of this big force of christians, one eight of which were engaged, was aroused by the tremendous firing and smell of powder smoke, and he rode up in the direction of the conflict , and seeing the little captives and the Angelinians struggling desperately to rescue them, cried the men he commanded and who he brought up to close in, and not let one of the landelinians escape.In the comdist continuesing of the confusion and carnage, which came when the other Angelinians at his appearance burst ranks and charged, the little girls managed to escape o on their own account, and johnston seeing this held the ever increasing force of the enemy in check, untill they were out of their reach, then he managed to bring up other sections of his , line to the scene of the frightful carnage, and these pressed upon the enemy preventing them from breaching the line.For an hour more with the-loss of thousands on both sides the s struggles struggle raged, and the glandelinians despite the odd odds against them, were now slowly driving the Angelinians back. Other forces of the christian lines were also held in check by Calmannis Shoemannis, and here two thousand had fallen in fifteen minutes.At last seeing it useless to continue the fight, and seeing that the prisoners had escaped, the landelinians being so heavily overwhelmed and threatened with destruction, withdrew in confusion, having lost six thousand five hundred men in killed and wounded, and nearly twelve thousand in prisoners.The landelinian force was about fourty thousand strong.The christian loss was about six thousand eight hundred and eighty nine in killed and wounded, and two thousand in prisoners.Though discovered on account of the tell-tale leg, violet and her sisters had not failed this time, having learned that the enemy had planned to give general ivian battle in full force at alverine or on the ic-Hollester gun near Valverine Mills, and so the little girls decided to go back to the christian lines, and notify their uncle before it was too late.General oswell gaster Johnston had now made a furious counter charge with 30,000 men crushing the wicked landelinians who were retreating, and putting the survivors to rout, and capturing two thousand more prisoners.As the conflict raged near a small town called Mary Stanchin the battle soon received that name.

Aft er they had escaped, violet and her sisters were surprised to observe that the enemys searchlights were more numerous, and ve reaching out morecfurther with their glare, as they vn ventured into an open meadow.hen a bright dazzling glare of the nearest searchlight, shone fu full upon them.They realized they were in for it again, but also there was a hot time in the lines of the de-camping enemy, when this litt light revealed the little girls.However no w matter where the little girls tried to go to hide the light followed them and now the m booming of several cannon were heard.

"We must save ourselves somehow."spoke violet."I'll try to blot that searchlight outwith a shot from this rifle I captured during the battle.That That is if the range is not too long."

Just as she spo ke the glowing wake of shells, were seen approaching, and from their screeming, violet and her sisters realized they were high explosives, and one of them were coming for them at that.Despite the lights following them the little girls scattered, and just in time, for one of the shells exploded in the very spot where they had been standing a few minutes before, the scene before them resembling the shooting clouds and flame of some great volcanic eruption, and they were almost deafened for a rfew minutes by the loud crash.Yet more big cannon boomed more nearer, and more schlls ofsmaller variety s exploded dangerously near them showeing them with torrents of fine dust and earth.

"We have got to hide somewhere"said voice with alarm."or if we don't we will draw the full fire of the batteries.We have been discovered now as it seems, and there is no chance of reaching the christian lines unless we go where those lights don't shine on us."

Her sisters knew that she was right.Hide somewhere they must, for the thunder of distant cannon was more continuous, and the flashing of the lights incessant. Three sharpnell shells came near hitting them, and more were expleding with ear splitting crashes on all sides.Where to hide they knew not, for not even bue bushes or trees were safe at this moment.

"The best thing to do is to shoot their lights if we cans"said violet"or there is no place within sight to hide.I'll try this rifle as I suggested before."

From behind a tree violet took aim at one of the lights which was shining upon her and her sisters, and fired, but she saw the range was too long, longer than it seemed to her, for the light continued to flash.

"Thelrelightscare not so bad, its their shells."Exclaimed Angelina."And I have never seen a harder enemy to get away from.Maybe if we pretend to flee, or something or of the sort, they will will stop firing."

"Yes we might-as well try it for those shells will kill us if we remain here much longer."answered Jennie.

They all decided to do this, but it was more dangerous than they thought, for the shells exploded more freqnelty, and now the thunderous gallop of horses could be heard, while thefury of the cannon fire increase dIt seemed even much too impossible to get away from the enemy even in spite of the battle fought for them, for the thundering gallop of hundreds of horses , came nearer and nearer, and the clanking of steel scabbards could be heard.

"We must get away."Said Kettie."Or those lancers will capture us or ride us down."

Hearing the soldiers coming tward them still, violet and her sisters crept behind some shrubbery, lying low to escape the screeming shells, which seemed to explode everywhere, some with blue flashes, some with red, white, or green.The advancing party of horsemen soon came within sight and one was heard to say;

"Where could those spies have gone to now?I can swear before Heaven and Earth that I saw them here only a few minutes ago."

"Search all those shrubbery and bushes."snapped the leader."They are in hiding somewhere for those shells never hit them."

The shell firing now stopped.About a score or more soldiers dismounted, and started searching the bushes, watching cautiously for any signs of an outbreak from the girls.Some of the soldiers came near the shrubbery, where violet and her sisters were hiding, and proceeded to search it.The little girls drew their pist ols, and were startled at seeing another troop of Landelinian cavarly hastily approaching.Violet and her sisters knew they were too many to resist, and quist ly and carefully crawled away from their hiding place, and just at this moment there came a terrific down pour of rain, which made such a pall that violet and her sisters were hidden out of sight.The little girls now soaked through, to the skin, continued on their way blindly, untill they came upon some grayscats who w quest ioned them.Yet as they gave satisfactorily answers, they were allowed t o pass and as the fog caused by the falling rain began to abate, the little girls suddenly found themselves confronted by a long row of fortified works.Even here the Landelinians were passing off in massive column, and knowing that they had wandered in the wrong directionthe little girls had to disguise their walk as best as they could, knowing it would bring detection, for their forms alone with their wet clothing tightly about them could not be hardly distinguished in the terrible down pour of rain, which again set in with redoubled fury, with occasional flashes of lighting, and crashes of thunder.They trise tried as much as possible to walk with boyish manners, but away from the works, but some Landelinians at every pace or at every hundred yards questioned them closely, and sometimes their answers brought suspicious looks in the eyes of the rebels.

Yet violet and her sisters could not get out.The rebel positions were extensive and they found themselves absolutely lost within the rebel lines.And while they tried to get out they observed all the real horrors, of child slavery and butchery.Thec slavery conditions on the southern part of the Unites States was not nothing compared to the child slaves forced to help the soldiers in their retrs retreat.Their only rewards had been death, or sound thrashing with brutal whips of the most horrible description.Children, down cast, and exhausted from their co continuous labor day and night, were now seen within the encampments, some advancing in long lines guarded by Landelinians armed with guns stood along side, and the way the children moved showed they were already half starved and overworked.Violet and her sisters keeping themselves concealed followed one of the guards to one of the big baggage trains, and saw how the work for the prepar ations of the advance northward progressed.Never before had they witnessed such scenes.Alas all too soon, thedwide blue eyes of violet and her sisters, saw the dull sights, of endless rowsof dangerous artillery, and the sounds of the weeping children slaves as they were made to pull some of the guns from the works or dig them from the battlements, with the almost phantom shadows of the distant trees giving them scares that was heartrending.

"Could their Father with the help of the Abbiesnnian governments which backed him ever end this?"wondered violet to herself."No"she thought"or the progress of the fierce rebellion of Landelinia, was even going sadly against him."

As the little girls watched they observed that n many of the children shivered as they went to work bringing up horses to the gun cassions, and pushing or drawing the guns from the works.Y many of them were scarcely awake as yet, and looked as if they could never remember of having been allowed to sleep one third of the night.Violet and her sisters watched the slow moving of the artillery wheels and the nimble children who fairly flew about their work, while many were pushed about, by the ungentle, overseers, guards , soldiers and even officers.Rude commands were shouted to them, directions, and they were cursed and reviled.The noise of all the preparations of the retiring enemy was wearisome to the unhappy children, and it quite dazed violet and her sisters to look at the scene.Everything seemed black and swimming about them, the crashing, banging lumber, the figures of shouting and cursing soldiers and guards about them, and the black shadows of the distant tritrains of baggage wagons.Sometimes some of the slaves were observed to hold their hands over their ears tightly, but they could not find quiet anywhere.There of the children had already fallen beside a big cannon, and when the overseer ros rushed up to picked them up, and bring them to their senses, they foundthem stone dead.The children were half starved, ragged, and thin, and violet and her sisters saw many of them with bandaged fingers or heads. Every minute some child making a mistake in his or her work either at taking up tents, hitching a horse to the wagons or drawing a gun from the works or so on was beaten and hurled about the ground.Every s child within sight of violet and her sisters had a trace of sadness upon their faces as they worked at the guns and violet and her sisters nothebing able to stand it started to mo mgve away when violet alone bumped into a child slave who was with one of the Landelinian overseers and who had just finished helpo helping the soldiers take down a tent. The collision threw both down on the ground, and violet arising, turned to the child in supposed anger and rage, so as to avoid suspicion n and said to the overseer;

"Hand her over to me mr soldier of fraceful dear old Landelinia and I will take her outside and make her wish that she enever made fools of us."

The overseer saw she too was a girl, a pretty one too beyond his own imagination, but he was not suspicious and therefore thinking she was some rebel generals beautiful daughter, obeyed her, and violet led the weeping child to her own hiding place.It was still raining very hard, and the lightning was more frequent andthe thunder something fierce, while an o ccasional flurry of big hail st ones mingled with the rainshe rejoined her sisters, and then they went on violet scolding the poor child slave in a fury, which therefore kept th her and her sisters vr from being questioned.All of a sudden however they saw general Manley approaching ,and he was on foot this time.He saw them, but he did not recognise them in the dark, and also for the clouds of rain, and becau e because the little girls clothing was covered with dirt and arth thrown at them by the shells, which made them frightfully dirty.But however he was surprised at the strange beauty of their faces, and he therefore detained them for observation, for he knw that no child slaves wiy within his lines never looked like they did, nor did any of his generals have any children within the lines which were their own. However in the dark Manley could not recognise them, and an also observing how roughly Foley treated the child slave believed her and her followers to be either enemies of the Federal government of Angelini a cr against their cause, and therefore changed his mind and allowed the m to go unmolested.As soonas they succeeded in getting out of the city of remaining encampments, and where it was evidently safe, violet suddenly ceased her scolding to the surprise of the little girl and hugging the poor child as if she was a long lost sister, brug brought her to understand that she scolded her just to escape the enemy with her sisters and to bring her out of their clutches.When the poor child realised how suddenly and strangely she had been delivered, she could not give p express to her thanks.Through some reason or other, as the child slave was missed general Manly soon came to realise who the strange and beautiful and covered little girls were, and he was fmuch impressed because it was the first time in his life he had been so cleverly tricked by any one.He declared they were the slipperest spies, he had ever known of before, that they were difficult to catch, more dangerous to persue, than hunting tigers and lions, and seemingly impossible to hold when taken. And there were more horror in the child slavery going on within the vast rebel lines than Violet and her sisters had ever seeb seen, as had been fully discovred by reporters, and spies in perfect disguise. They had during the foes stay at Elsidinia, the lame children, the crippled, and the sick, and the tender aged put to death in the most horrible tortures, because they could not work. Many of the sick, lame and crippled, were more brutally treated than the others, and were put at labors that was within their power to do. Many were always beaten mercelessly, because they stopped working for a moment to rest, and large numbers of crip pled boys and girls had been killed or tortured every day, by cruel whipping, chocking, and other tortures which would take ten thousand books to list. The real horrors Violet and her sisters had never seen. Even Poverty itself was not as bad. The encampments had slave houses or barns erected which was far worse than sweatshops, and even children overcome by the heat, and impure air, were beaten and killed or chocked. The little girls espacially were worked the hardest, and made to work fast at everything possible in camp life of the soldiers and without a moments rest during the day. In cities and places in possession of the enemies in factories and the like which were open all day and night, the children worked harder than they did in the Landelinian camps, got very little sleep, bing routed out of their hard beds at half past ten, after having gone to be for a moments sleep, and even many died from lack of sleep, sickness or overwork. Many guards provided with rawhides, and cat-o-inine-tails tossed on the children with terrible blows, when they reeled. Governer Hanson who had almost preternatural hatred of the Child slave Evil of Landelinia had during the war up to now made all kinds of inquries about it, recieving many reports from successful reporters, or spies, which showed the child slave conditions worse than he had ever seen, and which arcused him to white heat because the Calverinian our Horities did nothing to help the cause and put the horror down for good and all.

"These child slave conditions are worse than any I have seen or heard about during the war." He remarked. "If it did not peril the children I for one would blow up all the cities in possession of the Landelinians if I had to annihilate all the rebels. It is the fault of the Calverinian Governments. Half of their country sides with the wicked rebellion, and their cowardly government even though lot loyal to Angelinia are afraid to do anything. But I will end some of this w evil if I can, and put out of the government seat all the cowards I can lay my hand on. Calverinia is responsible for this and not Landelinia for through her cor cowardice she allows Landelinia to take advantage of everyh thing she can lay her soiled hands on."

Violet and her sisters had reported what he observed in the camps and Hanson decided to rescue as many of t hese slaves as possible by sending a sweeping attack upon Hanleys rear. He ordered general Jack Evans the friend of the Avian girls with one hundred thousand men forward to strike the rebel position while it was in prepartation for the retreat. The Angelinians at first moved forward cautiously, and then with great fury swarmed upon the encampments set fire to all the remaining city of tents and a long baggage train, blew up a train of ammun ition wagons, and burst upon the very scene, where Violet and her sisters had observed the child slaves at work. Thouses of the Angelinians burst into the nearest of the rebel encampments, before the rebels were aware of it. With frightful frightful yells the Angelinians attacked the Landelinians, and there was a general uproar. Sabres clashed, and the sparks flew, men shouted and cursed, wagon trains of covered wagons flared up in long lines of fire,, children screemed and shrieked, guns flashed and roared, and ammunition carriages blew up in every direction, while every where arose from the assailants;

"Down with child slavery" while the Landelinian officers yelled;

"The Angelinians. The Angelinians."

The other po purple coats poured on through thecompany streets, between the tents not yet on fire, pushing forward in torrents of men, driving the Landelinians all bfore them, cutting odown all those who resisted, capturing some of the artillery not yet hauled away, wrecking some of the works, and carrying off the useful material, and comforting the terrified children.

One of the main sections of the abano abandonmen abandoned camps was a scene of the liveliest confusion and carnage. The Angelinians attacking the rebels who had come up from the main body to re repell them carried all before them cutting the Landelinians down one by one. Stones, heavy pieces of lumber, weapons of every description, monkey wrenches, and other things were hurled at the furious Angelinians, weapons were fired point blank and bayonets clashed but though the firing of shots, and the hurled implements brought down scores they stopped not the survivors, while many other implements struck the trunks of trees with resounding crashes. The children in this part were mge calm, and watched the exciting conflict from a more s safer quarter. The Landelinian soldiers increasing in numbers strove with the vury of fury of demons to drive back the Angelinians, both sides clashing sabres together, or using pistols and bayonets. The guards, and officers and overseers joined in the fray, using their rawhides and even cat -o-nine-tq tails upon the Angelinians. Never before was there wu such stirring times in the rear of a already retreating main army of rebels, and as the main army had gone northward and were about three miles away now, there was to hopes of any force of Landelinians coming to their res cue just yetto beat off the christians. Fir' s were fired again and again and men fell by scores on both sides, and only when more and more of the Angelinians entered were the desperate Landelinians subdued. Most of the camp was afire, all the wagon trains not having followed after Manley were blown up or burning and a hundred cannon captured and nw nearly three ch thou thousand child slaves delivered.

Even many persons found in the camp who were not Landelinians but who took their part were arrested, whether they were Calverinians or Angelinians, it mattered not, and being arrested on the charge of aiding the enemys of od, were lined up and shot as traitors. Children were marched out of the encampments by thou -thousands, every place of the big camps being sacked and burnod, and all the Landelinians were taken prisoners all who had not been cut down in the fighting. When the furious Angelinins fina l finally t left the scene, a column of Landelinians on horse back came up to find out what detained the rear guard and their wagon train with the child slaves, and only came up in time, to find thousands of dead and wounded Landelinian soldiers, sixty dead overseers, and the whole line of camps for miles a smouldering furnace, which though now part ily died out still threw a bright glare for some distance, and filling the sky for miles with a cloud of white smoke. It was indeed a great fire scene.

They raced off to repr report to Manley of the occurance and telling him of Hansons swift advance.

General Jack Evans was not the only one which made a raid. While the Angelinians elsewhere in throughout the county had set fire to places of the Landelinian rich who harbored the rebel cause, and also raided child slave factories in many Calverinian cities and towns, the rebel columns or foes had made many daring raids throughout all of western Calverinia. Having set fire to all the oil tanks, especially in the region where the loyal Calverinians had the most expensive oil works in the world, and three hundred million dollars worth of smok oil went up in smoke. The enemy under Manley retreated for three miles and then seing Hanson advancing close upon him halted and prepared to make a stand near Allenore.

Violet and her sisters at this t imewished to take the opportunity and go again into the enemys lines, and learn their intentions before any fighting would commence again, but this time general Hanson observed no op ortunity for them, or no success in the interprize. The enemy under Manly was handicall handicapped seriously by his christian armies, and indeed a child butcher army of rebels to be spied upon now would be worse than a lost r soul in perdition, and he refused despite all their pleads, and entrat entreaties.

"No h" he answered. "And if you realized the terrible danger you would not wish to go or to do so. I have the enemy in an exceedingly tic ticklish position, the armies under Manley are banged out of place, their main commands are widely seperated on account of my blows, and the whole army is jeopordized and had lost three thousand of their well worth child slaves. To spy on those Landelinians is sucide just now, and I cannot allow you to go. Neither would your father. I have promished to do anything for you little girls, and promished to allow you to do almost anything good you c o choose, but do you think I am a fool encugh to send you to your deaths so rashly. Nothing doing. I'll never allow you to spy just now.

You may be able to do something for the cause when another battle rages, if you see an opportunity, but for God's sake do not think of spying on the enemy just now. Of course I'll not force you to take my advice, and as you being the princess of Abbiannia may be even my own superiors in a way, I cannot prevent you from going, but if you fail t o listen to reason, do not blame me or even my generals if anything serious occurs. The enemy are wild now, and there is even no hopes for the very Seminian members, and even they are not allowed under pains of discharge from the army or uhder pains of not being rescued by my own command to rashly enter the enemys lines. And so as you little girls are seven Princess, and daughters of Abbiannias main Emporer the Landelinians would go to any measures to capture you or destroy you. go beware."

General Hanson Vivian was right.Spies had entered the enemys lines before had been caught, and not led off to execution but shot down in the headquarters by the Glandelinian generals themselves, a regular murder, an assassination of the unfortunate spies. Manley decided several times to immediately strike Hanson a most severe blow as the christian armies were edging closer and closer, and for three days already since Hanson had started his forward and a advancing concentration upon Mary Ann there had been some of the heaviest artillery firing of the war already, and artillery action which shook the country around for three hundred miles.

Hanson in moving up furt her had placed one part of his strong batteries into a position to shell the city of Calverine; but he learned that the populs population were hemmed in by the foe, made all slaves, and that if the shells were hurled upon the city, there would be loss of lives among christian slaves as well.This situation angered Hanson.

He had make great advances had only suffered small aand slight successes, but now he felt sure that something would go wrong because his main dependable general Whilliamsburger Zimmermann had been unable to advance to his aid and the enemy were getting reinforcements dai ly for the intention of opposing Hanson fierce than before.

Hanson feared that if Manley did pull his army away from Calverine he would be able to a retreat northwestward tward Evangeline Crania, and make a stand there. He had sent a christian army to occupy Osmondon a part of the fortifications surrounding Eva Crania, but he had not heard from this christian general and he felt oppresive of the fact, and did not know whether is was wise to attack the enemy or allow the enemy to attack him.He knew hiaself that spies could not enter the enemys lines, for the fact of his recent trying experience when he attempted to spy on the enemy himself and where he had recieved a wound while on his daring escape.The foe had persued him like wild demons, and he did not think it wise to do so again.

Scouting was even dangerous while the enemy were so seriously handicapped and so he did not know what to really do. General Spooner had been killed with over eighty of his under officers, two others generals when they had scouted with four hundred cavarly men on the enemys rear itx itself, and only fourty of these cavarly men had come back.The Glandelinian sharpshooters had comitted the horrible work.Even sentries had to be placed at a very respectible distance from th the enemys lines, or otherwise sentries would have been shot down by enemy bushwackers as fast as they were placed on their posts.

The Glandelinians when handicapped, and cornered as was Manleys army at this instant was a most dangerous one, and s all spies were retained within the christian lines, and all guards instructed to keep within the inner outskirts of the christian lines, and not to go beyond their limit.

General Vivian all the who while was continueing his advans advance pressing the enemy in his location further and furt her back from the region of Mary Ann, and already severe opposition of the enemy had occure occured, and Manley was compelled to give way a little before Hanson who was starting his advance to be renewed on September 9th so as to press upon the enemy as closely as possible, to hamper his army as much as possible.

While he was advancing Hanson learned that the christians were reinforced by the government(that is the christians besieging Julo Callio and Norma) and that the seige was becoming tights and tighter, and that the enemy were showing very stern resistance, and that despite the close seige the enemy s still continued their horrible autrocities in these two cities.

The other Glandelinians were advancing nearer and nearer to the section of great Mo-Whirther called Evangeline Crania, and this worried Hanson and he immediately warned the Calverinian governments to prepare for a horrible storm that was coming.Hanson, and even Manley knew full well that the war was now going to assume a most dreadful fury. Hanson heard that Zimmermann had defeated the enemy in a tterrlbe battle at St joseph's and was trying to resume his advance but did not fell any hopes of reciev ing his help now as it was too late.If Manley escaped then nothing could prevent it and the war would have to last longer thn than even the world wanted. A big campaign in the meantime had been made up and down the Mo-Whirther Run River, sixteen river ports had been bombarded by christian gunboats and battle ships and captured, and that many armies forced to surrender.

It was evident to the world that the christians were really making the most sweeping successes everywhere, but Hanson felt apprehensive over the situationat Calverine. Manley just now refused to fight a general battle but kp kept on making withdrawels w every time the christian armies made preparations to aattack, and so Hanson had to keep on advancing.But at lat the battle came.

General Hanson Vivian was right. Spies had entered the enemys lines before had been caught, and not led off to execution but shot down in the headquarters by the Glandelinian generals themselves, a regular murder, an assassination of the unfortunate spies. Manley decided several times to immediately strike Hanson a most severe blow as the christian armies were edging closer and closer, and for three days already since Hanson had started his forward and advancing concentration upon Mary Ann there had been some of the heaviest artillery firing of the war already, and artillery action which shook the country around for three hundred miles

CHAPTER TWENT Y.

THE PROGRESS OF THE WAR.
IN PERIL FROM THE CHILD REBELS, AND BESIEGING CHRISTIAN ARMIES, DURING OTHER ENGAGEMENTS AROUND NORMA CATHERINE.
AND MANY THRILLING ESCAPES FROM DANGER.

At the same time that the great seige of Julo Callio was occuring as well as that of Norma, all the well abled Glandelinian generals had been withdrawn by the King on account of Mc-Hollester Johnstons fall, and were assigned to other points of the bloody fields of war. Manley was ordered to take personal command of the armies in Johnstons place, and to prevent if possible all attempts of the christian armies from moving northward any further as now Galverine was in danger.

At the same time this was occuring two Glandelinian generals named Bob Marcus and Robert Bob had sent many spies out to learn the intention of the christians besieging Norma Catherine many of whom never returned, and so they decided to go and see if they themselves could learn anything of their christian enemy who they learned had escaped from the main section of the city called Galverine.

"I do wish this child slave rebellion was over." Said Jam Sake Marcus. "One never knows when there is going to be another terrible and bloody battle or when we may fall into the hands of our stubborn christian enemies."

Bob and Marcus went ahead intending to go through the Galverinian pass and see if there were any signs of the christians making any more movements and if any of their own scouting parties were about. They soon reached the pass and went out tward the city and so on untill they could see the city of tents beyond beyond the rising ground, but however the tents looked kind of queer to them, being entirely unlike the tents of either the child rebels who had volunteered to help the christians or also unlike the tents of Angelinians a and Galverinians or Abyssinkilians.

"There does not seem to be anything special going on in those kind of tents over there." Observed Bob. "And we cannot tell rightly what they may be, and whose ta tents are they I wonder!"

"No they seem to be very quiet over in their lines must just now, and very unlike any of the christian dogs." Rejoined Marcus. "And I suppose the christians are studying fully how to resume the attack on our lines. They seem to dread that we have more men than they, and the christian christians are not in so much of a hurry to advance. I believe there is going t o be another fight when it comes though."

"Yes there is no doubt of it." Said Bob thoughtfully. "Those tents do look strange but we might as well go further Jake as they may bethe child rebels in new tents. I don't mind many pails as our King is always with us."

"All right Bob." Said Marcus and the two continued their walk keeping their eyes about them as they continued on. They left the Pass on their right, and made their way twx tward the north, seeing strange batteries of cannon, and the ruins of some houses at some distance. They were now more suspicious, for they knew that the child rebels never have artillery used by armies, as the guns are too heavy and dangerous for them to use. There was a stretch of woods beyond where and not far away from the direction of the besiegers were a line of st ockades. As they were passing the woods, in stead of child rebels a squad of Abbiesnnians came suddenly dashing around a sharp bend in the road and were upon the two Glandelinians in a moment. Bob and Marcus had not heard the approach of the Abbiesnnians as the redcoats must have halted, and then gone on suddenly at a full gallop, for the two Glandelinians heard no warning-sound to tell them that the worse kind of an enemy was coming. The two Glandelinians start ed to run hoping to get into the woods and so throw the redcoats off the tracks but suddenly a lot of the red coated Dasiobians came up from behind out of the woods and blocked their way.

They upset half a dozen of the Dondobians, but all this caused delay, and the Abbisannians quickly surrounded the Glandelinians. These Abbisannians could not speak a word in the Glandelinian tongue, but Bob and Marcus understood their questions, and so the two Glandelinians were taken beyond the wooded roar road to the nearest stockade and placed in seperate rooms on the ground floor, the Abbisannian officer fearing to leave them together. The Abbisannian officer presently went to governer general Hanson Vivian the main one commanding the besiegers around Norma Catherine who presently came took a seat and as he could speak the Glandelinian tongue said in a self satisfied air:

"I believe you are onsof the Glandelinians who have always tried to kidnap my neices.I am also told that you and your companion were spying about my camp.What do you mean by it?"

Whether I know anything about the Vivian Girls or whether I do not, is my own affair Sir. We were not spying on your camp, but were intending to spy on the child rebels, and were bound to know how many troops they had helping your besiegers around Norma Catherine. You are only waisting your foul breath in asking me questions."Answered Bob quietly."I shall tell you rascally Angelinians nothing, and your sarcasm has no point, so you might as well give it up."

The great Angelinian general flushed and said angirly;

"You may be made to tell me something you rascally Glandelinian spy. There is a great reward offered for the Glandelinians who ever dare to persecute the Vivian Girls, my neices, proclished by the King of Abbisannia himself and he has given me as many Abbisannian Geminians I want to trail down you rascally fools.You two will be turned over to general Germaine Vivian short ly.He is not so high in rank as I am but more manner. Then we will see f if you will persist in your refusal to answer civil questions when I ask them.And spying on the child rebels is spying on me."

"I have not heard civil questions yet."Growled Bob, and the Angelinian general colored and left the room. Going to the room where Jake Marcus was a prisoner on the other side of the small stockade, the governer general approached him and tried to make Marcus tell him something about the whereabouts of the Vivian Girls but with no more effect than in Bobs case.Hanson did not know that Violet and her sisters were saftly within his own lines. Moreover Jake Marcus was more impetious than Bob and answered the officer hotly when he attempted to be satirical or to cast any slur on the wicked Glandelinian army, and people, saying at length;

"You will get nothing out of me you fool of a christian dog, and you Abbisannian soldiers are simply waisting your t ime by asking me questions that us Glandelinians never intend at all to answer, and neither threats or abuses will make me do it."

"Well it does not matter much."Repiled the governer general in a rage.

"For you are not of importance anyhow, and we will make your companion tell us Abg Abbisannians all we want to know."

At this declaration, Jake Marcus simply laughed, and the governer general went away greatly disappointed. In the meantime Bob had not been idle. He was plotting to make his escape, even when the governer general had been talking with him.After the Angelinian general had gone, he went to the window and looked out, r seeing redcoats and purple coats all about, but busy building breastworks and trenches.

"They will be too much occupied to notice me."Thought Bi Bob."A

"And though the Abbisannians have placed strick guards around, I'm bound to get away even if I do get shot for my break for freedom.I know however how fierce these christians are and have to be careful. I would like t o know where Jake Marcus is so that we may both get away a thesame time."

Opening the window Bob jumped out, closed it after him, and made his way to the rear of the stockade. The Abbisannians at work did not look up and Bob made his way to the rear, and around to the other side, making the cry of a hawk as a signal to Jake Marcus. Making his way around to the corner Bob looked around ca cautiously and saw five Abbisannians sitting on benches, and many others standing up in front of a platform. The christians at once recognized him, and giving no tought of Jake Marcus the furious Abbisannians made a dash at Bob while Jake Marcus jumped out of the window, and made a rush for the road where there was a number of horses standing. Bob was over a fence in a moment and secured his bundle dodging in and out among the trees as a volley rang ut out.

There were many rotten apples under a tree in a broken barrel, and Bob suddenly began to bombard the redcoats with them. Now from one point and then for another always aiming at their faces. The Abbisannians were covered with Apple pulp and juice, many of the could not see, and all were in a terrible state. Then Bob ran out of the orchard and into the road giving Jake Marcus a signal which he understood. Jake Marcus had secured two horses, and untethered, and driven off the rest, and now came rushing up to Bob, who quickly mounted, and in a moment both were flying along the road at a good speed, the redcoats having discovered Jake Marcus's escape and the loss of their horses.As the Glandelinians rode on they heard a hue and cry behind them, and looking back Bob saw a score of other fierce Abbisannians on fiery steeds in swift persuit of them. Then suddenly the horse Bob was riding went lame very badly and he knew he would not be able to go any distance with the animal.

"My horse is lame Jake."He said."Go ahead, and I will make my escape in some other way."

"You had better take my horse Bob."Urged Jake Marcus at once."It is more important that you escape than me.Take my horse and get away."

"No keep on Jake Marcus.I will get away.I will lead them from you and you can make your escape."

Bobs horse was getting worse and worse, and now he had to stop altoget her for fear of being thrown.

"Go on Jake Marcus."He said.

Jake Marcus had halted, and at that moment a whole regiment of redcoats came in sight on the road they were taking, and set up a shout at the sight of the uniforms of the two Glandelinians, and started firing vigorously. It was strange why the Glandelinians were not hit but Bobs horse was struck and disabled, the Glandelinians being nearly thrown off.

"Well that settles it for both of us Bob."Said Jake Marcus.

"We have got to run now.Come to that barn over yonder Jake."

The two Glandelinians left the captured horses and made a dash for a barn which was at a little distance from the road, going in and closing the doors after them, Bob fastening it with a bar. The Abbisannians set up a furious shout, and came dashing after them.

"I shall have to fool those Abbisannians Jane Marcus."Said Bob as they both had ran up to a hay loft with a window in it, and Jake was looking out cautiously.

"I can't see any of the Abbisannians Bob."Said Jake Marcus.

"Don't let them see you Jake Marcus."Returned Bob in a quiet tone.

"I guess they are trying to surround the place, and are keping quiet about it so that we would not be on our guard.We got to be careful as they are more dangerous than any of the christians."

Kake Marcus kept in the dark and peered out cautiously. Taking off his uniformshirt and coat he stuffed them with s straw, and sticking a pitchfork up one leg, and through the coat up to the hat which he put on the prunds of the fork.

"Go to the rear and look out carefully Jake Marcus"He said.

Jake went to the rear looked out as cautiously as he could, and reported that there was no one in sight.

"The Abbisannians are in hiding, waiting for us to come out."Said Bob."All right I have a good plan to fool the enemy."

Bob then went forward and put the dummy figure before the window as if he were looking out.At once there was a volley, the dummy being riddled with hundreds of bullets.Bob let it fall and said to Jake Marcus in a low tone;

"Quick Jake.They will be coming in to get the body.I'm as good as dead as alive to those Abbisannians since the Vivian girls have been persecuted by us Glandelinians, and they will want the body in order to collect the reward."

The two Glandelinians hurried down to the ground floor, leaving the redcoats thundering at the door, trying to get in.

"This way Jake Marcus."Said Bob breathlessly, and Bob hurried to the rear door, Marcus at his side. The two clever Glandelinians were out with the door closed behind them, as they heard the front door fall with a crash.

"We must get the body of the Glandelinian!"Cried one of the Abbisannians hoarsely."Look out for the other Glandelinian.They were in the loft."

The two Glandelinians hurried around to the front of the barn leaving the redcoats go clattering up the steps, and then hurried to the road, where they found one man guarding the horses. They suddenly leaped upon him knocking him down, bound him securely, and left him in the bushes at the side of the road.

799. After taking his pistols from him they picked out two of the best horses sent the rest galloping back the way they had come, and set off in another direction. Then they ha heard the sudden yell from the barn and knew that Bobs clever trick had been discovered in a moment, seeing the Abbiesannians come flying out. They had gone a considerable distance, when another squad of Abbiesannians appeared from an adjoining road, and seeing the two Glandelinians at once gave persuit. Reaching a bridge that crossd the Norma Run River, Bob and Marcus suddenly leaped from their horses, and dove over the rail of the bridge and into the water. On the instant that they left their horses the Abbiesannians fired, several bullets carry ing away Bobs hat. More Abbiesannians on the other side of the bridge hearing the sound of the volley, and guessing what it meant galloped forward in an instant, and also fired as the two Glandelinians struck the water. ''Go up and down the banks on both sides men.''Said the leader of the Abbiesannians.''The rascally Glandelinians must not escape.''

Sixty Abbiesannians went up on one side, and sixty others down the other. The two Glandelinians presently appeared down strewn.For a moment some of the persuing Abbiesandians fired at them but did not know if they hit the Glandelinians or not as they at once disappeared. Along the banks on both sides rode the Abbiesannians, both divisions up and down, as the Glandelinians might go under and swim up strewn if they all went down, and then they would lose the escaped fugitives.

The Abbiesannian officer went down because the two Glandelinians had been seen in that ddirection, but he was the only one who made the change. After this the two Glandelinians were seen for a moment and the Abbiesannians knew their shots had not proved effecitve, and rode on firing again. Then there was a stretch of swamp land which made it nes necessary for the Abbiesannians to go back from the bank of the river some little distance. Bob with Ja jake Marcus managed to get out of the river, with their weapons unharmed. They reached and crossed a bridge noticing a tumble down hut on the edi edge of a bad and main part of the swamp below the hill here, and went on cautiously. As the two Glandelinians went on they heard a sudden sound behind them, and turning quickly saw two giant Tripoligonlians come out be from behind some leafless bushes.

''Aha we have got you two rascals.''Laughed one of the redcoats.Then he gave a shrill whistle as Bob and Marcus dashed at him with leveled pistols.Bob fired a shot and wounded the redcoat, but in another moment giant redcoats sprang up on all sides, and their retreat was cut off.They had ran right into a trap. Marcus fired a shot at another of the christians, and gave him a scalp wound, but he and Bob were quickly seized and borne away twa tward the dilapidated hut.

''Get these rascals away before the Glandelinians come to their relief.Get away with them quick.''Hissed one of the Tripoligonlians who was an officer, and Marcus and Bob were hurried to the little building on the edge of the horrible swamp, the redcoats keeping a watch outside, but hiding so that they were not seen.

The leader of the Tripolgonlians followed the Glandelinians and their captors into the hut, when suddenly far to their right, there came the sound of furious firing, and the scene th was comical in the confusion that followed. The sound of musketry and artillery seemed now near, and Bob and Mar us was in hopes that the Glandelinians were coming to their aid. If the Glandelinians who in reality had atten attempted to attack the child rebels and encountered the christian line instead really knew that Bob and Marcus was in the hands of the Abbiesannians they would have instead of retreating come down upon the Abbiesannians like a snowslide. The Abbiesannian Abbiesannians rushed out of the hut as the sound of firing not only cont inued but increased, and the two Glandelinians found themselves alone.Bob went tward the only window and peered b out but could see nothing except that rain was beginning to fall as a thunderstorm was approaching. The redcoats had all disappeared, but he knew by the sounds of the guns, that they were not far away perhaps behind the turn of the road, ju just beyond the bridge over the river.

The redcoats were between him and the Glandelinians and held a strong position in defense of the child rebels which he doubted if the number of Glandelinians could forc e, while ot on the other side lay the swamp, a death hole hole of so many esda escaped prisoners, girls boys, and men, which had been caught under its treacherous morasssssss, and suffocated t death under the quicksands. Bob thought quickly and being acustomed to making rapid decisions decided to take to the swamp in escape, if Marcus agreed. He did. So Bob went to the door and looked out and carefully around but saw no one as the Abbiesannians had evidently forgotten him and Marcus in the exciting incident of the sudden attack of the Glandelinians, for they had no idea how many of the Glandelinians were again attackking the christ ian line, and so were going to their help if they needed it.

800. He still had his pistols with him, and so did Marcus, alth ugh they had not been reloaded since they had fired at the christians before they were overpowered, and so after they had gone a short distance they reloaded. They felt rathe anxious regarding the Glandelinian assailants for the two Glandelinians knew that their own comrades had met a larger force and although accustomed to fighting against great odds, they would have been better satisfied if they had been with them to direct operations. If they could work their way around to the Glandelinians and rejoin them from the back it would be the best t hing, but the swamp was impassable in places and the two Glandelinian generals as they really were, were not sure they could accomplish their reckless feat. They went cautiously ahead testing the ground, and finding it even worse than they had thought. In order to rejoin the Glandelinians or get away from the dangerous Abbiesannians they would have to recross the river, and there was no other bridge spanning it for a great distance that would enable them to do so therefore they must find a place they could ford or x swim. The tide was going out now which was in a measure fortunate, for it drained the marshes somewhat, but it might also lowe lower the water in the river too much to enable them to swim across, and not enough for them to wade. Still they were not daj dauin daunted, but went on this way and that, threading in and out ,leaping from hommock when they were stepping as light ly as possible and as quickly so there should be no time for them to be sucked down by the sand.

It was laborous and dangerous traveling, and the two Glandelinia Glandelinians would have been glad of a moment on secure ground, that they might take breath, but the mud was black and heavy, and yet shifted under their feet like quicksand, the suction being so great that Bob and Marcus did not dare rest their feet in an instant on any one spot. The constant drizzle of rain did not help matters for Bob and Marcus, and now it began to rain more insistently, and besides from being in the river they were wet to the skin, adding so much more to the weight.They had to propel across the t reacherous morass. More than once they had been tempted to retrace their steps, but they knew they could not regain the Glandelinians by doing so, and besides the redcoats might be on their t rack. They kept their eyes open for any one being in the vinicity, for they now that parties of Abbiesannians might be encountered at any t ime, but they saw nothing, heard nothing, but the desolate stretches of swamp, and the sucking sucking sound that accompanied their steps through the mud.

''We must not let the coming storm overtake us here in the swamp.''Thought Bob as they gained a slight eminence and the ground being high er it was therefore firmer allowing them a brief rest. They looked about them and saw the river, and as they gazed intently to see the best way to reach it but as they looked their blood froze in their viens for a pall of fog was st ealthily creeping in fromfrom the direction of the distant sea. To be fogbound in that swamp would mean death, and the two Glandelinians did not mean to die yet, feeling that they had first so much to accomplish, unless they met it on the battlefield in defense of their own counte country.

The heavy fog was closing in heavily coming in from the sea, and dropping down like a regular cloud from the heavens, and they knew in a short time they would be fogbound.They could no longer hear the sound of vfiring, so they could not be guided by that, and if the view of the river was shut out, they would have to trust to their senses of direction.

As thy stood there looking about them the fog came ad they found themselves suddenly in a sea of flying snow as it really was despite it being August in Calverinia, v everything shut out of their visio except the ground for a large circle about th eir feet. They shut their lips firmly and went in the direction they had last seen the river If the progress had been slow and diffu difficult and slow before it was doubly so now for they had to feel their way as it were, and they were not sure if they were going tward the river or not on account of the nature of the swamp, they had to make a many deviations that they had lost the point of the compass.

They had walked a long time, it seemed much longer to them than it really was, and they had not come to the river, and they wondered if they were going parallel with it, feeling quite sure they were not going away from it ltogether. They stopped and listened and it seemed to them they could hear the lashing of water despite the swishing of the thick shi sheen of flying snow, but the sound was so faint that they could not be certain. And now it was suddenly grow ing very cold, and the wind was rising to a terrific gale blowing straight from the north.

They were very tired and 1 half frozen and their feet lagged for it had been nan arduous trip through the swamp in the face of the blinding August snow storm and they longed to feel their swift steeds beneath them. After walking a while and fairly tormented by the flying snow and the terrific wind that that whirling the so snowin a blinding medium was still rising steadily to almost the force of a hurricane they heard the sound of some childish voices and drew to one side wishing or within shelter of some thick group of leafless trees and waited for the owner of the voices to appear.When the strangers were within one hundred feet of the trees Bob saw that they were a bunch of girls and boys in yellow uniforms all fourteen years of age and so remained in concealment untill they passed by there being a thousand of the rebels who were as they saw a force of general Jack Evans boy and girl scouts. They had not walked a quarter of a mile further when again they heard the sound of voices, and ag in they had to draw to the shelter of some friendly trees and waited to see who the riders might be!
They were also child rebels and scouts and a force of Abbiesannians was with them.
They discovered Bob and Marcus as they were mas passing and quickly surrounde surrounded the two Glandelinians. Bob and Marcus tried to escape but the leader of the Abbiesannian child rebels said;

"Not so fast if you please, you grayback.We require every Glandelinian in these parts to explain their presence and if you are spies we'll shoot you here on the spot."

"And who are you that you challenge the Glandelinians in this fashion?"Exclaimed Bob in fierce indignation.

"You rascally Glandelinian"C Growled the Abbiesannian boy scout who had dismounted."To ask a foolish question is not answering mine. Give an account of yourselves the both of you."
The Abbiesannian boyscouts manner was blustering and Bob assumed an equally offensive as he said;

"This is the best exclamanation I will give to any dirty christian dog like you."And Bob shot out his fist and struck the Abbiesanian boyscout officer in the right jaw. Everything was in a great uproar in an instant.
The redcoats themselves sprang from their horses with fierce imprecations the officers putting their sabres in their scabbards and stared, while the others crowded forward to see if the child rebel leader was hurt.

"Tie them both up."S outed the Abbiesannian general who had seen his rebel friend reel reel from the powerful blow admisistered by Bobs strong right arm.The redcoats their sol shoulders and hats fairly over loaded with snow closed in around the Glandelinians with fierce scowls and the two Glandelinians soon saw that it was useless for them to resist, and stood still scowling in return at the Abbiesannians who were now shaking the snow from their shoulders and hats. The Abbiesannian boy scout officer was nursing his jaw but that member of his anatomy was not half as sore as were his fleelings at thus being publically chatisised.

"Take them at once to the nearest tavern, and I will follow to see that the place is all right."

As they mounted and galloped through the moving pall of snow a tavern soon came in sight, and they entered. The two prisoners were brought in by the two ch child rebels themselves, their leader having their say over these Abbiesannians who were really only helping them, and Angelinian Aronburg or Gertrude Angeline who she really was saw to it that the two Glandelinians were bound hand and foot and then left placing four guards over them armed with bayonets after she had screamed a good lecture at them telling them what comes of striking a christian officer.
Bob and Marcus heard the retreating footsteps of their captors and then set about for some wy to tfree themselves but in vain. They tried to untie the knots that fastened the rops around their hands and tied so tightly behind them but so tightly that they could not step through them and thus bring them around to their front. The cellar despite it being dark outside wa absolutely darker not a ray of light shining through any chink in the floor above or under, the door opening on the dirty steps leading below.
The two brave Glandelinians could raise themselves to an upright position by leaning themselves against a huge cast as that was at their backs, but this was all tthey could do. An hour passed, just how long Bob and Marcus did not try to determine, for their thoughts were too busily engaged with trying to think of some plan to escape but there seemed absolutely none. The cellar was uncomfortableably warn, but it dried their half frozen uniforms and saved them from taking cold from their exposure when out in the storm.
They could hear the child rebels and the Abbiesannians moving around over head, the screaming laughter of the children who the men were playing games with, but none of the steps seemed to approach the door which they had been brought to their present position.

They went tward it however and presently saw that the water was spreading all around them as far as they could see, which was no great distance. T he dead grass grew less densely and there were spaces where there were none to be seen at all, and then they could see the movement of the water, a wavey motions caused by the gale and by and by they saw that they were really approaching the river.The problem now presented itself og getting across. At this portion it was not deep enough to swim as they had feared, yet too deepy and muddy for them to attempt t o wade. They looked about them and felt almost as desolate as if they had been marooned on a deserted island. The water was sucking at their feet and as they pulled one s foot out the other sank in deeper, and they hastily tried to bring that one out of the mud with the result that the other wat went down.The mud despite its wetness was getting fairly white with the snow. They could not jump for there was no purchase for their feet, and they knew that t hey were sinking deeper every moment. Delay was dangerous, but progress was nigh impossible. They looked about them for something to seize to draw themselves up out of the slough that was slowly but surely drawing them down. There was nothing in sight but water, rising snow drifts and dry ccurse grass, but as they looked they saw the water recedeover so little but as it went there was uncovered, a flat bottomed rowboat, that had got stuck in the mud. They gave a cry of relief, and threw themselves forward and succeeded in clutching the sc edge of the rowboat, and by its aid pulled themselves out of the mud that was sucking them down. As the water receded the boat seomed to be emptying and the two glandalinians soon saw a a hole in her side where she had been stove in. Aft er tipping the boat so that they were able to get nearly all the water out, they stopped the hole with swamp grass which they packed in tightly, hoping that it would serve the purpose in keeping the water out untill they could reach the the opposite side of the river where the land might be firmer. There was no oars but Bob wrenched one of the seats out, and by using this to push with he managed to get the boat in deeper water. The snow pall was still dense but smalle flakes now but they had no fear of meeting any craft and being accidentally run down so b Bob paddled with his bo board board seat tward the opposite shore, f shore it could be called with its indefinite line and unstable ground. But suddenly they found that theb boat was filling, for the grass had not proved so effective as they had hoped it had, and the boat began to settle, and in a moment or two they found themselves stuck in the mud from which fact they concluded they had pretty well crossed over to the opposite side. They were in as bad a predicament as before for they did not dare to attempt to wade, and they did not know how far away they were from comparatively safe ground. They could not remain much longer in the boat for the water was now half way up to their knees, but after a careful examanation they found they were stuck on a shallow plav place not far from the shore but water lay betwen not too deep to wade if the ground were firm but should it be a mud bottom, it would be doubtful if they would ever reach land. Then they suddenly heard the sound of firing again and it did not seem very far away. In vain they looked for smoke as the snow pall had slightly thinned but nevertheless the snow pall hid everything at the distance of two hundred feet.

II "I wonder if there is another skirmish."Murmured Bob as the blinding snow whirled into the fast filling boat."I wish some of the Glandelinians were around to throw me a line for then I think I could manage to get this crazy boat a little nearer so that I could leap ashore, for it seems firmer on this side than it does on the other."

But his wishes were in vain, and the boat continued to fill and so they were determined to try and wade ashore. as they could not remain in a leaky boat in this growing cold and snowstorm with i the wate now up to its twarths for a length of time especially as there would be a turn in the tide before lobg. The water was so thick with slushy snow and mud that they could not see the bottom anywa anywhere, and they put out one lef leg very carefully trying to feel the bottom but they found they did not need the support as their feet did not sink. So abandoning the old row boat they waded tward the shore in the face of the blinding snow which had increased heavier again and soon found themselves on comparatively firm land but sheeted three inches already in snow.

All covered with snow and their clothes frozen stiff to their bodies to the relief of thir minds and also to their aching limbs the ground was still higher and still rose so that in a few moments they had passed out of the swamp districts and could make more rapid progress despite the deepness of the snow. They could no longer hear any firing but they could now tell in what direction the glandelinian position lay so they turned tward that direction.

242 They watched it carefully and listened intently.Then they saw that a light was decending the stairs, and that it was vidently in the hands of some person and in a moment more to their utter amusement and surprise saw that it was a little Calverinian girl for they could see the short skirts by the faint light of what they found to be a small lantern. Then came a cautious whisper;

"Are you there, Bob and Marcus?"

"Who are you?"Whispered Marcus in turn."Have you come to help us two Glandelinians get away.?"

"Yes but do not speak so loud or the Abbiesannians above many hear you." And she came tward where the two Glandelinians were guided by the sounds of Marcus's voice for the rays of the lante lantren did not shine very far.

"Have you a knife to cut the ind infernal rope?"Asked Bob in a very low tone.

"Yes I have a very sharp one."Answered the child with a sweet smile."I was spying on the christians and have learned that they have over 67,600,000 men besieging n Norma and onver one hundred thousand cannon.They have strong works.That is what they say.Besides I could not get down to you any sooner, and I was afraid I couldn't got here at all one time, for they are all about, but I slipped away pretending that I was going home."

The little traitor had found the two Glandelinians by this time and was hacking away at the ropes around Bobs wrists and at last he was able to burst the partially severed strands, and then his hand being free, the rest was easy.The next thing Marcus was freed of his bonds.

"How shall we three get away?"Whispered Bob."We could not pass through the house unseen, there mu must be some secret exit into the open."

"Yes general there is.Come this way.I know where it is and how to open it for they sent me down to fasten the door this very evening before dark." The little girl led t heway by the flickering light of the lantren, and they soon reached the steps, and in a moment the little t raitor had the door open, and they found themselves outside the taven tavern around at the back in snow two feet deep having been in the place all that afternoon. It was also snowing heavier than before, and the wind was blowing a shrieking gale threatening to blow the very trees down, but the fugitives would rather be snowbound, than too long prisoners among the Abbiesannians.The stable could not be seen except from a light shining inside so thick was the falling snow, and besides there was plenty in the house, but none near them, and they thought they would have no trouble in reaching the place where Bob saw two fine horses hitched to a sledge, the tavern door opened and a glare of light streamed out into the snowy night and shone full on the two horses and the sleigh who had moved around to the front of the tree when they heard low whistles of their masters. They were the horses formerly belonging t o Bob and Marcus, and these two Glandelinians had trained the horses to look for their masters if not back within a day. SO these two horses after a long search found out their two masters were prisoners here and had swaited for them to escape the Abbiesannians securing them and having hitched them to a sleigh. There came an exclamanation from an Abbiesannian coming out of a door.

"There is the two famious steeds of those Glandelinian generals."

There was a si stir at once and many Abbiesannians came rushing out heedless of the strong gusts of wind and the flying snow and soon the two steeds were surrounded.

"There is no mistaking these animals."One of the Abbiesannians said"But if they are here their masters cannot be far off."

"I'll wage a years pay that those prisoners of ours own those horses."Said another Abbiesannian officer."Fetch them up this moe moment."

Several Abbiesannians went forward to execute this order ploughing through the deep snow, while the two Glandelinians were hiding in the darkness, trying to keep out of the glare of that revealing light which clouds of snow brightened all the more as it flew and whirled past. Their progress either one way or the other was completely blocked, and they could only hope to escape detection by rema n remaining quiet. Then came the shout that the two prisoners had escaped and that the cellar door was open, showing which way they ha escaped.

"There has been some knavery."Declared the officer of the Abbiesannians."Th "The two Glandelinian officers could not have escaped alone, oc except by the help of that little girl who is called Nellie Joblin.Besides the three Glandelinians cannot be far away for here is two horses hitch to a sleigh belonging to the two Glandelinian soldiers.Have the ground searched at once....."

804. CHAPTER TWENTY ONE.

THE DISCOVERY....

Then lantrens were brought and forms could be seen running hither and thiter the two Glandelinians and the ch child keeping out of the way and working around to a place where Bob and Marcus hoped to get to-their horses.

"At least we have the-two horses of the wicked Glandelinians." Said the major general of the Abbiesannians."And I will assume the responsib lity of the keeping of the one belonging to Bob, and any one of you can have the other."

"Will you?"Was Bobs mentel question well knowing that the two obedient steeds would not permit any one to ride them, without their masters permission. The Abbiesannian general attempted to seize the bridal reign of Bob's fiery steed, but found himself instead sprawling on his back in the deep snow: Bob and Marcus gave their familiar whistle and in an instant both steeds heads went up, their ears thrown forward, and they cantered tward the place whence the call came dragging the sleigh with them irrespoctively of who might be in their path, throwing snow in all directions with their hoofs f fairly pelting the ama amazed Abbiesannians. Bob swung the little girl up onto his own horses back leaping up behind her, and they were off in the darkness, and through thewhirling snow, Marcus quickly leaping int o the sleigh.

"After thethree Glandelinians."Shouted three voices."Bring horses."

And in a moment later , men on horseback were galloping and ploughing through the deep snow slowly after the retreating forms of the Glandelinian stte steeds and the sleigh, Bobs steed carrying double. On dashed Bobs steed unheeding his extra burden, and after them thun dered the persuers their steeds throwing clouds of snow on the road way in their mad ploughing rush, but the three Glandelinians had no longer any fear of being overtaken once on the backs of their faithful steeds. The little girl had no such confidence in the steeds ability to outdistance all persuers through the deep s snow and cried;

"Oh Bob they may catch us, and then what will become of us!"

"Don't be afraid of that Nellie."Said Bob."They cannot overtake our steeds, and if they did I would drop you in a safe place, and continue taking on taking them away from you."

When they left the persueing enemy well behind as Bob knew by the deminishing sounds they slackened their speed for it was hard laborous work for the gallent horses to plough through the deep snow at a-gallop like they had been going.More troops had been left at the city of Norma and they knew it.

"More troops have been added to those besieging Norma Catherine and it is the purpose of general Hanson Davian to move on Calverine too soon."Sed Hennie."And the different forts and batteries are greathly strengthed, and the child rebels are planning to cause the christians to attack the whole Glandelinin force at Norma in overwhelming numbers and force the army to surrender."

" Suddaly an Abbiesannian on horseback rode up to Bob and the other two followed by half a dozen others all coming suddenly through the pall of snow.

"Here we have got you three Glandelinians at last."Cried the leader as he clapped a pistol to Bobs head, and caught him by the throat."Ride on or we will save the executioners a job. Get up."

The three horses dashed ahead and the Abbiesannians suddenly snatched the pistols of the Glandelinians and stuck them in his belt. The Glandelinians tried to escape by riding full speed ahead but tethe christians kept along side of them with their muskets leveled and the leader said;

"Ride as fast as ye please ye Glandelinian fools.My men will keep up with you."

The Glandelinians rode on at full speed the Abbiesannians keeping up with them, but in a few moments the horse Marcus was riding stumbled being unable to keep up such a breakneck speed in such deep snow and threw his rider. Marcus was stunned for a few moments and by that time several of the Abbiesannians were on the ground at his feet the officer saying sharply and in a surly tone;

"Get up Marcus.Your horse had faild you but mine won't."

The Abbiesannian had a pistol at Marcus head and the Glandelinian sprang up.

"Get into the saddle"Said the Abbiesannian fiercely.

Marcus obeyed thinking to get away but the Abbiesannian officer was bh behind him in an instant urging the horses on at a good gallop, the others who had halted when Marcus was thrown now following.

"If any of you Glandelinians try to plg any tricks on us we will kill you do you dogs of Glandelinia."Said the office."You two are bound to die as spies anyway, and it will merely be a great difference in themethod. You deserve death anyway for I know you would rather be so cruel as to see the insides of some poor pretty little Angelinian girl anyway."Grimly.

The Abbiesannians seized the hands of the three prisoners, brought them around behind them, tied their wrists together with ropes, and again theleader said;

"Tumble off and break your necks if you like ye Glandelinian butchers.It would not do you any good.You are my prisoners and I do not intend to let the thre thr three of you get away so there.The little girl will be sent to Abbiesannia whereshe will learn what it is to be a christian enemy. So there."

They rodeon at a good speed through the blinding snowstorm being in no danger of meeting any of the Glandelinians now in such a snowstorm but the Abbiesannians ket kept their muskets leveled at the Glandelinians js just the same.Near the pass they were sudde nly confronted by a number of Abbiesannians soldiers who sprang out from behind a group of snow covered bushes, and seized the leading horses..

"Ha have some prisoners have you?"One of them exclaimed."And a child too. Good."

The two prisoners were searcn searched and then placed in a hut and under a strong guard. That very night the wind blew a terrific hurricane attain ing almost the force of a typhoon and soon before any one knew it the hut was torn to pieces, and a tree thrown down by the wind almost caught the two Glandelinians under its branches. as they dashed widly for safty. The wind roared and hoqled howled and thousands of trees twisted and swayed swayed in the breath of the furious wind which tore the very branches off and sent them down with a terrible crash one of the branches catching the chi child by the throat and apparently strangling her. The child died with her tongue protruding before the Glandelinians could save her and yet they had to make their own escape, which they did running and stumbling and dod ging crashing and fa' ling trees. My how the wind did scream and howl and it was now snowing so hard that nothing could be seen dark as it was but a thi k white pall. The Abbiesannians persued them hotly as the windstorm let up considerably but as scores began to get killed by falling trees they gave it up dashing madly for shelter, but several more wre killed or injured before they reached shelter as the storm now again resumed its terrific fury tearing the trees down as thick as grass cut by a lawn now.

By the help of a hurricane the Glandelinians managed to escape the christians and shelte sheltered themselves in some small cave for the night untill the terrific hurricane would let up. The next moment the morning they woke up to find tha that the hurricane had b abated but that the snow was still falling but lightly now. They now walked w away from the direction of the Abbiesannian camps as if involuntarily their steps turned in the directin direction of the Dell-Hell-Pell- Penentaery. Right over the shore of the great Norma Run River on the outskirts of the part of Norma called Calverine in one place some snow covered rocks projected in a sort of shelf not more than twelve feet from the ground. Then went in abruptly and a sort of natural roof was formed. Up and down this ledge they now paced and Bob was absorbed in his own bitt er thoughts and totally und unheed ing t he flight of time. Suddenly he paused. Did his ears decieve him or did he hear voices underneath.His own steps were muffled by the deep snow that covered the place aas he walked to the outer edge and listened intently to the surprise of Marcus. Yes there were voices underneath talk ing in low cautious tones.His heart gave a great trob and he got down on his hands and knees and peered for one instant ove over the cliff the other at his bidding doing the same. Right underneath were twenty of the ugliest Glandelinians they had ever seen and only one of them an officer of low rank was handsome looking. Though Glandelinians themselves they were not as bad as supposed, and not liking the looks of these twenty Glandelinians they saw, and suspicious that there was something wrong in the wind Marcus ad and Bob laid their heads close to the ground so that they could catch at intervals this conversation, for the Glandelinians were spk speaking very plainly.

"Yes those kids called the Vivian Girls who are so cute in beauty are going to be executed for sure for setting fire to the left wing of the penitentiary if they are captured again and even if they t try to escape they will surely die any how as they wio will s be shot down.Won't it

"What a mess you made of it a month ago general Deldon letting them get away."Said one of them.

"Well it was not my fault."Growled general peldon."How could I help it when Jennie escaped her execution?Showill show me her intestines this time when she is captured again, and this time she will not escape."

"Serves the little rebels right to be thrown down the slaughter trough confound those christian dogs.This seige of Norma catherine and the great losses our armies have suffered in the big battles already around her in vain comes of trusting those infernal land sharks, on duty on the out-skirts."

CHAPTER TWENTY TWO.

THE PARTIAL DESTRUCTION OF CALVERDIE, AND THE SAVING OF THE VIVIAN GIRLS.

"What a beautiful time those child rebels had during the battle yester day w th the christian troops and us, and how the christian losses made themquall. 'Said another with a low chuckle.

"They may make another to morrow and have another great slaughter for their pains even if they do repulse us again."Said still another.

"Well general you say you found out who were guilty of the burning of the prison, but that you do not want to tell the Calveridian magestrates because you say they are so soft heart ed as to let the Vivian girls be cleared of the crime and punish the real culprit?"

"That is true."Said the Glandelinian general."I have him in my own possession and am saving him from the punishment as long as he will try to recaputo therecapture the Vivian Girls for me who are within Hansons besl besieging lines, kill them and tear them open."

The reply t o this was given in so low a tone that Bob and the other could not hear it, and in their intense eagerness they leaned further over to listen but as they did so they lost their balance. In vain they strove to save themselves but over they must go and seeing that there was no help for it they took a flying leap and landed right in the midst lf the astonished apparent Glandelinian office officers. With interjections of surprise and alarm twenty bright sabres blades inst natly flashed in the darkness of the early morning, but ere any violence could be offered to the two Glandelinians the tall stalwart Glandelinian officer in chief interposed between them and Germannia Vivian another son of governer general Vivian st o stood before the two Glandelinians. One of the two others was Jimmie Vivian himself but called himself some other name and silently Jimmie Vivian and Germannia Vivian confronted each other these two bitter enemies brother to brother so long soperated, so strangely encountered now.Did no small voice whisper to each enemy that they were brother to brother and was the voice of nature silent that thethey so should gaze upon each other as only enemies gaze.Yes even so for although the general in chief of the disguised Angelinians started for a moment to see before him his own brother, the emotion passed in a moment, and the strange resemblance was set down to one of those accifdenrtal accidental likeless that so often surprises us and which cannot be accounted for.Jimmie Vivian knew that this daring dark Glandelinian officer who had with the other jumped among his fully disguised Angelinians was his brother but knowing him to be a traitor to both Glandelinia and Angelinia his passing thought had less effect upon him than it had upon the Glandelinian general.They also had in their midst the Glandelinians who had been plotting to kidnap the Vivian Girls having appeared so suddenly that the Glandelinians had been surprised and captured while they were still talking, and just at the very same moment the other two Glandelinians had jumped right into their midst. The fierce looking Abbisannian officers still grapsed their sabres and facing the gale of wind and snow had encircled around the two Glandelinians and were glaring upon them with darkly threatening eyes, and Jimmie Vivian stood boldly erect as he undauntedly confronted the great Glandelinian general.

"Well "Said Jimmie Vivian calmly surveying the two Glandelinians front from head to foot.Who the foul hounds are you you Glandelinian devils that you come tumbling from the snow clouds among us Abbisannians in this fashion?"

"They are spies. Let us pitch them into the river."Said one of the officers.

246Silence sir.''Sdd the general to the officer.''Come you two answer. What is it your buisness here?Spying on your own comrades no doubt and had an accident.Do you know you two Glandelinians could be hanged as trait ors for spying on your fellow Glandelinian soldiers.It's surprising enough to see Glandelinians spying on us, but when they do it on their fellow men it is surely beyond any comprehension.''

There was no answer from the two men and Jimmie cont inued;

''It is also my buisness to have prevented the seizure of my sisters for whom your men have so basely planned to an abduct for murder.If you who is the brother of a born Angelinian governer general are the leader of the main force of butchers besieged at Norma Catherine I demand to be informed what their plans are that you overheard.''

''Whew.''Whistled the prisoner while his compaion set up an insolent laugh.

''For coolness and effrontry that modest demand cannot be beat. And what if we refuse Jimmie Vivian?''

''I will cut d you down like a dog brother though you are.''Answered Jimmie Vivian.''And besides your refusal does not matter much since I have myself heard all before I seized the Glandelinians who were plotting it and then also you were lucky to have met me instead of the child rebels who would have made you meet the doom your wicked actions deserve.''

''And what may that be Jimmie Vivian?''Said the Glandelinian general with a sneer.

''Hanging''Said Jimmie Vivian boldly. ''A fate too good for fiends base enough to help in the wicked plan of forcibly carrying off seven help less girls for the pleasure of slaughtering them.It's fortunate I came upon the scene in time to prevent it being carried out.''

The Glandelinian tried to threaten Jimmie Vivian and with loud passionate cries of rage the Abbisannian officers closed around the two wicked Glandelinians who were captured really for good now and they would have been killed right then and there, but that the christian general a secod second time interfered.

''Back men''Said Jimmie Vivian. authoritatively.''O' let there be no bloodshed to night.These foolhardy prisoners who causing the excitement and brought on the escape o of Deldon are completely in our power and if they were locked in an air tight money safe in a bank my brother then even then can spean speak with impunity. Pray proceed my dedear brother.''

''So hanging is too good for us Glandelinians eh?''Demanded Germannia Vivian.

''Yes.''

''Now what would you recommend be done with us supposing you were our judge?''

''Burning at the stake perhaps.''Sugf suggested Bob''And after that to be hung, drawn, and quartered.''

''This is no time to be fooling you rascally fiend.''Exclaimed Jimmie Vivian impetiously.

''I demand to know what the full prans were concerning Violet and her sisters.''Said Jimmie.

''A demand I am most happy to comply my dear brother.''Said general Germannia.''I always like to oblige any body whether christian dogs or not when I can.''

And he told all all he had heard.''

''This way now you two traitors.''Said Jimmie.''But just keep your eyes on them will you men, and see that they do not give you the slip.We'll turn them over to the christian lines.

''We surely will.''Said Lieutenant Deldon Hanson.''Had not we better bind and blindfold them.?''

''No it will be needless as in all possibility they will never set foot on this shore again.I understand dead men tell no tales.''And Jimmie gave a demoni cal laugh.

As the whole party of Abbisannian officers with their prisoners in their midst started along the br beach after their general facing the frightful blizzard which was resumed again as they trudged along slowly the men kept their bayonets presented. For a mile through the dreadful blizzard they walked along the snow covered river bank and then almost blinded by the whirling snow they suddenly diverged and turning an abrupt angle among the rocks they suddenly came upon a big chain of breastworks, then cont inueing on passed long rows of covered cannons, fortifications, and then came upon a big city of tents, houses and huts where sentinels and guards despite the raging snowstorm were seen.This was a portion of the besieging christian line. General Jimmie Vivian turned to the utterly astonished prisoners with a peculiar snole smile of sarcastic triumph and then fired a shot from his pistol. Instantly a hundred dashy looking Abbisannians and some Abyssinkilians followed by Angelinians came from may huts and stood in line near Jimmie Vivian.....

''These prisoners my good lads.''Said the Abbisannian general saluting;

''These prisoners my good lads.''Said the Abbieannian general saluting;
''The names of the two men I have not as yet have had the pleasure of hear ing.But this Glandelinian office who llo looks so much like me is my traitp traitor brother.Seeing under the rocks and being of an inquiring spirit they leaned down among us, and without ceremony presented themselves as they had been spying on their own comrades or at least appeared to have done so or were rather looking out for surprise parties. I persauded them to accompany me here, and have much pleasure of making you acquan acquainted with the spies now.My brother was very urgent to find out what had become of his sisters the vivian girls whom he wished to assassinate, and I could do no less than promish to let them see and console him in his capitivity, and before his exchange.''
This speech was recieved with a cheer and a laugh by a long line of sol diers.Germannia flushed, and irritated turned to the speaker and said passionately;
''I do notwant to seethem brats.And I did not say I did.But where in hell are they just the same?''
''Easy my dear brother---- --easy. Getting excited and fierce never pays in the world. You will see the little girls when whether you desire to do so or not time enough.''
The two prisoners were placed in the rear of the city pf tents but tward ten o-clock that morning the resumanation of the snowstorm grew so fierce that the sentinels had to be called in, which gave the two Glandelinians as it seemed a chance to escape. But no sooner had they gotten away when they were discovered by some of the guards who were on the watch inside the huts.The guards opened fire but could not hit the fugitives who were bound to escape and they ran as fast as they could tward the direction of Calverine two miles and a quarter away. It was laborous traveling through the deep snow and to face the cold gale of wind was terrible.The Abbieannians could not see the fugitives but nevertheless they followed the tracks in the snow which were rapidly being filled up.But they could not overtake the two Glandelinians who got away in the blinding haze of the blizzard which was even then increasing in fury.

CHAPTER TWENTY T HREE. A ANOTHER MASSACRE??

The execution of many other thousands of children in Norma Catherine was fixed for the first Sunday of september. All the Glandelinians declared that violet and her sisters were guilty of setting fire to the Dell-Hell-Tell-Hell penitentairy and that if they were not retaken then IO,000 children should die in their stead. It surely had been set on fire but violet and her sistns had not done it, and had only by the aid of the boy gotten out of the burning building, by the main entrance. Violet and her sisters at the time were spying on the enemy in the powder wing havig having tried to learn of the enemys intentions and how much powder they had stored there, but they had been accidentally locked in the powder wing where the trough of death extended from, and they saw that it was really an immense building twenty blocks long and fourty hundred feet wide.
Even the room she and her sisters were locked in was filled with danger ous explosives. Also they were on the top floor and in that room where the trough extended from to the horrible opening. The thought of such a death for the child captives in the other buildings made them shudder and they were determained to frsutrate it if they had to go down it themselves. They had certainly heard of cruel powerful wicked men in fairy tales, of wicked dwarfts and fairies, witches and giants, cruel kings and dragons, but there had not been such horror among the iron hearted Glandelinians whom none could dare dispute with or rescue any victims from at times.
The building they were in werealso crowded with children who were even starving to death, and not a had had passed before violet and her sisters came to spy, that some of these children had not been thrown down the trough to their deaths, or burned alive in the furnace on top of the slaughter house, which had instead of a roof a furnace sixteen feet deep. It was a very cruel kind and large gratings were in plae above the roaring coal furnace overloaded with redhot limestones, and on top of this many of the poor children had been thrown stark naked at that. The room which was very large was much darker than the others, being completely without wi windows, and the darkest of the powder wing. Most of the children being trained right by their mothers n were not afraid of the dark, but they were afraid of the wicked Glandelinians.I don't see how any one could blame them unless they had no pity, and would rather side with the Glandelinians or if they were some of the wretched low breeded child haters....

Violet and her sisters brave as they were shuddered and crouched in the darkest corner every time a Glandelinian came as they did not wish to be discovered. They did not dread that awful slaughter trough as they defied the Glandelinians to throw them down, but they dreaded the peril of the children and wished and even begged God to make it fall down so that the Glandelinians could not use it any more. If only they could think of some way of liberating all the children and getting away with them before the Glandelinians discovered their presence. And how they dreaded the coming of that sunday though of course it was far away as yet. They wished and prayed to get away somehow so they could warn the christian generals, but they could not find an exit of escape and they could not find any steel saws or files to saw the iron bars away from the windows with. Oh if they had not been so foolish with their daring and say s tayed away from this dangerous region, then they would have seen happier days. It was really impossible to escape this place excepting by the child rebels causing the Angelinians to capture it, and though it was rumered that the great place was discovered by the besiegers, there were no signal flags of any child rebels in sight as far as they could see. The room was also very chilly there being no heat, for the Glandelinians dreaded to have any heat which was dangerous for the munitions stored in that wing. So the children who had been de deprived of all their clothes suffered much from the cold and hunger, and Violet and her sisters never ceased praying for even an hour for God to cause their quick escape or call the children to heaven, but the prayers did not seem to be answered. Thirsty as they were they could not get any water for there was no drinking plax places at all in that room, excepting an old sink where of course the water did not run. They could not burst the pipes for they had nothing to do it with. It was just as bad as being in a waterless desert. Never before had Violet and her sistes felt such a craving thirst, and jennie was already beginning to chock, and was in danger of strangulation. At last Violet and her sisters resolved to get water at any cost, even at cost of discovery, and they decided to try and burst a water pipe. But the hardest thing was to find something to burst the pipe with as there seemed to nothing in the room, and they certainly did pray hard.

Jennie was getting worse and so were her sisters. Many of the other poor children had been saved from the trough by dying of thirst themselves, but Violet and her sisters were resolved to get water no matter how. They decided to break the p p pipe which was not very wide, and looked easy to break. But it was harder to break than it looked being made of very strong lead. Jennies peril was becoming greater every moment and her tongue was already sticking out. She was already strangling, and another minutes delay might be fatal. No matter what they tried they could not break the pupe which was very strong, but suddenly Jennie loo Joice I mean looked into the sink and noticed an old steel file, and with a cry of joy she quickly took it up and started to work at the water pipe. The file was old and rusty but Joice managed to file the pipe open and the result was that she was soaked to the skin with the water that squirted out at her.

Thirsty as they were they let poor Jennie get a drink first, and when she had all she wanted, the rest got a drink and as much water as they wanted at that. Their thanks to God cannot be described. They also let the children have a drink and then plugged it up so that it would not be discovered. The next day the Glandelinians took off the blinds in that room from the windows, and Violet and her sisters in hiding whse the foe could not see them noticed that a snowstorm was raging. Tward midnight they were again py praying to God and asking him to cause the rescue of the poor children, and after they finih finished they heard some one coming up the steps, and making very little noise about it to.

"Maybe it is the Glandelinians coming to kill more of the poor children now." Said jennie her face white with terror.....

Who ever it was that pson was now rushing through the hall, and tward the door of that room where Violet and her sisters were in hiding.. The door being unlocked the stranger who ever he was dashed up to the door and burst in. All the children in that room were indeed filled with joy for the stranger wore the Abbieannian uniform.... The children thought that the christians had come to rescue them, but they were disappointed. All of the children did not know him but Violet and her sisters did. It was one of their friends having been spying on the enemy and had s taken refuge in the powder wing for he had killed seven Glandelinian officers in a brawl over some plans he had seized. And one of the officers killed was general Deldons superior general Homer. He did not see Violet and her sisters, who in their hiding place were dressed as Glandelinian children. But when he did discover them in rushing for the same hiding place he thought he had never seen such pretty Glandelinian children, and gazing in wonder at the staring prisoners he grabbed one of them by the naked "Little girl is there any good hiding place in here? I killed seven Glandelinian generals because they would not tell me who the Vivian Girls are as I had seized some plas and wished to take them to theseclittle girls who could saftly convey them through to the christian lines. The Glandelinians are after me hot foot....."

The children were too disappointed to speak but Violet suddenly came up to him and said quiet ly;

"I can find you a real safe plae George if you will trust us. We are spies here but have been accidentally locked in untill now you came and we are the ones whom you were looking for."

The christian soldier in his excitement did not hear Violet's last words but followed them quic,ly quickly where they led him. They led him to a portion of the room where a stairway ran up tward the roof.

"The there is an old attic up there and I'm sure the Glandelinians cannot find you there." Said joice.....

The soldier cli bed up the stairs just as the tramp, tramp of the party of Glandelinians sounded in the hall, and reached the attic none too soon for in burst the Glandelinians just as the little girls reced to their own hiding place, the fiercest loo,i looking men that Violet and her sisters had ever seen before. They were so hedious looking that many of the children shrank from them but Violet and her sisters drew their pistols which they had with them and decided to shoot to kill should they be discovered. Not one of the Glandelinians could speak a tongue in the Angelinian language, and everything they said among themselves Violet and her sisters nevertheless could undertand understand, and as the other children could not answer their tongue en being questioned the leader sent for a soldier who could s e speak the Angelinian tongue, but it was quitethree minuts before one appeared. After saluting each other the lader leader told him what they were in the room for, and then this other Glandelinian turned sharply on violet and her sisters whom they thought were Glandelinian girl scouts who to avoid suspicion had presented themsav presented themselves and demanded with a salute to them also;

"Have you seen any dogs pass through here?"

Violet knowing that the christians were not dogs as the Glandelinians called them, ad knowing that she would not be telling any lie when she said no she answered

"I do not know what you mean by a dog entering our cell room and why don' don't you men knock first when coming in the presence of Glandelinian ladies. But have any one of your bloodhounds gotten away or is he mad?"

"Drat it you------we mean Angelinians little girls. Three Angelinians. And one of them was an Abbieannian captian."

"Yes that is right" Said another Glandelinian to his compaion in his own tongue. Then the officer cont inued. T "Two out of thoese three have escaped. Each one is charged with killing general Homer, and one of them has escaped escaped."

As Violet had only seen one and an Abbieannian at that she knew she could again say no without telling a lie.-

"There were no three Abbieannians or any Angelinians here "She said. "And first you said two esa escaped, and now you say one." Are they rebels?"

"Yes they are rebels." Snapped the Glandelinian shaking his fist int o the air. "They disobey our just l laws, and so they are rebels. Some of these rebels children must have sure y surely hidden those rebel fugitives, and refused to tell where they are."

He turned to some of the other children and said again;

"Now see here if you tell us where they are we will not execute you, but will set you free instead."

"But we did not see any rebels unless they were traitorous Glandelinians." Answered one of the other children.

The Glandelinian now turned to a fierce looking officer and spoke in Glandelinian for a few minutes. What he said was this;

"Those child prisoners will not tell us anything no matter what we do to them. And those girl s scouts must have come in after us And so have not seen the fi fugitive. T he only way to find the fut i fugitives is to seardh every place in this wing. As for those hundreds of little rebel girls we ought to ope them up and----Bang."

The sound of the interrupting shot startled all and they made a dash for the stairs leadding up to the attic. While the Glandelinians had been quest ioning Violet, the Abbieannian officer sneaked into the attic, and in the dim light saw an Abbiea Glandelinian officer fast asleep.

''By gosh I must get his uniform.''Though thought the christian officer. ''It's a nasty gray one of course, but I must have it to escapeagain with the plains through the enemys lines.If I fear I'll be discovered I'll give them up to the Vivian girls.....''

He went up to the sleeping officer and tri tried to take his shining gray coat mingled with designs of skulls and bones off.Gently he tugged at the coat but he awoke the Glandelinian who jumped to his feet in utter amazement.

''My gosh a rebel''He gasped and he attempted to draw a pistol. The christian soldier sprang at him like a tiger and grappled with him. In the fierce scuffle the Glandelinian officer managed to draw his pistol and fire, but the shot flew wide, and the pistol was wrenched from the officers hands.This was the shot that startled the Glandelinians down below who had already started up the steps with heavy tramping as if they were trying to stamp the stairs down. Before the Glandelinians reached the door the christian officer gave the Glandelinian a blow in the temple with the pistol butt killing him instantly. Then quickly taking off his own red uniform he took the gray one from the dead Glandelinian and put it on himself. Then he put the pur red on one on the Glandelinian and just in time too for the Glandelinians threw up the tr trap door and climbed in. -Seeing the dead man in the red uniform they thought he was the escaped Abbioannian, and they saluted to the apparent Glandelinian officer, and quickly dragged the dead Glandelinian down below. At first Violet and her sisters thought t it was the man whom they had helped to hide but when they saw his face they knew that the christian office had tricked them.....

The graycoats dra ged dragged the dead Glandelinian out into the hall and down the series of steps and outside not carrying-him but really dragging him down all the way. After a short while the Angelinian or Abbioannian officer came down wearing the disguise. Several other Glandelinians suddenly appeared and saluted the Angelinian officer as he also appeared thinking that he was their superior officer. He gave orders to them to take the dead man away, and as soon as they disappeared, the Abbioannian officer shook hands with the children and said;

''Though you are Glandelinian girls I'll never forget the service you rendered me and should the child rebels scout on this place and cause its capture or destruction I will not let them make you prisoners.''

As he gazed at them he thought he had seen them somewhere before.

''Are you also prisoners, because you turned rebels?''Asked the Abbioannian officer.

''No we are not prisoners but spies.''Answered Voice Vivian.''And we are not rebels or Glandelinians either.We are Abbioannians, and you are our friend George though you do not know it. The child prisoners here are to die a most cruel death on the second sunday of september and they will be thrown down the slaughter trough..''

'' But the Abbioannin officer answered;

''I'll have Baldwin train his guns on that slaughter house which you indicated an and trough also and blow it to pieces as soon as I reach my lines in safty. I must be going now but never fear I'll prevent that attempted execution.I would like you to follow me but it would not do any good I'm afraid for we would be discovered and then there would be no chance at all.But I'll intrust these plans to you as you can get through their lines easier than I can.''

He embraced and kissed them good bye and then left. Being in the uniform of a Glandelinian as he was he was recognized in several camps and persued as many times but nevertheless managed to reach the christian lines though he had to run and plough through deep snow for two days and was wounded severely the last time he was persued. After a weak of horrible suffering came the day for the horrible execution of a certain number of children the Vivian Girls this time being in Calverine spying on the enemy there and did not see proceedings here any further. The big doors had been swung open and the horrible trough was revealed to many of the poor frightened children.No snow could stay on the trough long as it was for it was quite hot and melted right away, so it was always clear from snow. The trough decended very steeply and nothing could check the speedspeedo fb of the children in they were thrown down, but these fr few hundred were to be thrown down first the remainder being held for the main day to come.The survivors were to be forced to look on the horrible slaughter. In vain during their captivity the Glandelinians had wickedly tried to make the helpless children sin. They had tried every means and four Guardians had pretended to be demons, and dress ed that way, and having grabbed some of the children pretended they were going to take them to hell, knowing that if they pleaded for mercy to the devils that it probably would be sinning.

his had been a very wicked deed and a terrible thing happend and right in the hall of the prison. A terrible black chasm had opened suddenly in the floor underneath the Glandelinians who fell in enveloped in a black tongue of hell fire. Oh the stench and the heat from that little flame that prevaded the air.It was fairly scourching and the stench soffu suffocating.The Glandelinians had dropped the four little girls wan when they fell in with an unearthly screech, but the children did not fall in with them for the floor closed up before they reached the gulf leading to the everlasting fire. The other Glandelinians had soon found out about it and instead of being filled with fear and repentance they decie decided on having revenge on god by making the remaining children see the horrible sights before pitching them down to the most horrible death that had confronted them. Yet every child was undressed and bounced down the slugh.They struggled vehemntly with the Glandelinians but it was in vain and the screaming of those helpless children was appalli g appalling. When the children reached those horrible knives they seemed to fairly turn into blood. After all the three hundred children except the forced onlookers had been cast down the Glandelinians seized the remaining frightened children and despite their pleads and struggles cast them down headlong. Those children were too frightened to utter a sound. Nearer and nearer they approached to that horrible opening, and now they could hear the h grinding noise of those horrible knives. They were almost about to go flying underneath when on top of the slaughter house there was the sound of a deafening explosion, and bricks flew in all directions, and the engine that worked those horrible knives was disabled. The christian batte batteries were shelling shelling the enemys positions again and one of the shells had hit at random and blew down all portions of the slaughter house. The children thus passed under the knives swiftly but the knives not worked by the engine now did not decend and so they fell through something like a shut and went down sliding through the other slough or trough and upon the pile of flesh one after another, from the children who had first passed through and got cut all to pieces.

Blazing emebers had been scattered all ove over and most of it fell on the roof of the powder wing setting it afire. The roof being covered with thick easily burning tar became a roaring furnace and fire depaet departements were hustled out on the double quick to put the blaze out. But before they were within a block of the powder wing the burning roof crashed in with a roar, quickly spreading blazing materinl all over the dreadful powder on the top floor.

BOOM.

There was a din like the exploding of a thrilling thrillion cannon, a blinding flash, and an acrh ac arch of spitting fire shot up for fully five hundred feet while the spongy columns of black smoke rose to over two thousand feet. The explosion was like that of a gigantic volcanic eruption and more louder. Thousands of houses around the powder wing were shattered to fragments by the force of the great explosion and every building for one quarter of the city of Calverine toppled into ruins, and not a house in the whole city had a window pane remaining.Norma Catherine and Julo Callio wawere also badly shaken with considerable damage being done. Of the one million inhibatants in the scores of thousands of houses that had been shattered most were Glandelinian soldiers, and only three hundred of them were left beneath the blazing debris.Horrible indeed is the disaster of war war especially to an enemy of God. The whole slaughter house had been swept away, the trough being blown to nothing, and where the prison and the houses around it stood before there was now a large deep hole. The whole Glandelinian army was thrown into confusion, and they had almost fled, but their generals managed to stem the panic and delivered a sweeping assault of six hours duration upon the christian line to prevent them from rushing the panic stricken fugitives who could not be rallied in time to avery avert a second disaster. It was the first most horrible disaster of the war and the crash of the explosion was heard for one thousand miles.

A great conflargration was now starting in every direction in the region of the explosion and advanced in one general direction tward the south east despite the heavy fall of snow. Violet and her sisters had been close in the region when theblast occured but by the powe and mercy f God had escaped being killed or injured but they had been sent rolling to the bottom of the hole afterwards by the windblast that for a few seconds followed the great xcrash. This hole was slowly filling with water from the bursted water pipes.

252Had not after all the vivian girls been seriously injured by their falling in the pit they would have had the chance of escaping alone immediately and would not have to face the fearful ordeal that was awaiting them. The smoke from the burning fire a mile away thickened every moment untill ten o-clock the smoke grew so thick that it became like night over this part of the city. The smoke blew on the wings of a light breeze which at first seemed like the pproach of some great storm. Then the wind stiffa si stiffened and though it was appearing to be a very cold day the morning air was not cool now it was hotter than any that blows over the great Sahara.

And it was heavy laden with pungent biting smoke. Within the last hour the wk sky had become covered as though with the blackest hurricane or typhoon clouds, while the wind itself had increased to a hurricane. The distant roar sounded like the dks distant unbroken warning cry from ten thousand throats.

''I'm afraid the whole city is burning.''Said joice.

''Then why are we standing here for ?''Demanded violet.''We are hurt pretty badly but we can at least escape the advancing storm of fire.''

''Because we have half a mile of clearing around us and are within reach of water.''

''And you expect us to stay here and be roasted alive?''Cried Angeline.

''This hole is the best chance.''Answered Teddy Rourklin as he cae came down into the deep hole.

''With the road out there?' Shriekd Shrieked Jennie. She called tovher sister violet who had already followed her to the top, staggered forward. Thy were half blind with smoke. She took jennie by the arm and dragged her tward the road.Joice followed but Teddy Rourklin ran after them, the other little girls having remained wisely in the hole.

''You sha ll not go and I deman it.''He cried.''Do as I say or I shall compell you. It only means death.Your only chance is the hole.A fire sea is storming its way from the north west tward us and coming like the wind itself.Are you little girls crazy?''

Still violet stumbled on in the frenzy of a single idea. She and her sisters must get away from this thick suffocating smoke and the fire which came leaping on at the rate of ten miles an o hour.

Teddy found Jennie first, and grasped her arm tightly while he bent his lips to her ear.

''You must not go.''He shouted.''I can't and will not let you go to your deaths out there in these blazing streets.The fire is already starting to burn furiously here.''

Jennie did not struggle.She was bewildered, but the feaing of his strong army gave her new coura courage.

''I know''She said as the smoke began to chock her.''But violet and joice.''

''Follow me.''He broke in.''Keep hold of my arm.''

She seized his sleeve and he with his other hand grasped violet by the arm and forced her to follow him to the center of the great hole. Then he dropped violet who was strangling and turning to all seven of the little girls placed his hand on Jennies shoulder.

''I must go for water.''He said.''You all promish to wait here for me?''

''Yes''Answered joice.

''Lie down then little angels. Keep your mouths close to the ground. The air is fresher there.''

Violet and her sisters sank to their knees, and he disappeared. It seemed to the little girls an eternity before he returned. He had two buckets of fresh cold water.They knew nothing of his stumbling fight to the pool of water formed by the bursted pipes and back through the blinding smoke to them. But one of the little girls heard his heavy breathing before they saw him and sank from a kneeling posture flat to the ground for relief. He stopped beside them.

''I'm going to throw this water over you little girls.''He said panting.

''So do not be frightened.''

''A drink.''Shouted Joice.''Please give me a drink.''

She scrambld on her hands ad knees to the two buckets. But the boy gently brushed her back.

''I'll have to wet you first.''He said.

Very gently he poured the water over their hair and face, then drenched their clothes. It refreshed them like a cool breeze from heaven. He then motioned their handkerchiefs and bade them to keep them over their nose and mouths. Then he rose and started off again.Uncon Unconsciously Violet reached out for him.

''You are not going again?''She pleaded.

''More water while I can.''He answered.

It took him twice as long to makethe second trip. He again doused h them and and mouths. Then he rose and started off again.Uncon Unconsciously Violet reached out for him.

''You are not going again!''She pleaded.
''More water while I can.''He answered.
It took him twice as long to makothe second trip. He again douced h them and gave them each a long deep drink. Then once more he started for water.
Violet rose to her knees.
''Don't go.''She chocked.''It's dangerous. ''
She clutched his trousers leg.
''There is not much time.''He panted. He could not move with her little hand detaining him. The tug of her gentle fingers at his ankle went to his head like wine. For a second he lost conscious ness of overeverything else but the one past that this supreme moment she and her beautiful little sisters wished him by their side. He could have faced death quite cheerfully so. But death was not for them. They must live if the whole universe perish. Very gel gently he tried to loosen her pure white littlevfingers. But she tightened her grip.
''No, don't go.''She sobbed. You will surely perish.''
The boy knelt beside her.
''I must go.''He said.''But I'll come bak back. ''
He grasped her hand. She curled her fingers about his uncinsciously as a little child would do when finding a hand in the dark.
''I'd fight my way through hell if I could get back.''He said as he broke away and plunged again into the dense smoke fog.The tidal wave of flam flamec swept on. Leaping streets of any size in width singing hundreds of bul buildinfs with its breath, it roared on whistling tremendously overhead and shrieking and booming in an orgry of devastation. The black clouds overhead flashed at times in ghastly luridness, pierced by zipping tongues of flame as sharp as lightning flashes.It seemed as if the elements had gone mad n and were staking the world as though it were again a molten planit. When the little boy staggered back from his third trip a burning tree fell at his heels as he cleared the edge of the city. Je nnie was burrowing her hot face into the sod with whin pering cries, joice was facing the heat with lips drawn back trying as much as possible to sheild violet behind her who was on her knees.
''Lie down all of you.''The boy commanded.
He threw a handful of the precious water in jennies face. Then falling prone himself he splashed the hair of the rest.Then he removed his outside shirt and sa soaking it covered joices head with it.Then he removed his under shirt and did the same to violet. The heat struck his naked skin wi with a sting that felt like the cut of a hundred leathern lashes. The hot air pierced their lungs like acid fumes. On three sides now about the holes edge houses crashed in fairly gug gutted in a single meni minute, the wind speeding the sparks like white hot steel bullets. Above the hole now a man could not have breathed and lived.As it was all eight thought that their end had come.Teddy moved closer to violet and without lifiting his head he found the bucket with a grouping hand. The water was lukewarm but he poured more of it over her. But despite the water their tongues were beginning to swell and each word was at the cost of a biting inhalition of burning air. Their heads fell. They pressed their nostrils into the ground. T eddy motioned their handkerchiefs ad the little girls nearly com completely suffocating placed it against their mouths. Over their heads the hot winds blew against their backs pressing something like a million hot needles.The sky was lurid with hedious flames, and buildings in all directions became like inf inf infernoes. The roaring hurricane of fire and hot scourching air swapt over and beyond, across the road it sprang , and down the road and on.The tempetuious howl subsided into a crackling chatter. Then came bobrief puss puffs of cool wind, not many, just a single breath or two.
But in a few minutes another came and blew off the lower gases. The blazing houses were still all around them but the flames now went straight up making a scene worse than the burning of Rome.yBut the waves of flame soon swept tward the southeast, and the boy and violet and her sisters ran out of the hole and tward the open ground.It took about three hours to leave the burning city whose heat had caused thesnow to turn into water all around, and then all night long they traveled fast through rain and snow and then again through the same raging snowstorm where it was too far from the city to be warm enough to rain, and even when morning camen party of Glandelinians discovered them and gave case chase. They could not however catch the children for suddenly Hundreds of Abbieannians cme into view, through the snow pall and interceded for them, and in a few more hours general general general Hanson once more saw his loving little nieces. The great governer general pacing up and down the vera veranda of his headquarters despite the cold and flying snow had his own vision of the sad affair....

The gl[illegible]glaring injust ice of the chastisement delivered to hundreds of thousands of the poor child slaves and prisoners st ung him more than any kind of disgrace could. His imortal nature was throughoutly aroused, passion passions of rage and desires for vengeance on the Glandelinians struck him in alternate fury. An angry strength surged through his tall stalwart frame.

Here thousands upon thousands of helpless children being captured and cruelly tortured by human demon savages, who did this because they hated children of the christians. He had seen hundreds of children strangled, their faces black their eyes bl bulging their t un t ongues protruding. He saw countless numbers with their throats cut from ear to ear, their faces set in a terrible grin of death.Many he had seen with sliced bodies with their intestines mingled with the dead bodies, and to think of all this filled him with horror and terror. Why is it that he with his immense christian armies besieging Norma catherine could not put a stop o t o it.! Would a general move on the pat of the christian armies rise Glandelinia to fight-a more desperate battle than ever before? What was the matter with his aid governer James Gannon of Abbieannia the Kings assistant? Could he not do something to quell this horrible deed of Glandelinia? What is to come next I wonder? So were the thoughts that passed through his head hor hour after hour.

CHAPTER TWENTY FOUR.

THE BATTLE OF LUCILLE RICKSON.

Two days after another regular typhoon of battle came which was worse than the ones gone before. Hanson had massed all his batteries to storm the enemy enemys positions wity with the greatest artillery fire known in actual war fare and after the-cannonading had continued for about three hours without intermission the Glandelinians suddenly came upon his lines with the fury of a sweeping tidal wave. The battle known as Lucille Rickson raged for a whole day in general fury and for up to this time of the war was the most titanic struggle ever seen. For fully sisteen hours fifteen charges were made by fifteen million Glandelinians each time and their lines were torn and shattered for every repulse and for every charge the christ ian fire roared like a million cannon.

To make matters worse the main christian batteries of a hun dred thousand cannon thundered in horro horrifying salvoes and hundreds of houses in Calverine itself was torn to pieces by the storm of explod ing shells, and thousands of others unroofed and more fires set among the unburned portion of the city of Norma Catherine. At one time one of the Glandelinian onslaughts was something terrible and though they met a terrific tearing fire they were like the sea swamping the lowlands, the whole christian line was driven back in confusion and only by the efforts of general Hansion and other commanders were the reserves thrown in the others rallied, and the Glandelinians finally swept back with the loss of two million in killed and woundd wounded. Hanson and the rest of the generals who directed operations made report after report to each other declar ing that the battle was the worse ever seen before in the war and the battle line extended for fully fourty miles.

During the next day when it resumed it raged with redoubled fury, and Hanson was compelled to flee his headquarters on account of the near approach of battle and why his headquarters were not literally blown down by shells was a mystery. Tward the afternoon of thatvday it reached its highest fury the foe making in all fourty seven great on-slaughts in quick succession, but their same number of waves were torn and mangled badly. The battle really raged for fully fourty eight hours without ceasing an hour excepting during the night. All of the Glandelinian columns were fairly smashed down and two thirds of the whole Glandelinian army at this section was completely destroyed during the terrific battle.

Near Hansons headquarters big trees were blown down as if a tornado swept through by the explosions of shells, and barns where he kept horses, wooden barracks for soldiers, sheds, captured f, flower hourses, fences telegraph poles and wires were disabled and terrific havoc was wrought. It was just as if a terrific cyclone had struck the region for that length of distance and when the battle was finally over as a draw with no preactical practa no advantage of any kind on both sides the extent of the damage could not be readily found out, and such a snowstorm followd the battle the next day that it was believed by the besieged themselves that the Calverinian country was about to turn into a north pole. The losses on both sides were too severe t o be related. But some time after the conflict the christians had about ten million wounded within their possession whom the soldiers and red cross cummmes had picked up on the field of the bloody battle. And these wounded were all Glandelinians. A day later after the wind died away and the snow ceased to fall it got very calm and cold the cold wave com ing on like a frogid zone and many wounded of both sides were frozen to death before they could be picked up? The dead lay in vast fields for miles and were half buried in the deep snow. This battle had been indeed the torture of an earthly hell. It had raged with a greater violence than any known in battle before and the Angelinians estimated that about four hundred battle flags were soaked in blood. Despite the great coldness some of the Angelinians decided to make a trip into a stretch of woods beyond with good arms and see if the enemy were going to make any other movements as the great artillery storm occasionally recommenced. Never did they dream of the thrilling adventure they were going to have. They all mounted their horses and ponies and set off at a good clip tward the woods and when th they reahed it violet and her sisters who were also wit h these scouts saw a beaut iful thing in the form of a butterflys wings and yearned to have a looked and see what it really was.The soldiers could not very well trust the little girls alone for these woods as reported swarmed with wild beasts, and these wild beast were men wearing gray uniforms.' AND SO THE MEN DECIDED TO GO WITH THEM AND WATCH THAT NO HARM CAME TO THEM.

Violet was the first among the rgion and suddenly discovered something lying stil and coiled up on the ground that looked very much like a sort of snake, and st op stooping saw the naked form of a child with its body gashed open and the interior cleaned out. Horrified beyond describing they shrank back and suddenly they saw men in gray advancing and got out of the way in time tel ing the officer of the men what they had seen. In examining the woods with his field glasses the good soldiers saw that for some reason they were completely surrounded by Glandelinians, then dashed ahead just as several of the squads of Glandelinians started rushing forward, the foe hav ing crouched among the many fallen trees thrown down by the recent shell storm of the past b battle. The children were forced to mount their ponies quickly and just in time for more Glandelinians were advancing from another direction.The leader of the escorting christian soldiers drawing his guns fired six shots at the advancing Glandelinians then again dashed ahead just as several of the nearest Glandelinians d darted their bayn bayonets at him. He avoided the deadly thrusts and pierced one of his assailants through the heart with his sabre. But now they found themselves persued by hundreds of the desperate Glandelinian Gurdes. The officer decide decided to make a desperate escape if he could for he wished to avoid a battle with such uneven numbers of fierce Glandelinians but there was something the matter with his horse, and this caused delay. Violet and her sisters saw to the right a swarm of Zimmermannians who were preparing to make a charge upon them, but the soldiers drew their pistols and discharged them among the Glandelinians.Many were killed by the sudden blaze of fire but the rest who had scattered soon came back and made a fierce attack upon the party of christians. Many of the Glandelinians were killed in this hand to hand s conflict with the christian soldiers, and one of the men who had a grenade bombed the-Glandelinians blowing several of them to pieces.

Several of the Glandelinians had surrounded violet's pony and was trying to drag he from it.The Angelinians discharged another volley among the Glandelinians who were making cries like real demons..... The christian soldiers handled their guns like clubs striking right and left, and it was not long before violet's assailants were driven off, but they had had quite a time with the other gurdes, and the rest of the wicked Glandelinians.The more they killed or wounded the more seemed to be coming, keeping up such a yelling that it would be heard far into the woods.

"Gracious but those Glandelinians are fierce."Thought violet violet with a shudder.

Having made a breach the little girls with the soldiers decided to make a sudden dash.... So seeing the advatage, they started with some sudden speed that it at once scattered the Glandelinians sending quite a number sprawling like logs.On and on they galloped persued by the Glandelinians who raised a hue and cry.The party of christians however were outdistancing the Glandelinians rapidly.....

"Golly."Said one of the troopers."I did not know that there were such fierce looking Glandelinians in those woods."

"I did not know that there were any Glandelinians in these parts at all."Said one of the men."It did certainly surprise me alright ."

''Well then you found out.''Laughed the leadgr.''The whole of galverinia seemed to be covered with these dirty hearted glandelinians.But we had better hurry up for they aregaining on us again, and as I was saying;

''What in the nameof common sense is the matter with the ground?''''Interrupted one of the men as the earth under him began to sink in slowly.

''Goodness gracious.''Gasped the leader as they all drew their horses backwards.A large part of the ground caved in revealing a dark opening as dark as erebus. ..... Right after they found themselves going down slowly and before they knew it more of the ground caved in under them with a roar letting them down int o a dark cavern with a thud.

''Now where are we?''''Gasped the soldiers in amazement.

''Well what next I wonder!''Said the la leader.''First we run into a pack of glandelinians and now we go riding down as to say into a great cavern.''

''How can we get out?''Asked violet.''This cavern seems to have many labyrinthian passages....''

''I know it''Said the leader of the Angelinians looking through one of the passages. What he saw made him gasp in wonder and amazement. The passage was filled with an unearthly glow which made violet and her sisters fell sort of creepy as they saw it though no hot scourching blasts came from beyond. Sometimes it would suddenly grow brighter then fade to a dull glow. The Angelinian officer dshing to discover the way out and also to discover the meaning of this uncanny glow decided to explore it anyway, thinking that if there was a passage way he could have a gigant ic mine placed in it and blow up the enemys entire works as the cavern seemed to be directly underneath the enemys advanced position and to calling the others to follow he went through the curved opening..... Violet and her sisters at first being somewhat frightened had to be coaxed before they would follow for they dreaded that it was some trap probably set by the enemy or that it was a den of glandelinians.

For quite a while they went on violet and her sisters hesitating hesitating once in a while, and though the queer glow increased in brightness it was no warmer. Once in a while the glow would sudde nly became dazzling, then disappear altogether for a minute, then repa reappear again.Violet and her sisters could not help from being scared now and it even scared the wits out of them when the light became suddenly dazzling.

''This is certainly strange.''Uttered the Angelinian leader.''This glow seems to get more brighter, dies out, comes again with dazzling brightness as we go on but we cannot feel any heat whatever or see the source of the whole myster mystery whatever. I wonder what causes it?''

''You have got me sure.''Answered one of his lieutenants.

''It looks like fire down beyond but no heat can be felt, and neither is there any steam or sulphurious gases.''Said one of the privates.

On and on they went through the labyrinthian a passage the glow getting redder and redder but still no heat could be felt nor could they see any steam of smell the burning stench of sulphurious gases. There was no noise like the roaring of fire or the hissing of lava and this mystery did certdnly puzzle them all.Besides instead of going downwards our or upwards the path led straight ahead like a road. Only once in a while did they come to u an up or down grade, but it did not descent very much.

At last they came to the end of the passage and found themselves in a large cavern which was also filled with the uncanny glow but which was more brighter than it had been in the passage way. This of course astonished them all the more.

''This is a strange mystery.''Said the Angelinian leader.''It als looks quite uncanny over there inside that grotto.It's a darker red over there.''

''Shal we go in there?''Asked one of the privates thinking that his superior dreaded to.

''We might as well''Said the captian.''The sooner we solve the wonderful mystery the better.''

They went near enough to the dark red opening of the cavern and no sooner had they glanced into it they saw that instead of a floor it was an abyss of unfathomable depth and was indeed quite dark down below, while a strange thundering sound occasionally seemed to come from below. They turned away from this dreaded opening and after walking quite a distance through the very large cavern they noticed a wreath of peculiar yellowish greenish bluish and red vapor resting g against the ceiling and inside the cavern there was a peculiar sweet smell. But this immense cavern was no warmer or cooler than the passage way.

THE LOYALTY IN THE MINDS OF A WELL INFORMED CHRISTIAN GENERAL.

I the writer author of the story of the Realms of the Unreal if you please will relate this incident not as if the Rev Henry had ever received a special honor from having been prayed by a celebrated christian general; on the contrary, this Serious general, did in fact every christian soldier and officer in the Abbessinian and Angelinian armies though they had attained the highest degree on hon our or spir itual favors from god during the rebellion must down to the greatest dignity, the most unreserved servility and grace to even be permitted at any time to say ignorant and unlearned and inferior people , and imagine that it is prayed only by the simple and most ignorant.

After having been wounded at the battle of Crowley general Phillimenberger Simonmin had nevertheless retained his command despite all difficulties and despite the agony he suffered from his bullet torn knee. He remained untill general Menon then preparing for the advance on Jeanie Wren grew had sent general Hamilitor paterion to relieve him and take his place. General Simonmin however did not retire from active service as many had supposed he would but remained quiet and in the generals hospital untill he was able to get are nd again.

Then he took command of a series of christian armies in the western part of Galverinia and started operations against the w foe. It was his army which had been the one sixty million strong to have crushed and defeated the big foe army a hundred and thirty million strong. As that went on, though for a time he fought no further battles and sacrifice general Semonmin Arenburg had nevertheless, by his vigorious campaigns, and by his tremendous raids, and defeating scarons of fee armies without a b battle by surprising and capturing them had o thus reason throughout the whole of the Galverinian and Angelinian countries, as the most skilfull and best christian general. Princely and royal personages were numbered among his friendly visitors, correspondents came to his army and took pictures of him on the sly, and his opinion and advice concerning the movements of other christian armies in the efforts to overthrow the rebellion was sought for at the most momentous moments in the efforts to overthrow the rebellion was sought for at the most momentous moments in the efforts to overthrow the rebellion was sought for at the most momentous war consultations. At the most serious operations against the army in keeping slave of Abbessinian armies all of Northwestern Galverinia, and keeping the enemy from moving on Adrian victory to crush Russians reign general Phillimenberger Semonmin was not only called upon to attend but he offended with such great accuracy that the whole world the astonished and believed that in the time he would himself capture Adrian victory, and the Do Inexplicamerican Islands even if other generals could not do it. All Abbessinia was aware of this and that general Phillimenberger Simonmin was a true venerator of the Blessed Mother of God and a zealous rooter of the Holy Rosary Rosary, no one, not even any of his friends of or any christian general our his whole army exercised. Accidentally however his devotion to the holy rosary was brought to light.

On June 1918. Simonmin had heard of the capture of Julio Gallio and had them within 24 hours of the camp. He made no advances however but met such fierce opposition that a months time organized an immense army and prepared to make a movement to help Russian besieged Adrian victory fortifications and capture the city and the whole force of the enemy. He made no advances however but met such fierce opposition that it was months before he ever arrived to the scene and determined to besiged Jeanie Yvette as soon as possible. At this time having heard of general Simonmin failure at the battle of Galverina Hills he determined to go and see him and re bringing his army closer and leaving it under the command of general I pemble my pastoral he reached Simonmin broken armies on the Thirteenth of October. General Simonmin had with him on this occasion a priest, a worthy priest who had obtained and required ruperies for any soldier or officer who had brought them to him. Even now during most his leasure hours the priest had applied himself to this work, even at the rear of the lines during battles. One day after general Simonmin had reprimanded himself with the condition of general Simmon army and having done all he could to restore it by sparing some of his own troops and provisions and artillery, and having found it finally most satisfactorily he said smilingly to the priest, ''Reverend Father you are to undertake the operation----will you?''?!''

''Really general I do not quite understand you.....''Replied the Angelinian priest.''''''

''What do you mean general Arenburg?''Asked Semmon putting an arm around his soldier friend.

''There that's doing fine for general Simmons army now ain't it. Now I must call upon your assistance my honored fd friend. I have a patient that no doctor and help. It is indeed a rather grave case a most serious fracture. Now Rev Thereupon General Consentinus, Arenburg took a beautiful lace bedecked rosary from his pocket and held it up with the words:"

"See this is the rosary, and this is the cross fracture; this is what I wish you to operate on for me. Will you?!!!!"

Did the great christian general pull!!!!---pull!!!!----my reluctant of unmentionable out of his pocket and displayed it before the priest and his great friend, and many other officers and even the women girls who happened to p be present as well as Mistress Angelina they would not have looked more amazed than they did at the sight.. of the broken pi rosary that phenomenon held up before them. Holding this the great general cried laughing!!!!!

"Oh the Cross you all make over you beautiful children. Are you all fastend so surprised to see and learn that I carry a rosary with me? Why yes all ought to know I am as good a christian as any of you Anglician generals ever so open little Virgin Christ how then can I but highly esteem this prayer? If I am weary about the condition of my cruzier, he or then a feather, can cause a disorder threatening me, and if my efforts did not produce the most desired effects!!!!---I turn to him this fortold as "Queen of the girls" and I pray the Queen my. Unfortunately my extensive pre occupations, my work, and so on leaves me little open space time to recite this excellent prayer as I would wish. I must so, to say, steal from my duties the time to my heart can desire, there the decalogue!!!!---is seen as I am seated at my home, in the carriage, or in a coach, my hand glides into my pocket and I pray the Rosary as well as circumstances will also allow!!!!---!!!!!

Thirteen General Commendations, Arenberg took a beautiful but broken penny from his pocket and held it up with the words"

"This this is the patient, and this is the five fractures; this is what I wish you to

They attempted to make the best of an unpromising & and tragic situation. But a single break that could be forced by the ghandelinians was left unrecorded, not even the historian, the Catholic professors, Chervins and allschools. The ghandelinians made the possession of even or of books and images which had been freely sold in public a pretext for imprisonments and conviction.. Calverinian soldiers or men who at the entrance of yiddish ghetto had been captured and then forced into the ghandelinian army were disarmed and sent to labor battalions and forced to work in the fort fortifications under fire from christian batteries at gunboats Groot and numerous armoured cars taken to squeeze every ounce out of the helpless Calverinian people, and many soldiers who had been taken prisoners during the Julio Gallio Battle were massacred pitilessly.....

In the meantime running northwest from the city portion of Yaoun Gatherine, and not far from Evangelinia ground, and along the banks of the brantiful Yaoun yun river was the Abbreviate, gendinia, ni Calverina Railroad, and it was toward this that the march of a large platoon of our correspondents were directing their steps. Of course they were not soldier, neither spies, or anything like that ,in fact they had no intentions of ever entering the war on one side or the other, being right saving americans, mostly Irish and Germans but nevertheless knowing that they would meet with an account of the war they were nevertheless prepared, and would not allow themselves to be surprised by the enemy in case they encountered any of the Angelinian rebels. They were fully armed like soldiers but dressed as civilians or like ,workmen, and some of them had small flags with them of the deer old Star and Stripes. Though they claimed they had nothing to do with the war, they nevertheless were fully on the side of the Angelinians, and did not favor the Angelinian rebels at all. They were hoping toward Julio Gallio without purpose of trying to make a picture of the great camps which was progressing, and if they could but only reach the city not only would their trip be shortened, but they would probably find themselves back of the big forces of Angelinian and Abyssinitilian troops and even Calverinians who were fighting the foe and whose batteries of artillery were in action day after day and night after night., and then be out of the danger zone, so the y did not care to get too close to the camps for shell and shrapnell no doubt was dropping everywhere like a hailstorm..!!!.!!

Then on by while looking out for foes who had been following them,and while seeking provisions, and learning of the route they were to take they heard far ahead of them but many miles away that sounded like the rolling of many thunder storms at one time, but one of the guerinans who was a German and whose ears were keener knew insisted that it was the report of thousands of besieging christian guns, and probably the added thunder of the fort artillery. Later they were to learn that the ghandelinians had at one part of the besieged region made a desperate attack which had been so successful as to advance a portion of the ghandelinian army to a certain distance, and then being counter attacked by an overwhelming force of Calverinians the Angelinian rebels had been forced to take possession of five small towns at the outskirts of Julio Gallio called Arambolos and were using i them as a series of strongholds, and that they had repulsed desperately many christinte efforts to drive them out and that a small battery of advanced christian artillery had been placed upon a hill,called Mt Hurcullin Rebelin two miles away from the villages and were shelling these ghandelinians with great regularity and the noise sounded like thousands of small fire crackers on the fourth of July the reports are continuous so continue & but nevertheless are louder than any thunder clap ever heard.

This large party of guerinan war correspondents were getting closer and closer t to the sound of firing and they began to rightly surmise that they were behind the besieging Angelinian positions and encampments, and that to keep on would pitch them right into a hornets nest for on telling if any ghandelinian army moving to Julio Gallio help might not take it in mind to strike a portion of the christian besieging line in the rear and create a knib battle. that would not be pleasant for the guerinan themselves, and they did not wish to get into any connection with the rebels.

CHAPTER TWENTY FIVE.

So they changed their course to circle to the south, intending to go a distance away from the actual continual battle itself and even into contact with an isolated part of the lines if possible. So they came to the edge of a sort of large plain and took a position on a bare hill devoid of any high trees and which had on its top a peculiar bowl like depression, which for any amount of soldiers would be a n n natural place to use as a fortress or to use as a sniknk. Of course these war correspondents had no idea that they were in any danger particularly, for to their belief there was no ghandelinians within fourty miles of them, and the only enemies that met be near were Angelinians, but might was coming on, and they were very tired from their long hike during that awfully hot day..!!!

It was somewhere along toward morning in that very dark hour that precedes the break of of day that a number of shots rang out, and the Americans jumped up to find their continual struggling in the dark with even one who was cursing, swearing, and shouting something loudly in Latin. Then two other dark figures were charging over the rim of the peculiar hill. But the fight did not last long, four of the Irishmen had gone to the aid of the Irish sentinel, and the three attackers were herded down the hill. A few minutes later a wild shot chorus of yells broke loose from the jungle below the war correspondents.

"Get your weapons ready and the damn where you can command the approach to the hill." Ordered the american who was the leader.He himself was the re, seemingly everywhere at once seeing that his friends were in position to present a united front. They did not know who the three assailants were or whether they had been Angelinians who mistook the them for ghandelinians, neither did they know the the main body yelling so fiercely were but never nevertheless they were going to take no chances. It was the fr opinion that they would not allow themselves to be attacked. If Angelinians came they would shoot to them in Latin and if they were foes and the answer would not be satisfactorily they would fight to the last. Soon in the sky they could see a very ominous dull red reflection that glowed sharply, then sank away then glowed again.

"Something burning was the comment among them but they did not know then that the Angelinians had stalking "ll all on a fierce surprise attack had set the many small towns used by the enemy as spot strongholds on fire, virtually razed many buildings with a barrot of artillery,and that the ghandelinians there having managed to fight their way through the besieging lines were fleeing northward. The platoon of guerinan war correspondents and photographers and newspaper men lay right in the path of their desperate flight, as it happened, and three of their scouts climbing the hill had run into the americans sentinel and believed that soldiers held the position.

"The Angelinian rebels are coming "here our said, and straining their eyes in the intense darkness the guerinans could see a large mass of dark forms clambering slowly up the slope to attack them. Then their leader gave a loud shout in Latin just to find out who they were"Down with the ghandelinian Grenzers."

There was a tremendous yell of fury from the approaching men and a volley of great intensity crashed out, and bullets spattered among the guerinans but they lay so low that not one was hit. Then as the leader gave the order the war correspondents crashed away with their own rifles and pistols firing point blank into there or sprawling shapes not fifty yar yards away. On and on they came and still on, until they reached the very edge of the position, and then before the fierce resistance of the guerinans the attack of the rebels crumbled right there, and the survivors went back down the hill firing as they slowly re treated. Over two hundred and fir fifty ghandelinians had been shot down, and ten of the guerinans were injured but none killed. There was only a few minutes lull then the rebels were coming on again with redoubled fury. There were the two hundred americans and heavy with their firearms were increasingly this time than before. To one side of them they could hear the regular crack of a small caliber weapon and in the hill between a valleys, they discovered it was some fifteen old youngester a Calverinian who had made a long dangerous trip to follow the brave guerinans. And it was just at that moment that down y near the foot of the hill a brighter flash of fire flamed up and they got their own

Jennie was thirsty and begged the men to get the water someway.

European General Concentration, Arensburg took a beautiful but broken greasy from his pocket and held it up with the words:"

"See this is the publicity and this is the [illegible] structure; this is what I wish [illegible] and only look at old captain Antonio Swanderbomb in his peculiar robes of grey, and heard his stentorian voice bellowing out to the Ghandelainians under his command. After the first the second attack also broke up with two hundred more glandelainians killed or wounded and before it got to the top of the hill, and this time no one was even injured among the guerrisons. F F For the third time the same glandelainians assembled at the foot and charged up just as down again. But half way up just as the Zoorlaurs poured into them another storm of volleys, they turned and fled for good.

Then upon their rare there burst the sound of a thousand cavalry forces, and the sound of an immense volume of shots, the sigh of horses, yells of men, the ring of cutrus and the call of bugles and a square a plain of a gulley came an endless stream of horsemen in purple, red and grey a, closely intermingled in a long fighting line. The guerrisons then stood up and then charged ignoring the hail-wrain of bullets that whistled around them them as the glandelainians flee fled through the jungle. But one of the guerrisons three men and Burgon Commodore felt a thump against his chest and a spent ball went through a note ball and made a ragged hole in its middle.

Then a large party of guerrisons themselves had a little battle all to themselves with the enemy and the Angelainians did not know a single thing about it, for the war correspondents kept it all to themselves!.....

One of the saddest things that probably have ever occured during this war and so early also, and which caused a most terrific disaster beyond conceiving to the c ristian cause itself was brought on by a large number of traitors, traitors through ambition and nothing else. Maybe it may be hard to believe it seems strange to write this, but I must mention to say that the traitors were nothing else but fifty nuns and their fathe r Superior not far from the outskirts of Julio Gallio. These nuns had never used the most necessary genius of God to overcome their blindness and so when the critical time came for their total they fell almost as the evil spirits themselves had fallen in their rebellion in heaven. Of course the Nuns did not have no malice against any one, nor neither were they traitors to their own Religious life, it was nothing but cowardice that brought them to do what they did and which is mentioned here. About six weeks after the enemy had fully completed their capture of the whole of trina victory, embracing Julio Gallio and the green Catherine Sections, a large force of the enemy under general Burger Stanek had approached the location where the nuns had their convents and the priest being ordered the same gave as much information as possible to the enemy concerning the nearest christian armies, of the strength of the armies then advancing under general Hamlyn to besiege Trina victory, of al of Hampton plans to raise Armageddon St. glare and of also the strength of any other christian or army that might be there.

This of course saved three sisters from the fate that it was expected the enemy would have caused to them. The enemy did not raid or ransack the place nor nor neither were the nuns molested or abused, and as soon as possible the enemy left the region without doing anything to the sisters or their property. This information however was very valuable to general Burger since the had been near this place and recieving it he advanced great armies up to the location mentioned by the sisters and in a fortnight without even a single battle a whole christian army under general Hamman was captured a force of nearly a million men, all the towns in their possession w had been blown up or set on fire, great stretches of forests were laid in waste by incendiary fires, all streams of water in that location were poisoned, or filled with mud and a the whole region was surrounding with the enemy. Later on the enemy captured Juanio Martin destroying the christian force the garrisons there and blew up all the ammunition factories that were at that place. At another town c alled Clarinda the enemy captured and slaughtered another christian force and many millions of children, and committed all the vilest enormities that could ever be thought of. It soon ended in a t rrible disaster however and for the christian cause at that, within two weeks time before the arrival of Hamilton army the enemy were in possession of over a hundred miles of territory, and had received immense troops and reinforcements, huge parks of batteries, plenty of ammunition and were preparing their themselves to resist any fierce seige that could ever be made. The advanced fierce of guardian troops coming up to the region were immediately surrounded and forced to surrender, and one of the divisions who were several another point fell into an ambuscade, and to my amazement, the surrender being ruthlessly butchered, although the half million confidence in God that Edmund Hotter found it despite all this reverse [illegible] possible to reach Julio Gallio at the time on account of the dangerous character of the enemy and he almost felt sure from this time forward no matter how faithfully they are said are not sure not accursed. Thus the reason that later on he had to fight his war to Julio Gallio, through his Comparate conflict at Angelina Ham, Barnes springs, and other important points written in the enstersyt. Nevertheless though at first he was terribly disappointed and discouraged, and though he almost lost faith in prayer, he did repent of his sin of doubt and obtained to invest the regions around Rambo victim, but at that day was sadly and badly injured in the cupl e explosion of a mine set off by the enemy and over a hundred thousand of his men were dar troyed or restored shell shock and deaf after the din of the blast, and terrible damage was done for twenty miles by the commotion.

It did look indeed that as wicked as the glandelainians were they were really getting the better of the christians for hours this time, but despite the seriously wounding of general Hamilton and the loss of so many of his men and officers by the awful mine explosion the main army nevertheless was not demorlli and nothing disheartened, and they pressed upon the whole region until Hamilton half recovering from his wound finally fought the bloody battle of Angelina Ham.

But this was not the main disaster I am to write of. It happened elsewhere. And this was to general Concentration Arensburgs army while he was visiting general Hamman and had that little encounter with the Enemy. Being without their main leader they were not able to withstand the onsense of a mighty host of glandelainians under general Burgess Stanley, and when they did stand and resist the e fe they whole army was smashed, and forced to fall back, with their leader slain and with half their number down in killed and wounded. The enemy almost routed the whole force and drove many divisions helter s e skelter in every direction capturing large parts of his guns, many battle flags, and r great provisions. While at Hamans headquarters and welcome to his general disarmament army was badly walloped but fortunately through the means of telegraph while he was on his way again general Concentration Arensburg heard of the disaster sweeping not only his army but everywhere, of the disabling of Hamilton and of the destruction to forty towns and whole forces out of words and forests, and the spreading of the enemy over territory for the distance of three hundred miles within the space of two months. General Concentration was then very apprehensive, but nevertheless as many men from towns flocked to his and enlisted into his army and so many more troops came from seemingly nowhere, he hastened to the rescue of the force which was defeated and which still fought for six days but could never stand before the advancing Hamleys. He reached the scene in time however and send the new forces upon the rear of the victorious army of the enemy. It took two more days of desperate fighting over a space of country extending twenty miles but nevertheless the battle was finally won, but unfortunately general Concentration received a re wound in the shoulder and thigh, as a whole section of his army in making a terrific charge met a terrific withering fire that wiped out whole divisions before the charge was won. The thunder of artillery, the roar of explosions, and the noise of shooting and firing all the length of that terrific battle was exceedingly severe and shook the whole country like an earthquake. This was afterwards known as the battle of Kingdom Calverdale and lasted fully nine days. The foe lost was not stated as severe it was but Concentration declared he lost 15,000,000 in killed and wounded but make a statement however that he could not confirm it as many of his officers afterwards in stating their losses declared it to be over eighteen million instead of ten but for that time it was a terrific battle indeed and shocked the world on account of its violence so early in the war.

Nevertheless this horror and disaster caused by the arms were not left unless at all. Finding out the real enemy, a portion of Concentrations scouts reaching the region after fighting the way through for sixty days of battles, raids, and devastating artillery storms, managed to drive many foe forces from the region with wicked slaughter, and these scouts were in double time now captured and brought before general Concentration Arensburg. It was a sad day for him but now nevertheless this was his verdict when the sisters were Courtmartialled.

"You are traitors and the fate of a traitor you shall suffer in this case. You still to discharged from your Religious State in disgrace and within fifteen months from that time face the firing squad. Get with you to the prisons."

[illegible] extremely too dangerous to drink from but we cannot pass it because it is directly across our way."

Jennie was thirsty and begged the men to get the water someway.

Thereupon General Commandino, Arnsburg took a beautiful but broken scenery from his [illegible]

To the soldiers of general Zimmermanns command it did indeed seem very strange that he had even commanded the condemnation of Fifty Four priests sisters to die before the firing squad for Treason and Cowardice.Some generals finally approached general Commandino Arnsburg and said-

"Your Excellency. We cannot believe it possible that these Fifty nuns are really guilty of such a misdemeanor. They may have been falsely suspected and thus are really victims of the enemy. It would really a be impossible for any given number of Holy sisters who embrace a Religious Lifelife to become Great Cowards on the charge of the Loss of the Grace of God, and betray the Sacred Heart and the Angelinian Cause to the enemy."

Zimmermanns answer r answer was more prompt than ever expected.

"I knew it absolutely" He said fiercely. "I have looked into the whole matter, during the trial and found evidence against them which fu lly proves they are really traitors of the worse kind in the world and Cowards without doubt before Heaven and Hart h. And besides there's another thing which I and the whole Council and Court Marshall discovered which you or the others knew nothing about. And That I also looked into and this proves that you or no one could have any chance of accusing me or of committing any vile crime against all Religious persons of the Good old Catholic. Catholic Faithalso there was no nuns really in that convent and no one elsethere in the region but the enemy. I have papers and documents that really prove these condemned prisoners are really no more nuns than you or I. They are really traitors of course— Calvarinians by birth, but Cowards and sneaks as green as grass. They are men disguised as nuns with the hope of fooling us Angelinians and with the hope that they can make a fool out of ME. But no one has tricked me yet and neither have the courtmarshall been tricked yet. Any person whether woman or man or even a fourteen or fifteen year old child boy or girl they pay a penny as a man or priest for the reason of betray betraying us or spy on us whether Glandelinian or Angelinian, or even an American deserves to shot or hung like dogs. These fifty traitors were Impostors and had no business to wear the garms of the Nuns and also may have stolen the h habit or took them off dead nuns who may have been massacred by Glandelinians. So to morrow without question those imposing scoundrels face the firing squad and I would like to see the one would would frustrate my order too."

There were many good reasons why the christians could not be fooled fooled on these fifty traitors and the evidence against them had manifested itself against them during the trials when cross examined the defendants would not say a word. So it was evident to the Angelinians that the cowardly scoundrels did not wish to betray their male voices. They were nevertheless found guilty and condemned. On the following morning instead of fifty nuns being led off to execution there were fifty blind folded men. Not long after there was a hoarse command from some officer the clattering rear of a rifle volley and the traitors were dead. The Angelinians in some cases would not shoot a real Glandelinian spy to death no matter what he did in depredations or what damage or dis dismal disaster he caused as long as he did not murder a sentry or any one else. They of course were looked upon as enemies but though enemies they were men who did their duty at their commanders orders. Spies though when taken prisoner are held, and only treated with due respect, and only remain a pr s prisoner during the length of the war and sometimes five months later. But traitors and spies are shot on short notice after the shortest trail possible, if the latter were responsible for the death of an officer, soldier, or any children. Very few Glandelinian spies we re ever captured however as they were very dangerous to persue being always secretly guarded at unknown places by squadrons of Glandelinian cavarly, or infantry, or by machine guns hidden in ambush very close th to the christian lineess.

CHAPTER TWENTY FIVE.
A THRILLING ADVENTURE IN THE CAVERN,WITH THE STRANGE BLEMIGLOWEHEAN CREATURES.

''If this isn't the limit.''Exclaimed the Angelinian captian.''There is no change in this glow and though we see vapor of four colors up there, the cavern seems cooler than the lavyrinth.I'm dumbfounded.''

They could not turn back for the mystery held to them and they wanted wanted to solve it out at any cost.The floor of the cavern was immense the whole cavern seeming to be a mile in extent but having no outlet except ing that floorless grotto but tward the center the floor had a sort of decent, and in the middle of the floor yawned a huge black opening,which on viewing again made violet and her sisters fell sort of creepy.

''I don't believe this is a gulf at all black as the opening is.''Said the leader as he lit a torch and peered down.I''It has a long unsteed decent under the floor.And it seems like a sort of tubluar tunnel way.'''

''It's good we brought torches with us.''Said oneof the privates.

He lit one also and going as near to the black opening as he dared flourished it around as far as he could reach inside.As far as the light penetrated the tunnelway seemed to have a long floor and they decided to explore it before they did anything else. The leader went down carefully and walking along slowly now flourished two bright flaming t orches.As d f far as he went it had a floor and so he called to the rest to come on and if it did not prove safe in the end they would go back as it ran only one direction and did not change into other passageways. A,ll the men went in first but the children being a little timid hesitated before climbing down into the passage way. But as they were not cowards they finn finally went in the soldiers waiting untill they all came to where they stood. Each an now carried a torch and the light from so many torches surely showed them a wonderful sight. They had emerged into another cavern under the floor of the first which had many small grottoes with no outlet large avenues, domes, impassable lakes of unknown extent, and fearful av abysses like the Mammoth v cave of Kent ucky. Also it had diamond chambers and was indescribably rich in crystal beauty. But after a full exmamation with the g torch lights the leader dreaded that it was very dangerous to proceed any further on account of the horrible avysses, star stating also that the lakes seemed to have strange creatures swimming in them looking like dragonic monsters, but as the men insisted on going on along the banks of one of the lakes he agreed. One of the men decided to enter one of the large grott oes but he saw it had on the left side a frightfully deep a abysso of great width and length. It also had smaller ones all over in the floor.

''This is ce rtainly a dangerous grotto with al of the abysses.''Said the leader.

They could not proceed on their way here through the dangerous grotto, and so they went back and decided to explore one of the avenues. They started through finding that it decended a abruptly.

''I wonder where it leads t o!''Asked Violet filled with suspicion.

''That I cannot tell till we find out by exploring it.''Answered the captian.

They walked on as fast as they could and soon came upon a part where it curved.Rounding the curve they proceeded on, and found that the avenue was getting broader and broader every minute. The further they went the broader the avenue became and soon they entered another large section of the great cavern and right here they were confronted by a large deep lake of sr strong lime water. They were becoming very thirsty but they could not drink such water. So they proceeded on across the part where there was no water and came to a roaring river. It fell in rapids, cataracts, and other kinds of falls, and was seemingly impossible to be crossed. Many great whirlpools were in the river which were very dangerous. But the water was a s pure as rainwater and they decided to get a drink at any risk. But the ris river was so furious that it was exceedingly dangerous to go very near.They were dumbfounded indeed and at first did not know what to do.

''We will have to get the water somehow.''Said the Angolinian Captian.I''It's not only too dangerous to drink from but we cannot pass it because it is directly across our way.''

Jennie was thirsty and beggod the men to get the water someway.

However as they followed its course for a while they soon came to a part where it was comparatively calm, and all managed to have a drink. Then they decided to swim across this part. It took a desperate struggle for them all to get across for calm as it seemed it had a powerful undertow, and three of the men and the children had to be helped across the rest of the way.And my but the water was cold. No sooner had they crossed when the captain saw a strange monsterous head arising from the distant lake within their view. Jenn Jennie gave a cry of indescribable terror and ran into the arms of one of the soldiers. The head of the monster I must say was very huge, but not a bit ugly, th its eyes glowing like automobile headlights were as large as plates and the grinning mouth partly open showed rows of teeth exactly in the form of the teeth of a man only that on the upper jaw on each side two teeth seemed longer and pointed and red foamy substance issued from those two peculiar teeth. Violet and her sisters not knowing what it was as they only saw the head looked at the creature in terror, while the Captian exclaimed;

"We are in for exciting times.For herec comes an swarm of dirty glandelinians.How in the hell did they get in here. We will have to fig fight for our lives."

They had indeed entered a cave where there lived stranger monsterous creatures than any dragons known especially for their size and shape.It was more huge than any dragon ever read of but no more ugly than a harmless butterfly. It was too beautiful in color to be imagined though of course its body now revealed was covered with numberless tarlons venemous as the posion of a thousand cobras, and also its two fangs was equally as posionous. The creature however was not a dangerous wild beast but one of the good child loving plengiglomenean creatures so much heard of in Angelinia and it had been attracted by the arival of the glandelinians who were were charging for the christians.The glandelinians themselves were in great peril for the creature giving forth a sudden deafening roar fixed its dazzling eyes on them and prepared to make an attack. The smell of that strange sweetness came directly from the creature who flourished gigant ic wings of all dazzling bright hues and all at once from the creatures body there extended a peculiar beautiful green light which grew brighter and brighter, and now the moster advanced tward the christians flapping its huge butterfly like wings furiously making an uncanny din and moving in a way to confront the approaching glandelinians.

The color of the creature no artist could picture. Its wings were of thousands of indescribably bright colors with ivory black and crome yellow tarlons.Its belly was of sap green, its scales of pure gold, while the tarlons on its body were of madder rose color and also its tongue and lips were pure crimson.The teeth were milky white and its ears and long protruding tuskorhorian horns of Indigo.It's eyes glowing were of ver million green and so was the beautiful light coming from its entire body. It was indeed one of the well known plengiglomenean creatures and they had no more fear whatever.The nearest glandelinians seeing what they w had come upon and that it arived to the defense of the christians prepared to use their bayonets against the advancing creature which roared so terribly that the very cavern shook as if there was an earthquake. Oh my how the creatures eyes did roll after a volley was fired at it by the foolhardy goandelinians who thought it was a dragon trained by the christians After the christians had a good look at the creature they recognized it instantly.

"It's one of the beautiful plengiglomenean creatures called a Crimsoian Gazook and it's one of the most fierce creatures when its domains is invaded by glandelinians."Said the captian."Of course I know this cavern is not its home for I kind of feel it was here to protect us in case we got attacked as I thought I saw it before in that same lake. It's otherwise harmless, but when glandelinian invaders come in to attack christians with the intention of murdering children whom the creatures love more dearly than children love flowers it will surely makean attack in defense of those it intends to protect."

"But why should they attack us now."Asked one of the soldiers."They are in a trap now.And they will yet follishly fight to the death, for the place is swarming with his baby ones.If the fools would surrender it would allow them to go out the way they came in but guard us just the same."

"It is useless for those fools to fight such a strong creature." Said the captian."For instead of hurting him they might only anger him and th then there will be the dickens to pay. An angered plengiglomenean creature is a dreadful thing to encounter."

Seeing the creature advancing now silently, the Glandelinians foolishly waited untill they could give him a good dose of their musket muskets at close range, and when close enough the glandelinians all let go in one simultaneous discharge and from the series of reports from the threehundred muskets the cave bellowed above the angry roar of the gazook.The christian soldiers also fired to the amazement of the creature himself and down went a number of glandelinians sprawling. From the effects of the shots from the Glandelinians the creature was only surprised for it had not expected resistance and looking with an inquiring glance at especially violet and her sisters the creature edged away from its enemies, and making a sort of motion for the soldiers with violet and her sisters to follow him.

This the glandelinians wanted to prevent and they boldly rushed forward at a terrific charge yelling loudly. After backing quite a distance the fugitives following him closely, and followed by its young ones the creature reclined against the floor coiling its horrible iron spiked tail to deliver a blow at the glandelinians should they come too near the christian figu fugitives. The glandelinians were not undaunted by this threatening attitude as the creatures look of fury seemed all gone-and a docile look overspreads its beautiful face, but before any of the Glandelinians knew what the creature intended to do it gave a peculiar grin and suddenly swung its coiled tail into the air with a crashing roar of smashed rocks dr darting it at the glandelinians like a flash of lightning.Fortunately for the Glandelinians it missed them but it was apparent that the creature meant this as only a warning for the aim was purposely untrue but nevertheless the tip of the tail landed against a huge bowlder sending it spinning through the ranks of the fleeing glandelinians toppling many of them on their faces, and spinning for eighteen hundred feet afterwards and rolling into the river with a great spas splash. Allin the cavern were sent sprawling by the shock.

The glandelinians rallied however and advanced again s lowly fired for several minutes without ceasing and the fugitives had to hide behind rocks to avoid from being hit though the christian soldiers shot down some of the glandelinians. Then with another indescribable roar and flapping its huge wings the creature next rose into the air and darted headlong at the glandelinians just a several squads of them regained their feet and fired another volley, while some of the other soldiers who did not fall dodged dodged out of the way of the uncoming creature. The volley of shots struck the creature in the abdomen but only slightly wounded it which this time enraged it. It had not evidently expected any resistance from the Glandelinians and was indeed astonished at their recl recklessness. It however made a repeated rush at the swarm of glandelinians and before most of the men had time to reload struck the wall another blow with its tail sending another big rock spinning tward the big river.Again the retreating Glandelinians discharged their muskets full in the creatures face. Violet and her sisters were excited beyond doubt. The shots had struck the creature in the face and now it was throughoutly angered.But for a few minutes it ceased its attack and kept up an incessant peculiar roaring, until untill another head otn of the same kind appeared from the lake in the same manner. Then two more. Then two more still. Then five. The wicked Glandelinians were surrounded by the most greatest and beautiful creatures they had ever seen, and there was no escape for them now.

"Can they talk like the plengiglomenean creatures we have seen!" Asked Jennie."If they can we can tell them that we would like to find our way back to the christian lines outside of the cavern and that we do not tthink now that the glandelinians can harm any of us."

"No indeed."Answered the captian.

All the exits of the cavern the creatures blocked and set up such a chorus of roaring that it sounded like the explosions of a erupting volcano. Then after a final roar the creatures charged slowly tward the Glandelinians swinging their tails ready to deliver a blow at the muskets that the graycoated men held in their hands to prevent their discharge discharging them. But simultaneously all the soldiers fired their muskets filling the cavern with smoke and slightly wounding two of the creatures. They now hastily reloaded their muskets while the christian again reloaded their own weapons and decided to fire in general them this time themselves from their hiding place to prevent the glandelinians from again firing upon the creatures. Despite their injuries the creatures only enraged, flung their tails at the glandelinian soldiers, but most of the soldiers managed to dodge the terrific swing in time their tails striking the walls of the cavern bringing down a shower of rocks. This failure to down the brutes had the creatures only amazed and flapping their huge wings they darted at the soldiers like a tornado hovered ho above them for a moment, then bore a hundred of them to the ground in one rush badly mangled and crushed.

It was a terrible scene and, simultaneously one of the baby ones landed beside o some of the other Glandelinians determined to coil its tail around some of them. But a discharge of musketry fairly hurled him backwards some what wounded but another creature almost immediately landed on the other side striking fifty of the men with its tail sending them spinning headlong tward the other creatures dead from innumerable wounds in their bodies. They would get to monkeying with the Blengiglomenean creatures and now they paid dearly f with their lives. For enraged over the injury of three of its comrades and one baby creature one after another of the Blengiglomeneans rushed furiously at the remaining Glandelinian soldiers , and now there was a lively time as the creatures gave no pase and now two hundred Glandelinians were lying dead. The surviving Glandelinians taking shelter in a grott o recieved two terrific onslaughts and were several times times almost struck by those horrible tails which if they had hit would have j killed them like the other men were. It was however utterly utterless useless to fight such monsterous creatures for they were so fierce and strong and now the Glandelinians were also running our o out of ammunition in the bargian. Violet and her sisters dreaded that these wicked Glandelinians would escape in the grott oes but one of the little girls suddenly thought of a way to cool down these rascally Glandelinians, for they ha h had heard of an experience like this before with Glandelinians and the same , kind of Blengiglomenean creatures, and knew how to make the Glandelinians surrender and give themselves up and avoid further horrible scenes as this. For if they gave up the creatures would cease their attacks.

"Have you men any-ham some kind of meat anyway!" Asked Angeline. "If you have throw it to the Glandelinians who will if they are wise will throw it to the creatures, for I have heard that it is a token of peace. As soon as they see the meant they will stop attacking and go slowly away. And then we can seize the remainder of the Glandelinians and make them our prisoners."
"The ledder said he had some meat with him and produced it right away. Angeline took it nd threw it tward the nearest Glandelinian soldiers who were already holding up a flag of truce and waving it for the christians to see. The Glandelinian who recieved it threw it at one of the advancing creatures who was puffing like an engine. As soon as the meat touched the floor the advancing creature halted and looked st eadily at it with rolling eyes. Then it crawled up to the small bag of ham sniffed at it for quite a wh while then recoiling with its eyes fixed on the Glandelinian soldiers whose guns were at order.

"You rest of the Glandelinians lower your guns and don't fire any more now." Shrieked Angeline to the men further away. "For Gods sake don' don't fire any more and they will leave. But if you fire even only one shot it will mean more fight and they will surely continued the attack. And after they are gone surrender t o us as prisoners of war."

The Glandelinians dropped their guns. Violet and her sisters watched to see if any of the creatures would la leave. The creature who hd first sniffed at the meat remained near the surviving hundred Glandelinians keeping its eyes on the men as they came out and surrenderd to the christians giving up their weapons, the others slowly crawing t ward the direction of the various exits two crawling tward the meant, the last one throwing it aside, and then crawled back tward the remining exit.

"I wonder what they mean by throwing the meat aside?" Askd Jennie. "I thought thy they would eat it."
"They never eat flesh, and neither would they eat anything else like meat." Said the captian. "They only eat fish. But there is no danger of their continueing their att ack as we have the Glandelinians as our prisoners now and they will leave but we must leave this cavern also, for we cannot explore any further with these prisoners on our hands."
"It is a good thing we had some meat." Said Angeline. "Otherwise the Glandelinians would have all been annihilated. But I wonder why that one stays.?"
"It wishes to remain to see that the Glandelinians are not fooling." Said the captian. "If any of their guns had gone off I'd be sorry."
Fearing to discharge the guns accidentally the Glandelinians had unloaded them and stacked them on the floor their pistols being turned over to the three hundred Angelinian soldiers. Jennie happened to trip on one of the muskets which happened to be loaded and it pulled the trigger. The gun was pointed directly at the creature but it went off with fearful results just the same the bullet going through one of the Glandelinian soldiers and killing him instantly. Two of the bigger creatures dragged away the wounded monster making a queer sound with their throat. When all except the one on guard had disappeared, this one advanced tward the meat, picked it up with its left forleg and threw it back tward Angeline. It then advanced tward her still keeping its eyes on the Glandelinians.

"Shall I approach them?" Asked one of the Glandelinians.
"If you do you will wish you did not." Answered the Angelinian captian. "It It's very fangs are posionous and it is lon likely to fang you if you do and you would die in indescriable angonagony. Wait untill it makes a whin then it will be safe for only Angeline Vivian to approach him. It will not have a Glandelinian soldier come near it as it does not trust you men after the reputation you have made for yourselves on the work of massacring children . But Angeline be careful of those tarlons, for they are posionous through and through and so are the calws."
The green light was already at its brightest and vapors of all colors prevaded the cavern like a thick mist hiding the very walls out of sight. The creature now made a whin which sounded so musical that they thought it came from a harp. At the sound Angeline slowly approached him and as soon as they were near she was near enough the creature tossed something like a roll of paper at her and then crawled tward the exit with the look of anger and suspicion gone. As the creature disappeared Angeline picks picked up the roll of paper and opening it spread it out, but he only saw the word peace on it and rolled it up not seeing the colo column of words on the other side and handing it back to Angeline. So now they decided to retrace their steps and get out of the cavern as quickly as possible, especially as they dreaded that the Glandelinians would try to escape now since the creatures were gone and so off they went. What surprised them was that there was no vapor at the time of the appearance of the monsters in this undercave and neither was it smoke from the powder of the guns it really being some kind of peculiar vapor. It was a v cavern of unsolved mystery.

"There are more Blengiglomenean creatures beyond." Said one of the Angelinian soldiers. "We can go through this passage way as we came and which will enable us to continue on our way without any more encounters with Gazooks. Or they may kill our prisoners."

"It's the best way." Said one of the lieutenants. "For the further we go the more vapor we might run into and maybe we will see more of them. It is all right to come across them but strange ones may not be pleasa pleasant with these prisoners. Let's hurry out of here as quickly as we can."
They now started on their way but taking their time to watch that the prisons prisoners did not care to make any breaks. They soon neared the lake whe where the creatures had come from and looked looked across which was very far beyond but could see no signs of any more Blengiglomenean creatures.

"They are all gone." Said the Angelinian captian.
"And may we never see them again." Said the leader of the Glandelinians.
"Maybe some of your other comrades will invade this place and meet some o ther great creatures." Said Jennie.
"They looked like dragons." Said one of the Angelinian soldiers.
"They are not dragons though." Said Jennie. "Why they are Blengiglomenean creat ures."
"Well how should I know who or what they are " Said the soldier. "I thought they were dragons because they looked so much like one."
"They do not even look like dragons if you see them right." Said Violet. "But they are even worse than dragons to wicked men who persecure little children, and when aroused, and have more power and strength."

Our soldier friends with their prisoners had now passed beyond the lake and nering the tunnel again they saw athin yellowish vapor rising steadily, a breath of sweet smelling air was rushing out of a hole in the flo floor of the cavern while a peculiar blue light proceeded from it.

"This must really be the one of these strange creatures." Said the Angelinian captian. "I wondered where all all th the sweet smelling came from."
They now went near the brink of the peculiar hole and looked down but they could see nothing but the bluish light, and it seemed beautiful to look upon.
"There is something peculiar in this go hole." Said the Cptian of the Angelinians. "And also we are surely in the caverns belonging to the Blengigo,menean serpents. The Glandelinian prisoners we have are in great pe peril for if more of these creatures appear and it is so far before we will find out exit that we could not get out by going the way the Glandelinians had came in. So we will have to continue our way way untill we find an exit of escape as we could not escape the way we came in either as it is too hard to climb."

The captin again took the lead and they passed through a hedious grotto of all shining cold stones and olf pumice rock.

They c soon came to a passage that deconded very steeply and was all hard st one for a floor.

''This is surely a passage for some Blengiglomonoan creatures.''Thought the captian.''To decond in a full run may mean fatal results.''

He decided to try the decent and go very slowly for if he ran full speed he would not be able to stop himself and he would go to his ruin. He was a fool to start going down this decent for he and the others soon went down as a at a crashing speed sending clouds of dust in all directions. Down down they went with a swish and a roar, and the longer they continued to decend the faster they went on their backs. It was an exciting moment. In vain the men who were in the lead tried to stop their downward progress but they could not. They must have went down for several minutes when they came to a pa part where it was less steep which checked their most tremendous speed for sve several minutes untill they came to a still steeper grade.Then they did surely go spinning. A stream of rocks, dirt, and pumice stones broken loose by the fir force of their swp swift slide followed after them with the roar of an avalanch. The more they decended now the faster they went.What they dreaded most was that they might go down into the bowls of the earth, and all did not cease praying once, though the soldiers and children worked hard in an attempt to chock their frightful downward rush. But it was useless for the downward grad e grew still steeper which made them decend so fast that they went from side to side. Then all of a sudden something like a gulf yawned before them and in they went to the bott om but to their surprise found it was only two feet deep and then down they went sliding again, but as the new grade was not so steep they did not go so fast and soon darted into what appeared to be another cavern, but of immense size, and which seemed to have no end.

''Whew but that was a narrow escape.''Said the christian officer.''Suppose we would have plunged into one of those deep lakes.Then we would be goners.''

Violet and her sisters were looking at the captian with wide open eyes in their amazement, and they at first looked so flabbergasted and excited, that the captian and even the soldiers could not help from smiling. But Violet and her sisters recovered from their excitement and smile themselves, untill Jennie burst out laughing. They then all laughed heartily as it did after all seem to be a funny occurance.And after all this not a single prisoner did they lose. They now followed a small passage way leading into another grott o on the left wall of the cavern which showed some kind of a light and before they knew it they found themselves within view of a maze of gray tents and batteries of cannon with high sailents on all sides and could see purple and red coats moving about. They could even see the moon and stars overhead and after a good survey they found to their surprise that they had walked right from the cavern into the heart of the christian , lines.

''This looks like good luck all around and I bet we are not missed yet either as we said we were not going to be back untill nighttime.''Said the captian. They never dreamed however they were going to have another thrilling experience. They indeed heard loud rumbling sounds which was constant like the noise heard under the floor of a volcanic crater during a threatening outburst and clouds of smoke of what appeared smoke hung over the enemys position inthe far distance but along this part of the christian line everything just now was very still and as calm as it was in the cavern they had just left.The prisoners were turned over tothe guards and the christian soldiers with the little girls proceeded to their own points. As it was night and as it was far from where the city was they decided to let the spying trip go untill some other time.Just as soon as the little girls had retired into general hansons headquarters, suddenly something like the hissing of steam was heard, there was a loud thunderous crash that was deafening the air became provaded with strong sulphurious gases their for the moment becoming strong and noxious and then---

Suddenly , spr surprisingly they were all startled by the violent shaking of the ground which made the house sway accompanied by a series of hundreds of deafening detonations, the crashing of undergrowth followed, there was a wild hissing roar and two hundred detonations suddenly broke out apparently along the christian line simultaneously the noise being earsplitting.

Norma Catherine was being bombarded bombarded again. There was a queer circular movement like the shaking of many corn poppers over a fire back and forth many times, which increased so intensely that the little girls rushed out of the house, tree were groaning and snapping for a moment in every direction and there then reverbrated a crash that sounded like a million cannon. The christians had blasted a gigantic mine for the little girls saw in the direction of the enemys lines a gigantic cloud of smoke rise a thousand feet in the air followed by a red flash.

There was suddenly another horrible explosive roar elsewhere to the left, and a pe perfect torrent of earth decended in a thick sheen all over their view. The si ht of the two gigantic explosions made the onlookers almost sick.

S Wishing to witness the scene more closely the little girls not realizing the danger they were running into rushed down a sloping portion of the christian position and saw a series of clouds spouting into the air in the direction of the enemys lines like s fountians.

Just as they watched something like a dark mass seemed to be slowly surged forward, the sight of this startling violet and her sisters, for they realized that the enemy was trying to move forward under cover of the darkness and take a portion of the christian line by surprise as it was the purpose of the glandelinian generals to stop the christian artillery storm at all costs. After a few minutes they succeeded in approaching a little nearer to the terror and amazement of the little girls and soon came tearing forward through the snow at a furious pace, and suddenly their yells added to the heavy detonation of mine explosions, the general dis charge of artillery, the bewildering storm of shell explosions, and the general uproar of the enemys own batteries.

''We must get out of their way.''Gasped violet.''The christians will soon open up with their musketry and we'll be between two fires .''

''The same kind of peril as usual.''Said joice.''We must look for safty before it is too late. We seem to like excitement that we always run into this kind of experiences.''

Their first thoughts concerned their own safty and they hurried toward a gently sloping part of the hills where lay the christian positions.It looked to them, that this time the enemy was o advancing in overwhelming force. Huge explosions were still tearing up the very earth in the direction of the enemys positions shattering the world as it seemed from the din of their crashes, and the sky itself over the enemys lines was fairly cove covered with flashes from exploding shells, and from one section of the christian batteries smoke was flooding the air mingled with incessant flashes like lightning.Far to that section a force of gray was moving over the snow in the darkness, and settling forward as if to skirmish with the christians instead of attacking in general. Suddenly there was a loud prolonged roar as if from some great avalanch, and a furious stream of flashes miles long suddenly tore along the distant christian parapets to the left of the fugitives dodging in and out among the ever thickening smoke clouds.In the night it looked more like the outburst of a volnaci eruption. The imperiled ones hurried on tward the cleared part of the walls of christian sailents.Suddenly along another portion of the battle line there came a new crash of musketry and the litit little girls suddenly noticed that the white slopes were covered with dark bodies, and the shattered woods on the slopes became packed apparently with moving gray figures, their formation seeming to be shattered but from every front man flashes of flame proceeded as they had opened suddenly their own return fire.

Quickly thewhite slopes became more thickly litt ered with fallen drak figures and yawning chasans had opened suddenly in their thick massive lines.

''We are in great peril.''Gasped Catherine.''Our chances of escape seems to be cut off for out only passage tward thechristian lines seemes now barred by a flood of troops decending downward to counter charge the advancing enemy.''

''Oh pleaseDear God, please do not leave us to meet this awful disaster.'' Cried poor Jennie.''Oh please help us to get out somehow for the attackers are coming nearer and nearer. Oh please Dear God take us out.....''

''Don't lose hear, he will not leave us in this peril hopelessly.''Said joice. ''If I or my dearest sisters cannot escape the danger of the christian fire neither can the foremost of the advancing enemy.See the torrents of men is already pouring down from thetop of the hills at every point.I believe the enemy instead of attacking is really re retiring.We will hve to get to that slope somehow for it is w evident that the counter charging christian soldiers may open fire at any moment now. ''

The , little girls decided to make for themselves a sort of round high breastworks with a pile of rocks but they could not even lift many of the big ones which they needed most for they were fearfully heavy. The shaking of the ground from the severe cannonade was continueing frightfully. They managed however to go behind a high pile of rocks where they were out of danger from the enemys firing but they stood in deadly terror of a repetition of the experiences they had at other battles they had seen..

¶ Again and again the earth shook and trembled there came a volley of loud reverbrating detonations in the direction of the enemys lines and a yawning chasm a mile long seemed to appear where there had been a , line of the strong Glandelinian fortification and where floods of earth in six hundred po places simultaneously followed by clouds of smoke shot hundreds of feet into the dr air, the clouds spreading over the entire sky in the direction of the enemy's lines and now the skaiing and detonations along the enemys lines increased in such u fury untill in desperation violet and her sisters were fos forced to grab on to some stone ledges to keep their feet.The vibrations from the crash of high explosives and mines added to their horror.

''Ain't there no chance of escape at all!!?!''Mosned poor Violet.

Fierce as it was, it was a grand and awful sight. The Glandelinian columns was threatening to engulf a portion of the christian line and the firing was so heavy that in the direction of the christian lines everything seemed to become as bright as day. One column after another of drak figures appe ared to rush against thechristian lines only to melt away before the devour ing cannon and musketry fire along the christian front and the crash of the musketry made long echoes through the valleys. While on the sloping part of the hill behind that ledge of rocks hid the endangered vivian Girls still untouched as the enemy along that point had halted, a large portion of the christian right seemed engulfed in a rushing mass of humanity, and gradually everything became flash and smoke and nothing else could be seen while the uproar was something terrific.

The heavens in that direction seemed on fire from flaming musketry the sky was filled with bursting shrapnell which flashed like lightning a hundred times a second and their detonations was more terrific than the musket musketry fire. The enemy it was evident was making awful progress, and it was believed by violet and her sistes that they were winning the conflict.

The s y was to their left a gl glorious red into which the white hg heavy clouds of smoke floated and merged from the thundering christian batteries.Ever and anone above the posit ions of the enemy e here and t here rose aimmense columns of smoke.

It was evident that the battle was growing in force and they were also startled by what was the worse earthquake caused by cannonding they had ever experienced although they narrowly escaped death twice when the enemy far to their front fired, and the christians answered in return with a murderous crash of musket ry and now these Glandelinians who had at first halted started forward at a headlong rush and this was not all.A sav salvoes of explosions sounded far above violet andher sisters, and to their surprise where there had been dense dark masses before appeared whitened gaps with men lying confused ly about.Simultaneously there was a series upon series of detonations like the exploding of a million tons of gunto guncottom and the whole space before the little girls and literally tearing the enemys lines to pieces became dominated by shell explosions but the survivors advanced to within five hundred feet of the position where violet and her sisters were concealed, and the little girls now looked at each other with eyes which told how near they were to eritnity.On every side soldiers in gray were falling, and rolling back down the slope by numbers which the little girls could not make out and cannon balls from the christian parapets went crashing down the hillside among the Glandelinians plowing furrows in their ranks.The enemy still advanced however and then there was again a series of detonations and a roar of a general musketry discharge, bullets spattered the refuge of violet and her sisters like raindrops in a thunderstorm and the whole Glandelinian columns before their horrified gaze seemed to burst asunder, and disolve away into a storm of smoke and flashes.

This indeed torrified violet and her sisters for they felt sure they were now goners but from the summit of the hills a great overflow of humanity at once occured blazing with flashes and den descended quickly tward the now retiring enemy and the Glandelinians were overwhelmed as if by a frightful avalanch.All thr the way down the hillside they went at a fearful speed and quickly following was another avalanch of humanity. T he enemy was repulsed a and violet and her sisters were glad of their thrill ing escape. It had been a thrilling night for them ,and they had been caught between te fires and had escaped unharmed. The little girls as soon as the christia wave passed down scrambled up the rest of the way n on hands and knees among the 's swarms of wounded and dead untill they reached the summit all t ired out.The batt e cont inued on for two hours already but the little girls did not pay any attention to it as they had ws seen enough and did not wish for any more such sights. Violet and her sisters had hoped that they would not be caught by the Glandelinians a again not being able to forget their experiences among the enemies of God which was too sad and horrible to be put in pictures, and yet they had almost faced this very danger on that hillside during the enemys onslaught.

But still they were not cowards and besides this would horrify the bravest heroes to witness such slaughters and cruelt ies. The Glandelinians were were worse than the w most cruel turks or any cruel nat ion known. They remembered of their sufferings in their or earliest lives at Bandons asylum, the point of Norma called Poverty now, and even in child slave stricken Calverinia. And this was two years before the outbreak of the war now raging. They remembered how a little girl called Francis Jennie had been so c ruelly deprived of her reason by suffering, and how they had narrow escapes from dangerous fires, of all of which they had been blamed for by the wicked wicked Glandelinians. They also remembered Daisy's and Catherines experience caused by the otruel Glandelinians, and they pitied their two sisters who had really suffered the most, and felt sorry for all the poor children who had been so cruelly massacred, and had prayed for them every day, knowing that they were innocent and happy forever in heso heaven. Thea they thought of the poor children who were still captives among the cruel and wicked Glandelinians those whom they had in their minds all the time, and the thought of their misery had sometimes made violet and her sisters cry....

¶ They remembered when Germannia vivian, their wicked and traitor brother cursed God and though of course he was a real born Glandelinian he had never reponted of his sins and violet and her sisters had suffered much longer and more terribly than any of the other children who had been slain so cur cruelly. A another day after their exciting experience that night during the battle known as Snowdown, violet and her sisters had went to bed feeling quite happy of over the fact that they had made themselves real heroines having not slept at all that night , and the great christian generals knowing how innocent the little girls were, and how willingly they obeyed God in all things, knew that violet and her sisters always did their best to make others happy. An hour after several of the generals had went into their bedrooms and were nearly overcome with awe and love when they saw how happy the little children were. They were also asleep and smiling happin happily, the poor little things and no wonder, their uncle had embraced them also py children and kissed them good night though it was day time instead. How lovely violet and her sisters did look in their sleep. Violet had cruf crucifix pressed to her heart, ad and were her Rosa Rosary and scapulars with two medals. Jennie had a Rosary in her hands, while the others were all their religious articles. Violet and Jennie seemed the happiest of them all and the christian generals left the room. Violet and her sisters were not afraid to be alone being afraid of only sin, and no doubt their guardian angels were watching over them for they seemed to be more happier w every minute. It would have touched a tenderheat tenderhearted person to see their happiness .

A bottle of Holy Water stood on small marble shelves over the bedsteads, and wet spots on their pillows showed that the happy children ha sprinkiled them with Holy Water after blessing themselves and saying their prayers before going to bed. Violet and her sisters were so swet and sweet and innocent, and kind, that the meanest boy could not have the heart to tease them. An hour after when all of the little girls were sound asleep one of the officers went in determined to have a last look atbthe happy child ren before going on his duty. It had taken w quite a while for him to find their bedroom in the dark hallway but soon he entered, turned on the light, and went over to Violet's bed.

One of his slippers came off but he did not notice it, kissed and kissed each happy child, and blessed them with the Holy Water.Then he went out forgetting to turn out the light. Five minutes after the officer went on duty general Hanson Vivian himself while doing his own work on inspecting the artillery duel or bombardement of the enemys positions ar at Norma which was still going on was tornt tormented by a craving thirst, and so he retraced his steps to his headquarters. The drinking place happened to be t in Re bedroom of the Vivian Girls, and general Hanson seeing the lig light lit, and knowing that one of his generals hax had turned it out, became suspicious that some Glandelinians had been around, and immediately gave the alarm himself and soon the building was being combed for the apparent culprit. Hanson had drawn his own two revlo revolvers and also searched everywhere even under the beds but no suspicios suspicious person could be found. The officer had still forgotten his own slipper having p t his shoes on before he left, and Hanson seeing it by Violet's bed picked it up, and when he took only one look at it his sus picion vanished.

''No Glandelinian was here.''He called to the searchers.''

He laughed and put his guns away and after leaving turned out the light the soldiers following.He brought the slippers into the officers bedroom where he left it.

The next morning after breakfast while the bombardment was still in general Violet and her sisters had proposed that they have a recitation of their Catechism. In a graceful hop or two Violet and her sisters were joined together and violet was so locted to ask ask as teacher, and so she with her usual smile in her good natured face proceeded to do so.

"Tell me dear Jennie" She began placing an arm around her. "Who made you, I, your sisters, our uncle, papa, and mama, and also Aunty."

"God made them all." Answered Jennie smiling happily a her other sisters who were also awaiting their turn for the little play they were having probably playing school.

"Who is God Angeline Dear?"

"God is our Father who is really in Heaven." She answered. "He is a pure spirit. He knows all things, will reward all the good by taking them all to heaven, and will punish those that die in mortal sin by putting them in the bad place to suffer forever."

"How many Gods are there, one of seven?" She then asked Joice.

"There are only on ersatures in Heaven and only one god and not any more." Answered Joice making the st sa sentence long.

"Do all of my sisters still know how to make the sign of the Cross?" She asked.

"Why of course we do." Answered the little girls together. "Papa told us how to make it when----------Oh ever so long ago."

"Do you know what it means?"

"It means that we firmly believe that there are Three Devine persons in the Blessed TRINITY and that the Second Person became man, and died on the Cross for our sins, to make us all happy fo with him in heaven forever. And never see sorrow again.."

"Tell me my dear sisters is our Lord on earth now, or not????"

"Yes violet." He is in out Church on the Altor in t he Sacred Host."

"Who is Our Blessed Lord, and why is he there?"

"He is there to be the food for our souls."

"How is he there?"

"As a spirit."

"How does he become t he food of our s ouls.?"

"He becomes the food our o of our Souls in Holy Communion, when he enters o r our heart to take possession of the, and makes us good and strong Christians."

"And like himself." Added K Jennie.

"But I thought there was Bread in the Host." Said violet s miling at her.

"No you din didn't violet dear." There indeed was bread beforeOur Lord came but after he came there is only the appearance in bread. There is no bread there any more. The Sacred Host is our Lord."

"Do you mean to tell me that the Second Person in the Blessed Trinity enters into our hearts at Holy Communion?" Asked violet.

"Yes, the Second Person is in us when we recisve."

"What is necessary to go to Holy Communion?" Asked violet.

"Tne be in the state of grace, to wish to please Our Lord, nd to be more like him."

"How will you prepare?" Asked violet.

"I must ask the Blessed Virgin and my guardian angel and my Patron Saint to help me, and I must go to Confession if I sin."

With that one of the soldiss who had stood by listening put a gentle head hand on Violet's shoulder or beautiful golden head and making the sign of the Cross on her forehead took her upon his lap and while the other little girls crowded around him told how god's captured poor were crying for bread in Calverine and other places of Calverinia, and men, women, and children were shivering in cold attics, and cells of their prisons where the biting winds blow through the st uffed windows. This was indeed sad and they were filled with compasion p compassion and wondered how long this was going to last. Vioe Violet and her sisters themselves had been among the cruel wicked Glandelinians so long themselves in their earlies days that they had hardly remembered how the big city of Calverine looked since they had been in it last, but as they were free now they were quite happy and did their best to make others happy. They decided to bring this sorrow to an end no matter how.

Knowing the results of the disaster caused by the fifty traitors in gens Gortes general Whilliamsberger & zimmerman was indeed alarmed, frightened and even desperate and to prevent any further disaster which to his idea might really turn out frightfully fatal and even bring about complete victory for the Angelinian rebels he decided to ma make a cap campaign and clear out the whole region of that d extensive territory from al Glandelinians and open a way for his own armies toward Salis Gallia, and thus give general Hansen a good chance to move his armies upon the region of Sandcom Creek and Evangelinia Grande a as soon as possible. How many armies there were in the location sent by general Forgeterian Whilliamsber gimmermann did not know but he nevertheless decided to move forward with irrestible force where ever he went, and not to allow anything no matter what it was to stop his advance once it got well under way. Zimmermann felt also confident because many armies were under his command, and also he had still great confidence in his gen Rosary and in the Blessed virgin, and also in the Sacred Heart of Jesus..... The first Glandelinian army he encountered in his headlong advance was under general Vivian Pettern.

General Vivian Pettern did not with to fight general Zimmermann because he heard of the dreadful fury of his army, but nevertheless he was caught in a trap as Zimmermann had made a cyclonic advance upon him and so was forced to eng a five days battle at Jeshmin. In some fashion by sheer desperation in the fighting, and by inflicting heavy losses the Glandelinian army did succeed in holding its own, and fighting its way out of the trap, but nevertheless it was not able under any conditions to stop general Arenburgs drives and advance, and many of the few divisions were beaten every day despite raging the battle in terrible violence, losing more than nine hundred and eighty seven thousand men in killed and wounded, five hundred and fifty thousand of which were captured the total loss being nearly two millions. Four great Glandelinian generals lost their lives in this titanic conflict and five so re wounded one of which was mortally hurt by being shot twice in the right lung. The remainder of the Glandelinian army was then compelled to retreat and having lost so disgracefully general Vivian Pettern being discouraged resigned his command and general Gonsentinin Maximin was compelled by general Stanley himself to take the command. This army then retreated as far as Jumin gustus( Calverinia. Here the Glandelinian army made a desperate stand and raged a wild horror of battle for four days and two hours but was again beaten as every detail with the remainder of the army crushed and forced to retreat in the worse confusion. Losses on both both sides was dreadful but neither general would predict. In some ways all would have went well with the enemy at other points but Zimmermann continually received heavy reinforcements from troops further off and though there was slight action at Thoughtfare gap(Calverinia) zimmermann was still able to continue his advance and it seemed possible that Zimmermann was going to succeed in his cyclonic advance.

All this I had learned from July 7th to XIth 7Xth. and Zimmermann had made an advancement of over sixty miles already and was now confronted by another Glandelinian army at the town of Herold Town. Zimmermann however determined to press through as if nothing was there but on the XIth of July was fiercely attacked by Corgle Gargl Corgelius and Zimmermanian forces under an unknown Glandelinian general.

The conflict raged for about four y eight hours and on the second day became quite sanguinary but nevertheless the christian side lost fewer than the enemy. The enemy however was repulsed but not driven from the town and Zimmermann felt sure he would have to make a seige. The enemy losses was three hundred and eighty nine thousand in killed and wounded, but more have been reported to have fallen between the beginning and the criniet of the battle which had been very severe during its extreme violence the christians having given the fee fierce opposition all along the line entirely. After a two days seige however the enemy finally gave way from Herold Town and fell back to the town of Lowvell about ten miles further south. Here they gave a part of Zimmermanns army severe action but general Zimmermann hurled a big onslaught which carried all before it, and caused the capture of this town. The enemy suffered unknown losses as well as two generals who were killed. Their names were withheld. During this same action a large section of general Zimmermann army under general Antonio by was imperiled by forces of Glandelinians under general Kristle At Station No. 9.He also showed the enemy stern and most furious resistance slaying and wounding many scores of thousands of wildly attacking Glandelinians but nevertheless would have been forced to yield if general went for his help b but they were too far from the christian lines and not a single person was in sight anywhere. This filled them with dismay and they desperately decided to carry her all the way to a trolly line running to Zimmermans place, and ride to his headquarters.

Simmerman had sent send his reinforcements and stamps in the nick of time which soon turned the tide after a five hours conflict and forced the main division of the enemy to fall b c back t on its own supports. On the next day another part of the christian army under general Simmerman won a most decided advantage at the battle of 6 rivers Run but not wishing to engage the enemy under general Hamilcator Simmerman Stamek another day without Simmerman orders retired northward toward Simmerman main army under cover of the darkness and a rain and in thunderstorm. The losses at this battle for the for v side was two hundred and fifty thousand in killed and wounded and nine generals were killed and twenty wounded.

In another fierce advance general Simmerman forced this west glandelinian army to surrender and Simmerman capts captured nearly five million prisoners. Still it was still the month of July July 20th. 1918.

After a nine days lull the advance of Simmerman great armies was continued with even redoubled force. A sharp and bloody action occured at Fullbrook between enemy forces under general Fullbrook and a part of Simmerman s army which had been forced to halt but it ended as a severe glandelinian repulse. Four hundred thousand glandelinians were therefore reported to have been killed and nearly one million nine hundred thousand were wounded making a total of more than a million altogether. The loss neared two millions. Four sixteen glandelinian generals fell either killed or wounded. Only one of these survived. On the christian side general Simmerman withheld his own losses but reported that on this occasion he did not lose any generals. This battle though only one day in duration raging on August 12th 1918 was only a days duration but was severe and stubbornly fought by both sides the enemy in reality suffered suffering the most heavy losses. It was Simmermans first most terrible battle of the war and for that section of the christian army it was very fortunate the christians were victorious or a great disaster would have occured.

The remainder of his advance was fully unopposed and by the end of the month of August Simmerman had succeeded in his interprise and had the whole region in his own possession. However he had now to leave these armies at this point, under a new commander and to collect another with which to begun a expel campaign on Germ Catherine. This was soon to be accomplished at that.

Losses to the enemy in provisions very great, there being over twenty one million rounds, rifles and pistols seized, a great field of tents, many cannon and large stores. The effects of this raid really caused an explosion of exceedingly great violence but it was doubted if this explosion exceeded the violence of the one at Jennie yivinia. One of the worse effects of this explosion was the complete annihilation of a glandelinian army under general yivinia Hamerain of Simmermans command and which was under the main command of general Malcomin Hannonin Wiseacres. and Rome. Hannon command was near the scene of the explosion and one half of it was rendered helpless from the deadly action of the blast.

This raid may have been severe enough to make losses exceed that of the others listed as the first part it being is being too severe to make any real estimation of the main hose. In this disaster thirty three christian generals were killed by the explosion, twenty seven were mortally wounded and eighteen severely wounded, thirty forty disabled or roads red deaf, or blind, one painfully wounded in the arm, two dangerously wounded and one other wounded in four places making a total of one hundred and fourteen generals the results of the explosion made by the enemy which.

On June 24th there occured a great raid made by christians at Kirchmark. It resulted in the capture of thirty Glandelinian officers who were surprised in a tavern within view of the glandelinian encampments, in twenty three other officers were killed when they resisted the raiders and seven were mortally wounded, as they fought fiercely in the tavern to escape the Angelinians. The raid terminated into a grand christian success. This raid was one of the best ones effected by the Angelinians in this location of Calverinia thirty miles south of Randinia.

The raid was continued for four days at different portions near the foe lines under general Kiser with inconceivable success to the christians in obtaining everything they went for no matter what it was. At one point the raid continued for an hour without intermission until it drove far into the foe lines, and then in a hot skirmish the christian raiders being worsted retreated with large provisions and many prisoners in their possession. Thousands of tons were set o fire by the raiders, and scores of thousands of officers who commanded the west glandelinian army became alarmed and started to retreat with their commands. Some of the generals who had been captured in the first day raid at the Tavern were some of the highest officers! One glandelinian officer was stunned by a rock thrown by one of the raiders. This was a raid that surprised the Angelinian rebels indeed.

Christian-made raid of great success near Hanan Gatherine. The raiders severely wound two glandelinian officers, capture ten thousand prisoners, two stores of provisions, an ammunition train. And a train of baggage and provision wagons. During enemy pursuit four other glandelinian officers are wounded during skirmish and one killed. Glandelinian pursuers routed with heavy loss.

Christian raid on enemy camp near edge of burning woods. 20,000 tents captured and a store of ammunition.

Frightful raid made by christians under strange commander near the region of the Arenburgs Ranfully lasting twenty hours in one series of raids and depredations.

Here near Arenburgs Ran staged one of the fiercest of a series of raids made by christ ians in the first year of the war. No raids yet had surpassed it and so frightful was the loss in provisions and stores of ammunition to the enemy and so many tents burned down on them and so many seized and taken prisoners by the Abyssinkilians that it cannot be depicted in too long an account. General Raymond Kimberlines Federals glandelinians appearing in this location suffered from these raids.

The raiders on one of the raids annihilated all the tents of general Virginia Saunders right wing of Germanianans leaving them without shelter, and one of the raiding soldiers shot to death one of the glandelinian generals called Masconia Catt. The cause of the raid was believed to be on account of Kimbermines intention to supply his own army of very much needed pri provisions, whose army was then advancing Grand Julian Wickey with the intention of reinforcing the besiegers then fighting fiercely to break through to one of the foe fortifications. During of one of the dynamite depredations general Kimberlines engineers caused a great explosion among the foes lines which made a terrific din and was heard for a many hundreds of miles, and though it committed incapable damage however no one was killed by this blast.

Some of the marvelous events of the raids occured near the Mc-Hollester Run also . A part of Engli Angilline Run was also torn up by a great explosion caused by the raiders and when the raids were over it was observed by the terrified Glandelinian generals that the region for one hundred and fifty miles was fairly swarming with dangerous christian armies, mj mostly Calverinians and without fighting a battle Federal began a hasty retreat. General Virginia then pursued Federal southward, and it was he who advanced his best divisions forward so rapidly that Federals army seem was on a perfect stampede. The enemy tried ovo povery effort to t stay that rolling tide of christian advance by obstructions of all kinds, by making raids of their own, by making small scaffiats, by making many mine explosions, by blowing up bridges, damming rivers, making floods and fires, but by the pressure of the christin christian pursuit their armies under Federal were seen scattered far apart, some crushed to frugments. Other Abbissinnian and Calvo inian armies under general Francis Calahnan was believed also to be fully responsible for the disaster to the retreating Glandelinians although it was not proved until 1 general Calahnn stated so himself.....It is he told of it long after the advance had reached one of itsmost swiftest route. At that time Federal had an immense army of over five hundred million men, commanded in many divisions by seven or eight thousand generals and these had been scattered by the advance of Phillimberger Zimmerman and his many generals so far that they were seen nothing but eight thousand smaller armies seperated many miles apart from each other and not one of these divisions had dared to oppose these great sei series of armies led in person by that "Terrible Terrible Conscentinian Arenburg called "The Terrl Terrible Wrath of God."

This great tornado like advance was believed to have been started atwabout two thirty in the morning after thelast raid had driven thevfoe into panic though Hanconia army a part of Zimmermanns command had started the advance first ahead of ne all the others. It is not stated when the raiders annihilated so many tents of the enemy by fire but however it was late on the first day of the raid when it happened. One of the fiercest scenes of the headlong advance of the series of christian armies was when over ten million Calverinian soldiers moving upon Federal forced one of his armies to take refuge in a large town. The enemy here faced for days a terrific drum drum fire of christian artillery, their whole army was crushed to fragments, the town bat badly battered and set on fire, and the remainder forces to surrender. Another ten million Calverinians elsewhere led by Zero had also rushed forward and had surrounded another glandelinian army and without a battle forced it to surrender with all its provocions and arms. Another foe division had rallied at Cedertimer and made one desperate assault upon Kimberlains but was frightfully de f dev cimated and driven back in wildest confusion, them pursued so wildly that it was rapidly surrounded and also forced to surrender. Another glandelinian force at Kander had also rallied and rushed to the storming, but were repulsed withterrific loss, and the christian rishing forward captured three hundred thousand cannon, a vast encampment ten miles in extent a whole force of glandelinians and literally blew into the air a sox section of fortresses ten miles long which the foe had ref refugeed themselves in to an make a stand. A desperate charge was made then by the beleaguered foe and though this foe attack got within close quarters of the christian line it could not stay the advance of the Calverinians and the hundreds of thousands of survivors withdrew in panic and a pandemonium of confusion leaving their dead and wounded and immense stores of provocions behind them.

But these scenes of advances, bloody raids, and minor conflicts were not the worse. Bloodier ones occured elsewhere especially where Federal himself tried to make a stand near Arenburgs Run where general Virginia army was moving on. The enemy strove here by obstructing everything to stop the christian advance and thus failing made a series of desperate attacks six in all lasting six hours. A terrific commanding and musketry fire was opened upon the enemy every time they charged and the din of this six hour conflict seemed to fairly blast the air. In fact this battle on the Arenburgs Run was a literal massacre of glandelinians, as many divisions, brigades, and cor s corps had been crushed to fragments or wiped out by oeerce. shell bursts tore up gaps in the foe lines per thousand, there were thousands of ear splitting explosions per minute, and frightful scenes of blood shed that occured. during a last raid when the immense Glandelinian army finally escaped the fiercely advancing christians and fairly ran for life seventy six glandelinian generals had been killed, during this frightful next month of horror, twenty one had been mortally wounded, fourteen seriously wounded, fourty eight disabled, thirteen captured cowfullies though it was not predicted what happened to him and three surrendered making a total of one hundred seventy seven, the greatest toll of glandelinian generals in the war yet and all caused by the terrific Whillimsberger Zimmermann.

within that month gimmermann had defeated in raids and battles the most vast glandelinian army ever mobilized and which never was mobolised again for a very long time. This was Federals first encounter with christian armies in the war and he encountered this time not christian or Angelinians but the Calverinians themselves who were the fiercest of all the Nationalis. they knew how to rout the Angelinian army or of praitors. glandelinian rebels the rebel enemies Angelinia tries to end the wicked horror of child slavery.

The raiders in entering foe lines ruthelessly ruthlessly shoot to death fifty three generals, dangerously wound thirty eight eight mortally wound twenty five and capture f fourty others, and wound w four others three times making a total of one hundred and sixty two altogether. C r christians destroy destroy ten million glandelinian tents, blew up enemy ammunition set wagons n on fire, destroy long freight trains loaded with provisions rip up tracks, and destroy bridges. Christians raid enemy lines near glandorlens. Raid very serious in results though successful in costing the wounding of two christian officers and the death of one...!!! Many killed and wounded in hot skirmish.....

Christians mostly engineers made raid near Graham endcalco near Gretchen but suffer a slight repulse...!!!!

After his grandiosoness over the immense glandelinian armies an er general Raymond Richardson Federal general Whillimsberger Zimmermann,, still pressed on with his fierce hordes with the intention of raiding every poi t still in possession of the enemy and slay the way before Julio Gallic as he had intended. On the second day after the hasty disappearance of general Raymond Richardson Federalle army a new force of glandelinians having arived near the towns of Jennie Yenis and Angeline Richie swept forward in all their array to stop Zimmermanns advance but on account of great mine explosions, and by the imposing appearance of the fierce Calverinians this ,andelinian army did not give Zimmermann battle but nevertheless were not like others and would not yeild an inch of ground. Fearing something mighty dangerous these glandelinian commanders seperated the army into five sections and occupied the towns and villages all open forward fixing up obstructions in great masses and seeming to care no more for the appearance of the Calverinians than if they had been the helpless child slaves themselves. Zimmermann knowing that the enemy was up to some foreward his army upset columns of horsemen to seize everything on the outskirts of the enemys lines which was in their possession, while gimmermanns artillery was immediately massed and opened fire moving down immense swaths of houses and starting great fires. The glandelinians being raided too frequen ly and nothing wishing to combat the christians without their commanders orders reformated from some of the towns and a cry went up among the glandelinians that their main commander general John Jackson Manley was wounded.
But later that day he came up with the rest of the army of glandelinians and rode all along the line encouraging his men not to give way any further but to show resistance in case a raid was made anywhere by the Calverinians.
Soon another raid was made by a force of Calverinian cavarly upon one of the towns toward midnight but it happened to be at the moment that a strong force of Sargulian cavarly had been stationed there and the raid at this point was a failure though fortunately no blood was shed as the christians avoided encounters with the cavarly and escaped even though hotly persued.....
Knowing that the main body of Manleys army remained firm heedless of the enemy strength of his army general Commentialan Arenburg decided to mass all his artillery ops upon every town in the possession of the enemy, and mass a fierce attack at the same time, but he was at the time advised t not to make any unwise useless movements as it did look as if Manley himself was forming an immense body with the purpose to start a most furious onslaught, and soon hundreds of thousands of Calverinians got ready to meet it, forming their line as solid as a line of rocks but to their surprise no attack was a launched by the enemy.
On the morning the sun rose high and still the two great armies confronted each other. For that whole day they remained like two dr g dragons glowering at each other and in the red sunset and in the white moonlight of the following night,, they still remained quiet.
Finally Zimmermann became impatient and decided to launch an assault. So twenty sent for ha help b but they were too far from the christian lines and not a single person was in sight anywhere.This filled them withdis dismay ad and they desperately decided to carry her all the way to a trolly line running to Kindermines place, and ride to his headquarters.

brigades of V Galverinians, whose lines before e in other battles had flashed fiery flames of machinery,,, was sent forward to seize some of the towns in possession of the enemy by assault. The enemy in seeing such an army of Galverinians and not wishing to risk an encounter with them without Manley knowing of the approaching attack only gave feeble resistance and retreated but set the towns on fire as they went. The christians only suffered a slight loss in privates but one of general Zimmermanns main generals recieved a mortal wound and dropped near the town.
In the other towns the glandelinians did not give way so easily and there was a fierce raging storm of house to house fighting, and from street to street, and it took all night long before these towns were in the possession of the christians.
Then before the advance of the twenty divisions of Galverinians half of the glandelinian army broke and fled leavig leaving much provisions and artillery and ammunition behind them...!!!!
The whole christian army then started an advance anew and the day would have been won, had not some one blundered..... This blunder caused the delay one of one of the main christian divisions, on the right of the main army and the glandelinians recovering from their scare gave Zimmermanns advance stormer resistance and though they did not recapture the towns the y broke'a part of Zimmermanns line to fragments, and then retreated to better cover.!!!!
Zimmermann finding i himself checked started a great seige.
During the beginning of the si seig seige it happened that general James Galbraither and his big portion of a Turmermanian army trying to make an assault with the purpose of raising the seige,, fell into a trap. A part of the trapped army gave battle to the besiegers and frightfully infiladed by th christian artillery and rifle fire nevertheless fought its way out and retreated to the main line.
Being rigoriously besieged and as only one opening was open for the foe the glandelinian generals began to complain to Manley of the danger of standing against the "Terrible Wrath of God" and only when they threatened to resign th did Manley finally break through the gap and reinrat, though one of the glandelinian generals was forced to surrender with his division. It is true that had not the blunder occured the christians under general Zimmermann would have been able to besiege this glandelinian completely and captured it and a l the generals, but consequent of this blunder the glandelinian army under general Manley made its escape without fighting even a general battle.. /

No losses in fallen on christian side stated. Great indeed is it not! christians also make a successful raid upon new forms of glandelinians marching on to Grand Founder Transvaal. During raid Baldrian glandelinians try to strike raiders a blow but is ambushed by christian cavalry and to avoid losses or annihilation the glandelinian general paladin is forced to surrender. A part of general Phillimontanger Zimmermans army a also came up and though violently assaulted,for three hours by the main glandelinian army holds his ground and forces the glandelinians to fly like a flock of frightened sheep..... Christian raid a also centre at town of Big Pietermaritzburg Royal where foe army is reported to be concentrating. One action but losses not very severe any wah w anyway. Simultaneously christian troops make a great raid near Parkbook gun thirty miles northeast of city of Calverina and another force by making a tremendous raid prevents a new enemy army from advancing successfully on Egypt Lamsha. guns engagement occurs with raiders and foe however in which ensues the foe side the loss of forty thousand in killed and three hundred and fifty thousand in wounded and prisoners.!! !!

Christian raid also at Germiston or Pietermaritzburg gun, and another raid also near Big Bethel two miles north of Irvine Vickey. A raid also occurs at Weeping Willow Run, one at Aroadburg in which a number of glandelinian ships are captured, one occurs at Irvine vickey, and christians also make a successful raid near town of Maxwell Run forcing the surrender of a glandelinian general . This latter r i raid was a greater success than ever for the christian cause, and never before in any other war had the glandelinians ever suffered such loss on account of fleres raiders. The enemy lost have of their provisions and ammunition on account of these raids. Christian hostages also belonging to a portion of Maximum big besieging christian army made a fleres raid upon enemy near Spencer Hill, and another simultaneously upon the foe at Spencer Run, capturing immense stores of provisions, forcing a glandelinian general to surrender and making big fires seen for miles. So many skirmishes skirmishes occur during these raids that losses on both sides are frightful but not predicted. R ids are successful but christians convert close repulsed.

General Irvine army which was concentrating strongly near Abbiemain Run in the march on Calverine raids and bombards the fortifications of Irvinemain but raids and bombardments terrifying foe side the Abbiemain town and enables general Irvine to capture three hundred thousand big cannons, and all the stores of ammunitions, arms, and all provisions and baggage trains. In retreating army set off long prepared mines whic whose explosions make a world splitting din. Explosions surprisingly great as they were failed however to do any damage to christian line, though shock of concussion ruined the city of Abbiemain to the ground and ten others near by. Three divisions of glandelinian soldiers however are shocked to helplessness by din of explosions and two million glandelinians were made deaf for ten days, while eight hundred and eighty eight thousand were reported to have all their nerves killed by shock of blasts. Explosions were one of the most terrific ever occuring along this portion of Calverinia and a made a din heard plainly for countless numbers of miles.

During time of this horrible disaster to the glandelinians at Abbiemain Run christians under general Edmuntion made a fleres advance near Pentown to besiege the town them in the hands of the foe and in surprising the foe by attacks, raids, and swift charges in the darkness of night capture two million tents, immense stores of provisions and ammunition and also arms and take 4,888,888 glandelinians as prisoners and six of their highest generals. Remainder of glandelinian army crossed after to fight battle but at orders of government surrendered general Edmuntions oldes army and refuses to capture the overwhelming force of this glandelinian army under general Hamlet.!!!!!

A fy later near the beautiful town of Cy Clytemnra christian armies under general ginsimin were seen advancing with the purpose of concentration in the region tebloki other armies of the foe from advancing to the rescue of yvian wicksy, and for a small army of glandelinians stationed there. The christians at once rushed the town with the purpose to capture the Glandelinians but the foe retreated into the shelter of the houses and streets, and offered resistance of the most stubborn nature. This street to street conflict and house to house fighting lasted many weeks, the christians despite their losses pressing the advantage with a thousand furies, capturing house after house, using houses they captured as forts, and firing from rooftops, and all telegraph wires and poles, and using windows and chimneys as outposts. Finally as christian attackers are repulsed on the seventh week, the foes Concentician troops opened a spasmodic artillery fire upon the beleaguered town which brought upon them a desperate glandelinian assault of four hours duration, but the assault was met with bloody failure and seeing their armies could not escape the overwhelming christian army of besiegers sadsuffering from horrible losses, and as their shelter of the town was crumbling into ruin and all on fire from the heavy christian shell fire, the glandelinian earthartiles raised a white flag and on the following morning surrendered with the three million glandelinian troops left to which had been an army of five millions men. It is not stated however how many christians fell but it may be possible that their losses was much greater than the time of trying to take the town by assault affected them to be frightfully exposed o for seven weeks. The battle raged seven weeks and three days.!!!!!

During the time of this terrific conflict another christian army under general Child ,ever was moving immense armies toard Radcliffe with the purpose of making a campaign into Eastern Calvornia and ending the horrible Kinkergarten Massacres there-rafter. As his armies neared Radcliffe they suddenly found out that a large army of glandelinians had taken the town, and before the glandelinians were aware of it the immense christian army had invested the city. There were about seventy million glandelinians at this town and a part of their army was stationed along the banks of a small stream known as Resurrection Run. The enemy also had a strong position and artillery along a railroad line but nevertheless the foe assessed by the strongest christian armies they had ever faced and fully cut off from their main base of sp supplies, and suffering continually for weeks from dashing raids here and there, and from severe artillery duels finally consented to offer to surrender the city and all it contained besides their ammunition.

However only fourty thousand of these glandelinians managed to get away, and the remainder surrendered. The force that managed to slip away was however pursued so closely and so hard pressed that three days later they finally surrendered also, another great christian victory without bloodshed to boost the cause for Angelinia. A bloody christian raid also occured near the small town of Bonnie Mary near the region of Anne Boris and Dynamic Atlanta two hundred miles southwest of Calverina but thirty miles south of Vivian Wickey. In the hot series of skirmishes that covered five glandelinian generals were killed, two wounded one mortally, and one captured with immense stores of provisions, a whole encampment of tents, and its provisions and a great store of arms and ammunition and artillery by the wholesale was also captured. Eight million two hundred thousand glandelinians were also captured from a glandelinian army of thirty five million men, and the remainder of the foe army was so paralized by its losses that that it was not able to advance to the aid of Calverina. A christian raid also occured near goberts Creek where another foe army was stationed, causing the capture of nine million glandelinians, two great generals, two hundred and fifty wooden forts fortresses, 20,000 ships full of provisions, a large battery of cannon, all the railroad yards then in possession of the foe, two towns, two big steam and concrete fortresses, and one thousand big seige guns. All this, think of it, without a battle. Besiegers at Vivian wickey also make a raid upon enemy lines near Fort Twiggs but fail to obtain anything of importance though enemy receive great excitement nevertheless, when The enemy suffer losses however during skirmish that is not very pleasant.

During the meanwhile the christians belonging to still another army which was then encroached on a portion of the Erminic Greek banks found that wine whole region on account of general Vivians defeat a little before was fairly swarming with the enemy under many various Commanders, and so the christian generals decided upon making a grand and glorious raid. The raid was proposed to be at night and when night time came it was carried out in splendid style the christian raiders setting many fires and before the fires were put out the enemy suffered the loss in eighteen million, seven hundred thousand eight hundred sixty tgree three in burned tents, and many barracks, and large stores of provisions and in fierce skirmishing that occured t fifteen glandelinian generals who made great efforts to surpri suppress this most gigantic and destructive raid over fourteen were severely wounded, two mortally, and two others were killed, and five of them either surrendered or were captured. It is undoubtedly peculiar to see such a raid last of such length of time. Nevertheless though they secured great quantities of stores, destroyed so many enemy tents and cost the loss of so many glandelinian generals the christian raiders were finally repulsed but got away with everything they secured and started other fires to unerve the enemy still more.

In the meantime general Chilliamberger Chamberman still pressed his strong and irresti ble advance. His armies were now moving up the banks of the stream of Mc-Vermer toard the city of Lee Gee Lee Beck.As he advances he encounters a large body of glandelinians encamped nine miles north of said town and prepares to besiege the town with the purpose of capture it and the glandelinian army. His glandelinian w gun were then placed in readiness with the purpose of shelling everything before him but as the enemy guns are not in numbers sufficient to answer such an artillery storm threatening them, and as four of their generals were killed recently by an explosion, five wounded and a number were sick, and the main leader was going homeon from hardships of war this force of four million glandelinians not being able to escape this seventeen million christian besiegers, the advanced part of Chamberman army the surviving generals surrender without a battle. another bloodless victory for general Concentician Arenburg. Ain't that fine. Won't he get credit bye and bye.!!!!!

Glandelinians raid christian trenches thirty miles north of town called Marshallee and Marshallow but christians repulse raiders with great loss forcing strong body of raiders to recoil with the loss of seven gener ls generals and thirteen officers who were wounded in the hot skirmish. skirmish was severe and bloody and each the glandelinians a loss of twenty eight thousand-men in , killed and wounded.... christians also repulse an attempted raid by glandelinians and Turnerantines near town of Vandalia. General Graham Stanley Stanchia was the glandelinian commander and at the approach of the stronger body of christian armies this glandelinian army soon left the region entirely and allowed the christians to advance northward without hinderance..

Christians attempt to invade and raid glandelinian fortifications of Mc-Shirther by river and land side. Causes great explosion which sounds like ten million five hundred thousand cannon going off in one simultaneous volley. Scene of explosion as if a volcano is in eruption. Great loss in glandelinian ships, two forts blasted into ruins and millions of glandelinians killed and wounded in the wylam avalanches of wreckage caused by the blast. shock of explosion sweeps tidal wave on river which sweeps glandelinian encampments for thirteen miles.. he results of the explosion enabled the christians to make a series of great raids and depredations but however being fiercely resisted at every point it turned out a complete fai failure. This proves that the three sections of vivian Wickey and all her fortifications are one of the strongest eminent extensive fortifications of the whole world now in the possession of the Angelinian rebels. A Many days hence for a time without stopping christians had tried the same foolhardy attempts to raid the enemy lines here and had met with a crushing failure and heavy losses in men. They managed however to destroy many ships and set fortresses on fire but did not succeed in getting any supplies or provisions though one of the generals who led one of the raids did succeed in getting some important papers from general purgatorians headquarters which one was of very great valuable for the Christians under generalissimo Probably this Quarter of the Galverinians now in the hands of the wicked Angelinian rebels will never fall. Nevertheless who can tell? And who could bring it about. Well lets see for dear readers. Christian boelevere also sent raiders in large numbers who succeed in blowing up two of the great Mariechuccenic fortifications. One Glandelinian general is killed by being buried in wreckage caused by explosion one mortally wounded, and fifteen disabled making nineteen altogether. Eight million one hundred and sixty four thousand four ms hundred and fourty four Glandelinians had been rendered without shelter and twenty thousand had been killed and wounded and in a rush of christian troops seven millions other Glandelinians were charged upon and after a terrific hand to hand conflict encounter were made prisoners especially of those who survived the close struggle. This disaster to the enemy was more severe than that at Mareschiccio ending into two serious disasters for the Glandelinians in encounment and of the most horrible description. Terrible indeed had been the forces of these two on pleviens, but most of the damages had been done only to the two big stone fore fortresses.

Christians were also successful in making a tremendous raid upon enemy lines near the fortifications of Mareschiccio but in the bloody skirmish that occured eight christian generals were killed when the raiders encountered a withering fire from the main line of the Angelinian rebels one general was severely wounded, and another later was shot in the heart recieving also a mortal wound in the mark the raid costing the christians mint nineteen generals altogether. The raid however was so successful as to set the raiders a great haul of two hundred and thirty four g thou n thousand six hundred and sixty six Glandelinians as p: nsoners. Their own losses however in killed and wounded during raid is severe but nevertheless not stated. This raid however ended as a most fortunate christian victory and which if the raid had been repulsed would have caused a serious disaster to a part of the main besieging M n Mansionian line. The Glandelinians after that kept on the perfect lookout all the many following days in this region and though the christians did not endeavor to raid them again their generals however one of the days launched a fierce assault with the purpose of crushing down the glandelinian opposition but all the accounts were in vain the foe crushing back the christian attack every time, but nevertheless it was all the worse for them for the attacks dealth them terrific disasters and many fires for twenty miles were raging beyond control and threatened the whole glandelinian position with disinbleishment. Angelinians also made a raid upon glandelinians on ye Island on Island Mo. Twenty five by attacking by means of gun go gunboats. Wound three Glandelinian generals one mortally, capture six and set a whole line of fortifications on fire, and got away with a large amount of supplies. Christians also make a most daring raid ever known in which under cover of darkness and in the face of fierce gun fire from Fort Gadernine and Lucellis division that they with gunboats and Mauritanes and battle ships and cruisers tow away a whole fleet of Glandelinian battleships, and capture every one on board after fierce hand to hand fighting and gun fire. In another raid a conflict one ensues in which a fleet of glandelinian ships about a thousand in number is annihilated. Christians at Vivian Gisheyalso make raid near Fort Mareschino and though repulsed capture one hundred thousand glandelinians as prisoners and six of their generals who will say the christians are not hard at work? Christians also make a raid again near M Mareschillio fortifications setting forest fires, destroying one million eight hundred and ninty six thousand eight hundred and eighty eight Glandelinian tents, all their barracks, two wooden fortresses by fire, blew a great line of trenches in the air, destroy a number of their so r secret tunnels, and capture two hundred and thirty four thousand, six hundred and sixty six glandelinians as prisoners. Yiesta series of raids continued stubbornly for a whole day at many vapos unexpected point of the foe lines and during skirmishes brought by the raids Glandelinians and Angelinians fire at each other like command disagreeable command ing went on during the these raids being more severe than them usual as there were so many guns in action.

Christians suffered however disaster and tragedy in attempt to raid the foe lines concentrating on front of the fortresses of Alexandrea, Stanchinia, Scissorille, Marshall, Lem Lamanania, Marshall Fields, an and Mc-Kharge belonging to the Julio Gallic Stretch of pacific picknecessa. Three christian generals were wounded and two were killed and the raid was repulsed with heavy loss and routed like the f French at Waterloo. This raid was the only disasterious if of its kind. General Johnnie Abbieanniana concentrating not far from Cadiz lay in the way of general Hadleys advancing ant moving toward Galverins and make a bloody raid upon him as he lies in camp at night. Severe skirmish ensues but no generals fell on both sides though losses on both sides are considered heavy. However christian raid a success and they obtain an unheard of amount of stores tents and provisions and give general John Manley the excitement of his life. Johnnie however later in the night knowing Hanleys immense army too much for his own ships away and Manley wishing to destroy the army finds it has flown away like a bird. My how he was enraged at being outwitted and by a raid. General Then pressing on northward andokeepig a keeping his distance from general Manley encounters another intrenched army of Angelinians much smaller than his own and within three days enslaved the Glandelinians army at Frumish and after making a series of frightful raids, and assaults, and bombarding the town with heavy cannons cause the enemy under general Parcelahan to finally surrender. This seige though only a weeks duration was very cruel the christians at times having made such sledge hammer assaults that the foe lines were demolished, and not being able to recieve rescue or provision the foe here had to surrender for resistance against the besieging Nationals was in vain. (Pain).

Christians also were victorious durig a great raid upon enemy positions and up and down the river of Geren gun up to its very mouth near the sea capturing a number of large provision and transport ships, and setting two wooden palaces on fire. Surprisingly also to say(May) the christians in a p capturing two fortresses take eleven million one hundred and twenty three thousand, one hundred and ninty nine, Glandelinians as prisoners. General Hellen Bolsestudy is killed general Persphianna and Mandinda on the foe side were mortally wounded. Also christians attempted to force enemy from one of Mc-Gairthian fortifications. Glandelinian division was however forced to surrender one of the fortifications when surrounded. Many Glandelinian ships were sunk by raiders but no losses of Glandelinian generals was reported in killed or wounded though one was captured with the surrender of the division. Christian raids re ulsed with some loss in privates in Killed and wounded.!!!!!

In the meantim general Raymond Richardson Federal whose armies had been so terribly crushed by the fierce christian Glandelinianians had regathered as much as possible and general Federal then to take revenge for his most disasterous defeat so early in the war marched to besiege the beautiful city of Evangeline St Claire, but when his fragmentary armies got there he found it so strongly fortified, and such an immense christian army situated there and two others close at hand under general Mary Vivianana and also Vivianana that he found all hopes of making a seige impossible. Nevertheless it was his ambition to do what he could for he did not make so important an advance for nothing, and so he decided to gather about two million three hundred thousand men and making a tremendous raid into the whole christian encampments and secure as much provisions as possible.
He did not succeed by this raid to cause these immense cy ristian armies to be routed but nevertheless he could show the Nationals that he was not afraid to accomplish anything when he wished to do so and so he decided to rush the raid as quickly as possible, and then before the christian armies recovered to make a hasty get away before the armies captured his own divisions. He first had reported the condition of his armies to general Hanley who was advancing toward Galverins o to repoll the two christian armies under the Vivians but Hanley in a telegraph advised him to be careful as the christians under the yivianus yivianuses were dangerous qhen aroused being all Abbisamians and Calverinians.Federal however had told general H Hanley of his purpose and the result was the sweep of an immense curve of troops within the christian encampments at night. Hendelinians whole christian line of encampments extending for ten miles was pillaged and a fearful conflict with rifles and bayonets, all the tents were set on fire, and the entire amount of provisions of all kinds either annihilated or secured by this section of the raiders before they broke away from the christian counter attack and retreated.

Hansens camp was also struck by a part of the raid but the raiders here had been driven out of the lines with frightful loss. The Hendelinians after pillaging and making fires to their hearts content, and repelling attackers here and there with gun fire and throwing of flaming torches, and steers managed to capture a whole line of christian artillery but could not hold them long and were forced to abandon them or suffer dromiful annihilation. Then later in the night when the whole christian encampment under general Hare was not yet aware that another section of the army had been struck such a blow the main line of the foe raiders came rushing into their company streets, setting fire to barracks, tents, shooting down officers and men and destroying tents and capturing horses, prisoners and getting off with wagons and pieces of artillery and blowing up ammunition stores and powder dumps making a scene of the wildest confusion. The result of this raid was that three quarter of the number of tents and christian barracks was fairly dissolved into a sea of roaring flames, and explosions occured everywhere, the remnants of the remain ing tents and barracks rapidly catching fire from the treemendous heat and the whole encampment of millions of christians was in frightful confusion, many striving to save their provisions, others fighting the raiders fiercely, and many trying to drag their artillery and ammunition out of the danger zone. There was the wild tramping of horses everywhere, a dreadful tumult of shots, yells, cries, curses, frantic commands, and a din of explosions and shooting flames, while smoke hung over the whole region making an inferno of the whole country and lighting up the sky so brightly that the conflagration was seen for a hundred to two hundred miles.
Despite the utmost confusion of the wildest scenes on record, christian reinforcements were hurried to the scene with the purpose of driving out the destructive raiders,-and making a fierce attack the Calverinians surged amid the conflagration ion upon the Hendelinian raiders, but in the bloody hand to hand encounter the surging Calverinian forces was cut to pieces and was forced to recoil the raid extend ing within three miles into the christian lines. The Calverinians however were not discouraged but rushed the foe again making another onslaught more violent than the first but it resulted with the mangling and cutting up of the whole of the surge of assault and again the Calverinians recoiled the fierce Hendelinians pursuing and capturing many as prisoners. There were no christian generals killed or even wounded during this gigantic raid but losses in privates were heavy amounting to thousands in killed and wounded though real loss was not stated though the enemy lost fourty thousand in killed.At another section of Sylvanuss army the enemy raid was a still bloodier result but finally ended as a rebuke though the foe secured enormous quantities of provisions. It was indeed the greatest Hendelinian raid in the history of this Hendelinian campaign and even resulting in the recovery of seven Hendelinian generals and 200,000 Hendelinian soldiers who had been held as prisoners by the Abbisamians..!!!This Hendelinian raid is considered as the greatest raid that ever occured in the vicinity of Evangelina St Clair and lasted in its complete duration about four hours. Only when the whole christian army moved forward to give the enemy complete battle did the raiders led by Hastings beat it from the christian lines and retire with what they had secured to the main lines. General Harold Johnston, was the Hendelinian general who committed the most damage during the tremendous raid.Just into morning general Federal having secured as much provisions as he wished, retreated with his main armies in haste, and was swiftly pursued by a large section of Sylvanuss army. General Federal wished to retreat southward but the swift pursuit of fierce Sylvanuss forced him to go northward untill hard pressed he encountered one of Maiden Sylvius army moving upon the town of Gaddesthorpe which had been intend ing to rescue a large number of child slaves there. Caught between two christian armies, Federal halted at night and started some more of his fierce raids but on the following morning after success in his raids, he fought his first real battle in in the war but was severely defeated with the loss of over thirty one million men in killed and wounded to that of the christians only ten millions. Federal lost one hundred and two Hendelinian generals in killed and wounded and over nineteen million prisoners and was himself wounded severely in the h shoulder and his army without a head fled like a flock of frightened sheep and their retreat was so swift that the christian persuers could not keep up with their rate and had to abandon the pursuit from sheer exhaustion. Ten,000 children were rescued an and the town fell into the possession of the christian soldiers. Hansens army went on its march northward without persuing the enemy but Sylvanuss went as far north as Angelinia corner and then unable to keep up with the foe retreat halted its terrific advance and allowed the torn up enmy to escape.The christian side in this battle lost sixty seven officers in killed and wounded to thirty two were stunned to unconsciousness by the din of firing, thirty two others were mortally wounded, and general Hindermiss, and Russell Hunter Johnston of gunners command lost their most valuable horses which had been shot during the fray. It was however a disaster at the worse to the foe and Federal did not show himself in this region any more I'll tell you fair and square.

It was the first time that general Federals army had been in such a bloody clash and had suffered a more serious disaster than Enigus Sumners army at Bantonin, and after the battle no Hendelinian army yet for a long time had been driven in to such frightful confusion, and cut up so many times with such frightful losses in privates and general officers. Over two hundred unnamed christian generals had been fairly stunned by the racket of the firing along the christian lines, and all the men in action had to stuff cloth and other things in their ears to prevent themselves from going deaf and so fierce was the viberation of cannon volleys, and the explosions of shells that the soldiers hardly could keep their feet the ground shook so. One hundred fourty six other christian generals had been maimed by falls from horses which we re thrown by the concussion of the heavy firing a d two hundred others not maimed were killed and wounded. One of the greatest tragedies of the early part of the war occurred to Federals army at this battle of Gaddesthorpe during the highest fury of the struggle when the christians were making one of their worse onslaughts that one of Federals main generals whom he could depend upon more than any one else called general Ehrtrude Hendelina was dangerously wounded and his three divisions annihilated.
This tragedy startled the officers and surviving generals of the whole engaging Hendelinian army and at first it had been believed that both he and Federal had been mortally wounded but Federal was not injured so bad as that was able to retain command long enough to prevent his beaten army from being deeper demoralized.
Him and hayseeds of both sides continually kept at work on the highest signal stations and great loss was also among these. One signal station was blown up by a explosive shell. The battle raged twelve hours and twenty minutes. Many of the injured or killed Hendelinian generals were badly mangled. The battle of Gaddes borry was one of exceeding violence at that time being equally as fierce as the Calverins successes breaking out later and the firing had been so fierce that it spread so much smoke as to make the scene resemble a smouldering forest fire and hundreds of thousands of fallen Hendelinians caught between the lines under a terrific fire of rifles and machine guns, perished in the storm of canister and bullets without that there being any hope of rescued at all from their comrades who had been forced to retreat before the fierce attacks of the Abbisamians. One of the greatest misfortunes and disasters of the whole battle was the capture and surrender of two Hendelinian divisions under general Frans Francis Archibalds. This command had been mainly under general Haggard but he was not u on duty there at the time having been recalled to another part of Federals command. Baldwin was another chief commander and also was absent absent.
The Irish girls who were with Hansons army at the time were near enough to witnesse witness the terrific battlestorm and they were blamed by the Anglinian ran rebel leaders for the whole tragedies and it was only from general Haggards fierce stand elsewhere that saved Federals whole army from being either captured or totally destroyed.

The main losses of the christians during this great battle was not estimated by the christian generals who kept it all to themselves, and if they did report it to the authorities general Ewan Vivian ordered the authorities not to mention the number of men who had fallen at all. But two of the main Glandelinian generals was wounded one mortally, Shannon Franklin another very superior Glandelinian general was killed, and even general Vivian Ewanonia pioneer the chief in command next to general Federal was severely wounded, but retained his command despite the serious condition of his wounds untill Federal forced him to leave and go to the rear with his shattered division. The killed and wounded among christian generals however was greater than among the foe side and nearly thirty three of them were captured and also millions of prisoners were taken by the enemy. The battle field was over fourty miles in extent and three miles wide. General Coyyler and Stanek was also wounded and the concussion of the battle shook the country for over a hundred miles for the concussion of seventy thousand cannon and the din of explosions could be heard for hundreds of miles. All of the onslaughts had been made by the Abbicanbians, Angolinians, and Galverinians, the foe remaining on the defensive the main foe lines having been cut up scores of times and driven into confusion, but it is probable that never theless, the Glandelinians could have been victorious victorious and cut swept the two whole christian armies from the battle field right and left had not so many chief generals fallen and Federal disabled himself, and also unfortunately foe for the foe the attacking christian lines had overlapped in a way to cause the swift withdrawal of general Federals main left and right grand division thus enabling general Vivianmen to make a great turning movement which rolled back the long wedge of desperate defenders with frightful loss, thus enabling him to successfully cover his reformation which finally also swept forward and drove the foe back to the last line and forcing the Glandelinians to finally retreat in goods time ending one of the first most terrific battles ever raged in southern Galverinia.

During the time this desperate battle was raging christian armies moving in the vicinity of Gabbdle Down but yet nevertheless many miles away made a severe raid, on an encampment of a glandelinian army that for the enemy side had very conspicuous results, and was serious in its consequences. On seeing the approach of raiders the Glandelinians made strick preparations to frustrate the foraging parties, but though they kept the christians busy fighting they nevertheless could not stop the effects of the raid and the christian raiders penetrated far into the enemys lines capturing a number of glandelinian cannon tearing down many tents, and carrying all before them in their work of sacking and pillfaging. I believe it is probable though I myself do not remember it any more that the Glandelinians aroused to the utmost attacked furiously but nevertheless when the raiders thought they had secured enough they finally stopped their raid and fought their way out of the foe encampment and retreated toard the main christian lines.

It was no doubt however that the raid had a very severe and serious effects upon the enemy the raid being of long duration lasting nearly all night untill daylight and the raiders had penetrated two miles into the foe lines near Gabbdale Town but nevertheless no matter how hard they tried they could not capture the regular number of cannon they wished and had to give it up though they did prove themselves victorious nevertheless. Though there was a series of sirep skirmishes during the raid slight losses only were inflicted by both sides.

Christians also made severe raid upon enemy fortresses called Phalen held by Glandelinians under general Grantlinia and Pemberton. Christians raiders however failed on account of gun fire from fortress to secure any provisions or ammunition but they did succeed in obtaining one hundred and seventy thousand Glandelinians as prisoners and caused the destruction of eighty thousand others by the effects of a gigantic mine explosion.

Christians also make raid upon enemy lines near Galvanian portuguese. In a fierce skirmish caused by raid christian sharpshooters wound one Glandelinian general mortally wound three others severely if you please kill three, diffuse two and capture ten. Main christian army later captures foreto-fortress with eight million eight hundred thousand and sixty three thousand other Glandelinians from a smaller fortress near by.

great christian raid at Galverine Down. Christians capture thirteen million Glandelinians and a whole enemy encampment and two forts and a whole navy of ships and war cruisers.

Glandelinian raid near Doppo upon christian armyThey destroy during raid seven million eight hundred fifty six thousand two hundred twenty two tents and escape with some provisions.

Christian raids at Tamerline and penillion capturing one million eight hundred thousand prisoners, and an immense store of ammunition and provisions two trains, a large number of army wagons, and three hundred guns.

Christian raid also successful near Angoline which causes small Glandelinian army to retreat in a flying rout.....

Christian troops moving forward with the intention of making a seige started furious raids upon immense enemy armies concentrated near the city of Phalentenburg in the Marie Osborne Woods. Two christian generals Hansen and Vivianen Pemberton who led the raids at one part suffered fe rful losses during a number of hot skirmishes and was driven out. Glandelinian armies under general Shannonan, McWhirther, Thomas McPollester Federal Heymond Richardson and many other various commanders were also situated near Phalentenburg besides Bentrude Hindermians which annihilated an attempted ra d near the Rhoda and Graham Junction in the Marie Osborne woods and routed the two main forces of raiders cutting their ranks to pieces. Double Day Federals christian army later came e up and on the next day threatened to start a battle but no general action came though he also caused the foe to suffer from disastrous raids. General McTown was also there who later on causes blunders at Galverine and Phalentenburg the latter of which brought him to lose his command. Nevertheless it was again the greatest series of raids ever witnessed and Double Day Federals raids were the worst. Fourty five Glandelinian generals were wounded during a hundred hot skirmishes within a two weeks series of raids one was mortally wounded and twenty nine were killed. Two of the twenty nine Glandelinian generalskilled had been captured during one of the raids but they had refused to surrender and fought a death struggle with their captors. Four others stilli were captured without resistance and another one of the generals had fallen but what happened to him no one among the Glandelinians knew. Total losses in officers killed wounded prisoners one missing and so on was eighty three. The total losses in in privates during the skirmishes was not predicted but early Carington of the raids the enemy losses were believed to be more than ten thousand in killed and wounded. The first of the great raids started near Mt Plaster in presence ion of foe encampments trenches and batteries, then came raids within the foe lines in the Bergin Lines where it practically resulted in the destruction of Fifty,000,000 Glandelinian tents and a hundred,thousand here barracks.

During one of the raids general Vivianin made the fatal mistake through some one blunder in putting an immense force of raiders through the McPollester section of the Marie Osborne woods called McPollester forest or woods near the Rhoda and Grahams Run, and on the Graham and Rhoda Junction!

One of the raids general gamble Jay Federals men made caused to the enmay a most serious disaster. The entire Mandelinian position, the whole city of Malastem burg and the whole country around for a hundred and sixty miles was violently shaken by a tremendous explosion of a long line of ammunition stores set on fire by the sea ses of burning 2,400,000 tents and 250,000 barracks and the concussion of the explosion threw both the entire infantry lines and a large number of batteries of cannon down the sides of the hill, under in a rolling avalanch of men horses and cannon the vibrantion of which tore p a portion of the nearest woods to pieces, and causing the most frightful loss ever committed by an explosion and rasing many bui buildings in the city, smashing out all the windows and doing similar damage to towns and villages fifty miles away. Edward Zimmerm and Mandelinian commanmants a good distance away and those under Federal johnston who felt the effects of the explosion saw the terrific avalanch of human beings and artillery and horses sliding and rolling down the side of the hill and saw also the immense cloud of smoke that shot high into the air by the effects of the great blast Whereas whole army of Mandelinians as well as Herdrudiens was crushed to fragments by the numbers killed and injured or disabled and made deaf or blind by the explosion, and as these two generals were injured the remainder of the Mandelinians for the moment were thrown into frightful confusion and the generals with the help of cavarly had to make an overwhelming scrunk with a tumult of fixed bayonets to compell them to rally and stop the retreat which was changing into a total rout. General Julian Lavate Mandelinians had also been scared into a retreat by the explosion and though for a time it seemed as if their panic could not be subdued a finally effort of cavarly and officers broke up the re treat and rout brought them to a rally and finally resisting the panic of the others brought the whole rout to a standstill stunned 11 and advanced them back to their former works and intrenchments. The explosion almost threatening the Mandelinian army with apparent destruction from the fires that resulted saved a the christian army from a general engagement, the enemy having been placed in a seriously jeo jeopardized condition. Had not this explosion occured-general Zimmermann probably could have made a terrific onslaught untill the other Mandelinian armies being raided so frequently could have recovered from the excitement rallied their whole commands and probably swept the christian armies entirely from the region. But while a good part of the Mandelinian encampments was being torn shattered, set afire, and raided at many points and the Mandelinians driven into the wildest confusion by the conflagration among their city of tents and bar barracks, the explosion occured just as one of the generals fell mounted trying to rally the panic stricken soldiers and so that portion of the whole Mandelinian encampment was fa fairly blown to pieces pieces, and then there was a vain effort to overcome that terrific crushing tidal wave of panic stricken Mandelinians who rushed through the other encampments with the irresistible force and fury of a tornado dev does upon a town spreading the panic and d wildest confusion, and the encampments that were not blown down or to stone by the explosion were rushed like sheep by the panic of their millions of comrades and forced to retreat without any hope of further reorganization untill the desperate efforts of officers generals, and cavarly finally stemmed the terrible disaster. go went the disaster to the enemy at Marie Osborne, one of the most terrific disasters and explosions probably of the war to the enemy side. It was not known to many of the enemy generals of the reason of the main surge of confused Mandelinians upon their encampments though they did hear the crash of the blast, but the panic stricken Mandelinians had come upon their encampments like waves in a storm the rumors in rear of the explosion, have having created, and hanged like a thrillion cannon going off like one shot at once, and the great rocks thrown up by the blast when falling into the river which also ran through here made great geysers of water thirty feet high, and the smoke of the explosion, and the fires, and the sun of flames creeping a cry where made a scene like Dantes Inferno. From the countless echoes of the terrific explosion which was heard and felt for two thousand miles ridges of hills all around reverberating the di din a thousand times for a whi whole hlarie second from the noise to be titanic volcanoes in eruption and the very heavens seemed split from the din of the very echoes which rolled and thundered from valley to valley in a incessant clash of tumult.

The Mandelinians who had not been driven into the panic by the noise and horror of the explosion indeed fought bravely to stem the panic of their comrades keeping up their efforts by commands, promises threats, and by bayonet pricks and even fighting them back with the most stubbornness and spem checking the rout. Indeed if this terrific explosion had not occured this disaster would not have brought such a panic and probably by a battle would not have been averted. In the whole panic the general called Edward Zimmermann did not of all the efforts to stop the panic and by his gallantry succeeded. On account of the dis disaster the foe cruder finally broke what was left of their encampments and securing all th tgat that was left of their artillery provisions and a everything else reinvented as hastily as possible.

Christians suffer de defeat in attempt to make raid upon besieged Mandelinians near the town of Pose on mountain ten miles west of Palis Gallis (the had a fellow). Nothing was secured by t'these soldiers and they s ffored some loss in a skirmish which was of very long duration.....

Great christian raid occurs during seige of Grumley which was started after the battle there and the raid resulted in the capture of 234, 999 Mandelinians as prisoners of them eighty nine thousand were Zimmermannians. Thirteen Mandelinian generals w r were captured, thirteen were killed in a fierce battle following the raid three mortally wounded and seven generals disabled. On account of a disaster during second battle of Grumley main Mandelinian general was wound ed and the Mandelinian army was practically without a main leader but nevertheless they still continue to withstand the great assign..!!of Christians were also successful in raid upon besieged enemy near Commodorus and during surrender of Mandelinian army later on christians capture eighty million nine hundred sixty seven thousand one hundred twenty seven Mandelinians as prisoners as well as main leaders twenty seven of them were killed during a single charge. Great christian victory indeed I'll say. Maybe there cannot be another one like it.

Mandelinian fleets of battle ships their number not stated repulsed and captured in attack on one of captured fortifications of Northirther in hands of Salvarinians. Fierce and daring raid of christian besiegers near Bogying Islands during terrific hurricane and substerene. Great success of shipping captured and forests on three islands and encampments set on fire, and two batteries captured and two garisons.'' This shows that if they want to do so the christians can do won ders...!!..

Christians besieging enemy forces near town called Journallwaka furious and bloody raid upon the centre of Mandelinian encampments Hinterwaters Mandelinian army during raids suddenly surrounded by a strong force of raiding christian cavarly and mounted mounted infantry which results in the capture of four million one hundred and fifty nine thousand nine-hundred and ninety three Mandelinians as prisoners of war without a battle. Fifteen Mandelinian generals who sought to escape by various means received wounds inflicted by christians, and three trying to fight their captors are killed killed I mean.....This great raid at Jonir Journall fortunately had such an effect upon the besieged Mandelinians that it finally ended as a great christian victory afterwards resulting in the capture of the city, and the entire Mandelinian army with all their arms and army provisions. And the Mandelinians refused to surrender the Angelina Angelinian generals would have started a battle that would have caused the wicked Mandelinians they to be cut ll all to pieces and annihil ted probably with great slaughter!..!)(

It was the wise actions and movements of the gabristian generals that caused the heavy aid to come to the besieging christian-armies, and helped to prevent any attacks that may have come otherwise from the glandelinians. The main outcome of earlier seige at Sal Soshistanis though ended was not mentioned by the christian general but nevertheless it may have been a christian account so that so far as it went if it is pleased to mentioned i t to the readers...!!!!

One of the most peculiar raids was during the seige of the town of Bandinin ... by a large christian army, this town a good deal flanking the big city of ...vica Vickey. ...here had been some hard fighting at this place in which the christians had been beaten every time but nevertheless it did not break the seige. This seige had started the same date the battle of Enter Starring had raged in Angelinia and was greater in its consequences than Alexander had ever made in his time in the year of 357 B.C. during some of the wildest battles and on account of the bombardment of nearly ninety thousand unseen two glandelinian generals had fallen being general ...ttwell Roberts, and Faisonin Penner and another officer a general who was killed during a sortie was captured though his name was not mentioned as he refused to reveal it.
This seige was of very long duration lasting nearly a half year and besides many severe raids causing freak captures and freak disasters, and freak explosions and fires there was fighting fighting on both sides which raged with great christenticy. Many brave christian officers fell in both the conflicts, and fierce raids which at certain times terminated in great massacres of glandelinian troops brought on by desthstruggles and fearful onslaughts and terrific bombardments, and also in the destruction of fortifications burned or blown up.
It was believed to be a seige nearly as bad as the seige of ...ancillio ...ickson or Julio Cellio but was not quite as long in duration for the glandelinians after many hundreds of thousands fell, and after the city was battered and fired and the fortresses and walls around the city demolished-g final y surrendered. ...e strength of the enemy had appeared to give the glandelinian armies a fair chance against the christians and they had at first taken heart from the fact that the whole world had declayed it would take only a host of angels to capture these two towns but the christians captured it without the help of angels by only prayer and hard fighting, and it was the only kind of seige which resulted so disasterously at so ... short a time for the enemy amid incessant bombardments, battles and fierce and dreadful raids.!!!!!!!

Christians armies under other christian commanders making great seige of the town of Mary Ellen on the Enter Starring where Mason ...drian got defeated during battle before suffer great defeat in making raid on foe lines but nevertheless despi e repulse capture three millions five hundred thousand prisoners and secure some provisions.
Later in another raid they capture sixty seven thousand eight hundred sixty eight more Glandelinians and capture six hundred and seven officers and a number of artillery and tanks.

Christians also make raid at beginning beginning of seige of Saint Fair.
During seige of ...drian Wickey continuing christian besiegers sent out raiders which capture supplies and provisions at ...manincomdia and capture four hundred and eighty two thousand two hundred twenty six glandelinians as prisoners.

During seige of ...otinia also starting at this date christians in raids and sorties and battles capture ...millian seven hundred and eighty nine thousand, six hundred sixty six glandelinians including two ...landelinian generals and one fortress and a whole Glandelinian encampment. Great scenes of raids and conflicts and explosions and fierce bombardments, also occured during the gigantic three months seige of the city of Glancfrminic on the Ma...allester run River banks. In one raid and fierce engagement the christians secure nine hundred and twelve thousand eight hundred and four y eight glandelinians as prisoners and in another conflict and bombardment in which a thousand one sixteen mils s charge was made capture one millian nine hundred ninety seven thousand nine hundred and sixty three more glandelinians as prisoners, while they also capture and kill and wounded three hundred general officers including fourty two others, in a third battle, and capturing twenty nine more afterwards during a counter charge made by glandelinians in a desperate attempt to make the so called "christian Dogs "raise the seige. The seige had a very frightful consequences nearly all of the christian officers themselves who exposed themselves during th terrific artillery duels and attacks, and bombardments, being killed or wounded where the fiercest part of the scenes of raids and battles and bloody sorties and skirmishes occured. A sad incident of this frightful seige occured on the right ...ireling wing of the christian line while the scenes of battles were at a lull. The main supreme christi n general by the name of Keplannie fell riddled by canister shot by enemy snipers while out scouting with a party of officers, and several other officers who had attempted to save him from the fire of the enemy machine gun also fell riddled by by bullets. Their daring deed was a failure, for all of them had been killed instantly in the face of the enemys storming withering fire. The loss of the town o however to the enemy was caused by the frightful raids and slaughter during twenty battles on the right wing and especially among the main leaders two twenty eight more of which fell, the main glandelinian commander of that wing himself being severely wounded. The enemy however did not surrender a but had managed to get the christian line enough to be able to slip away and abandon the town to the christians. Had the christian army dared to follow up the great advantage they had gained the whole glandelinian army would have been crushed in pieces without dispute and probably put out of commission for all the time.
...here after. The wicked glandelinians did all in their power to hold the city against the christian besiegers exerting all their strength, massing all their strongest guns in all the battles and cutting the christian columns down in frightful numbers but they may as well have tried to stop an advancing cyclone despite the fact the main christian general had been killed, and a new one taking his place. ...nthe last of the battles the christians fought their way through the foe lines successfully and though not succeeding in capturing the whole ...landelinian army nevertheless forced it to retreat in a disgraceful rout capturing large stores of ammunition ammunition half of the foe provisions and artillery many battleflags, and making the fee army in a demorilized e condition. The seiges and conflicts, raids and other activities were very sanguinary lasting for so long without hardly an abatement, and the lands landscapes had been made desolate for scores of miles from the power of the horrible shell fire which made a racket heard for a hundred miles. Would you believe it? If not well don't...."

At also the greater seige of Rosalie christians were badly beaten during great raid, and enraged by the repulse of the raid the main christian commander ruthlessly bombarded the town blowing all to pieces and committing such horrible havoc among the enemy lines that it resulted in a massacre of troops and even animals. The christians then made three tremendious drives each lasting four hours long killing and wounding wounding six hundred thousand glandelinians more and capturing seven million glandelinians as prisoners and causing the surrender of the glandelinian general Teordore Nicholoma. Seven hundred and their thirty three glandelinian officer s all generals and six of them Princes and High Lords, Counts, and Barons were killed in this dreadful drama. The capture of this town however did not come untill after three weeks desperate fighting through street after street, from house to house, and then through the city to the glens and fields and parks outside and into the war woods a perfect maelstrom of carnage. Losses f of both sides however was not given though the battle did result in terrific losses of even men women and children who foolishly would not leave the frontal portion of the beisegeing christian lines, and stayed where they even pleased while whole line was under heavy fire of shells, and high powered explosives. A part of this seige extended near the German gun section and during one part of the seige a portion of the christian line before the seige was raised had been forced to retreat. The christian line s also extended toard Maxwell and on toard the stream called Amtroan Run and Poppo River a seige forty eight miles in circumferences... ..
The seige of Rosalie or Risolie lasted for over five months and twenty four days and the raids and conflicts that raged were very heavy. The Glandelinians had indeed immense armies and during some of the series of conflicts had fought against the attacking christian beseigers with the fury of fiends, hurling back every effort to scale the ramparts and crushing the christian divisions as fast as their own very were being crushed. One of the main battles of the seige just before the t downfall of the town lasted fully twenty four hours,, the glandelinians and christians together never ceasing in their fearful onslaughts. In one battle fourty three christian divisions had been crushed so fe fearful had been their losses,, but as others had been sent black back in flying fragments more only had been hurled against the ramparts anew and mingling with the Angelinian rebels in terrific fighting at close quarters. One explosion during the last battle of the seige and which brought the fall of the city was so loud as to make a volcano of fire and dis.
er the glandelinian army which was very vastly superior to the six sise of the beseigers became so dismasterously and shamefully defeated can not be stated without much surprise from the fact that it was brought on by the persistent attacks, and demonstrations and heavy concentration of batteries, and troops, and by mighty mine explosions tearing gaps of great s size in the ramparts, and thus the enemy were beaten and beaten shamfully at that. It was one of the most shameful crushing glandelinian defeats in the first year of the war which showed for a time that no matter how eg strong it is can ever win a war if the christians once set upon winning it themselves. Four glandelinians generals were killed during this seige five were mortally wounded and eleven were disabled or captured. In the last battle of the seige was the most severe, the wicked glandelinians being driven frenzied by their desperate conditions storming with the fury of their attacks, at times almost shattering the christian lines, and sweeping them with their own cannon fire the full length. despite all the fury of the glandelinian onslaughts however and of their losses, the christians were enabled by the clever management of their generals and other officers to repulse every charge of their assailants and then force their way through the town fighting street to street and house to house finally capturing the city and the whole fee army and their surviving generals and all the emplacements and army equipments and provisions to boot and fourty million pairs of glandelinian uniforms and costly jewles and prisely garments. The christians lost seven generals in wounded, their losses were about nine hundred thousand in wounded and killed and prisoners which were recovered, and five christian generals were slain. Fourty other christian generals had been slightly injured or disabled. The main losses of the glandelinians however was not stated but believed also not to be-e known but it was probable that over one quarter of the whole army of 28,000,000 glandelinians were killed wounded or taken prisoners during the seige before the fall of the town at least and but nevertheless the main loss of killed and wounded shall have to remain a mystery as the surviving glandelinian generals from shame of their defeat, and not di wishing the government of glandelinia to know their losses would not reveal them though of course to the idea of the victorious christian generals their real losses may have been nearyl six million in killed and wounded alone the outcome of the whole seige.

Simultaneously to this was the horrible effects of the great seige of Capid Glorinia on the Aronburgs Run ten miles southeast of Vivian Wishby the seige of which horrible as it was only lasted one hundred days,paring the first violent struggle and bloody sorties and raids of the seige eighteen glandelinian generals were killed, and twenty three were wounded four of which suffered mortalit mortal mortal and inj internal injuries. The very outstart of the seige to the very end was nothing but raids, depredation, great mine explosions, terrific bombardments shaking the very country and artillery duels accompanying infantry and cavalry battles. All through the seige the bombardments and artillery duels, and mine explosions was like a continual thundering of a terrific warfare of immense titans of the Infernal Regions the crash of artillery on one occasion during a great battle with infantry and cavarly activities resrinqlike immense roar of great volcanoes in eruption. During the whole seige the artillery duel never slackened. At the near point of the closing of the seige general Frantzkiler of the foe side nervious over the conduct of the christians launched a fierce storming attack of cavarly and infantry supported by artillery against the whole besieging christian line under general James Vivian robert Vivians gun and though the assault was repulsed it was soon resumed, and then after wavering back anon on again, and again, and then again, and still again, others then came, on, there was the mingling of many columns, the roar of guns grew wilder and wilder, the whole seige seemed to turn into smoke, and though these devilish assaults following one after another in endless successies, and causing the acrominest and wildest conflicts continued for eight successive days general James Vivian finally forced the glandelinians to fall back, and retreat from perron a portion of the town and finally forced them from the town altogether, and soon received from the glandelinian commander a note stating that he wished to entitled the quarrel and surrender and have it over with. Then general Jamie Vivian himself accepted the surrender of over sixty million glandelinian soldiers, and the biggest quantity of military stores any general ever captured yet in that locationthe christian besigers had lost in killed and wounded more than the enemy did during the whole seige being four hundred and eighty nine thousand in killed and six million in wounded but their general officers were less being only five al and all only wounded.
This glandelinian general had wrote to the glandelinian king not long before that he would rout the son of a christian dog Christian, but he had failed to do so and had his utmost stubbornness continued much longer than it did and had he foolishly persisted in his sledge ham er onslaughts he himself would have suffered a more greater disaster still. The onslaughts that had been made by his forces were many and exceedingly violent, every one of the onslaughts however meeting at each time a bloody and crushing repulse...!!!!

The battles of this seige made great havoc to the fields and woods, and hundreds of bridge in streams, over roadways and in rivers running through the city were broken down houses were wrecked and burning and trees by the millions were shattered by the hailstorm of shells and explosives, and completely riddled with bullets and grape and canister untill they resembled hickory brooms. Thousands of cannons were in action on both sides during the seige and series of conflicts and many were the losses in common wagons, trains of cars, railroad yards, of coaches and freight, and gun carriages, and terrific was the destruction of the ramparts held by the enemy. One big fire extended for twenty miles and light the sky as bright as day and at night was seen for three hundred miles ova. The din of the commanding and nine explosions was heard for ninty miles, and shook the ground sensibly for the dista distances of five hundred miles with strength enough to commit consid considerable damage to towns and villages. Over Angelinia Felt the shocks slightly.

During great raid upon enemy lines situated near the region of the Norma's bridge one of the christian generals were wounded, but they nevertheless captured three Glandelinian generals, two of whom were wounded. Hansonia Stephen another christian commander belonging to general Salisbury's command also advances a terrific succession of raids upon enemy lines near Norma's Bridge and wins by securing immense provisions and making great fires but at the cost of more than one thousand men in killed and wounded and missing, but nevertheless capture five glandelinian officers who are believed to be generals one who is seriously wounded.

During seige of Winchester cama countless glandelinian who raid and assault christian lines of besiegers suffer annihilation a regular massacre. During assaults Glandelinians appear to go blood mad with fury but nevertheless do not accomplish anything by their desperate attempts. Many christian generals however send their divisions are endangered for twenty hours during the conflict and then to withdraw their divisions out of the danger zone. Siege soon ended however with the foe giving u up their arms. During second seige of Jennie Turner christian armies under general Remingtonia start big forcest fires, and fierce artillery bombardments, that haves cit sitt cities and towns and country side by din and storms of explosions. The seecond seige of Jennie Turner lasting fourty days was another of the bloodiest seiges of the war the glandelinian army being nint nineteen million four hundred fifty six thousand six hundred and sixty six strong. The bombardments or artillery duels during this seige mak made a clamor heard for many hundreds of miles, the volleys of christian cannon pounding the many glandelinian ramparts and fortresses and even whole trench full of troops to pieces and during the bombardments the battle fields looked as if the mouths of Hades had opened and was changing places with the surface of the earth. The bombardments was like more than murder, such a slaughter in and destruction committed by cannons but nevertheless the besieging christians under general Germania Vivian another of general Vivians brothers won the terrible seige and long contest final y compelling the glandelinian army there who had resisted Hansen Vivians army so successfully more earlier in the war to surrender unconditionally. It will not be written how long the main bombardment raged in duration as there is no necessary space here but nevertheless the christian besiegers crushed their enemy fortresses and ramparts smashing down whole-lines of forts, making gigantic fires, and scattering whole columns of panic stricken glandelinians like chaff.

Sim ultaneously to this was going on for me a nearly two weeks a regiourous seige of a town of called Here in northern Calverinia. Christians were repulsed in many bloody attacks with the loss of two millions in six days but nevertheless captured ancequal number of Glandelinians as prisoners and secured fourty six Glandelinian generals also as prisoners. The seige however was seen a failure on account of a blunder made by an officer who promptly lost his command.....

During the month of July also secured the seige of the immense city of fortresses called Goodghild. In one battle right wing of besieged Glandelinians was nearly annihilated and here the Glandelinians suffered the loss in pr prisoners and killed and wounded nearly three hundred and ninit five thousand. On the second day the battle was resumed and the enemy was again repulsed with the loss of four hundred and ninty thousand in killed and wounded. On the third day the enemy strove again to drive back the christian besiegers by resuming the conflict, but was beaten back again with the horrible loss of three millions nine hundred and fi fty five thousand in killed and wounded alone and the loss of a million men as prisoners and ninty seven glandelinian officers were killed and sixteen generals wounded. It was not stated however how the d three days desperate attle turned out but the results was finally known by the outcome of the seige a little afterwards. The battle was one of the severest in this location of Calverinia but most of the heaviest loss was on the enemy side.
After this tremendous conflict the christians bombarded with heavy cannons and machine guns and with high explosives and fire bombs, and even with liquid fire the fortifications of the city of Good Child and though losing fiv fifty thousand men on account of the return artiler artillery storm of the besieged and though thirty four generals were killed and one hundred wounded on the christian side, the immense christian army under general Edmonton nevertheless soon began to win the conflict on the glandelinians under general Julian Stiff. The big town within the great fortresses which were ruined by the bombardment,, were set on fire by the shell explosions and frightful destruction from the flames and considerable loss of life and property made the enemy cease for a time their fierce efforts to break through the besieging christian lines but they did not at this time have any idea of giving up altogether. This bombardment brought on a great conflagration about as severe as that of Fullaway w c which burned up nearly the whole town, but nevertheless the enemy were more responsible as the Glandelinians made no efforts to stop the conflagration and save the town but only paid more attention to repairing the damage done to the fortresses, and even made other fires of their own in order to defy the christians to come ahead and do their worst. Later on a desperate assault was made followed by raids by the christians but they for the time failed to carry the enemy redoubts. Another strong artillery duel of a days duration then resulted, and this time the incessant explosions of shells and shrapnells and high explosives, fairly pierced the air with scores of thousands of thunderous crashes per minute for the whole time making an earth quaking din.....

On the fourteenth day of this great seige after a lull of four days the Angelinians made a fierce attempt to secure a portion of the fortresses by desperate assault, but the days assaults was repulsed with the loss of six christian generals in killed and wounded. The christian losses was not admitted by the main christian general. The next day the assaults upon the fortresses was resu, resumed with redoubled force and this time the christians were victorious capturing these fortresses and driving back the foe with great loss an but suffer losses among themselves amounting to six hundred thousand in killed and wounded and one general whose name was not mentioned here.

went to help, and so did Jackie of daisy as her right name is, and Catherine went for hi help b but they were too far from the christian lines and not a single person was in sight anywhere. This filled them withdis dismay and and they desperately decided to carry her all the way to a trolly line running to Kimberainos place, and ride to his headquarters.

The next morning after breakfast while the bombardment was still in general

Six days later christians made a fierce attempt to secure some other fortresses but received a slight repulse. A day later they resumed the storming under cover of a big gun fire, attacking for a all day with the most frightful fury, the generals sending forward one division after another,, but the sicked wicked glandelinians continually met them with the most tenac ious resistance and poured a decimating fire every time the christians charged which tore the whole attacking lines to fragments and hurled the christians back pell mell. After this storm there was another lull for four days more. Then came the final results.:::((
The main action of this seige broke with titan fury between the two main armies and for many hours both sides raged a mighty battle also the christian besiegers making some of the fiercest onslaughts ever seen in the rebellion up to this time, and it may have been possible that scores of fi divisik divisions of glandelinians were torn to pieces by the annihilating christian fire when they counter charged and their mangled columns were then swept back and scores of more christian columns then rossed their own attacks never allowing the unfortunate glandelinian armies any respite hammering hammering away with the force of an avalanch of human beings, and crushing the massive glandelinian columns again and again. The battle indeed raged fiercely for many days without respite day and night,, the glandelinians themselves taking turns at the grand show of storming the christian besieging lines with the most greatest violence and at times throwing a portion of the christian lines into the utmost confusion and carrying portions of the works, but the angelinians would rally and counter attack with frightful fo fury and retake all they lost and finally the glandelinians were routed from all their trenches and driven into the city itself all the fortresses either on fire, dese lished or taken, the glandelinians now suffering such great loss that they were terrified. They however for six weeks longer kept up a terrific house to house and stret to street fighting and would not have given up until asms annihilated but the glandelinian authorities of Calverinia not wis wishing them to go through this horrible ordeal ordered them to either leave the city and or surrender which the case might be rather than face annihilation when escape was ute utterly impossible. The glandelinians during this battle along all that line had lost over nine million five hundred thousand men in killed and wounded half the number of the houses of the town were on fire, the streets were cumbled in wreckage also smouldering and the whole city and its ruins was a regular inferno and morgue at the same time. Finally the glandelinian commander being reduced to the last stages of desperate made an engagement with general germa ine vivian to meet him at a given point on the second day of September in his own way with the understanding that he and the whole glandelinian army was now willing to st settle the case without further conflict. Germaine vivian had too immense a force to be overcome and believe me the glandelinians though they were wise but they were not after all going to get the better of them.

general Germaine vivian met the glandelinian general alone in a glen accom panied by a few officers and his orderly and said to the foe leader after a salute;

"I'm here in the intere st of my two armies and am prepared to offer you an honin conditional surrender with the understanding that you return all prisoners captured by your armies during the seige and conflicts, the artillery and surrender to me the whole town and all its surroundings and your whole army to boot. Now the offer is final--If you're not prepared to accept it so'll fight this thing out untill your whole army is annihilated."
The glandelinian general then said;
"Give me about a walk to see if my men decide to your propositions. If so I'll comply with your demands."
"All right" "Answered general Germaine vivian. Meet me within my lines and alone on the day assigned."

After the week passed there being a cessation of hostilities the glandelinian general came as he promished with a hundred of his remaining generals and sixteen flag bearers and the assemblance of christina officers having been made they were all prepared to meet general Leader of the glandelinian army.

"I've talked the whole matter off with my whole army and all my officers." Said the foe general. "They are willing to accept your offer, but we cannot return the fortresses to you as they were when taken by my armies as they are now in ruins on account of your own gun fire. But we willsurrender anything else you have requested besides the army all provesions, the town and all flags providing that within three months hence I'm allowed my freedom and to go back to my home and kids."

"Well said Germaine vivian sitting down and preparing a sheet of paper" I'm not too big a man to stand in the way of a small thing like that." Just slip me your army, and all provesions and the town and all its contains and what remains in the fortifications and all your arms and flags and pay me a fine of fifty thousand dollars in full and sign this slip of paper----and we are through--then for us the show is over."
The glandelinian general did so ordered and soon general Germaine had accomplished the surrender of another glandelinian general and his army, and his uncle and father who were then marching on Calverina and heard the news were indeed dumfounded and flabbergasted. nothing was defeating their two sons and nope anymore.
So goes the fall of Sockphilo.

By other christian armies seiges secured at town of grove gayle and one desperate raid during seige which combled raiders to carry all before them in their pillage and burning capturing eight hundred thousand glandelinians as prisoners of war within a weeks time. In a battle here also during the last part of the seige through the misunderstanding of one of the glandelinian generals who was one of the main leaders but whose withheld two forces of the enemy thinking a attacking party of Calverinians were a forces of their own enemies did not resist them and so were closed upon by the Britannia before they realized their mistake and either vanquished with great slaughter and many taken prisoners all before the mistake was discovered. At first general Germain and Germain vivian who were the foe commanders thought this glandelinian general made an act of treachery though what came of the suspicion cannot be predicted as it would not be worthy to write it. The losses of the christians was not stated but it finally the seige turned out in favor of the foe as the christian army had to raise it and retreat abandoning the region to the enemy. It was Germania i lans second battle and his second victory. He stood against christin christi n christian besiegers for two weeks.

At the same time there occured a great christian victory at after the three weeks seig seige of the city and fortresses of Fairbanks....This seige occured in the south-western part of Calverinia ten miles south eg of pandinia and was one of mike most fiercely contested seiges of the war especially for one of such a short duration. During the entire three weeks seige and battle, the enemy lost in killed and wounded before the retreat three million three hundred and ninty nine thousand, nine hundred and ninty nie nine. Fourty two glandelinian generals had been killed,, and about six hundred officers of all other ranks had been wounded.

In this long seige and struggle, full of disasters, raids, and fires and explosions, and series of loud earthsplitting bombardments, the Glandelinian assaults every day and even every night were general but for every assault the Glandelinians faced a fierce fire of artillery and musketry from the besieging christians, which for every assault torn down their surging columns like the tornado does the corn.

Division after division, brigade after brigade and army after army of the Angelinian rebels had been torn and mangled for every assault, but fo despite all their losses it seemed for a time, as if all these series of Glandelinian onslaughts could not be stopped. Even many times each day the fierce attacking Glandelinians fari fairly reached the christian works, which seemed as if they had turned into terrific rivers of smoke and flashing fire... but so often were the many attacking Glandelinian columns scared and galled, torn and shattered, and crushed to fragments, that they were only too glad to retreat, and finally give up the dangerous struggle, and finding an avenue of escape abandon the town and fortresses to the christians. The battle and seige had been indeed very bloody, raging with a cruel fury too long for any cowards to endure here, and ten to thirt y times the main line of Glandelinian assailants had been swept to pieces and driven into hopeless confusion by the merciless christian fire, which carried all before it. A good number of Glandelinian officers also fell.

General Jimmie Vivian in his frightful five weeks seige and battles and raids at Kinoyanna was believed to have fal failed to stop the advance of a Glandelinian army coming to the rescue of the besige besieged besieged and that he was beaten in a terrific conflict and he was also believed to have lost more than nine hundred and eighty seven thousand men in killed and wounded and prisoners and also two Miolian in prisoners and four generals killed and five mortally, when in reality he gave a report to the Galverinian governments and also to the governments of Angelinia that he had captured the town without even bloodshed and the whole foe army before any other Glandelinian army ever came within view. He, of course did clash with that new Glandelinian army at Fairs Centre and driving this Glandelinian army back to Saloss Run made it make a stand there and then finally retreat for good. This was the real story about Jimmie Vivians doing. is army advancing onward also raid important gaps and places and mcintian resp resorts of rebels capturing three hundred and eighty nine thousand prisoners and great stores of provisions. Hos advance and outcome of seiges and battles was very swift the Glandelinians having at times gave his christians very serious opposition but to no avail. He also drove onward with express like speed having a severe action with a foe army under general Cnion near Fairfield city capturing it and causing the defenders to suffer severe and unknown losses as well as two generals who was killed and another two on who was wounded. Then learning of general Kindernines christian army that was besieged by foe forces at Evangeline st glare Railroad Station he made a swift advance to that point surprising and capturing whole army of besieging Glandelinians without a battle and forcing another Glandelinian army to yeild to surrender after a five days battle. Hearing in his swift advance a small point called Angelines Bluff on the Angeline Run he won a decided advantage at the battle of Winchester on general Fuller Prunes Glandelinian army and they coming immediately upon another Glandelinian army under general Mc-gollow ter Chantsonitea forced him after a one days conflict to retire northward but under cover of the darkness he his army surrounded the Glandelinian foe and finally induced it also to surrender. Christian losses in this conflict was not given but they suffered a greater loss than believed. Continueing his advancing campaign general Jimmie Vivian suffered a slight repulse at Benedist by the Glandelinians under general Winfred but he nevertheless captured from his army four hundred thousand Glandelinians as prisoners and killing and wounding nine hundred thousand making for the foe one million three hundred thousand as a total loss. Over fifteen to sixteen Glandelinian generals had fallen in this battle of Blander but out of them all only one survivied the entire fifteen others dying of wounds. This battle though short in duration was stubbornly fought by both sides the christians also suffering the most heavy losses it being a terrible battle a cruel one and unfortunate it was that Jimmie Vivians christians were vorsted, but nevertheless it was the foe who who retreated and Jimmie Vivians army was able to continue its advance unhindered.

During the height of general Germanian Vivians advance manh Glandelinian armys too many to mention the names of their generals strove every in every way possible to stop his advance but they were vanquished every time.

Finally general Ger Jimmie Vivian laid seige to the c town of Angelonia was wh was in the possesion of a vast Glandelinian army. This town was situated near the boundary line of Galverinia and Abyssinhilo and immediately after he had started a rigorous bombardment, the Landelinian armies instead of replying with their artillery started hostile actions and surged heavily again t the solid unbroken christian lines in a series of charges for three days and nights. General galemander was the foe leader who held against this seige and though the christian cannons and musketry fire mowed his attacking Glandelinians down in the most frightful numbers he nevertheless managed to fight his way through the trap and on another night which was unusually dark and storming he and his whole Glandelinian army managed to escape and though the chr christians did succeed in capturing the town the enemy had flown.

One of the Landelinian armies however which had been retreating hadbeen caught in a trap and threatened with annihilation was compelled to surrender surrender...?? to general Schumacher one of Jimmie Vivians christian generals who with ten million nine hundred thousand Abbinowians, Galverinians, and Angelinians was really responsible for the capture of the town. However this terrible blow did not daunt the main Glandelinian forces who retreated onward untill they came to a thicky wooded and hilly country twenty miles south of the town and here they again made a desperate stand. The christian armies confronted the foe for three days without any signs of hostility and then general Jimmie Vivian sent forward a large feree of Landelinians to capture the heights. The Landelinians during the fray closed upon the attacking christian troops but by the pressure of heavy numbers were compelled to retreat to the shelter of the wooded heights above, and from there poured an annihilating fire upon the christians forcing them to recoil. Then with end loud yells of "Freedom forver Forever, down with the christian Tryants the Glandelinians countered charged like an avalanch going down the sides of the ridges and routing the attackers pursued them all the way to the main christian positions, destroying a great number of regiments and capturing a greater number of prisoners and one gunnels. This was known as the battle of Sag-dag- Heights or Glain Chisholmes pursuits.

After this day of bloody repulse for general Jimmie Vivian he soon resolved upon another another tack. On the follo in following day he massed heavy attacks covered by artillery at every point of the enemy lines, aided by cavarly, and terrific fire of high explosions and shrapnell, and on this day with the fire along the rebel line being terrific the battle made a terrible clamor heard probably for fifty miles n and as the mighty christian forces swept up to the summits of the ridges they met a terrific fire that decimated their whole line. However pressed on by their generals and officers they closed with the whole line of the foe capturing one hill and position after position forcing the enemy at many points to retreat untill only one hill was still in possession of a portion of the Glandelinian army, and here the Glandelinian rifle and machine gun fire, and the result of m bayonets during fighting at close quarters slaug slaughtered so many columns of christians, that the survivors red ciled at this point in confusion.

The conflict ended with the enemy retaining this small portion of the heights but at the following night the whole Glandelinian army was on its retreat once more, and the whole christian army in full persuit once more. Though I will not predict the losses for the wicked Glandelinians it was however still heavier than the christian side for the two days engagement was very frequently fought at close quarters, with bayonets pikes and weapons of all descriptions. The christian victory at Chishaldee Junction was one of the most brilliant ever won in northern Western Calverinia. In this struggle many Glandelinian generals fell killed or wounded. This Glandelinian army continued to retreat untill hard pressed by Jimmie Vivians swift advance n and then it made another stand at the town of Mc-pcolester Junction. The enemy were forced by the christians in advancing to overlap to fight another battle and in the struggle though it was not mentioned how many Glandelinians fell it nevertheless happened that over thirty million Glandelinians were taken prisoners. For a time during the four days battle the Glandelinians fighting most desperately brushed down the three hundred fierce onslaughts of the christian armies and made the fiercest havoc among their surging lines especially in the wooded parts of the country where most of the worse part of the conflict ensued there one part of the Glandelinian army outnumbered a force of christians. The entire duration of the battle as stated before was only four days but it was on the fourth day of the struggle that the most bloodiest actions occured, and which on that fourth day raged for ever nineteen hours. fifty six Glandelinian generals were killed, twenty seven were wounded and two dangerously wounded, and eight captured. On the christian side four generals were killed, fourteen severely wounded one disabled and fourteen mortally injured the entire combined losses in generals and other officers being one hundred and nine generals. The Glandelinians in continueing their retreat made a stand further southward moving in the direction of Calverine, but they were thrown out of their position without a battle by the clever clever movements of the christian generals, who in making a series of dashing raids mortally wounded twenty Glandelinian officers of low rank, killed twenty four, disabled nineteen, and captured three making a total of sixty three officers. Six generals were injured on this occasion. Jimmie Vivians army in halting at another point to reform their armies made a raid near the town of Airandericville and another near Aurendebenile capturing immense stores of provisions and rescuing many child slaves and retaking many comrades who had been held as prisoners by the enemy.

One of the most horrible sciges of the northern part of Calverinia happened during the time general Jimmie Vivian was making his cmp campaign against the Glandelinians appearing his advance. The A Calverinian armies under general Hero Comportenda had advanced his armies without the purpose of opening the terrible bleeding of the Calverinian and Abyssinkilian boundary line had nevertheless laid seige to the Abyssinkilian town of Prushen to which he had driven the Glandelinian army pursued by him under general Peerlessentington, the Glandelinian army however was famous at and at their inroast invasion, their forced invasion into Abyssinkilian they were also besieged by an Abyssinkilian army that poured down upon them like a rushing sea of red ants. This seige lasting only a week, was however the most bloody in northern Calverinia especially for the sizes of the armies engaged in the actual fraye and it was the bloodiest seige of all in Abyssinkila. As soon as the seige was well in progress the Glandelinian army through the brisks of some general managed to slip through the besieging lines by means of many underground tunnels, a week after it began and the christian army discovered they were besieging a city without an army there and did not know what to make of it. They were outwitted and no doubt to that. Nevertheless the Abyssinkilian commander knowing which way the Glandelinian army had flown pursued southward and the big Calverinian army followed speedily and gained a little in the race with the Abyssinkilians. The enemy finding themselves pursued so swiftly that no further hope of escaping actain battle was in r prospect the foe leaders made a stand at Marillia and hurled monterous waves of troops in a succession of assaults for all day raging a battle which turned that whole region into a volcano of flame and din. Then after the battle the Glandelinian general again slipped away, but the christian army caught up with the foe at Pilan Untrebrook and compelled them to fight in a long wooded stretch of country. The enemy then finding himself trapped made a series of assaults for full y four days without avail during which the firing on both sides roared most incessantly. Finally a christian assault was made, one so forcible that the whole Glandelinian army was soon forced from their works, and when only annihilated and outflanked did the few survivors of another part of the army retreat horrified at the dreadful massacre. The timely arrival of Glandelinian reinforcements on the afternoon of the fourth day finally checked the Calverinian storm and then the battle raged with terrible violence for the rest of the day, the new forces of Glandelinians holding their ground. Along general Vivians Schleedere lines of Mc-Allestinians the christians toward evening finally resulted with such tremendous fury th that the main Glandelinian commander had to concentrate all his available guns in an effort to stop the undaunted lumbering onslaught. Thousands of guns of every make was concentrated upon the assaulting christian columns and such a havoc was never witnessed before as now followed. Whole portions of the main assaulting line of Calverinians was fairly torn to fragments, but another monterous line was n hurled forward and though it received the same horrible galling fire they finally forced back the Glandelinians and finally won the battle but oh at what a frightful cost. After this great horror accompanying the seige and battle general Comportenda continued his campaign. The conq Glandelinian army after a six days retreat made a halt h near the town of Rainy Burgo on the Evangeline St C a glare railroad and took up strong positions there. However it did look bad at first for general Comportenda for the enemy had in their retreat covered a very strong position that was almost unassailable but nevertheless by a well executed plan he did succeed in closing in catche Glandelinian army from three sides, and sweep the whole army out of the position without a battle just by making a very threatening movement. The Glandelinians then continued the retreat still further south untill they reached a section of the north Bend of the Perma pan River. Here they took up another position near the Great Vivianmere yard. The christian advance had been so swift on this occasion that general Ramsonias army of A Calverinians had went far ahead of general Comptonias army and thinking to take advantage of it the Glandelinian general decided to make some very violent assaults upon Ramsonias army while he was so far separated from the main army but not one of these assaults was made as Ramsonia had discovered their plans, and so wishing to avoid uns unnecessary desimation of his army the Calverinian commander moved northward to a selected position of his own. The duration of this christian retreat is not stated here but nevertheless general Comptoni waited untill the arival of the main christian army, and then a day later the whole of Ramsonias army made its appearance to the sudden sup surprise of the enemy and made a sweeping assault u upon the whole rebel position. It resulted in another great christian victory, and think of the results when the wicked Glandelinians got their good drubbing in this terrible battle of Vivianmere Yard. A total of five million three hundred thousand Glandelinians were taken prisoners, their losses were horrible in killed and wounded and the remainder of the glands in Glandelinian army reeled under the blow. This battle was in some stages a very severe contest last lasting a day a h battle of the most savage character, the charges of the christians having followed one after another in endless succession, whole brigades of the Glandelinians having been practically swept out of existance, millions upon millions of christians having con concentrated upon the whole foe works and encampments,, encampments,, throwing themselves furiously against the solid rebel line and hurling them back with the most stupendous loss despite the fact they held an unassailable position. It was only however when they saw they could not hold the works against the Ramsonias assaults did the Glandelinians re retreat...

During the ensuing retreat a large force of Glandelinians Landelinians made a movement movement around the advancing christian armies, and tried to make a fierce flank attack, but met with a bloody failure in the battle of Jamesat Sappehan the Landelinian army being hard pressed made another stand but lost five generals in killed and ten in wounded, and a great loss which was not estimated by the foe generals though it has some slight success for the foe and stopped the christian advance for a while...!!!!

During this time general Gabash Nzvanna with a big Abyssinkilian army was besieging the Galvorinian town of Garado with the intention of capturing the Glandelinian army which was situated there in strong forces fortresses and works. The seige was however a grand success one great fleet of Glandelinian ships in the harbor being sunk by the christian gun fire of batteries on shore, and in land actions and assaults which the christians made the city was in less than a week after the seige began captured with the whole Landelinian army s there and all the provisions and all army supplies...the loss in fallen was not estimated here. This was a sign to the enemy however that it was another movement and drive for the Bay ing Islands though how severe the engagement was the generals would not report. There however was a lot of land forces in the actions, the christians having made ten attempts to capture the fortresses of this town before they succeeded, but nevertheless their troops met frightful decimations for their victory....!! It was followed and said by other nations that the christian besiegers would never take, the great Vivian Wiskey stronghold holds now in the possession of the Angelinian rebels, for this was probably the seventh time that christian troops made drives for Ne-Ghirther Zanet, and though they mi met slight success h elsewhere never had accomplished success in the main attacks on Vivian Wiskey, and not long ago two great battles north of Vivian Wiskey had been frustrated with christian defeats.
But will the Landelinians win against this bloodiest and longest of all seiges? Who quit, we willl see...!!

Christians were reported to be frustrated in a fierce raid near Big Betty Rose. No reports of losses however o ...owever near Ne-...allester gun by the town of Girlaine the enemy making a raid o upon a besieging christian divisions at Ne-Ghirthern Zanet received a disasterious repulse, and suffered fearful loss in the conflict that ensued ted with a loss of thirty nine generals killed, sixty five severely wounded, fourty four mortally, thirty three wounded, and blinded and rendered deaf from the din of commanding and great explosions and rear ofmusketry and fourty seven were captured whole sixteen million Landelinians were routed from their encampments and trenches with the loss of all their provisions artillery camp sull supplies and thirty six thousand pre prisoners. Glandelinians belonging to main army under unknown general worsted in attempting to raid a large number of small towns and vi llages near the beautiful Ne-Ghirther Zanet in a number of frays with even the non-combatants, eight Glandelinian generals were wounded but none were killed which was fortunately for them at that, get your hat and tell them that.

Simultaneously a force of foraging Glandelinian parties led by generals and other officers raid christians near Fair Oaks taking advantage of the fact that no christian armies are located there. Raids however are repulsed. Losses not reported.

Again near the town of Manis

Again near the town of Monnicanna on the Mc-Galls run Glandelinians belong to an advancing army further off made a raid and pillaged and sacked and burned most of the town of to the ground acting with the fury of hell hounds indeed and terr terrorising the whole neighborhood. Quite a number of non-combatants and children were killed by Glandelinian rifle fire, but losses were not reported.

In the meanwhile while a force of Angelinians under general Mandel was besieging the city of Bridge Evans and extending armies further beyond to prevent other foe armies from advancing to the rescue of general Purgatorian at Vivian Wiskey the Landelinian leader of the besieged called general Merriamee attempted to make a series of frightful frightful raids and continued all this for over three days and nights, but the Christians themselves furiously frustrated all the raids, and in one dash of over one third the number of the besiegers, captured seventeen million five hundred thousand Glandelinians as prisoners besides eleven generals and other officers one of who was mortally wounded,and five others who were disabled. The seige in later days however end to my ma a failure as the Landelinians repulsed the seige and broke away from the christian armies.

A great raid also committee by Glandelinians Landelinians occured near Pendine Pan where a number of large towns and villages were collected. This raid was one of a very violent character but nevertheless though it terminated as a sort of Landelinian success in securing provinions it nevertheless cost the Glandelinians severe loss as through all the raid they were continually fired upon by snipers...!!..

Glandelinians also attempted to raid towns and villages near the big city of Bradine but the snipers among non-combatants managed to kill four Landelinian officers severely wound six, and mortally wound one and from frustrate the raid in the bargain. Knowing the peril of hated Glandelinians on account of recent co massacres of little children committed the non-combatants either women or men always took up arms at the approach of the rebels.

Glandelinians however made a raid near the vinicity of a town called Conventional villages on account of recent conventions made there.
Glandelinians

Glandelinians also made a raid upon a portion of the besieging christian line near Julio Gullio.

Glandelinians were frustrated in raid near Coronicaina Creek.

Glandelinians made also a raid near the region of the town of Ideis Hall, but are sadly frustrated with heavy loss.

Christian besiegers in breaking through a portion of the Glandelinian army near ...orma Catherine induce fierce fighting through thirteen hundred streets within two weeks and though worsted in conflicts secure much provisions rescued over a hundred thousand prisoners mostly women and children and retreat safely through the foe lines back to their own positions and inflict dreadful slaughter upon their persuers and repulse thirteen desperate assaults upon their lines with a continual murderous annihilating fire with cannons and mi musketry. The Landelinians certainly know by this time I'm sure what the Angelinians can do when they intend to do so.

... went to help, and so did Jackie of daisy as her right name is, and Catherine went for hA help b but they were too far from the christian lines and not a single person was in sight anywhere. This filled them with dismay and they desperately decided to carry her all the way to a trolly line running to Kimberlines place, and ride to his headquarters.

Glandelinians also confident of their success they gained at the past battle of Abbiasmo on the Mac Mc-Gallester gun make an attempted raid near the town of Poverty now, but raiders are ambushed by non-combatants and annihilated...!!!!

Glandelinians also attempted to make a raid upon towns and villages in the vinicity of Jacksonia Ferric and receive a reception as if all hell and its legions were let loose loose upon them. Said frustrated with massacres of troops by non-combatants.

Glandelinians however victorious in making ten great raids at Empire Crossroads towns and villages burning them all to the ground, making other great fires, somti mmmitting outrages and carrying off al propr property and pilliage they had secured.

Glandelinian armys as also make raids at many points of the Mc-Gallester Mac r Secure immense shipping and destroying a hundred christian gun boats and capture two battle ships but suffer for their successes ove r two hundred and fifty thousand in killed and wounded. Thse These raids lasted fully twoweeks.

Glandelinians also make raid near Garronnes upon many other towns and villages but seven thousand of them are shot down by snipers and the remainder sent flying in panic and confusion to their own armies and not daring to approach these forebod ing towns ence more. Hee, hee, hee is that not a joke on them. Hee, hee, hee, hee.

Glandelinians were also defeated in attempting a series of raids for a week near the region of San Reo gun where there were mustled a w whole line of pretty towns and villages. Here the non-combatants were on the alert also and three glandelinian generals were killed by snipers and one wounded, and after this no more glandelinians ever approached these towns under the same command.

Glandelinians attempt to raid christian lines besieging port Massacry but their raid leads to the capture of fortress and a force of six hundred thousand glandelinians as prisoners.

Glandelinians from the big fortress of Marseeillio also make a series of dashing raids upon a portion of general Mansions besieging armies at vivian vimvyy. This enables to arouse the christian armies and in a couple of raids of their own in return they manage to capture nine hundred eighty eight thousand, eight hundred and ninty nine glandelinians as prisoners.....

Simultaneously glandelinians from the big fortress of Marseeillio attempt to raid christian lines and though they succeedein burning down ten million tents they fail to secure any provisions of any kind and the raids are finally repulsed.

Glandelinians are however successful in raid upon the town of Heaven but that they secured no one says. Maybe it was only a bale of hay.

At Annandebennia Glandelinians succeed in making a tremendous raid capturing a million christian soldiers as prisoners during a succession of conflicts and destroy ten million christian tents in this location and a whole city of barracks two miles in extent making a great fire indeed. Who is in need?

Glandelinians raided town of Attaine capturing a hundred thousand pounds worth of provesions and pillaging and burning many houses and other property. Results not stated.

Glandelinians also made raid ne north of Vivian Vimby upon portion of besieging christian line but fail to obtain anything of valuable proportions.

Glandelinians north of Vivian Vimby slightly victorious in repelling great assaults of besieging christians. Violence of battle not stated.

Glandelinians also succeeded in obtaining much valuable prepo provisions and other property during raids around towns in vinicity of big city of Jamie Maxwell.

On the great German gun General Manu Mansion shows himself responsible for a great water raid as over-servation thousand,se called "Christian dogs58 capturing things on the so called "Glandelinian Pussy Kittens"""". Six sixty seven Glandelinian pre- vicious, sixteen transport ships were sunk, four hundred were disabl disabled, thirty four thousand Glandelinians were captured, a whole extensive docks loaded with all kinds of provisions set making a $100,000,000,000 fire, and other great damage done by pillinges before they were repulsed. This was a demonstration in a sort of way which made the general purgatorians much afraid mansion was going to make a main attempt to capture German fortresses and his land batteries by storm and all was placed in readiness for a general battle.
This This raid was more exceedingly surprisingly great than any other around any portion of Vivian Vimby as yet, for thousands upon thousands of guns on board the seized vessels had been captured. It was also made that land operations in raid and pillinge form occurred but this portion did not very well come out as christians successes, fo but for the enemy however resulted in the most frightful loss for repulsing the raiders. The raiders also caused near the region of the ten mile burning docks a great explosion heard no for nearly a thousand smiles and which for the second put all the Germany and Glengiglemmen Islands all of Vivian Vimby and the whole Calvornian sea ods coast line in earthquake throes, that alarmed not only the Glandelinians in the city, and on the islands but all the po people people in the towns along the coast beyond description, and made many gleegigglemmens Creatures come flying out of their abodes to see what in the world had happened.
This raid consisting in three sections lasted four hours but the losses in ships, the burning ten miles of docks, and the destruction caused by the explosion for a hundred miles placed the Glandelinian besieged in a very apprehensive condition and general Purgatorian was continually on the lookout for the approach of a general engagement but general mansion did not make any main assaults though at times he did start considerable artillery duels and try to make more fires and raids.

In the region of Casallianum the Glandelinians also made some very bad raids but were met upon by scattered troops of soldiers and home guards and all that secured in their raids taken from them, and suffering the loss of six officers in killed, seven severely wounded, three disabled, and one captured. Not far away was a whole Glandelinian army of X,000,000 men all Glandelinians but they did not revenge the disaster to the comrades who were repulsed in the raid. This was con exceedingly violent outcome for the unfortunate raiders and so disheartened were they over it that three Glandelinian generals resigned.

Glandelinians were at this time making attempts to raid the town of Little Carl-Wood near the city of big Carlwood but though the attempts were tried for weeks, the inhabitants of both sides such abused such frightful fury that the Glandelinians were fimally forced to give it up.

[illegible] T It [illegible] and they were tired out when across. Angeline went to help, and so did Jackie of paisy as her right name is, and Catherine went for hA help b but they were too far from the christian lines and not a single person was in sight anywhere. This filled them withdis dismay and they desperately decided to carry her all the way to a trolly line running to Kimberleiss place, and ride to his headquarters.

During the meanwhile the Glandelinians under general Hogglecster Chester was besieging the large fortified Calverdinian town of Glandilnia held by the Calverinians under general Jakwell Aginnis.This seige lasted fully a month with n continual hem oring of seige guns and many other batteries of cannons night and day without a single pause which committed incapable damage, but just in time a reasuming force of Calverinians came up and defeatting the Glandelinians in a battle that made the Glandelinian commander himself surrender with his whole army and capturing all his army equp q equp equipment and tanks and all the military stores.

Christians were reported to be making raids near Crevley Run (Angelinia) but were nevertheless unsuccessful.

Glandelinians were also making raids near the Erminie Run but were repulsed. Losses were not given.

Again Glandelinians also maid made a raid near Geminin Andersia but were repulsed without obtaining anything.

Glandelinians were also repulsed in making a thousand seried raids near the towns and villiages er in them at Thandilliam. One general and a force of two thousand Glandelinian raiders entering one of the towns with the purpose of making a raid caught in ambush and to save his troops from destruction was forced to surrender.....

Glandelinians also make a great number of raids upon a hundred small villiages near a stream called Avian Run but two Glandelinian officers with their commands are also trapped at those points and forced to surrender. This was a splendid victory for the non-combatants. Thinking of forcing two great Glandilinian generals into a surrender, which all the Glandelinians had fiercely vowed that they would never surrender to the ''christian dogs'' no matter what happens.....

Glandelinians in the vinicity of towns near Robert's Creek made attempts to capture many children during raids with the purpose of making a slaves of them but the whole force of daring raiders with their general was surrounded by a large force of Calverinian cavarly and forced to surrender within sight of main Glandelinian army of nine million men only a quarter of a mile away. Later on main christian army made a movement upon this Glandelinian army forcing it to retreat without a battle and capturing the whole abandoned encampment a great number of Glandelinian ships on the River and two fortresses near Saunser creek. This Glandelinian army finally retreated toward a large line of fortifications held by other armies called port Riggs and Twiggers and here Glandelinians bravely raged a furio furious conflict of four days duration but notwithstanding all the seemingly impregnable conditions of the two fortresses and the positions of the rebel Angelinians the christians finally v win the victory capture the fortresses and works and drive foe armies back with frightful losses and made them continue the retreat with a great deal of speed this time...''

Four Glandeli ian generals were forced to surrender from the results of a fierce christian raid nov near Gurner Hill. Losses in provisions and ammunition stress for foe side very heavy indeed. The Glandelinians then aroused counter attacked the raiders and drove them back to their own lines but just at the moment all seemed well Abvissanian guns let loose and crush Glandelinian attacking surges to fragments. Total losses among the Glandelinians werewithheld in the fallen, the Abbicannians having taken sixteen guns of heavy make and sixteen hundred smaller ones, six thousand field pieces, and many hundreds of thousands of prisoners following repulse of Glandelinian assault.

Glandelinian armies were also worsted while besieging the city of Pandora Andersenn with the loss of three million four hundred thousand in prisoners and killed and wounded. The greater loss was among those taken prisoners. The whole city was battered and fired but the seige was repulsed nevertheless by the bei besieged.

During all this a large force of Glandelinians invading for a month some part of southern Angelinia made a second attempt to capture the Angelinian city of Jennie Wren-Cove but the Glandelinian army was trapped and forced to surrender.

Near Cannon Run the Glandelinians succeeded in defeating a christian raid after considerable fighting but not without severe loss in killed wounded and prisoners, and military stores and provisions and a number of emcampments and cannons. This engagement was so violent as to make the world appear in a smoky fierce conflagration so dreadful was the firing of artillery and rifles. This was considered as one of the bloodiest conflicts ever waged in the extreme southeastern part of Calverinia. Fourteen generals were killed on the foe side, eighteen were wounded six severely, four captured and thirteen forced to surrender to the victorious christians making a total of sixty one officers. One great charge was made by the enemy in which the attacking columns was fully nine hundred seventy eight thousand fivehundred seventy eight in str n strength and this line of charge was fourty miles in extent. This immense column was finally torn and shot to pieces and repulsed and it had been said the attack lasted five hours without ceasing. Two hours later after a lull -four millions, four hundred fourty one thousand four hundred eighty nine Glandelinians re rushed to the storming in a line of attack the same extent but in double column and were repulsed after three hours horrible carnage with the loss of the one million two hundred and twenty nine thousand is killed and wounded and prisoners, and seven hundred thousand more were shot down or taken prisoners before the counter attacking christians captured the foe tr3 trenches.Thus the christian raid in being repulsed had brought on this severe engagement in which the foe side lost 7,255,167, in killed wounded and prisoners. They repulsed the raid but lost the general battle and was forced to retreat as hastily as a retreat could be made. This was later known as the battle ofJesrussia.In Pronounciation the name is Jest-rooster-cur.

The Glandelinians also made great raids upon six large towns within the region of the big river of Erminie Run in Middle Galverinia. The raids though successful results in series of street to street conflicts with non-combatants and Glandelinian soldiers, the soldiers who are even fired upon from door ways, windows, trees, and house tops losing twenty six officers who are wounded, besides twelve others who were mortally wounded another seriously, and nineteen killed making a total of fifty six. None however were any generals but officers of under rank. Losses of Glandelinians in killed wounded andmissing about seven thousand. This series of raids indeed resulted as a severe holocaust of terrible desc description for the Glandelinian raiders and ended up as a frightful defeat. The Glandelinians lost the heaviest number of officers and men ever inflicted by non-combatants in this location of Galverinia.

[illegible] went to help, and so did Jackie of paisy as her right name is, and catherine went for hA help b but they were too far from the christian lines and not a single person was in sight anywhere.This filled them withdis dismay ad and they desperately decided to carry her all the way to a trolly line running to Kindermines place, and ride to his headquarters.

Glandelinians in attempting to secure immense stores of provisions and in efforts to obtain ammunition make raid within christian lines stationed near the town of Yenf Vandalia on the Mc-Pollester Run and capture eight christian generals, wounding eight others and killing one but christians repell raiders with great success and persue with such white that generals are recovered and a number of Glandelinians taken prisoners forcing ten Glandelinian officers of lower ranks them generals to surrender and also their commands. Glandelinian total losses in the bloody skirmish however was not given. The Glandelinian army situated here under general Ramsee was seven million seven hundred sixty two thousand two hundred and fourty five strong, but on account of the disasterous effects of the raid, and fearing the christian army which was ID,000,000 sg strong the foe army finally retreated leaving all their encampment in the hands of the christians in their hasty pliz flight besides seven thousand two hunsr two hundred and fourty five cannon, twenty two thousand two hundred twenty eight regimental standards, and vast quantities of horses, wagons, and railway consines and two great fortresses.

Glandelinians were seen during the month of August making raids upon christian towns near Radcliffe capturing fourty one million dollars worth of provisions, and nine hundred thousand pounds of ammitions. No one were reported to have fallen during this raid.

During the month of August IVII..... Christian foraging partiels in disguise as gargelians and numbering about nearly one million two hundred thousand made raids into a portion of the fortifications of Mc-Whirther Janet near Fort Catherine seen starting perfect seas of fire, destroying many ships on the waves, and starting the greatest ordinance ever heard by the efects of a thousand explosions. It was the greatest raid ever made upon any portion of vivian vishay yet, and at this point the raid was effected in the face of five hundred thousand cannon in the possession of the Glandelinians. The Glandelinians on account of this fearful raid suffered great loss in ships and provisions.

The seige of Peebins starting June IVI2, and ending August 16th IVI2 was the most noiset seige on record for Southern Eastern Calvarizia. It was be sieged by the Glandelinians and the christians were the ones to raise the seige..... The Angelinians who were besieged though all provisions were cut off and they and the inhibatants were threatened with famine and all the other horrors of the seige kept up a terrific resistance against even a most terrific bombardment which was very continuous which included the roar of a hundred thousand guns, and during desperate battle the besieged Angelinians cut down the Glandelinian waves of assaults making them suffer the loss of four million six hundred seventy seven thousand in killed and wounded. Fortun fortunately with the arival of two new christian armies in the nock of time this seige terminated in a christian victory and the besieging Glandelinian army was finally defeated with more terrific slaughter. This was one of the best christ ian victories yet during the bloody war the Glandelinian besiegers having been crushed and demolished beyond endurance and the war rivers forced to surrender with all the army contained. A great victory indeed.

The Glandelinians under general Gauterier were also worsted in the two weeks seige of the town of Gallaland with the loss of seven offisers in killed, three mortally wounded and nine disabled but none were killed however. Losses in men were not stated but the most prominent generals of the foe side who were slightly wounded were general Jones Legree, and Gauter.One general was killed on the christian side and two severely wounded but the losses in privates was not counted. The foe were forces e forces forces forced nor v nevertheless to raise the seige and retreat.

At the seige of the fortresses of Coos Cosmopolitan the wicked Glandelinians under general Renee Legree shelled the main christian lines, the positions and fortresses and even hurled a storm of shrapnelll and high explosives and even fire banbs into the very city for over three weeks,, and a half in an endeavor to force the besieged to either retreat or surrender, of if the christians would not do that to blow their lines and the city to pieces.The christian guns were soon so badly damaged however that the christian generals hadno more to bring up to answer the terrific and ruthless rebel gun fire so the main general who was Ramsolburg decided to wreak through the boelsi besieging lines and defeat the foes of our lord at any cost whatever. So finding no guns useful any more and mostly all ammunition for artillery exhausted and the city on fire and the unfortunate inhibatants gi hiding in the basements and cellars of their homes or even in tunnels and subways the christian general barbe his infantry forward to attack the besiegers and for thirty more days and night a pan panarama of terrific horrir horror pr prevailed all along the two encircled hostle lines. The heaviest consentration of the Glandelinian troops and all their worse artillery fire failed to check and even cease the christian onslaught despite the dreadful losses, and finally to make matters worse the rebel batteries were soon carried. Still the whole Glandelinian army being finally driven back cot woods around town on fire in order to drive back the christians into the town and force them to fight from street to street where they could get them trapped but christians fought enemy back in the very burning woods with the fury and frenzy of desperation, and though their lines were torn and mangled by counter charges of foe it did not check h christian attacks, and finally during hall christian engineers set a line of ID,000 gigantic mines which when set off made e earthread earthrending and earsplitting explosions which tore enemy lines to pieces and shook a good portion of the woods down with the commotion. Finally suffering three times more loe losses than the christians the Glandelinians began to recoil and soon abandoned the terrific and bloody seige and leaving everything they had even possessed in the hands of the patriots. The Glandelinian losses were not stated in killed and counted though the foe carried had been over fourty million strong during the seige. The Glandelinian general had fallen either though one had been captured by the name of Federal Phantomia but he later escapes from the christians and got back to his ranks. The Glandelinians made a great mistake and blunder however in besieging and shelling this strong town guarded by mighty fortresses and stronger christian armies for instead of driving the christians from the town or capturing their armies as they had supposed they easily would, they only suffered a disasterious defeatt.

Glandelinians raid towns and villages near Cotillionton. Two towns burned. Cattle sent off and horses captured. Great amount of provisions taken.

Glandelinians make raids and burn and pillage and destroy shipping in river port towns near Mc-Callester Run River close to the big town of Castellio.

Glandelinians also make raids at Somerset,, Fagan Corinth,, Fort St Clair,, Baldwin Calvion, and Gallianin.

Christians however o s e elsewhere defeat Glandelinian raids, at Rivers Smith, Blankenburg Run, Thermal Grove, Angeline Run River, Colonia, and three other raids near Rivers mouth saving much provisions and many towns from pillage and rape by the rebels.."..

On fifteen of August fierce Glandelinian hordes make great attempts to raid christian christian lines near the fortifications of Marseaton and Mirandville but in fierce and bloody skirmishes and christian suction and other troubles lose fourty five under officers in killed five mortally wounded, and fifteen wounded two of which are severely and one forced to surrender when he failed to get out of the christian lines. The losses caused by the raids, and series of small but bloody conflicts were not estimated. The Glandelinians h o however had suffered the loss of over four million to five million five hundred thousand in prosi prisoners.....
Glandelinians were also repulsed in steep attempting to make raids near the Arenburg fortifications, near Mc-Whirther and Atteria but lose one general and after frustrated with dimesterious loss.

Glandelinians victorious in making raids near the christian lines confronting the fortifications of Marischoschanzie. Their raids however though they obtain great amounts of provisions and artillery and even ammunition nevertheless cost the Glandelinians heavy losses. seven generals are killed and one is badly wounded. The christians enraged over the victorious raids made by the enemy had n made such desperate dashes upon the foe lines and such fierce surprise attacks that without bloodshed(think of it) the Glandelinians had captured ove eleven million six hundred and fourty two thousand Glandelinians as prisoners. This great drive and surprise attack made by the christians well fit the losses for the enemy. It was one surprise attack with three times the speed of any other surprise attack, and probably at this stime causing the enemy one of the greatest losses by the wholesale. Tens of millions of christian troops had for all this time anyway encircled the fortifications of Marischoschanzie crushing to pieces every attack the foe had in other times dared to make, and retaining bombardments which had continued a long time with inconcievable violence and fury.
The christian cannon in firing upon the besieged Glandelinians at this portion of the Lucillia Dickson portresses g had continually made a tremendous universal clamor heard a far and wide and which had at times stopped the Glandelinian cannonading with horrible damage and slaughterr. It was the first time in the war during this tremendous seige that the Glandelinians tried such a desperate movement against the christians as making this tremendous seige and for their re rashness they really deserved the mortification they received. It was probable that during the fierce skirmishes resulting from the seiges both sides lost heavily in killed and wounded, but it was probable that the christian losses exceeded that of the enemy but in fact only Glandelinian generals and other officers fell and no cohristian officers. In one skirmish over twenty three thousand Glandelinians had fallen.

The Glandelinians in the seige of Ballic Low were put at a disadvantage with the loss of ten generals who were captured with half of the foe army, the rest having escaped through secret underground passages ways.

During the seige of Maryatten near the town of Clybourne the Glandelinians were worsted in over sixty five severe engagements within three weeks,, with the loss of one million in captured though their members in killed and wounded were not en estimated. This seige and series of battles had at times a cannonading salvoes of explosions heard for hundreds of miles and in one long engagement on line of Christian troops charged the Glandelinian front extending for two miles with all their might and main, committing incapable damage smashing the resisting Glandelinian forces into tatters and driving all before them. The fire all along the whole rebel line at this p occasion had been es exceedingly terrific indeed, but the onslaught of the christians however could not be stopped and thus the wicked Glandelinians were driven into great confusion and had at last been forced to give way before the onslaught and their whole gray line being rolled up the Glandelinians retired into the city prepared to fight fo from house to house but the christian generals not wishing an unnecessary loss of lives did not press the attack but allowed the enemy to remain in the city and continued the seige storming the whole town night : and day with heavy shell fire.
The Glandelinian generals who were in command here were those known as Richard Tamerline and Federal johnston. In one of the conflicts during the seige general Tamerlines right wing of Germanninns had been annihilated with the wounding of generals Walter John Harrison, Tamerline Richardsonia, Shermannia Pioneer and the severely injuring of general Sanderlin Sander and Hagstone. The Glandelinians under general Shermannia this misus had made the great onslaught against the whole besieging christian line during the first week of the seige, but had been severely defeated. General Walter John Harrison however was partially victorious during the first of the second week of the seige in a titanic assault upon the christian forces holding th three fortresses and captured them despite all the attempts of the christians to retain them. The Glandelinian assailants numbered one million. On the next day following the christians countered charged and defeated the same Glandelinians in another great battle for the fortresses driving them out and recapturing all the ground they had lost. This series of battles and seige had been believed to have been fought in her honor of the Annie Arenburg child who had been slain early before the war and unfortunately however at some points during the seige the enemy had been victorious as usual being too successful to be thought of but nevertheless could not and did not hold the advantage they had gained.
Later after the Glandelinians had been driven into the city by the furious christians there was a lull and the seige continued on for another week without any engagement a at all not even one cannon being fired. When general Walter John Harrison wishing to break through the besieging christian lines had asked general Richard Tamerline to open the way for him. Richard Tamerline tried to do so but failed in a three days roaring conflict no meeting a crushing defeat. Three d days making series of most desperate assaults in endless succession on the main christian lines the enemy met an annihilating fire which for every attack tore their main line of assaults to pieces and threatened them with destruction. Three Glandelinian generals were on these conflicts wounded and thirteen were killed. This conflict had lasted fully seventy four hours but despite all their tried the Glandelinians could not win the struggles their christian enemies carrying all before them. The main fury of this seething contest however raged on the evening of the third day when a n large force of the christians made a terrific counter charge carrying the entire front line of Glandelinian redoubts and smashing the whole of the Glandelinian army out of the works and driving the whole force some o more into the recesses of the large city.
On those th three days over eleven million one hundred twenty three thousand nine hundred and ninty nine Glandelinians had been engaged. General Hangergarrese of the foe side had been forced to surrender his whole army before it could retreat safely to the protection of the city. The total number of christians engaged in the three days last contact was twenty million, one hundred twenty four thousand, one hundred and twenty eight, of which nine million more had been held in reserve with one hundred and twenty nine-thousand seventy nine. Some parts of this conflict also raged on the river between glandelinian fleets and christian fleets followed by sanguinary engagements on the shores of the river. The whole scramble seem however ended with the escape of the main besieged glandelinian army and the christian armies were in no condition to follow the beaten foe. The main christian general who had been in command of the besiegers was general Francis Jacques.

In the meantime the glandelinians were still successfully resisting fierce bombardments and dreadful hand attacks against them at many quarters of Vivian Wiskey per day and night. Terrible losses on both sides was being inflicted in numerous fleets of ships, ammunitions troops, and war materials, besides prisoners and officers. In some of these engagements the christians had captured over twenty glandelinian generals h and had cost the death of two. Simultaneous to this severe fierce naval engagements on Wiskey Bay and some near the Bloogiglemenan and Bay ging Ba Lands. The christian fleet of warships and gunboats were annihilated with almost every fighter on board drowned and the loss of 7 ships belonging to the christian navy besieging the foe by the seaboard was frightful also. This was the beginning of many of the series of desperate fights for the possession of the Bay Ping and Bloogiglemenan Islands, and those most of the christian fleet had been victorious on the enemy capturing foe fleets and silencing some of the Glandelinian shore batteries and disabling a number of fortresses on ten islands they did not however follow up the advantage just then to attack the fortifications of Ba Shirther near the mouth of the Homm gun river. How long will it be before they is make the attempt. And will they succeed in the enterprise. When will the great christian Gibralter now in the hands of the wicked Angelinian rebels be retaken by the christians, and cause all the horrible war to be ended and all the misery torn child slaves to be set free. who can answer?

Another account was of the capture of the fortifications of Bel Ballis by the christians at another section of Vivian Wiskey near the Julio Gallic and Herm's Bridge. The glandelinians in order to retain these fortresses fought most desperately but lost one million nine hundred thousand in prisoners and their losses in killed and wounded was unaccountable. This horror of Julio Gallic seige had one of the first most terrific battles of the great seige, the christians having during the seige of the fortresses made a series of violent onslaughts, every divisions and brigade pouring across shell swept glens and plains, and over lanes and through woods and over streams and over farms and fields a battle line ten miles long, and though whole columns here and there seemed to be shot to pieces, other brigades continued the frightful onslaughts finally smashing up the whole rebel line in this portion, and driving the surviving glandelinians into terror and confusion. Ten times the desperate glandelinians rallied to the defense of the works driving back the christians with the most frightful losses in men and officers but then the christian generals in command only sent forward new brigades which ag attacked with all their violence, putting the rebel line up once more, and again driving them into confusion. Still again the glandelinians had rallied, and drove b back their desperate christian assailants but on an on and on came more divisions and brigades and again the glandelinians had been compelled to flee in the utmost confusion. Many officers fell f on the christian and even enemy side combined their numbers counting up to many scores. This was another of the beginning of the series of christian victories in the seige of Vivian Wiskey, which had been won causing the capture of the fortresses and which again and again proves without a doubt that the Angelinians are a strong national force beyond measure and that it takes more than they and even the very devils to beat them twice on the same grounds.

In the meantime only ten miles away from the besieged city of Vivian Wiskey a force of Glandelinians had started a seige of the town of Agithia gun and after keeping up a continual bombardment for several weeks had been forced to give it up and retreat, without having either wrecked the christian cruise, or capturing anything important. The glandelinians however in retreating were pursued by another christian army under general Swertesto Swerestio Tres and forced to fight at general Owl Creek but were again versted and forcedto continue the retreat..... There's a lot of retreats being made lately.....

The Glandelinians under some unknown general the I don't care to mention though his name can be revealed was also defeated in their seige of Beppo Lamaramania losing three hundred and sixty five thousand in prisoners and over twenty seven thousand in killed and wounded. This seige was not quite so severe as others however but nevertheless it had a fortunate ending for the besieged christians as the christians here under general Waterlemania were were victorious, and because the glandelinians a good lesson a lesson of not to attack them on such ground as they did then, and without good supports.

The v first probable greatest disaster of the war as it is to be statedoccured near the gunna Gun and near the gunna's Bridge and caused damage and scenes of horror for an area of fifty miles in width width and nearly a hundred and fifty miles in length. It was a disaster beyond a ll comprehension, causing a scene of horror twice as fierce as any number of cyclonic storms put together, and the real estimated number of killed was never estimated. It was never for a long time dopot depected by authorities what the effects of the great explosion was which resulted in a series of other disasters, such as wrecking of towns and villiages from the concussion, great floods from walls of dams being shaken down, avalanches from mountian sides, the stripping of branches from trees by the air waves and other complications, but though it was a portion of general Gangis Khan's Mongolians besieging lines that suffered in the first stage, the attempt nevertheless of the enemy to break the seige by causing this explosion by setting secret secret mines under a p portion of the christian works was a crushing defeat and caused the surrender of several of general Francis Baldwins transmountian divisions under general Archibaldertamus. The main army of Baldwins however recoiled from the stricken region, and other portion of the foe line had to move further back or suffer a great disaster to themselves. It can never be described, the unaccountable violence of the explosion which seemed to h ve have forces enough to tear a bottomless pit in the ground, emitting flames with smoke and fume fissures from the volcanism, setting forest fires that burned down two small towns and one fortress within the besieging christian lines and wiping out many other towns..Immediately after the effects of the explosion had been known it was believed that it had been accidental through some misplacing of explosives, but investigation soon proved that a mine of great size and strength had been secretly placed under the christian works but the enemy had failed nevertheless in their main purpose though they had succeeded in committing incalculable damage. Despite the frightful battles of the war up to this time no disaster had equalled the violence of this expl explosion where one hundred and fourty nine men armed or unarmed officers and thousands of christian soldiers had been killed and scores of thousands of injured in that one moment and a hundred thousand either disabled by the concussion, blinded by the debris and rendered unconscious by the shock. The roaring thunder of the explosion also had such volcanic volcanism as to cause a severe earthquake shock which threw down many towns, being a greater horror than usually caused by natural earthquake and volcanic eruptive eruptions. Immediately after the explosions great forces of Glandelinians made some of the most violent assaults upon the blast torn christian lines the most fiercest charges ever seen in the war up to this time and then h the whole assaulting line of rebels in a four hours terrific conflict was cut to pieces and rolled back in the most frightful confusion, other fierce yet terrific attacks were launched upon the same position that had been torn in half by the explosion those Glandelinian columns just now. I It was a mercy that they were tired out when across. Amelia went to help, and so did Jackie of daisy as her right name is, and Catherine went for hi help b but they were too far from the christian lines and not a single person was in sight anywhere. ...while the Confederacy was still in general

...owing against the christian lines like a series of monstrous tidal waves of human only to be shot to pieces and thrown back like spume of a wave against a so solid breakwater. One of the main tragedies of this battle of gunsmoke Hamlet was the wounding of general Forgetherian Brandi, grandis Magnificoes main assistant glandelinian commander who had charge of Fells Gabble and green Gatherins, and who had led some of those terrific onslaughts himself. It was a great rejoicing for the christians however but how he was wounded and what followed afterwards no one could learn as to approach the glandelinian encampments and fortresses and over the great spectacle of the city at this time was impossible without sure death or capture. To Ten glandelinian generals during the six hours conflict had fallen mortally wounded five others were severely wounded during a charge near the great white water, and fifty other generals fell wounded within the very christian lines when one of the onslaughts almost carried a redoubt, nine more were dangerously wounded during a severe repulse of 12,000,000 glandelinians who made the most extensive and without onslaught ever commanded, and fifty one others were killed outright during the same onslaught in which over three millions glandelinians fell.

The entire battle of Gunsmoke Meadow continuing on later in the day lasted fully over nineteen hours beginning at five o-clock in the morning two hours after the great explosion and lasting till twelve o-clock at night though that time of the battle was a good deal less violent than during the day. The terrific storm of chillfire of both sides, the effects of the explosion and the concussion shattered long stretches of woods as neatly as the extensive tornado would have done, and the windrows of wreckage wreckage of ruined towns was intermingled with the dead and wounded of soldiers and non-combatants, and all had reason to be in danger of being left to the mercy of the thousands of raging conflagrations that followed, and also to the mercy of the terrific floods.

Let us all hope dear readers, and Myself also, through the Mercy of god that th this great explosion and disaster will be a lession to the christians, to keep them more on their guard, that the results of the enemys heinous heinous onslaughts being repulsed so savagely will always in a inspire more love and respect for hundreds of thousands of children crowding orphan asylums,, for this great war is fought for the protection and the coming freedom of millions of helpless little child-slaves and other christians enslaved by the Angelinian rebels in Galverinia, and to free the children,in the Bay ring and Longislemenen Islands, to cause the speedy capture of mighty Vivian Vickey, and to put down all the cowering massacres of all Religious Persons, the wicked causes of the insurrection, the useless and cruel assassinations of countless numbers of innocent little children, which even before and now during the war the wicked glandelinians have committed, and who are doing all they can to make life as miserable as possible for the Darlings of the Angelinian nation''called the Vivian girls, the Daughters of general Robert Vivian, who are called by I ''Violet and her sisters...''

During the meanwhile a still another seige was going on and it was a seige being made by the christians, call'd the seige of the city of Fredericksburg. This seige however only lasted three months from March 1863. to the first day of June, but nevertheless the enemy kept up incessant fighting raging many battles but they might as well have tried to prevail against the Gates of Heaven itself. The glandelinians were worsted in every conflict whether the foe fought night or day losing nine million eight hundred & sixty five thousand five hundred and fifty five. Three to six glandelinian generals were wounded, and fourteen were killed,. The whole city was shelled and burned making as great a fire as coon at Galverins, General Gatherins, Andrean or Chaltenay if you please to mention.? The glandelinians also during this seige strove to break the whole christian line but nevertheless failed and finally the thirteen millions of the remainder of the foe army with their generals gave up and surrendered the city and all their arms and counted themselves out of the war. were not they wise!!!!!!

Simultaneously to this there was another seige being made by the christians the com completely surrounded the town of Sunny the seige ending in favor of the christians and resulting in the capture of over five million glandelinians, besides five hundred and sixty four thousand more who were wond wounded during the battled around the town and fortresses which had been set on fire by the christian bombardments.....This seige lasted only six months however.

Again at another town called Daffodils ji junction from the month of January 1863 to the month of August of same year if you please the christians made a great and in lengthy seige of nearly thirty million glandelinians, and here the glandelinians being confident in their strength because they overwhelmed the christian armies three to one and believing that nothing could prevent them from thrashing their seemingly rash besiegers the glandelinians fought obstinately every day and night through out the whole seige but were losses within that time vorsted with the loss of sixteen million six hundred thousand in killed and wounded. One glandelinian general was killed and the main commander who was general Thomas Phellinin was severely injured. This was another of those long seething storms of war both sides for every day of the seige having mingled in titan throes without ceasing, but more horrible for the foe side was the losses in killed and wounded, and through some default in the movements of the christian commanders the main glandelinian general in command who had been wounded and carried by a party of glandelinian horsemen but nevertheless the army itself with all provisions and artillery being leaderless sustib substituted a new leader for themselves and thus under his command a grand surrender of the whole glandelinian army was made. Another grand and glorious christian victory though it took a very long time indeed ti to accomplish it it.

Still in Western Galverinia there was another seige almost as glorious in ending though not quite so long in duration. It happened at Liddo Downie, the christian army was under general Hamlet Mac-Forrester and the foe general was general Joseph Great - Heart. The Glandelinians against the christian besiegers fought with the same horrible obstinacy the long battle being cruel and sanguinary the foe side losing three million in killed and wounded and prisoners-within the three months seige. In these series of night and day battles the wicked glandelinian soldiers attacked with the frenzy fromsy of great vehemence and violence,, and attacking at all points of the christian lines with the most savage fury trying to crush down every opposition in their path of on onslaughts but for every day during the series of battles the severity of the murderous christian fire simply carried all before it in destruction sweeping to death whole plains and meadows full of glandilinians at a certain time,.and finally counter charges of irrestible force and vehemence drove the remaining glandelinians into a wild panic and finally the foe retreated into the recesses of the towns. In this battle it was probable that the christian losses was not very heavy their main strength being39,444,446The glandelinian army surrendered but on this occasion it happened the same with the foe general escaping through being rescued by soldiers and officers.

The most terrific seige of the whole first year of the war outside of Crowley or Lucillia Pickson and which lasted also six months and ten days was the bloody invest ment of the great fortified city of Frankhurst by the Abbicamians themselves. This seige had for the Abbicamians a most terrific disaster which cost woeful numbers of lives but nevertheless did not break the seige in the least . This seige however ended the career of general Zimmermann Edwardsonia who was the first known glandelinian commander who had as bad a reputation as general Forgatorian and gunlay themselves.

just now. T It was a heavy load and they were tired out when across. Angeline went for hi help b but they were too far from the christian lines and not a single person was in sight anywhere.This filled them withdis dismay and and they desperately decided to carry her all the way to a trolly line running to Kindernines place, and ride to his headquarters.

Through some mistake of general Mac Pora during the height of the seige, which was known as his first serious blunder general Vivianin who commanded the great besieging christian armies rushed great th forces of troops through the works of the besieged enemy and into the city itself where the whole attw cking force was fiercely ambuscaded from every house and street. P art of the force was annihilated and the remainder put to absolute flight by fifty six million two hundred and thirty four thousand, five hundred and sixty seven glandelinians who were mostly guarians and Zimmermannians. This had been sent to the rescued of the hard pressed glandelinians by general Stansk Hansen who drove all before them and in assaulting the main christian line nearly broke it asunder.

On account of the blunder general Vivianins line was sagged and to the glandelinians felling feeling sure now f success did all they could in their power to redouble the series of fierce attacks on the besieging Angelinians which they insued with all the violence they could. The main glandelinian general seeing the huge gap in the christian line threw forward Ixamnes troops under general Joseph Finlan, which met the greatest resistance and was compelled to make charge after charge. Its losses were become so horrible that they were never pred c predicted, but in the heat of the bloody conflict he suffered the annihilation of three of his best divisions, the flower of his main command, and in trying to rally the persisthat were in con fusion and cut to pieces by the curtain of christian artillery and musketry fire along a line of battle ten miles in extent his horse was killed, he lost thirty six of his best officers in killed and wounded and he had to withdraw narrowling escaping being taken prisoner by his fierce persuers.

The Angelinians then with a tumult of yell s from hundreds of thousands of throats counter charged with a terrific rush and only through the help of general Thompson Thomas Mc-gallester and Hoshuan Mc-Whirther who brought up heavy reinforcements from one of the strong fortresses was the army of defeated Zimmermannians saved from rout and annelition but for a long time they could not stop the thunderous counter charges of the attacks untill general Federal johnston came up with his brigades and the then fighting stubbornly all day on their own ground and repelling charge after charge amid dreadful losses the glandelinians finally won the day, though the two Bitter generals were severely and dangerously wounded.

The rest of the time passed without hostilities, but two weeks later the christian besiegers started other battles with ferocity to horrible to relate in detail, but finally it resulted with-one of the greatest victories victories the christians had ever won yet. The whole glandelinian army was first routed with the loss of one q uum quarter of the commands from their works and driven into the fortresses in which they took their stand, and from here after metting ten attacks the rebels were soon ousted and then into the town the pzais stricken glandelinians fled and after driving back their assailants at last with dreadful losses in the nights hill an made preparations for a final stand. Then before attacking f finally the christian besiegers closed closed tightly on the whole cir city and hurled shot and shell upon it from the guns of the captured redoubts and fortresses and from their own batteries further on making a terrible din heard for a hundred miles and committ ing such horrible destruction that the glandelinians grw grew desperate but as yet would not give in though many of their best generals fearing a terrible disaster seeing co q cowardly deserted their armies and sneakingly slipped through the christian lines unseen. Only Hoshuan Mc-Whirther, Thomas Finlan and Joseph Finlan stayed with the armies and urged them to fight to the lastst fierce attack was soon made by the christian besiegers but they were first repulsed and driven to the outskirts of the city where they made a desperate stand fighting the counter assailing rebels, but was beaten severely in one detail, with the army cut to pieces and totally routed to the works and fortifications they had captured. Then the attack was pressed no further for the foe retired back to the shelter of the ruins of the city fighting every attempt of snipers and others to mow them down and repelling the shell fire with resistance unheard of in war before with their own cannons taken to house tops after labor laborious work unknown to any one before. And how in the world did they do it. ? It was indeed a surprise to the christian besiegers.

Had it not been for general Doubleday Federal of the christian armies who made a finaly stand against the attack of the besieged the whole besieging christian army would would have been jeopardized and crippled so as to be so useless as to be unable t e continue the seg seige, and had this seige been lost then general Vivians advance on Salver as Gulverine then going on would have been blocked with great success by the other foo armies under general Shenmandia and Manley. General Double Day Federal had repelled the counter attack with a force of one million one hundred and eighteen thousand five hundred and fifty three, Angelinians against the two million two hundred and twenty three thousand four hundred and thirty two glandelinians. The total losses of both sides however were not predicted though thirty glandelinian generals were wounded, twelve others were mortally wounded, and fourty five were killed making ninty three officers in all killed and wounded. The fury of the battles around and within this besieged city was very destructive causing more havoc than any battle field of the war yet or any desolate battle field of Europe. The christians however had won a sweeping victory finally toard the end of the s seige carrying all before them, and even changing the glandelinian retreat from the town into a most total rout. The predicted strength of the glandelinian army may have been over eleven million men but their total losses of the whole seige and conflicts was not to be mentioned though hundreds of generals of all ranks named or unnamed were killed and wounded. Being thus driven from the town and still encircled by the christians general Hoshuan Mc-Whirther decided to make a most desperate effort to break through the christian lines and secure a sw escape for the glandelinian army when he now took personal command of www.....

After being driven from the town which they had defended so fiercely and gallantly the glandelinian army torn and ragged already took defense near the grounds of Angelenin. They during a lull in the fierce conflicts managed to trap a small force of christians under general Lindermain surrounded him and his force and expected to force him to surrender whose capture would be the means of breaking the seige somewhat but a fierce assault of a christian brigade drove the glandelinian back and saved the christian division from capture and annalitions. The glandelinians who had made this seige within seige were about five million one hundred ninty five thousand two hundred ninty nine strong. no officers however had fallen though this engagement had been unexceptionally severe this battle being a frenzy in its fury, the losses on both sides being exceedingly heavy. It was probably the most violent battle of the seige and lasted fully a whole day.

During this contest both sides were in titan throes for hours. The foe were the main assailants on this occasion but the christians had began the struggle by attacking the foe who were besieging the division of christian troops, the wicked Glandelinians being severely worsted after all their most stubborn fighting. This conflict was so supremely severe that the glandelinians were glad to desist the noise of cannon fire having been heard for fifty miles. both sides had fairly cut their armies to pieces, but the christians had finally won. The battle lines in this desperate conflict was very extensive and the whole scene from so much smoke of firing of all weapons and from explosions and bombshell and shells resembled a mighty forest fire. In this last battle of the seige the glandelinians showed the utmost bravery fighting most fiercely and persistently against the most heavy odds, and repulsing charge after charge and crushing to pieces whole christian divisions. The christians however were still braver fighters than the the enemy always returning to the charge and repulsing charges made against them and crushing whole glandelinian divisions to pieces as fast as their own were crushed and mangled, and torn. The following night however through some blunder of some christian officer, general Hoshuan Mc-Whirther managed to find a gap gap through the besieging christian line, and thus on the following morning the christians found the enemy had escaped leaving little behind, taking with them mostly everything. They had been finally outwitted but nevertheless had gave the glandelinians a good thrashing during the seige.

Just now. T It was a heavy load and they were tired out when across. Angeline went to help, and so did Jackie of paisy as her right name is, and Catherine went for hA help b but they were too far from the christian lines and not a single person was in sight anywhere. This filled them withdis dismay and and they desperately decided to carry her all the way to a trolly line running to Kindermines place, and ride to his headquarters.

In the meantime there was more scenery of war around the beleaguered garrisons of haughty haughty Vivian Vickey. Three hundred thousand glandelinians strove to break a christian line near Spreesmine but were beaten in the very severe battle. The Glandelinians had tried hard to win but failed. The glandelinian armies were also worsted at the battle of St Greola and the main glandelinian general was Grobman Spreesmin. The Glandelinian christian losses combined were not estimated but were said to be very severe nevertheless.

At the two weeks seige of Greta ten miles south of the great Mc-Chirther Run River and six miles west of Greteknn the glandelinians who made it suffered very severe losses in attempting to force the christian army there to surrender. The battle and seige raged for two weeks and was all that time a very conflagration of horror. Tens of millions of enraged Glandelinians day and night for the two weeks had crushed themselves against the wild-wildly storming christian fire of rifle and machinery and machine gun fire. The glandelinian losses were horrible but they finally became victorious capturing half of the christian army, taking the town and compelling the remainder of the christian army to make a slow retreat. During the whole two weeks however there was no intermission in the storm of carnage at all. The fiercest part of it all was when the glandelinians made a sweeping onslaught, at which midst the dreadful carnage they succeeded in cutting the christian line to pieces and capturing the one half and defeating the other half. Nevertheless the victory was incomplete because the Glandelinian commander general Attala St Clair had wished to capture the whole christian army and had not done so.

During the same time the wicked Glandelinians were also worsted during the ten weeks seige of Espanin 1 near Zappo. The fierce fighting between both sides however was spasmodic. The strength of the besieging Glandelinian army was about two mil lion three hundred fourty five thousand seven hundred and eighty nine men. During the seige it was said the Glandelinians lost one hundred and sixteen glandelinian officers and generals who were killed and wounded besides two others who had been captured. The seige was a failure as the glandelinian army on account of the near approach of ten christian armies had to raise the seige and retreat as fast as a retreat could be made.

Simultaneously to this was another seige of the town of Cranburg the besieging christian army in that part of northern Calverinia being eleven million eight hundred and eight y thousand, nine hundred and nity seven strong against a glandelinian army of 10,000,000. The Glandelinians were worsted however during the series of intolerable battles and bombardments, because they could not hold out against the besiegers and escaping they abandoned the town to the Calverinians under general Manzonia Turner. The Glandelinian general was Manzonia Tibbnia.

Even to this another drama broke out during the progress of the great seige of Vivian Vickey. Big forces of glandelinians issued out from one of the Summelmondis fortifications about four hundred and thirty three thousand one hundred and fourty o e ons in that single line of charge. This terrific contest was short in duration however only lasting a little over four hours but nevertheless it had intolerable fee ferocity, the Glandelinians in having crushed against the christian lines facing these fortifications in the most horny l manner. Many brigades of glandelinians were wiped out among that glandelinian surge during the terrific struggle and it was only the thickly wooded conditions of the country wherein the battle raged that prevents preventing the christian fire from annihilating the whole Glandelinian attack gh which was disasteriously repulsed...!!!!

In the meantime great raids and struggles of the most savage description occured near the big town of Finkin in southern Calverinia and though the wicked glandelinians were not victorious their losses were not estimated. Fifthy thousand Glandelinians had however been taken prisoners and one hundred and seventy two thousand others during one of the battles. The Glandelinian general who led this terrific raid and fought these series of battles was known as James Pemberton.
Other raids which had little effect upon the poor christians was at the towns of Elsie, Holden Arenburg, one near Fort Marcelleille (Vivian Vickey) Little Evangeline, Angeline Holden, Jennie Tanner, Josephine , another great raid near the fortresses of Vivian Vickey, Dandinia Andersonn, Gallilé grandburg, Andreon Mead, Acela, Angeline Crossing, Vivian Hills, Vivian Vickey, once again, a raid on the banks of the gunboat Creek,, and another at Vivian Vicke near the Aurandocallie fortifications, where the property damage to the christians amounted up to the hundreds of t housands of dollars, and other places along the stream called Mc-gallester Run. Though the foe did at many points secure provisions their raids however did not meet very much success.
General

General Lalo s Power in the meantime with his glandelinian armies had secured possession of the town of Atlanta and was besieged by a large christian army under general Henry Burgin. The strength of the glandelinian army was about one millicon, seven hundred and eighty nine thousand six hundred sixty sid six. The other generals under him were Harry Legion, Genievieve Whitemer, and Halie. The seige however through a blunder of some christian general was withdrawn without any actual fighting and the enemy were for the time being left in possession of the town. Other glandelinian armies not far away from here however were literally crushed to fragments in ten desperate battles, many thousands of child slaves were rescued, the child slave places were captured by the christian hosts, and these glandelinian armies in their retreat toward the town of Atlanta left vast fields of dead and wounded behind them them, besides many thousands of prisoners.....

Another fierce and sanguinary seige was the investment of the Calverinian town of Andanina by the Calvo Calverinian armies under general Whilliam Gehloeder..... It was probably another one of the bloos bloodiest seige of the war but again the entire losses were not given. During the series of conflictd many glandelinian generals had fallen br besides some christian generals also the main glandelinian generals in command being Samuel Augustine, Manzonia Orange(maybehe was an orange) with another called Nye Kennedy(Maybe he cures sore eyes) and still another called Daniel Ledger ( maybe he keeps ledger books). The main glandelinian general in chief of the whole besieged Glandelinian army was general Albrecrombie. Still other generals who had armies holding against the tremendous seige was Chev terlollie, Chambersburg, Chimny Spreader, Double Dan Spider(Maybe he is a spider), Malone, Morton Pemberinia, Convention-Maybe he was a convention), Carmack Bicknell, Henry Bernard,, and Minie Bicknell. The many battles during this seige were short and spasmodic and exceedingly severe but the generals would not reveal their own losses. The glandelinians fought the most desperate battle t near the river called Maxwell Run, and here for three day five hundred thsucand glandelinians fought desperately. Through out the whole seige however the glandelinians were being severely beaten and many generals had fallen. One of the latter battles ended with a decided advantage with the enemy the enemy having repelled scores of bloody and most desperate assaults suffering frightful losses in the meanwhile. The christians however in otherconflicts managed always to hold their own to the last, and the seige was like a regular tug of war. Whether many generals really fell on the christian side the main christian commander would not state.....
This seige was one of the first and most important seiges of the war in southern Calverinia. This seige had started first with a severe artillery duel lasting three weeks,, the artillery duel being of great intensity, an artillery scrim which made more noise than it would be worth while mentioning. It was a commanding that just now. T It was a heavy load and they were tired out when across. Angeline went to help, and so did Jackie of paisy as her right name is, and Catherine went for hi help b but they were too far from the christian lines and not a single person was in sight anywhere. This filled them withdia dismay ad and they desperately decided to carry her all the way to a trolly line running to Kinderninos place, and ride to his headquarters.

the very heavens, made the whole city and country for hundreds of ms miles tremble as if there was a most severe erry earthquake, and all around the inhabitants of many towns and even the Pope who had his residence in the city of Angelinda Agathi since the outbreak of the war thought an earthquake disaster had occurred, or that some big explosion brake loose like others did. In the fourth week of the seige in some very severe engagements over one hundred and twenty six glandelinian generals and other officers were killed or wounded or captured. In many battles over four hundred thousand glandelinians would be engaged, while over one hundred and seven y generals would take command of the glandelinian firing line, though being killed and wounded one per hour. sometimes the glandelinians would repulse a attack and sometime they won some of their own. All the battles of the seige were very fierce in the extreme and one both sides charges and followed one another in quick succession, resulting in the most heavy losses all the time. The many battles every time they raged made a scene like a great conflagration, everything being enshrouded in smoke from a musketry and general artillery activity, the last artillery duel of the seige being tremendous the din seeming to split the heavens. This artillery duel lasted three days and three hours, and was soon followed by general onslaughts on the part of the christian besiegers themselves.

After the effects of some great explosion a j number of christian officers near the city of vivian Vickey were captured while out scouting but managed to make good their escape and shut down many glandelinian pw rewards besides two officers, then pursued by a cavarly force and followed for two weeks are captured again and placed into some glandelinian prison only to manage to escape again.

glandelinaeously general galvanmai Shermannia who was at the time advancing large forces northward to seize hilly ground near Galverine near the Mc-gallester gun and fortify it clashes with christian forces under general gervais who got there first, but Shermannia recedes however without a severe battle and awaits the arrival of his main army. He left however hundreds of thousands of barrels of oil and flour and two hundred and fifty big guns. Two weeks later general Shermannia moved forward again being supported by his main army and crashes into the christian army still stationed in his path but during the frightful four days battle is wrested with a great loss of killed and wounded numbers withheld, and with the extra loss of ninty seven thousand seven hundred and eighty nine in prisoners. On the same day that this battle guardanna Luna which means Lovely Moon in English was raging a terrific explosion occured near the town town of Seramata destroying a good part of it by the effects of the concussio} concussion and making for the enmy side a par property loss of $56,777,000 and killing and wounding one hundred and eighty four thousand, seven hundred and eighty nine glandelinian soldiers out of an army of two million. stationed thereo.

During this time also a marching force of glandelinians suddenly captured and pillaged the town of Lamad gstate and massacred thousands of the inhabitants because of the fact that they were embushed by many women and men and even threatened the Galverinian Aurthorities with destruction because they did not control the non-com batants. So many christian children and old men and women had been killed here, that it would be too shocking to relate in long detail. However it beat the horrors of the furious massacres seen in paris Catherine, Pallamy or even in the real "Reign of Terror in the "French Revolution" and the scenes that prevailed here were worse than any in the time of the Roman "Devil" Nero. children were literally cut up like calves or cows in the butcher s shop already to be sent to market, and the blood ran like water. women and children were even made to go through a mock Passion in the manner our Lord did and were evi crucified and the Precious Articles of all Churches were discrowned and robbed. This massacre had a long duration of four weeks and just at this time there had been no christian armies near to put a stop to it. However fortunately some christian spies had been in the town at the time and even some American war correspondents and though they had trouble in getting away they nevertheless succeeded in escaping the glandelinians and reaching the nearest christian army gave them word of what was going on.They told the Angelinian generals how they had succeeded in escaping, by means of a tunnel and after being pursued vig vigoriously by many hordes of glandelinians, they had succeeded after shooting down many to get across two wide streams by swimming even under fire, then got u on a train running half speed, and having flag and break ons ruin the trucks behind the train so the persuers could not follow, then leaving the train ten miles further on gotaboard a christian gun boat is loaded with Galverinians, and got away after exciting and terrible times. In the engagement with the gunboat and the glandelinian batteries on shore the P boat happened to run agroumd, and general james Pickwell of the glandelinians leading a new persuecing party tried to capture it but was frustrated with the loss of twenty of his followers by a volley of shrapnell and rifle fire. However the gun boat being set on fire the fugitives had to leave it with the Angelinians and after having been persued for ten more miles were captured by a horde of glandelinians who yelled like an army of fiends only to have the occupants of the still burning gunboat who had bravely remained on board open fire upon the foe while the fugitives succeeded in breaking away and af or being persued still more until night fall reached a christian army and finally gave all the information needed.

During this same time the main christian army of the general of this army recieved a letter from the Galverinian government notifying him that the glandelinians were threatening all the inhabitants of the town of Lamad Estate with destruction and begged him to march his army immediately besieged the enemy and if forcing the glandelinians to a surrender not to give them any quarter, and he sent back an answer to the Government authorities that he was already on the march having received the news from spies and war correspondents who had gotten away from the endangered town. On the night of the twenty ninth of August IVIX his army reached the town and quickly invested it with his mighty forces and started a fierce bombardment and sent a warning to the enmy commander that he could not escape and that he must surrender immediately and that if he did not stop his men from committing the outrages among the women and children further the whole glandelinian army would but butchered,the bombardment continued unremittingly for two weeks, without success the glandelinians on account of the artillery fire having lost 44,436 in killed and wounded and the christian side suffered the great (great indeed) loss of 4,576. in killed and wounded and prisoners. After holding out for two weeks however the enmy forces ran out of ammunition and no other glandelinian army coming to their aid they finally surrendered and were taken charge of not as prisoners of war but as criminals and murderers and assassins.

During the meanwhile the christians were victorious in repulsing enmy attacks and raids near the Vivian Vickey Fortifications of gare l y marcoola garoocellie. No generals on both sides were killed or wounded but the loss of men were worse on the christian side than on the foe side. The number of glandelinians engaged in the conflicts around this section was about two million three hundred and fourty five thousand seven hundred and seventy eight. Five million glandelinians had been held in reserve but did not be ordered forward to attack thus the engaged christians did have over seven million facing them during the conflict three hundred and fourty five thousand of the glandelinians who had been attacking for two hours that day. Now the glandelinian forces charged one after the other and raging the battle in total throes cannot be well stated here but the glandelinians did all of the most violent attacking launching assault after assault. But their many desperate assails were in vain for the christians managed to beat them back every time, crushing their columns to pieces, and routing the survivors every time with the most frightful loss.

At the battle of santa Lucia on the Brucale Creek the glandelinians under general Kamalla gerucca had a fierce time with christians under general Phillipsenberger the escaping train to rather than to them just now. T It was a heavy load and they were tired out when across. Angeline went to help, and so did Jackie of paisy as her right name is, and Catherine went for hi help b but they were too far from the christian lines and not a single person was in sight anywhere.This filled them withdis dismay and they desperately decided to carry her all the way to a trolly line running to Kindernines place, and ride to his headquarters.

Zimmermann who was still pressing his northerly campaign but were beaten and driven for thirty miles and cornered near the mouth of the Kruchis Greek close to the entrance to the narrow gap with the loss of fifteen thousand men ex-prisoners and many guns and provisions and thirteen generals who were captured. This glandelinian army confined between the two rivers was unable to escape the hard besieging christians under Concentinian Aronburg and it surrendered, thus enabling Zimmermann to press on At Twentalla Zimmermann encountered another glandelinian army of vast size under general Lord Gemeon. This glanddlinian army fought Concentinian Aronburg fiercely and drove his army after thirteen hours fighting back for ten miles to the Hrminis Greek and toard afternoon of the next day after a lull resumed the battle by attacking him once more in in his newly intrenched position launching forward sixteen times a fresh force of three hundred fourty five thousand six hundred and seventy seven men against Concentinian Aronburgs redoubts. The glandelinians however on this occasion recieved a bloody repulse and was crushed to pieces by Zimmermanns sudden and headlong counter charge and routed for sixty miles untill finally forced also to seek to the hills and mountainous country to escape his horrible Abbicommians and Calverinians. It did not seem pe possible that any glandelinian general were able to beat this general knew known as something more than the "Terrible pa Wrath of God".

At the seigge of Pimpinella the christians also won a great victory but at great cost though not so severe as the enmy one million having been killed and wounded in fourteen days battle, and eighty two officers in general command were killed and wounded all the wounded being mortally. Zimmermann on the christian side was also wounded seriously. This had again been a glorious christian victory this battle being more severe than any others yet ever fought in southern Calverinia. This proves or seems to prove that the glandelinians are not making much progress in their Child slave Rebellion as the Angelinians and Calverinians are winning so many great seigge victories and battles. It will be feared by the glandelinian kingdom that if the christians keep on winning so many victorious victories like this the glandelinians will have no show at all.....

At the same time in Western Calverinia occured the three months seige and battles of the fortified city of Mammalsbevesspe with a great advantage to the christians also and this was the fiercest conflict and seige ever seen before the seige of Vivian Wicksy began. The glandelinians made one assault on a gunday Afternoon in June 1918 which lasted only two hours and cost them the loss of two hundred and thirty six thousand nine hundred and ninty nine in killed and wounded only. About thirteen generals had fallen during the assault and seven out of this number were killed during this time a great christian general called a Posey Penning whose brigade had been wiped out by a glandelinian ambushade was pursued by glandelinians looking very much like gargoliams but got away and caused an action between two forces o in which over eighty thousand eight hundred fell on the side of the glandelinians and over fourteen on the side of the christians that is fourteen thousand I mean in killed and wounded. The enemy lost eight thousand in prisoners and the christians lost six thousand. One christian general was wounded in the last cent ent but his name was withheld. During the same time another christian general had been captured by general Hannis Rhoesmann glandelinians after an engagement and threatened with death and charged with being a famious christian spy. He however slipped away from the glandelinian camp and taking advantage of an approaching surge of christians succeeded in regaining his comrades. The seige ended with the surrender of the city and the glandelinian army whose main commander was not given here.

CHAPTER TWENTY SIX
THE ACCIDENT, AND THE TWO TYPHOONS OF WAR. A GREAT FIRE, OTHER THINGS AND THEN SOME.

The next morning Violet and her sisters were sent with an escort of some soldiers to go to general Buntes lines with the command that the enemys positions at Norma Catherine were to be cannonaded in general, preparatory to a great attack that was planned upon the enemys whole line. They therefore dressing themselves warm started on their way to Buntes lines followed by the squad of soldiers. Joice and Angeline were far ahead and for Violet and her other sisters had hung back a little to view things around. It was snowing a little again but the weather was warm enough to thaw whatw was on the ground considerably, and the coulds that were seen in the sky over a portion of Norma Catherine itself werew growing so fast and seemed so purplish in hue and various other colors that one of the soldiers said with suspicion;

"I bet one of you fourty six pense that before the day is over there will be a big battle raging a, along Buntes lines.That fire in the city in just opposite his position and the enemy will attack him for revenge."

The other soldiers and even the little girls felt like believing them all right for the clouds though really from a great fire had the appearance of the storm clouds seen in ap approaching typhoons, and they hoped in their hearts that the fire would not strike the heart of the city of Calverine for then there would be terrible loss of life and destruction to property. They soon reached the main headquarters of general Kindernines ar y and as the soldiers went in to report to him what they observed in the city, Violet and her sisters remained outside in the snow for a while, for they liked to watch the snow fall and so they went tward the railroad tracks, but nevertheless they kept a sharp lookout for the rascally foe for there was no telling when and where they may meet the prowlers. The little girls had gone quite a ways y up the tracks when the little girls were surprised to see a swarm of Glandelinians rushing forward in great numbers , and also a fast train loaded with refugr regu refugees was approaching, and not even within five hundred rods of their reach. Violet was too horrified to move and the train was approaching very slowly, the Glandelinians already opeing fire at the train, their many muskets making a great roar, the soldiers in the train responding to their lively firing. Jennie saw her sisters per l, and her own horror was indescriable. But Jennie was no coward, and would not let her poor sister and dearest friend be killed by either the trad train or by the foe within her very eyes. Her sisters could not do anything for they were too far away, but they saw Violet's peril the same time little Jennie did. On and on came the train, and still on came the attackers, the train now being within seventy feet of poor Violet, when with a scream of terror Jennie darted forward, shot down two of the Glandelinians who were trying to shoot Violet, reached the track, just as the train was dangerously near and shoved Violet off, but a shot hit her from one of the wicked foes and she fell on the tra k track herself, and lay across utterly helpless.

Her sisters would have rushed to her aid but some swarms of Glandelinians got between them and the tracks and the cowcatcher of the train struck Jennie, sending her sprawling a feet feet in midair and back int o the middle of the tracks she fell, where she lay prostrate, with arms outstretched and bleeding. The Glandelinians set up a roar of laughter at this but as the train passed over where she lay with a roar, her sisters who had stood p spellbound with indescriable horror fired so fast and fouriously that the Glandelinians were held in check. Violet who was slight ly dazed by the fall was helpled to her feet by Jackie and Catherine as the train escaping the enemy passed around a curve and out of sight just as the other little girls ran to whee where poor Jennie lay quickly followed by Violet, Daisy, and Cá Catherine.

"Let's take her to the nearest generals headquarters quickly." Said Violet."Oh, oh and to think she saved me. Oh I do wish I had been in her place."

Violet and Joice without thinking to call some men to their aid lifted Jennie up and carried her slowly across the tracks the foe being gone as they payed more attentio to the escaping train to rather than to them just now. T It was a heavy load and they were tired out when across. Angeline went to help, and so did Jackie of Daisy as her right name is, and Catherine went for hA help b but they were too far from the christian lines and not a single person was in sight anywhere.This filled them withdis dismay ad and they desparately decided to carry her all the way to a trolly line running to Kindernines place, and ride to his headquarters.

To walk to this trolly line was a tiresome trip mut they reached it soon, and gently laying Jennie down waited for a car. There was not a single soul in sight, the snow was falling harder now, and many cars that passed to their surprise and horror were full of Glandelinian soldiers who however did not stop the cars for them. Violet and her sisters wondered what it meant.Were they within the enemys lines or dangerously near to it?

"We have not got a cent."Said Violet."We forgot to take our purses with us, and so how are we going to get on a car, when it comes?"

"I would get some christian soldiers to aid us if only we could see some of them."Said Joice looking down anxiously at poor Jennie."But probably when we tell the conductor our distress I believe he will leave us on if he is not a Glandelinian. Glandelinians may leave us on too but as prisoners and we don't wish to see their lines just now."

Another car soon appeared and Violet motioned for the motar man to stop. When the car was along side of them it stopped and Joice told the conductor of their distress, and begged him to let them get on. The conductor sullenly ask them if they had any fare .They answered"No" to which the conductor hesitated, and looked inside the car.

"Can't let you on without carfare."He said."Besides there are ambul ences.This is no plae for the dead or hurt.And besides we know from your dress and voice you are Angelinians. If you don't want to be prisoners do not get on this car.I cannot help it or I would let you on. This care car is full of bloodthirsty Glandelinians."

"But we don't want to have her pun put in an old ambulance."Said Violet her eyes briming with twars."This shows that you are not an Angelinian, for real Angelinians would not refuse to aid the injured. Oh please let us get on.Oh please do."

"Can't help it."Growled the conductor. ringing the go-ahead bell. And the car passed on ahed ahead leaving the distrressed ones behind.

"Oh if this ain't terrible?"Moaned poor Violet with a stamp of her foot."Do we have to walk all the way?"

Another car was spedin speedily approaching and the poor chiodren decided to get on it if they could, but this car was full of Glandelinians and so was another car following and ty they had to keep themselves hidden.

"I'm afraid we will have to walk."Moaned poor Violet."I don't believe that cranky looking Glan conductor was an Agelinian for an Angelinian would not be so cruel to us.And I'm to sp going to speak to uncle about this carline.It looks suspicious."

Another car which had still more than the recent one passed by, then came an empty one. They managed to stop the car and and got on though it was som some work to carry Jennie up to the platform. They managed to skip the conduc tor who for the moment was in the front platform, there being for some reason a blocakde of cars. The reason was this.Angelinians out scouting had seen the cars loaded with Glandelinians h and had made a haul of prisoners. The con ductor soon came back when the halted star cars started on in the possess ion of Angelinians and saw the children weeping piteously. Looking with compassion a at poor little Jennie he kindly asked the poor little girls for their carfare.

"We haven't got a cent."Said Jennie looking with a pleading look on her fair face."Oh please let us ride for our destination is a mile away."

After a moments hesitation the conductor said;

"I'm very sorrowful about it but you will have to get off this car for it don't go where you wish as I recognize you little girls right away.The enemy in secret are using this trolly line right under the very noses of the christians and if you ride this car you will go into the enemys lines instead. But I'll give you a dollar of my own money so that you can take the next car coming which is operated by an Angelinian lad going to Kinderninos headquarters.And I will carry your injured sister down for you."

The cond uctor did as he said, telling them what car to take, a after hearing where they wanted to go, and at last they got on the next car. After recieving their fare and giving them the chm change the conduc tor of this car asked some men to get up for the poor little girls. They obeyed willingly one of them placing Jennie on the seat.

"How did it happen?"Asked one of the men.

"It would have been worse for me if it had not been for her."Answered Violet with a sob."She saved my life.I was nearly struck by a train when she pushd pushed me off the tracks but as a Glandelinian shot her she got run over herself.Oh I hope she is not dead."And Violet burst out weeping.

Joice between her sobs told the conductor where they were going, and he said that he would st op at the main crossing of the Angeline Railroad.

330. 330

"But be careful of the trains when you cross."He said."It will be a short ride to the crossings and there will be a number of trains due a at ten o-clock."

All the passengers had pity on poor Violet and her sisters, and mostly on poor Jennie whose hair was full of blood. All the other children on the car all sweet little things tried to cheer poor Violet and her sisters as a woman on the car bandaged Jennies wounds, and at last when a soldier entered and who was an officer of considerably gih rank, Violet told him of the conductor on the first car, and of thsir suspicion of him.

"General Vivian has charge of all railroad and car lines going through his lines."A nswered the colonel looking at poor Jennie with pity."You ought to tell him ad and he will fix that conductor who as you say must be some femious spy of the Glandelinians.

"General Hanson Vivian?"Gasped Violet drying her tearstained eyes."Why he is my uncle."

A ll the passengers looked at Violet and her sisters in indescriable amazement.

"Your uncle?""Exclaimed the colonel staggered a this surprising answer that Violet gave him as he did not know he had been talk ing to the Vivian girls."Well then you a are ceartianly great nephews of a very great man and soldier. Who is your father, general Robert Vivian governor general of Angelinia and same in rank as Hanson your uncle?"

"Yes."Answered Joice.

The colonel was too filled with amazement to s peak but when he recovered from his overwhelming astonishment he placed his hand on Violet's golden head.

"As his armies are besiging Calverine and Norma Catherine, he also has charge of the rd railroads and cars going through his section of the ground on which his positions are, and surely can punish the Glandelinian who poses as a conductor. I'll go in persuit of that rascal now-but just now I cannot get to the other cars which have been seised by the Angelinians when full of Glandelinians who dared to ride through our lines in dosrision.But if you let general Hanson Vivian know all about it he will publish a 50,000 dollar reward for that capture of that Glandelinian in no time."

Violet and her sisters decided to do this and kindly thanked the colonel, and threw their arms around his neck kissing him many times. Then they kissed and embraced the loving children that were trying to make them happy. In reality Jennie was only injured, and not severely either for the wheels of the fugitive train had not touched her for she had been thrown by the cow-catcher into the middle of the tracks out of the way of de& death. Only her head was badly brusied and cut, and though bleeding badly from a gash in the throat where a butt bullet had hit her there was no danger of her beedling to death, as Violet and her sisters had feared. The colonel had wrapped a bandage around jennies neck while Violet and her sistes prayed for her recover recovery, and longed to see he her open her eyes once more. From a distance over the besieged city they could see something like large clouds of purple and black smoke spreading in a thick wreath like storm clouds, and though h they suspected it to be from the same thrilling fire they had observed before they thought more of Jennie than of leaving her behind to see that fire.The car was soon approaching the main crossing and when the car stopped the kind conductor carried Jennie down for Violet and her sisters, and then a soldier volunteered to carry her to where they were going. They waited until untill the car passed and then proceeded to carry Jennie across the dangerous tracks while those clouds were already extending half way over the distant city making that part of the sky above the city look like the opening of a dark cavern. The ten o-clock train was already approaching and to their utter dismay they had to wait untill it had passed. More and more extended that swift y increasing wall of clouds which the child did not pay any attention to, while nearer and nearer came the train with a roar puffing its very insides out as it seemed. They knw it was dangerous to cross for this t train was appr approaching at its greatest speed and it was another train full of christin christian refugees and coming at the rate of sixty six miles an hour. It passed by with a great roar having eleven long yellow coaches, ei h eight of them with with christian soldiers going to somewhere else. It apparently was reinforcements for general Hanson Vivian.

They were about to cross when they saw three more coming two passengers pulling out from a wayside station, and a freight filled with provisions coming in, the three trains moving slow. As the trains were still far off they hurriedly started across.

They reachd reached the tracks on which the frieght train was coming and to their horror saw that it was nearly upon them. Without dropping jennie the man carrying her kept right on the little girls following and got asross this track only to be in the way of a loudly passenger train which was also nearly upon them.

They managd to get acrcss just as the two trains passed ea each other and hw hearthily thanked god for their narrow escape. The soldier then set Jennie down to rest then took her up again ad started slowly tward the christian line only to be startled by the sound of many voices screaming ad and yelling most horribly ad ad and looking back s aw a whole wave of glandelinians far to their left advancing a the double quick. Then they were startled by something that resembled a flash of lightning it being dark on account of the smoke clouds overspreading the sky.

"Gracious we are in another peril."Said Joice."There is a battle about to begin, and even the smoke clouds are way over us."

"Let's run."Begged violet as it began to get dark quickly."Oh let's run please."

They started to run paying no attention to the noise like a loud thu nder crash but now a fearful booming roar was heard which told that a line of christian guns to their left wa was opening fire the gunners having seen the rapid approach of the glandelinian columns. There was now a serie series of blinding flashes hundreds of them far overhead, and suddenly the ground wa was made to tremble by the series of immense peals of thunderous crashes.Fille filled with terror and desperation they ran as fast as they could, the man keeping a good grip on poor jennie and reached a large grove of tall pine trees which boarded a deep ravine.

"To the ravine quick.It's our only chance."Cried the soldier who was carrying Jennie."The wild landelinian surge will come forward like a wave of water driven forward by a wild spirial typhoon and we cannot reach the christian lines before the battle breaks and the enemy are too near now for us to get out of their path.Horrors .Look at the immense wave of men will. you.See how they are rushing forward will you!"

They all looked. It was true.The landelinians had formed a long wave extending for miles and a portion shaping exactly like a funnel reversed was heading for where the little girls were running. From this sight they knew that they could not saftly reah the christian lines before the firing started in general no matter if they had taken the fastest train or automobile, and so they dived into the ravine. They reached it just as the whole world seemed to be brightened up by countless seemingly lightning flashes, and the series of thunderous crashes that immediately followed was like the bursting of the heavens. The booming of the battle along their own left far in the distance grew louder sounding like the roar of a million lions in a dep deep cavern. All of a sudden far above them they saw a line in darker f color form, and then there was seei seemingly a regular cloudburst of noise and then up came the landelinians and a battle worse than any that had ever caught them at a disav disadvantage now raged. Thedeafening thunderous crashes of the cannons and explosions of shells was drowned out by the still louder roar of the glandelinian "Devil Yell" and as a barrage torn among the trees violet ad and her sisters down in the ravine were bombarded suddenly by a snowstorm of flying branches, rocks and graven which made them suffer intensele intensely. The enemy in their progress forward had increased the fury of their attack and in the deafening fury of the conflict violet and her sisters were so terrified that they begged God as pleadingly as they could to prevent the trees from falling into the ravine as a pe part of it was already roofted in trees. By the force of one great explosion the torn up trees were flung against each other, and sent off in all directions like straws.

The great uproar of the battle had already lasted for ten minutes but nevertheless it had increased in fury during that short time to a redoubl redoubled fury the flashes of explosions, cannons and musketry becoming incess ant, but the thunder of the cannons and explosions could not be heard as the woods were in a continuous uproar from the yelling of the assailants. It was aful awful a and though it had been growing darker as the enemy had first approached the clouds underneath the horizon over the x city seemed red as blood, appearing redder as the battle g hd made its sudden increase in fury ag after the ten minutes duration. The fury of the enemys return firs co cont inued without a pause and soon one of the giant trees swirled abocveabove the ravine by the explosion of a shell fell with a crash into it narrowling missing poor violet and her sisters. The tree had fallen into the ravine followed by others, and in the contact with each other from such a fling every one of the branches were broken, the crash of the falling trees and explos ions being terrible. During the sudden increase in the number of exploding shells branches of trees had fallen in torrents into the ravine, while cloudso of wet snow blown from the ground was hurled into the ravine fairly drench ing the poor children who were praying as hard as they knew how! All the time they prayed the incessant firing outside of the ravine showed thatthe enemy had halted and was firing back at the christians in general fury.The little girls had never witness ed such a battle so close and they felt surely that h they would sooner be among the cruel glandelinians than be caught between to withering fires again , the enemys yell making such a din that it wa like the demons roar, and the firing like the booming of all hedious noises beyond imagination. Indeed over the city the frightful aspects of the clouds looked like the skies of hell itself. There was now a sudden lull in the storm of war but only for ten minutes and then on came the enemy again in redoubled violence of their attacked, the center of their lines had passed, and reached the christian parapet the roaring of musket ry being horrible and at last two of the trees in the ravine were struck by cannon balls, and then a rolling volley of exploding shells hundreds in number followed the repulse roup repulse of the enemy the crashes making the earth tremble as if there was an earthquake. The renewed cloudburst of firing was something awful.

Even the cais ter began to sweep int o the ravine the flash of shells in exploding penetrating through the thick grove, and violet and her sisters sawt that the wet snow was washing Jennie's blood away clean as if they had washed it themselves. Violet and her sisters before the storm of battle had st struck having dreaded that the trees would fall, and that jennie would be killed had lain on top of her, and in this condition they were sure that in case any trees would fall into the ravine though could not hit poor jennie, and they prayed more g fervently. At the sudden second lull in the typhoon of battle a tree had fallen over them but on account of the branches stick ing into the ground, the trunk did not strike them. In a many a typhoon the little girls had been caught in during their earlier days but to this this was worse than any tychppn they had ever seen. The shock of the scare had stunned them and for a moment they were almost dazed.

The fury of the battle was something terrible and before the storm of firing let o up during the second lull another tree being torn up by a shell explosion fell on top of them breaking the branches at a snap, and laying across the children in a crushing pressure for a time rendering them almost unscious. By the time they recovered, the onrush of the glandelinian waves had passed but the firing still raged furiously far off, the enemy screaming and howling their battle cries. Joice was able to get out from under the tree which she did. She worked at the two trees untill her two sisters got free, then they al got o the trees out of the way and saving the rest thanking god once more for saving them thus far, and in such a wonderful way.Jennie was by this time recovering, and she sat up.

"Where am I?"She asked staring around in the darkness, and horrified at the din of the raging battlestorm, the thunder of shells and their flashes, and of the yelling which mingled t ogether.

"Oh where are my sisters?"

"I We are right here jennie Dear."Said violet rejoicing at her recovery."I li love you al all the more for saving my life.We did our best to save you in return. We are outside mong these fallen trees caught gain between two fires as a battle is raging, but we are in a ravine this time."

Jennie looked bewildered.

"Does your throat and oke cheek hury y hurt you?"Asked joice as a deafening crash filled their ears.

"Quite bad, but I do not mind the pain as long as I have succeeded in saving Violet.How long have we been here?"

"Quite twenty minutes maybe."Answered joice."And though the attack of the enemy had ceased the thunder of cannons and exploding shells seems to be getting worse all the time.I hope it will soon cease for we must get to general Kindernines headquarters ahd b have your neck and head dressed more properly than now."

"My head or neck must have bled a lot."Exclaimed jennie her eyes opened in horror as she saw the bl blood soaked bandaged around her neck in the bright gleam of a shell flash."Did I get run over?"

"No"Answered violet."Your head and cheek got hurt and cut when the cowcatcher hit you."Your neck was cut by a bullet.I hope you can walk, and will not turn out to be a cripple....."

"We can do no walking now that's one thing."Said catherine."The way the battle is raging.The enemy is strong enough in force to resume the attack at any time, and the battle may get worse again."

The thunder of exploding shells, and the lightning flashes from them was indeed indeed dreadful. The darkness had remaind the same and the enemy was moving forward again with the intention of resuming the assault of which they had been repulsed, and their own shells from their batteries was p pouring among the christian positions like a cloudburst from hell mingled with shrapnel ad immense chain shot. White clouds from hundreds of burst ing shells were floating in the smoke blackened sky making a g ghostly sight among the thick ink shroud.The broken down trees roar roared frightfully as thw a rising gale of wind lashed them, and though the new attack of the enemy was not yet started the firing of the christian batteries still retained its force.How the children did long for it to cease.

The only warning violet and her sisters had recieved of the start of the conflict was of the sudden appearance of the enemys columns far to their rear, and by the sudden flash of lightning from the burst of bursting shell, and the thunderroll like explosion that followed.As the enemy was beginning the attack now the storm of firing was beginning to increase again in awful fury, and three more of the giant trees fell making a n another narrow escape for the poor children. A branch a very large one struck poor violet bearing her to the ground.The same branch caught Angeline in a stan strangle grip by the back of the throat pressing her down violently holding her fast des pite her struggles, and she would have did died from the horrible strangulat ion had not Joice and Daisy come to her rescue. Catherine rescued violet as Angeline kept on coughing and gasping for air. She soon recovered from the chocking and kept on breathing heavily while now a shell struck another tree near by its flash partially setting it on fire and if the snow had not been falling at the time al of those trees would have started up a regular bonfire and place Violet and her sisters in the jaws of death. The children felt the shock from that shell explosion tremendously as the projectile struck the tree but they were not killed. They wondered what their uncle and the other christian generals were now thin king why they did not return from their mission when in fact they had not the chance to go and see Bunte.Violet and her sisters knew that they would not have been caught within the zone of battle if that accident with the train had not happened, and then the delau delay in the cars was faulty too. But then they could not have carried Jennie all that distance without overtiring themselves. Anothet big tree was torn asunder by the blast of a shell explosion one part narrowly missing Joices head and she was fairly buried under the branches. After some ha hard work Violá and her other sisters managed to get her out but she was badly bruised by the ha heavy branches and scratched very severely.

"We e are in a dangerous place as long as the battle continues to go on."Said Joice.

"But if we got outside in the open the canister and muskstry minniesfrom both sides will completely swep us away."Said violet."The neck of a bottle could not exist ahore this ravine just now.The firing may lession less lessen in force after a while and then probably it will be safe for us to go outside."

"But not now."Said Angeline.

The fury of the firing was still increasing, and the rattling crash above near the christian summit showed that the attackers ha closed with the christ ian line again.They now listened appalled to the yell of the glandelinians as it grew more furiously, the glandelinians in their as assault tearing at the christian lines like a million wild beast.For many moments they still remained there harkening to the screeching gusts of yells, then they were startled by an immense peal of thunder which seemed to tear the earth, foll owed by a flash.Then there was the sound of falling substance and they realized it was the dangerous shrapnell.If any exploded above the ravine they would be goners.

"This battle must be making a scene like the end of the world."Said Daisy."And we are caught between the battle lines and cannot get to general Kindermines headquarters.I believe that I have never heard such a noise.And I believe that it is kindermines position that the enemy are attacking."

Everywhere far to their right the tempest of glandelinian yells rose fright fully like the very outburst of screams during a cyclone and now again came the appalling resonance of shell explosions thunder of cannons in increased volume, and a sound of firing elsewhere that was indescriable.

"Look's like we must go to heaven now."Said violet as a tree she was lying close to was wrenched from the ground by the force of a cannon ball that struck it, and swiftly hurled down with a swu swish and bang. A gust of snow simultaneously dashed upon them by the bucket full as a shell explod ed right on the edge of the ravine and in the play of the sudden dazzling blue flash they saw wet leaves, l large twigs and fence rails whirled high above the lowest trees like flights of sparrows.Then they heard a clatter of rolling logs as another group of trees not far away gave way before the hurricane of shells. Simultaneously a new sound came up mingled with the terrible gusts of yelling rending the distant forest with din and con fusion, and every moment a crashing and splintering of many masses of trees as they went down gave warning that the christian cannon w fire was being extended, for the seemingly irrestible attack of the enemy was increasing so furiously that the christians were compelled to bring up more cannon to be massed upon them and so all trees sheltering the children from flying bullets and canister were breaking off like pipestems every time a shel/ of a solid shot hit them.

From over the valley or a across the glandelinian columns were now sweeping forward in greater force, as reinforcements was approaching to the id aid of the attackers and had kept the battle a-going with unceasing fury. With every fresh impulse of the terrific gale of assaults which had already raged two hours a stupendous uproar of destruction raged. The crashing of shells in their reverbrations boomed as though the whole earth were hollow as a drum by wild fighting hands. Then as abruptly many other trees sheltering Violet and her sisters were flung down by more explosions with a deafening crash, the glare of shell explosions was becoming more blinding and the roar ing of the battle was fearful getting more furious every minute. Such an increase of the battle was now appalling, and the din of firing was so general that the children could not hear each other speak, and by the other sounds they heard violet and her sisters felt sure a portion of the christian line had yilded not being able to stand the terrific strain.The little girls crouchin crouched on the ground in the ravine ; together listening to the varied sounds of the battle, the bewildering sounds of many bugles, the canisters deafening trumpeting, the roar if cannon and musketry in to two distinct sounds, the booming and bag banging of shells, and the yells of the combatants, and other sounds indicating the falling of f bodies.

CAUGHT IN TORRENTS OF HUMAN BEINGS.

In the worse of this charge a part of the christian line had been reached by waves of men in gray which rushed forward many hundreds, of feet, stopped to fire and continued on again.The waves of grayscats were surging all the way up to the christian lines past the ravines concealing the little girls with their soldier guardian and moving forward line long serpentine billows of gray flame through the smoke and seemingly to be churned to clouds of foam as the smoke of shells hide portions from view, and finally they came and hurled themselves against the christian barrier under kindermine and his generals. Fiercer and fiercer raged the storm, and the heavy sea of men seemed to pour their full strength just t as the fury of the struggle again seemed to ra reach its highest fury. The fiercest lunge of that awful human storm was wave fairly hurled back large portions of the christian line there was a mighty confusion of bayonets against bayonets, firing at point blank and a earsplitting yell of both sides, and at last while the enemy were striving with might and main to push on the christian generals were awakened to a realisation of a world of horrible chaoes, to terrifying blows from savage glandelinian ho hordes, that their own lines were like immense trees which had stood before many other storms only to be torn away now and which had as to say crouched to the beatings of many seas, and the lash of the storm itself breaking away the worlds population.

By dintof courage nand vigorous quickness new divisions were hurled upon the portions which had been forced, and fr for a time in this location the fury of the glandelinian assault made the issue of the struggle for a time very uncertain.The glandelinian wave however payed dearly for the success it had gained being like a tidal wave running up a large beach which being one hundred feet high at the strat/ loses its height from fourty to twenty while rushing over that steep land.Many glandelinian columns gasping for breath in the outporing of new christian forces upon them, hurled back against this nd and that of their columns by the force of the counter charge were carried back far beyond the point they had gaind gained and they were even pressed all the way to their starting point, the cold flying snow whipping up their aching fle fle flesh and the multitudinous wild screaming yells of the victorous christians, and the goblin laugh of the sullen enemy as they retired teard their next oncoming wave of men and the fa fantastic i illumination of the shell blasts, and the glow of the fire in the distant city was indescriable.

Battered and bleeding, hit by flying branches, and shell fragments the many thousands of survivors recoiled panic stricken and only by the effort of the oncoming second line were they rallied and the advancing christians checked in their headlong rush.Working by intermitted flashes of shell explosions or by their searchlights the survivors of the stragglers managed to get away from the wave of oncoming christians. This was the peculiar noise that the little girls hiding in the ravine had heard.

As the repulse of the enemy had occured the cannonading still cont inued the shells in exploding man making a horrible racket with the fallen trees, and yet again and again all that afternoon the battle raged at its g highest fury the surging waves in gray sweeping in quick and endless succession against against the christian lines only to meet a dreadful searching fire, that mowed men and branches down-like a cloudburst of rain. Never before had the little girls heard the glandelinians scream their battle cries like they did and the crackling and snapping of falling trees had now become incessant and the beautiful fancy wooden fences a around the yards near the ravine had been torn away by shell fireand scores of thousands of big trees and telephone poles along the right of way of the Angeline Railrod railroad had be been blown down by the christian shell fire.Despite all the firing the christ christians kept up it seemed a wonder that they were able to withstand the seried onrushes of the enemy. Hundreds of sheds big and small and all the tall and small wooden houses had also been used as defenses by the advanced forces of christian soldiers but they had been b, blown to pieces by the shell fire of the glandelinian batteries.

Tward the lat part of the afternoon to the relief of violet and her sisters the storm of humanity began to abate somewhat. Violet and her sisters dreaded that they would be seen by the waves of glandelinians if they w emerged from their hiding place, and also dreaded that they would be swept away f by the christian fire should the enemy resume the fierce attack again for the enemys' columns was still strong enough to continue the battle without intermission. So dreading the consequenues they remained in the ravine for a longer time la i laying on the ground and under the wide trees to sheild themselves from flying shrapnell fragments which may fall in case a shell burst over the ravine the battle seeming to have raged all around the ravine which though so very furious before did not seem to be so bad as before and to the little girls it seemed evidently to be a pause or a longer lull. When the firing had finally abated considerably, though still heard heavily elsewhere, the little girls climbed from under their sheltering trees and were soon off, making what headway they could, the sol dier going with them and leading the way, the wholeparty saying a prayer for further deliverance.

The ground to their horror wad for as far as they could see st rewn with bodies under fallen branches and trees here and there, and as the shel ing still continued all the sky resounded like millions of titan wargongs. The worse thunderstorm could never have made so much noise as the bursting of shells. The smoke of powder like a currant of fluid blackness cut the breath from their nostrils, and almost suffocated them. The fury of the snow falling more thickly was driven into their faces by the gale then blowing, and lifted and wavered up and down all around them in sheeted squ squalls. For a long time they feared that each step would be their last for the wild insane hammering of the exploding shell thunders increased eveing even if the attack had abated, while even far to their right and even left the swell ing uproar of cannons and even musketry and yelling seemed to increase in redoubled fury. But they nevertheless won each foot of ground by a most desperá desperate effort, though they slipped on muddy boards, fell sprawling over logs and prostrate bodies of dead or wounded graycoats, the wounded surising them, stumbling over muskets, and broken foliage, iron o pipes, and upse upsconding roads straddling high where the path had been only an hour before.The damage caused by the christian fire had been worse than that wrought by a spirial typhoon passing through a forest. Through it all they toiled painfully dreading that the battle might get worse again every moment as the enemys cannon fire itself did not let up.It was also a wonder that none of the glandelinian wounded did not attempt to shoot the fugitives.

Violet and her sisters as they toiled onward wondered if wondered if they would ever live to see their father mother, and the others again, or would they really be killed by falling shrapnäl fraglents, and would their lovely remains be found among the clouds of wreckage, and ow carried to their point of goal soaked with water and blood. They knew that before the battle broke in its first fury that they had managed to reach the ravine, and only was left without its protection, when the great wave of firing swept the trees away. Oh how they now prayed to God to protect them on their way to general Kindernines headquarters.

''We are still in great danger.''Said violet.''For as I see behind us the a enemy seem to be gathering for another onset, and the christian s not see ing us and opening fire upon the enemy may sweep us away to eternity yet.''

''But maybe if we crwl the rest of the way in ca ease the firing continues we may be safe.''Said Joice trusting in the protection of their own se serunity.''But it seems to be abating steadily.''

They decicded to risk it anyway desi despite the verse;

Those who love the sword,
Shall perish by the sword.

The wind of the snowstorm itself blew furiously at them waving their hair wildly, tearing off their very ribbons, and even threatening to tear the very clothes from their bodies but they still continued on.Jennie could walk all right despite her injuries though the wind pulling at her hair caused her intense suffering, and to make matters worse Violet and Catherine were beginning to seve suffer from a severe toothache of the greatest in tensi intensity. They were carried off their feet many times by the con cussion of the cannonading going on and already their dresses despite their being wet and half frozen by the wind were whitened by snow.The falling tree limbs had torn large holes in their stockings, the swishing braches had ripped their dresses badly, and it was hard to hold their half ruined hats which was soon wr enched from them. It was fairly tormenting as they staggered along in the face of the gale, and now they wished they had stayed by those trees in the ravine for they saw on looking back that the enemy enemy was advancing again, and they were only three quarters the distance to the christian lines and still in front of the christian firing line. The flying snow dashed int o their faces, they were fairly pelted by large flan flakes but fortunately it was not snowing hard enough to obscure any thing at a great distance as yet, but the shell flashes almost blinded them, and they prayed some more, and resolved to reach Kindernines headquarters or perish like dogs in the pit. The wind nearly suffocated them for they could hardly breathe, and it was even hard to find their way as the thick maze of bodies bewildered them, and how they did say their prayers, when they feared that they would never reach their destination before the battle resumed again. But the more they suffered the more they prayed. But as they covered some distance and felt as if they could go no further and were feeling faint and weak to their relief they came to some sort of extensive bluff which sheltered them from the wind somewhat, and soon they saw they were half way to thd their goal and that the enemy had not advanced any further probably thinking it prudent not to attack the christia line again in thd blinding snowstorm now breaking forth. It however was still dark from the smoke of conflagrations but not so bad as before, but still the shells flashes flashed and their thunders roared in an appalling manner, and there were no signs of the inky black skies over the burning city break ing up despits the gale blowing, and besides though it was getting colder agad again it began to snow more furiously, the cold wind making them shiver.

ATTACKED BY GLANDELINIAN MAD BLOODHOUNDS.

Violet and he her sisters fa feared that they would take cold for the wind was becoming freezing cold.But they soon reached general Kindernines headquar ters and after taking a hot bath and putting on dry clothing, violet redresse redressed Ja Jennie's sore cheek and neck and also her ha head, and then all went in search of general Kindernine and the rest. They found them direct ing the manning of the batteries the infantry ha having fallen back again since the enemy refrained from attacking any more and offering thanks to G od for sa saving their lives, the little girls walked gracefully up to where the great general was standing and reported to the message to be forwarded to Bunte asking Kindernine if it could not be sent by either telegraph or wireless.He was surprised to see violet and her sisters for he had not expected any visit from them, an but w was dismayed to see Jennies head in bandages. Violet told how Jennie got hurt so badly, aboutbthe condue tor refusing them the car, of the cars being used by the enemy right under his very nose, about the kind conductors, and colonel and also of the kind ness of the passengers. Then they told of their narrow escape from other trains, or their being caught between the firing lins lines, and where they took shelter.They also related the thrilling experiences they had during the battlestorm in the ravine. All the generals who heard it were amazed by their story having thought the little girls had been saftly within Hansons lines as there had been no battle raging there at all, though his own batteries had thundered that morning a good deal.

When they recovered from their amusement all thanked god that the little girls cams through it alive.

"It was more than a thrilling experience."Said general Kindernine."AAnd only by the mercy of god you came through it alive. General Hansons lines except his artillery was considerably quiet as he did not recieve any trouble, but my lines recieved actually fifteen great assaults in quick succession, and despite it all you little girls were no doubt surprised to see everything around here in good shape."

"Yes we were indeed."Said Jennie."Not a tree down here, and I know if the enemys batteries would have found the range here as which thy they fortunately did not your headquarters would have been a pile of ruins."

At the strange occurance all went to view the scene where the little girls had said the christian fire had committed such inconceivable havoc, and as it was lighter now though snowing more heavily they found themselves walking among the fallen trees trying to count them. Most of the soldiers were at some distance behind the little girls when soon they heard a series of childish screams, and gazing up saw a at a short distance violet and her sisters, Joice of whom had protectingly thrown her arms around her younger sisters, and stood the picture of indescribable terror while they uttered screams. Looking around in amazement to discover the cause of their fright the soldiers saw a swarm of Glandelinians approaching at a run and far ahead of the enemy soldiers was a large Glandelinian blood-hound that the Glandelinians use to run down prisoners with, running tward the little girls at a trot, howling and whinning in an unearthly manner. It's bloodshot eyes were bulging and its tongue was hanging out as if it were chocking, and there was a white sticky ropy substance hanging from its lower and upper jaws. Before the battle the soldiers had seen this dog before, noticed that it contun continually acted strange, and that its master had ordered it to be chan chained up, but it was avident that it had broken its powerful fastenings, for it was dragging a piece of chain some seva seven feet long behind it. It flashed across their minds at once that this once favorite animal was suffering from rabies, and that the wicked Glande linian persuers had drove it forward purposely tward the terrified little girls and without an instant hesitation most of the soldiers fired upon the Glandelinian, and mother not being able to fire upon the dog without hitting the little girls also dashed off at full speed and threw himself in front of the terrified children, who he knew could not tackle that dog, no matter how brave they were, before the dog reached them. Snatching off his overcoat for he had to t no time to draw his pistol to fire and then fall ing upon his left knee he cautiously awa awaited the animals attack. W Without deviating from its course the hound sprang at him with a short snarling howl. The soldier immediately threw his thick overcoat over its head, and then grasped it around the neck. In vain the furious hound tried to free itself as its impetious spring knocked the brave man over sprawling, and they rolled together on the ground the animal struggling furiously, but the soldier desperately retained his grasp around its neck. In vain the hound tried to free itself from its blinding encumbrance, or to bite his assailant through it, and struggle to shake off his hold with its legs or claws. The soldier desperately maintained his grasp tightly around its neck with his head pressed closely against one of its ears, while many times they rolled over and over. At last the soldier made a desperate effort that was amazing, and when he was indeed uppermost, and by his constant prayers, managed to kat his strong knees upon the mad animals belly,and then desperately desperately digging the toes of his shoes in the soft ground, pressed with all his weight upon it. There was the sound of breaking of bones, and soon the struggles of the huge dog ceased and his head fell over, and the soldier utterly exhausted rose to his feet by theside of the dead dog, just as the other soldiers who had cleared the woods of the Glandelinians with their bayonets ready for buisness ran up to the spot, while an officer sabre in hand arived from a strip of the ruined woods.

Suddenly ten yards ahead a tall slim soldier a armed with a sabre stepped out from behind a tree and directly in the way of another mad bloodhound.He gave an exclamanation of alarm and surprise as he saw the huge mad-dog and raised his sabre to defend himself. Without a moment's hesitation the mad animal sprang upon him and hurled him to the ground fixing its horrible teeth in his throat.There was a few minutes struggle then the huge dog left its lifeless victim and growling fiercely endeavored to spring tward another of the soldiers. The soldier who had killed the other mad-dog jumped aside so sharply that he fell sprawling, the shock being a severe one, and before he could rise to his feet the mad hound was almost upon hisof friend. He tried as he rose to draw his revolver, but before he could do so mother of the soldiers who saw the situation and the soldier fall threw himself before them and del dealt the mad-dog a savage blow on the head with his sabre. Furious with pain and rage the hound sprang upon him and seized him by the shoulder bearing him to the ground. The soldier broke his d sabre as he strove to strike a second blow ad and was forced to drop it but drawing his dagger he struck at the dog furiously with his left arm while at the same time still another of the soldiers pierced it through the body with his bayonet butso strong and tenacious of life was the mad animal that the blows and bayonet thrusts had to be reperspeated a number of times before it loosened its hold on the man's shoulder and fell dead .

"Are you huryGeorge."'Was the soldiers first exclamanation.

"No indeed."Answered the soldier."The dog dog fortunately could not bite through my thick overcoat.It's lucky I had it on."

Violet and he sisters too paralized with fear had stood close by while the horrible struggles had been going on. Walter Jennigs was standing in front of violet and her sisters ready to be the next victim of the mad-dogs had they overpowered the other two soldiers. Less accustomed to swift running than his comrades, and for a moment rooted to the ground with horror at the childrens terrible danger, he had not arived at the spot untill the desperate struggle with thesoldier and the first hound was nearly over, and had then seen no way of rendering assistance, but that the mad-dog was to be the victor, he had placed himself before the helpless terrifid terrified children to bear the brunt of the next attack. Seeing at a glance that the Vivian Girls were untouched general Kindernine who had run up at the time followed by some of his officers came up to the brave soldier who had killed the two dogs and threw his arms around him exclaiming;

"My dear brave soldier you have indeed n saved my trusted friends from a horrible death by your devotion and courage. How can I ever thank you.I from my headquarters saw it all, the speed of which you sprang to their assistance, the quickness of thought with which you stripped off your coat and threw it over its head. After that I could see nothing except your rolling over and over in a confused mass.I hope you are not hurt."'

"Not a bit your excellency."Answered the soldier blushing.

"So you have killled it and the other one so save the little girls!" Said Kindernine."Wonderful indeed.You will certainly get a commission of high rank when their father or uncle hears of it."

"There is nothing in that my dear general.I have learned that any man could kill the biggest dog if he could only get it down on its back and knell on its belly. So when I once managed to get my knees on it I felt it was all right.But your excellancy this was not an accident or that the dogs ran loose of their own accord.The Glandelinians siced them on the little girls for I saw them do it."

There was an exclamanation from the other officers at this.

"Ah it is very well for you dear Bob to speech us as if it were nothing." Said general Kindernine."There are Angelinians only who would throw themselves in the way of a couple of mad bloodhounds the most powerful dogs of all esl especial/y of such a formidable brutes as those. You have behaved with courage also Walter Jennigs and I saw you ready to give up your life for your poor frightened girl friends, but it is too bad you had not the quickness of your powerful friend here, and would have been too late.I'll to make it better for you two lads and the others who vulunteered to help save the children, to report this to general Jack Evans of general Vivians command. He is the highest general of all the christian armies as appointed by the government now and will see that you all get a commission as major general."

"It is true U'Said Walter Jennigs in a tone of great humility."I would have been too la late for the mad dog would have torn me down in a moment and then fallen upon poor violet and he her sisters.When I saw that mad dog and the other one approaching and driva tward the little girls by the foe I felt utterly powerless for I had not my sabre with me nor ay overcoat, but Bob rushed up to the fight without a moments hesitation trusting in his strength and the help of god.Yes yes your costums have indeed made a man of Bob while I may say that I'm a little boy still. "

General Kindernine had put his hand approvingly upon violet whose sisters had sunk fainting to the ground when they saw that the danger was over. Jennie and Angeline had also thrown themselves down and was cry ing bitterly and loudly, while joice and violet stood pale and quiet beside them. Bob directed one of the men to run up to the house and bring some water, then lifted poor Jennie up and tried to sooth her while he stretched out his other hand to poor Jaclis and Catherine, and the other little girls went to him sobbing.

"You are shaken my dear children." He said tenderly. "But you have borne the trial well. I did not hear you cry out though some of your sisters screamed loudly enough."

"I was frightened enough sir." Said joice simply. "But of course I was not going to cry out seeing it u useless, but it was very terrible, and oh how nobly and brave you and your companions we were."

Violet hid her face against his coat sobbing violently and he could feel that she was trembling from head to foot espe especially as she still saw the dead dog with the purple coat still over it's head! The scene of thankfulness and loving caresses that followed could never be described.

Indeed during t he , long months of cruel seibe seige and of cruel suffering among the crcruel Glandelinians who had defiantly committed countless dre de depredations, stolen a great number of horses within the christian line, and carried off and massacred a good many helpless children. It had been reported that a great army of Abbiesannians was advanving upon the Glandelinians from the south and there seemed a prospects of another invasion int o Glandelinia for the Glandäinian w submarines had sunk a good many Abbiesannian and Mormomian ships, and refusing to give an account for it, and had aroused the Abbiesannian nation to greater hatred, and that the great war was now surely growing in fury every month.

"I'm sure that the Abbiesannians are going t o make an invasion into Glandelinia." Said general Germaine Vivian. "And I could tell you fellow generals the real cause."

"What is causing it?" Asked general Walter Jennings as the Vivian Girls crowded around excited by the reports they heard also heard from outside and wishing to tell themsalso.

"The banishment to the island prisons of thousands of Mormomian and Abbiesannian children, and the sinking of many of the ships loaded with child refugees." Exclaimed general Germaine Vivian. "Mostly all the fierce Abbiesanians and Abyssinkilians ae friends of mine and one day when I escaped on account of a shipwreck, from t he Glandelinians, I had joined their militia for a while and I was the cause to make them invade Calverinia from the north and free many children there in spite of the fury of the Glandelinians in that location but this was before I and my followers became Abbiesannian pirates and robbed the Glandelinians of their po pro perty and child slaves. Procile is a bitter enemy of mine and when the Abbiesannians advanced into Calverinia five hundred and sixty seven thousand strong I was attacked by the Glandelinians and child slave masters and hired hands but I succeeded in obtaining as many child slaves as I wished and got away. Afterwards I was attacked by Procile and his gat gang. In that case I was able to rescue my sisters in that cavern from the Glandelinians and so strick were these Abbiesannians in their disguise as pirates that some of them had to pretend to be enemies of my sisters, but they were not, and could not have fought old Procile and his gang in that cave for their safty if they had been enemies of Violet and her sisters. When I recovered from my wounds recieved in the engagement with p oProcils gang I was sent to Beppo Calverinia where some Glandelinians managed to capture me but so many thousands of child rebels were my friends that one day the leader called Angelinia Aronburg with her aid Virginia S zimmermann advanced with a force of rebels stormed my prison and liberated j e and got away before the enemy could aid the defenders with militia."

In the meantime general Jack Evans had arived with his army to also join in the seige of Norma Catherine and immediately attacked the enemy in the vinisty of Norma Talmedge and in the frightful car a carnage that ensued the Goandelinians were driven back and a hundred thousand children were res cued with their mothers, and fathers, and also all property was redivered and the enemy driven clear away from the town. The Glandelinians w ere only however repulsed and an hour afterwards came on headlong t o the charge and axportion of Evans w army was swept from its position, but a force of Abbiesannians and Mormomians came to their aid and the Go andelinians who at this point were under the generalship of Germannia Vivian gave the christ ians the fiercest resistance ever seen and over ten thousand of the very Mormomians were mowed down within an hour by the Glandelinian cannon, but a big force of a pot portion of Evans Abbiesannians who were then advanc ing through a passabe swamp heard the row and came to the rescue defeating the Glandelinians t hough general Jimmie Vivian who led the counter charge was slightly wounded several times, but escaped from being dangerously wounded AS WE'L WELL

The battle raging in the midst of a frightful snowstorm had /a lasted for six hours, six hours of horrible suffering and death but the end had soon come and the Glandelinians were defeated with the loss of one hundred and fourt y thousand in killed and wounded all this loss being inflicted by the Abbiesannians and Mormomians alone. Thousands of child rebels took part in this fray. It was called the battle of the child slave rebellion. Kindernines great action was known as the battle of Estrabrook Saunders. Violet and her s sisters felt sure that all their sorrow and suffering seemed to be over now but never dreamed that the Glandelo-Angelinian war would never get time to lull now for there was coming soon a greater section of the field of war that would be something more serious. They were happy however when they heard that Jimmie was now a great g-shristian general and that he had done all in his powe power to defeat the Glandelinians. The ammount of money spent by Angelinia t o put down the child slave horror was up to the amount of $ 23,487,699 and this had done no good, and it it had not been for the protest of the Pope the Angelinians would have warred on the Glandelinian nation way before this. Over the celebration that occured ove the news of the great seige of Norma Catherine especially a fter the battle of Estrabrook in which flags were seen hanging from windows, and where many women and children with flowers encircling their heads and even with flowers in their hands and strewn in the streets of other cities and towns was observed, and over this celebration the Glandelinians were furious, and as a great Calverinian rebellion was o already threatening they appealed to the King of Glandelinia to send larger armies to surpress the rebellion before it was too late and to overcome the christian armies besieging the two cities also. Many masses were offered for thothe vict victory but sad to say many wives, mothers of children, never saw their husbands, or fathers again, or sons or brothers many of them having fallen in the battle of Estranrook. And it was so fortunate t hat Violet and her sisters still had their own parents. In the entire mot month during the seige of Norma the entire number of butchered children amounted up to over 500,000 including the captives and child rebel prisoners. If it had not been for the gi victory of general Jack Evans, or Kindernines also the enemy would have managed orpbably to have broken the christian line, and it would also have been probable that violet and her sisters would have been captured again, and their sufferings would have raged longer than before. Since the terror of the maddog recently related no further fighting with the enemy had been reported.

However on account of the Glandelinians they had another experience with one and which had been a pet dog of the general of the christians known as Nero Antonios. The dog had been very loving with Violet and her sisters, but secretly some Glandelinians had doped the dog with the rabis posion which had been extracted out of a dead dog which had been suffering also from rabiss, and the Glandelinians were bound to destroy the Vivian Girls no matter how vile their purpose. This dog had soon became surly and general Hanson Vivian hearing of it had suggested that the general c take some precautions for his own safty, and for the safty of the Vivian Girls. As the dog had not been in the way of infection no one could understand how it contracted rabiss.

"If your dog has not been bitten by any mad dog or especially the m mad hound you had better nevertheless chain him up in your box stall ot or some plac where you can watch him, and feed him without the necessity of coming in contact with him." Said general Hanson. "If all those dogs which seem to already swarm the christian lines without reason come from God only knows where are known to be mad-dogs, they we will ha have to be captured or destroyed before they cause any havoc. Every strange dog must be watched. Our period of observations are almost five weeks, and this catches most of the cases. One persent dod do not always devolp infect ion within twenty four hours, while those as I have heard were turned loose in the city of Calverine from the rabies pound by the Glandelinians upon the defensless inhibatants for cruel wicked sport, have already figured that one per cent did not show the disease of Hydrophobia for four months or long er after the pocion was injected by the Glandelinians. As to say" Added the Governer general "The homeless dogs are exposed to all this and furnish three fourts of the rabies cases. Therefore all men should watch and if poss ible rid our lines of these strange curs coming without reason."

General Walter Jennings who came from Abbiesannia where there were hardly any mad dogs was completely surprised when he heard that general Nero had chained up his dog on account of showing signs of rabies mysteriously and was also startled by the numerous recent reports of men women and children refugees within the christian lines being bitten by stray dogs which appeared to be mad.....

841. 341

Evn in the t owns of of Marcucian and Bondinia there seemed to be a general epidemic of hydrophobia or of alleged hydrophobia all on account of the Glandelinians themselves. To general Walter Jennings this was entirely deplorable, and nobody loved a good dog better than he did. It also nearly broke the Governer generals heart when he knew that this splinded great Dane of one of his generals was soon going to have this horrible disease and finding that it had not been in contact of any other dog, and as from investigations it was discovered that the posion had been injected as the Glandelinians had forgotten to bring the instruments with them al effort was made to discover the fools even by sending the Geminis within the enemys lines and so all porpose was made to capture the scoundrels. Jennih g g General Jennings himself said there ought to be a crusade against t all the homeless curs running about the christian lines so suddenly that may carry the infection, and that the pet dogs in all the houses and homes or on lease would never have rabies were it not for the many bruts turned loose by the glandelinians who bite them.There were always in galverinia a period in the course of the disease on account of the large number of mad-dogs thatnow ran through nearly every town and city of Galverinia and it was reported that the epic epidemic was spreading fast. Those in or exsept in rare cases do not go out of their way to persue or bite any one.But they snap, snap, snap, at bricks, men women and children, trees, anything that comes wih within ra reach.

''I'm indeed afraid I'll have to keep my dog chained up for weeks, but also I'm afraid surely that he'll break loose.''Said Nero:.

''You ought to have protested your dog and not allowed him to get in the way of the glandelinians.''Hanson answered.

''But how should I know when it has been done?''Said the general.

'That's the other thing.You do not know-always when your dogs may have been even scratched by the posion pin of the glandelinian who injected the dope. Therefore I would advise you to use a little restraint in your conduct tward your bitten''Said General Jennings.''Also be careful that the dog does not lick your hands or face with his tongue, and see that violet and her sisters do not put their hands in his mouth or go near him in case they go to feed the dog themselves as it is dangerous. Neither do not let them kiss him on the nose.When the chance that your dog is going to have rabies as small as there is that chance so look out for him. The forse sort of bite is the face. And the next worse is the hnads. These places particular the former are near the brain and ne nerve centers.Also the tooth might be wiped clean of the silvia wha when in passing through the clothing as its salvia is the posion that makes the deadly infection. But our faces and hands do not have v even this slight protection and the salvia itself if it touches a cut or abrasion may cause infection which leads its victims to the disease. Ernormous is the popular idea of the mad-dogs. They are pictured as canine demons dashing about with foaming froth as the mouth in persuit of those he may devour. A s a matter of fact the poor dog shows its loving disposition in no way so much when they are dying with hydrophobia.The reason why hundreds are not bitten by mad-dogs in places of a few, is due in part to the love of the poor dogs for those around them, and for their masters and mist resses and a poor dog may sicken and die, and never bite any of those around them.

Many of the poe people did not know that their dogs were mad, and many thought that he had something in his throat pshaps. They handled him and led him to a veterinarain. Only in fits when he would snap blindly and without any knowledge of what he was doing he would bite his masters hand. All strangers of course are in danger but yet even these were more safer than would be supposed. It was not a an uncommon experience for the very veterinarain to be called in to see a sick dog of some person, and to find fixed upon him the spreading eyes of a rabid and mad-dog. But those who knew how to handle him s seldon had any trouble or danger of being bitten. Besides the poor suffering dog only bites in the nature of self defense. The poor dog being in indescribable agony associates in a drunken crazed way with his pain, when anything approaches or touches him. I have discussed with a number of dog specialests the typical ''MAD DOG'' whidh people told him rushes through the streets causing unaccountable panics. But in the first place this that all agreed that most such dogs were not mad at all but probably surly and vicious.But at the same time most of them through fear, insanity, epl epilepsy, excitement, agony of some sickness, rage of whatever else causes it they are likely to do worse than biting as the termed ''Mad dogs''. The specialists all agreed that one safe thing to do was to get out of the way and not run like fools.

Also some of these professionals men went so far as to say that mad-dogs will never turn our out of their path to biteany one and that to unex perienced persons the dog would not appear rabid at all.Others said there was an occasional exception when a mad-dog may be encountered who would persue and it would probably be the fault of the person at that as he did probably try to tease the dog. It was also agreed that in almost every case all one has to do is to cross the street, step inside a shop cdoor, jump on a fence or other handy perch and be perfectly safe. Flight will attract th the persuit of a normal ugly dog but with a mad-dog this does not always occur at least according to most authorities.I also learned from a chief specialist that the mad-dog or the epiletid dog is maybe like a drunken man. Of persueing any one he has no idea, but one who meanaces him looms through the seeming haze as an enemy, and he snaps. Any one who sees a mad-dg mad-dog of any size should get out of the way without any necessary or un necessary precipitation, and leave the police to his destruction. There are however many times when a man would find himself confronted with the nessessity of being a hero. Few men of our country of Angelinia relish the situation but every one accept it.Suppose one of the men here see a dog either crazy, in a rage, or mad from some other cause come dashing along the street. He b himself could surely step through a door way and be safe. But suppose he saw several little children frightened, and too frightened to get out of the way, what would he doLook on and leave them? This is a question I my self have asked of a number of veterinarians and others who are expeienced in handling all dogs. Many methods of capturing dogs or disabling them with the minimum of danger to the captor have been suggested. But one mans suggestion was not always approved by others. First if the hero had time to get a gun he could shoot the dog and save the children. Bird shot would do, and the head would be the softest mark though a bullet anywhere in the body however would bring him down. Next if he had any time to prepare it a pole with a slip-nkot on it the end such as the dogcatchers use is good. The rope is fastened to the end of the pole making the noose, and then comes along the handle through some fastener that lets it slip to the hand. The noose can be slipped or thrust over the dogs head and pulled tight so that he could not get away or reach the capt or, or hero. It is also suggested that a dog could be knocked out temporailry by a blow on the nose. A man would ofte often find a piece of plank or heavy stick where he can grab it. Some Angelinian aurthorit ies perfered that a blow straight down across the top of the nose between the eyes and the nostrils. Others always suggested thi that a man could slip off his coat and throw it between a child and the dog in a way a bull fighter uses his cloak. It is contended that a dog will bite whatever touches him first. But the practicallity of this is doubted by some.

Those in the favor of the coat, or the heavy cloth, if the dogs teeth pass through it will wipe clean most of the deadly mucus. With a small dog it would be possible to grab him up by the hind leg and throw him over a fence or even hold him in the air and away from your body. All dog-catchers maybe use this method, but it takes you to be an alert strong man.

According to the dog-catchers the best way to hold a dog saftly is to catch him in the side of the neck and get his body between your knees, but as you grab its neck do not take the collar for it will turn, and if you are successful kepp him untill some one comes to help you.Be careful for your hands are near the dreaded salvia and even a little fleck of it on a chapped knucle knuckle might mean infection.

The way the rabies starts on a dog is that after a month from being bitten he becomes melancholic. It is marked by several symptons which gives sufficient warning to those who understand them. There comes in the fi rst stage a general change in the disposit disposition that is action or conduct. He becomes very irritable, and barks or howls almost constantly night and day without any one being near to disturb him when everything is even very quiet all around, and the barking seems quite uncanny too and has a sort of roar to it. This he would only keep up for a week, then he becomes very q quiet.The master who goes to feed him by throwing the food to him finds the dog looking out miserably from some dark corner where he would not ordinarily be. He never expects him to froth at the mouth for he knows that all is nonsen nonsense, neither is he afraid of water then or later. But gradually some of the symptons will disappear and he will have normal inter- vals, followed by the return of the qu queer conduct, which of course would alarm his ma master very much.

He will be frickled minded or capricious, always doing this, and somet hing else, then excitement follows by fretfulness. Tward the end of this first stage which lasts three days he will begin to refuse food even sweet stuff and what he likes best, and he will be discovered at work knawing and lick- ing boards and such things, and later will tear up and eat rugs laid on the floor of the dog house and ' even his own bedding and other substances made in foreign countriss. A little later there will come in his hind legs a weakness, and uncer tainity at times, in the gait also, and in his voice which was a loud one will show a very peculiar change, and this is due to the beginning of paralysis in the throat. The second stage is marked by high fever for exercise that takes him running all over the place for hours and even trying to get out and run in the streets. All day without pause he runs about the place and finally becomes exhausted, but still showing no s ig sign the uniformed would regard as madness though there would be a peculiar spreading of the eyes.The last stage of the horrible disease gives paralysis first of one muscil muscle and then another. At this stage the dogs mouth will be open and his lower jaw will be paralized.His tongue will be darkened and covered with dirt, and this is a sure sign of his madness now. Thick ropy salvia deadly in its nature runs from his open jaws. T His eyes will be still more spreading and will be bloodshot and covered with a slight flim. The dog is also quiet then. The pupils of one eye will be larger than the other on which side the dog was bitten. He also becomes wholy paralyzed. T In these stages he is not able to hurt anybody unless any one comes near him. I know of one little girl who had been bitten by a dog whose stage of rabies had been at its height, and had a bad bite in the face at that.

In feeding the dog he had suddenly mad a snap at her and caught with a good hold her cheek biting her severely before she was rescued. But his salvia was deadly and with his hands covered with thick gloves the specialist trid trisd to drench it out of the wound with all kinds of powerful disinfactants but he was quite unsuccessful.
But twenty four hours decided the fate of the child and though it was a cruel thing the doctor had to slice the wound which of course made the child strug gle and scream. Tro T Through this means he had sliced the wound and all the salvia with it and that the child was pronounced safe from catching the deaded disease. But this had been almost a miracle this prevating preventing the disease, and though the child had a very sore cheek and was unable to get out of bed for weeks she was very thankful to the doctors. It took two months for the wound to heal and the poor sweet child was able to be around again, but a scar was left on her cheek, but which did not show very plainly. The dog which had bitten the child was soon captured and shot and was a regular bulldog but queerly bigger than ordinary ones and very hedious looking. Its salvia ran out of its mouth in streams. Quite a number of other children, and even women and two men had been bitten by the dog before it had been rounded up by policemen, but three of these poor victims died from hydrophobia despite the efforts of the doctors to save them.After that there had been policemen, soldiers, and dogcatchers sent out to seize every dog running the stroes streets and those supposing to be rabid, and when this is accomplished Calverini a will be free from the dreaded mad-dogs in spik spite of the glandelinians. ''''''

Later on general Hanson had surrounded a part of the glandelinian force which had been by a move of his own cut off from the main army besieged at Norma Catherine and to avoid further bloodshed the main leader Frank Manley saw that he must surrender. Violet and her sisters wwr were with their uncle when the glandelinian general Stanck surrendered to Hanson after being attacked for two days anf and fighting with the desperately christians with the aid of Frank Manley who had also ben surrounded, and the little girls witnessed the most magnificent sight in their lives.A good portion of this section of the christian line was drawn up in formation, with the child rebels in front with their little n banners wa waving, while the wicked glandelinian division was drawn up on the opposite side in the same manner, the glandelinian officer advancing with his sabre drawn. Goverber Governer general Hanson Vivian recieved it suolenly, while the child rebel leader remarked;
''Be careful that he does not do any tricks.''
The glandelinian leader then growled;
''Your exf excellency you are wibn winning the war on me and do seem to conquer us but please undert understand if you Angelinians meddle much more into our affairs you will wish you had not started this war with us.And you will have to spare us from humiliation no matter what the cost.Savy.''?
''I'll see the agreement of my officers about that first.''Shot back governer general Hanson vivian refusing to return the sabre but breaking it and throwing it in the stream.''By rights us Angäinians ought to refuse to give you any quarter as it is for your massacres of children. Calverinia is during this war suffering wanton destruction in property not only in property, houses, and small towns but among hundreds of thousands of children and the religious also, and so whatever my officers wish so shall it be.And you and your men shall remain as prisoners untill I see fit to release you....''

And he walked away the glandelinian general following under guard to Hansons headquarters to sign his surrender. He was led into governer vivians headquarters and when all of the officers arived that could release themselves from duy duty Stanck was brought before them to sign his surrender to the christians and also to the Child rebels who also came especially their leaders, and every christian general, and even the governer frowned when the glandelinian general entered.....'
''Remove your hat.''Was the order.
Then they allodemanded.:
''Where is general Frank Manley.Did he hide or run away and sent you to surrender?''
Another cried.''We refuse you accept your writrtn signature.We take it from the Manleys olny.Your's is wortless.Get out.Get out, for heavens sake get out.''
''He has escaped and is fleeing tward Norma.''Answered Stanck.
''We have been baffled, tricked.''Shouted all the generals in a rage while the child rebels looked at each other.
''The coward.''Muttered governer general Hanson with a curse.''Those damn glandelinian chieftians will massacre children, desolate coo countries ruthlessly, but flee when conquered. He must be caught or given up or Glandelinia will pay the price with your army wiped out, slaughtered general Stanck do you hear.We do not stand trickery or treachery.''
Stanck could not write his signature as all the generals, even the child slave generals and child rebel officers, and even general Jack Evans who was present violently refused his signature it being the hott est scene -over the conq conwuered over witnessed before, and Stanck though a high glandelinian general was literally kicked out the building by general Baldwin who cursed roudly at him. It was a day after the whole region was scoured by hundreds of thousands of Geminian officers and members before Frank Manley was captured near the outskirts of Norma called Bethsaidia and brought before governar general vivian in a mis miserable plight. He handed over his sword to Governs governeger general vivian who took it and threw it over in the corner.
''Y ou are not a prisoner of war you are a prisoner on the charge od desertion and treachery.''Said general Hanson fiercely with a villianous expression of face. Where is your brother general John Manley doing, and how strong are his armies?''Demanded the christian general.
''We have got to get him als if we have to assassinate him the dog.''Hissed Leonia Meldon Bicknell sneering at Frank Manley.''He must be captured or got out of the way so we can capture Norma.''
He at once dispatch a dispatched a soldier who had another wicked look ing Gcandelinian pris prince or general brought into the room.He soon return ed with still another glandelinian prisener.
''So the three of you glandelinian generals thought you could escape eh!''Said governer General vivian with a sarcastic grin.''Well you found our your escape was a failure.''
Neither of the three prisoners answered but looked sullent and disconted, and scowled as if they would like to tear somebody to pieces.
''Where are your superiors now and what are they doing for your wicked cause John and Huebaun Manley.''Demanded Hanson.''You will tell me where they are the three of you prisoners or I'll see to it that there will be as ruthless a war as you wage against the helpless Calverinians.Do you hear you rascals?''
''A scampocalled Colonel Jacksonia Evas tried to shoot and morta,lly wound him.''Said Frank Manley hotly.''You have got me a prisoner you damn christian dog but I'll swear that I'll never surrender to you christian centepedes. I'll never turn my sword over to you.S Come and take it if you value it so highly. You won the battle on me and captured my divisions and you ought to be satisfi ed and not persecute us glandelinian generals.''
''Anybody that answers in the fashion as you have done.''Deserves to pay the price''Answered governer general Hanson hotly stung by general Frank Manleys sarcestic answer.''All the children that died at the hands of the glandelinians, the unjust suffering of my saintly neices, and the desolation of the hon homes of the city of Calverine or Norma Catherine, you whole three are responsible for as well as your superiors. And you general Frank Manley what in the hell did they do to you that your governments persecuted the vivian Girls as they have done, and lured my trat traitor ous nephew Germannia vivian to try and assassinate the little girls, and mine the city of Calverine two days ago to break my seige by the force of the ex losion and destruction it caused.''?

"And all that is laid to you."Said general kindernine himself. "You fellows literally follow in the footsteps of the fouledemons."
"All that I did and the reason is my own affairs you dirty christian Skunks of heaven."Answered Frank Manley sullaly."I never give sat isfaction to mine enemies."
"So be it then that I am a skunk of heaven."Said governer general vivian with a grin. "But if you are not in a quick hurry to die Frank Manley you will turn your sword over to me ar once sir.Once we recognize each other. And once in younger days we had been good and staunch friends. But as you acknowledge that we shall retain our enemity so be it. But I'll give you three seconds to turn your sword over to me, or I'll shoot you down where you stand.One,two,three."
Manley obeyed.
"You are more wiser than I thought you were."Sais the great christian general."And besides the other prisoners with you all this while had showed better behavior than you did, and so I will be a good deal leinent with them. So your brother Husbaum Manley was almost shot by Colonel Jacksonda Evans? Humph. I don't believe a word of it or even what you do say. Johnston Frank Manley speak the truth as for a lie I'll shoot also."
"I'm sure it's the truth your excellency."Said the colonel."For during the battle of Eastrabrook I tried to shoot him in the chest or at least between the lungs w but did not succeed. At any rate I know I shot and slightly slightly wounded the general as he charged me when the shooting occured. I would have loathed to have shot such a great general otherwise not for his sake but that it might bring more trouble than we are having now with that wicked nation ."
"All right it is believed."Said governer general vivian putting away his revolver."But I have a question ato ask among my own generals. General Stancklin first surrendering the army which this Frank Manley cowardly deserted, requested me to allow the city of Hanglandeinian to go without being desolated as I intend to leave the besiegers in the command of vivianda and with my other generals take command of a great way and oppose the Manleys who have orginiated a new army and are moving along the Mc-Hollester Run to crush me and end the seige. If I can crush u him I will be able to prevent the seige from being broken.And as you all know how large a part of the Calverinian property was devastated and how many children were assassinated in Norma Catherine during the "Reign of Terror" I had made up my mind to have your decision on the matter. I had refused----but whatever your decision is on this matter--------it shall be.Give at once."
"The Glandelinian property of Hangiandelinian shall be given over to us and Glandelinia shall pay the price."They all shouted."Other wise Glandelinia also shall be desolated when we open the way for the invasion but we will spare the women and children and all Galverinians . No towns of villiages not held by Glandelinians shall be ruined, but the cities and forests held by the enemy shall have to be ground to earth."
"So shall it be."Answered governer general vivian."Hangelandeinian shall be seized by my troops which will soon advance for the Mc-Hollester Run, and the people of Calverinia to avoid danger from Glandelinia will I am sure aid me in my price.Glandelinia in Calverinia itself shall pay the full price of $500,000,000 within two weeks. Otherwise I'll seize all the Glandelinian property possible and the war will be carried on to the very last end. For the past massacres of children in and around Julo Callio, and also in Norma I'll have no mercy. If the fine and the other things are not atoned for there shall be thrilling times I'll tell you."
Governer general Hanson vivians intentions was to place Manley and the other prisoners in the Angelinian internment camps but the supretendant general Jack Evans the main head at that time proposed that they be sent to the island prisons for a length of time or untill the war was closed, and as general Evans had the main say, this was set about to be done. Violet and her sisters however protested against the desolation of the Glandelinian priperty in the city of Hanglandelinia as they admitted thebeauty of this wrongly seized Galverinian city was too good to be destroyed.Ha son would have relented but they could not turn the intentions of Evans or any of the other christian generals for the havoc was to begin as soon as possible by the government troops which were already moving up the Mc-Hollester Run and awaiting the arival of Hanson and his main commanders.This plan of Hansons was indeed wise and if he had not done so would have enabled the foe to sweep on and break the seige at one entirely.
The Glandelinian governments protors protested furiously against the destruction already beginning saying that as long as governer general Hanson won already for the child slaves their rebellion, he ought to be satisfied at that, and that further devastation of all Glandelinian property by his troops would incite the Glandelinian nurthorities to arouse the Loyal Galverinians to make an uprising against the christians .

overner general Hanson vivian and his brother toget her declared that any uprising of the disloyal Galverinians would doom the offenders as r traitors of God, and that to rebel would mean certain death by burning at the stake, and that they Glandelinians who are respo res ponsible for the wantom destruction of Galverinian property during thechild slave rebellion, and a so during the war shall pay further if causing an uprising with the destruction of their generals who are prisoners within the christian possession, and the extra price would be that no Glandelinian army if captured would recieve any quarter. Hanson had withdrawn some of his ablest generals from the army besiging Norma Catherine, but he had done so wisely for he had to have generals to help him command the new army that was to oppose the advance of the Glandelinian army moving down along the Mc-Hollester Run.
The city of Hang a Hanglande? nian recently abandoned by the Galverinians & at the approach of the enemy was by some mysterious reason destroyed however by the Galverinians themselves themselves so that the city was then saved from fu further harm, though report s came that many who were caught by the Glandelinians were shot down in cold blood for causing the fires.
Also Bristle-Toe (Galverinia) was laid in ruins by the re treating Galverinian armies, and even Pepper-Neck-Lace,, Onion City, and Vanity Fair also builded by t he Glandelinians in Galverinia and so named by them were also burned by the christians haafter being sacked by the Galverinians who abandoning the Glandelinian provinces of Glandelinia were pe pers ued by the Mc-Hollestinians who in their desperate efforts to run down the armies of fugitives as reported set miles of beautiful Galverinian forests on fire, loothing the public bui buildings of the main cities and causing terror and consternation, and carried all before them massacring thousands of helpless chl children despite the recent threats of the Angelinian aurthorities. All kinds of government railroad yards with frieght and passenger coaches were raided by the Glandelinians in the city of Sandfords one of the most beautiful cities of Galverinia, but though quite a lot of loothing was done general Robert vivian advanc ing army to join Hansons fortunately camsto the rescue driving the raiders away after spirited fighting and placed some large armies in the vinicity and also set thousands of guards at in every street, a d at every bridge and Government buildings, and allowing no Glandelinian citizens even to cross in those locations.
No women and children were fortunatel harmed in this city as was expex expected by the Angelinian governments general vivian having sent aid too quick and neither were any of the churches loothe looted. The Glandelinians had progress ed in thwir their devastations as far as this city having made a regular orgy of devastation, and so many weeks forests and jungles were burning so furiously that the country despite the desperate efforts of the firefighters becamelike a vast inferno. By these great depredations ever 96,777,654 persons were rendered homeless and even refused food by the Glandelinian raiders and they were compelled to appeal to the Angelinian and Calverinian governments for food and shelter.Many did recieved food and shelter from the Glandelinians on the fact that they were Calverinians loyal to the Glandelinian cause. The rish were not the only ones raided by the Glandelinians, but the poorest were treated the worse and the very intestines torn out of their children, and those who had fled at the approach of the raiders were overtaken. All Moving Picture Shows were destroyed, all Movie actors no matter who they were ,were seized, their property and belongings taken from them or destroyed, and forwith made prisoners in on the charge of slandering the Glandelinian governments by acting for picture pictures about them.This was true in many cases but the Glandelinians had deserved it. This move of course angered the Angelinian governments to white heat, and they demanded that it seize or othr otherwise they would exert their utmost to put it down, and that i "In the name of heaven" it would be the last-and final warning.
As a defiant answer was sat sent in governer general Robert vivian forwith sent to the city where the Glandelinian government was an overwhelming Abyssinkilian army and besieged the city cannonading it f furiously and incessantly for over ten days, and then made one des perate attack that raged a battle for a whole day w and which drove the defenders with great loss into the barr acks of the city. The streets of the city was then shelled furiously and finally the Angelinians rushed in with their Abyssinkilian allies and slew about three hundred thousand Glandelinians without giving them quarter before the main force after desperate fighting drove the assailants back. On the tenth of September the ma main Glandelinian forces there were drawn up in general battle formation, and one of the most stubborn battles ever seen raged then for three more days amid a regular warfare of titans of the batteries of both s ides.

The christian artillery fire-itself was simply terrific and committed s uch incapable damage among the Glandelinian positions and even in the city, and among-the fortifications, and made the region a dreadful earthly hell that the Glandelinians finally withdrew from their sixteen hundred storming attacks suffering the loss of IO,899,765 in killed and wounded in the long battle to that of the christians only 6,789,000 in killed wound ed and-disabled. After the frightful battle so many white flags were seen tha that Governeer general Vivian inquired by wireless the intention of the Glandelinian government, and the meaning of so many white flags. Two days later a messenger came in response to the great christian general with many vagueing reports, but finally one cameinto his main ten tent with a large roll of white paper and read aloud to general Vivian who sat at the table;

''His Excellency the President of the Glandelinian Government in Calverinia, seeing the cocumns of the immense Abyss inkilia armies surr surrounding the city and attacking and being attacked, and bombarding the city and Glande linian positions night and day has nevertheless decided to refuse to allow the city to suffer any further punishment, but degreed that under no con dition whatever would the Glandelinian army besieged there be allowed to surrender unconditionally, that a conditional surrender only would be accepted, but that nevertheless that if the city is attacked again and that if the bombardment does not s cease within another hour the full Freedom of the Calverinians will be seized by the Glandelinian King, and the Freedom of the country taken away, and also that if Governer Robert Vivian does not at once withdraw his army from the city of Gertrude ga S parring it will be considered as an act of worse conditions of war and opposition will be given to the last.''

King Procile Glandlin.''

General Vivian wrote in answer to the government of the Glandelinians certain things that was most difficult to fullfil or carried out on the conditions placed. It was as follows;

''To the government of Glandelinia;
''There are ten conditions which will save the nation from further war on account of the Glandelinian uprising and threat that you established;
I The entire nation of Glandelinia will have to atone for the crimes and sins committed by the Glandelinian Child slave Boss es under the leaderp ship of their vanquished chisfitians;
2 To turn over to the Angelinian Government over I5,000,000 child slaves still in the possession of Glandelinia in Calverinia, and the I7,000,000 Stolen from Abbiennia and other nations and allow all the child slaves to go free.
3 To Pay Angelinia $ 500,000,000 within two weeks.
4 .To Atone for the persecutions and abuses of the poor Vivian Girls, especially from the abusive Glandelinian generals and rulers .
5 .To furnish men and materials to rebuild the ruined houses in the city of Calverine and Norma Catherine.
6.. To pay for the countless millions of insults committed on our Holy Churches, and priests.
7 .To atone for the insults of the Glandelinian Generals to Governer Hanson Vivian, and to give up the rascal general Raymond Richardson Federal, who is accused of murdering Annie Aronburg sister of Gertrude Angeline.
8 ..To come to my tent with your namesigned to this last of requests as I don't think you are good enough for me to come out and meet you.
9 .To reveal the real guilty murderer of the Aronburg Child Rebel leader.
IO .To give up the child slave trades and never renew it.

A ll these must be applied with if you wish a conditional surrender and if not I will not withdraw my army from this city of Gertrude sparring and will only continue the cruel devastation and ruin the city and exile the prisoner Manley in the i Island prisons for life. And only for three hours will I discontinue the bombardment, and must recievec an answer to this degree of your surrender before that time.

Governsg Governer general Vivian.

The Glandelinian government leaders got this note and wrote to Governeger general Vivian asking him to give untill July 30th I9I3 to decide. Governer General Vivian heldca council about this and then sent by telegram;

''Your deciding will have to be the date I set and no lohnger unds under any conditions whatever. If that day comes and you have not decided I8ll totally annihilate your army and property in this city and destroy any other army that dares t o come and defend it and lead the survivors into exile. To wait untill Julo 30th I'll never do as it is folly and I don't intend to, and the sok sooner you decide the better it will be for you, and Glandelinia.''

T

That evening was still and calm. Violet and her sisters were upon the summit of a high hill where they could see the whole government forces concentrated in front of the city.

''I wonder what the intentions of the wicked Glandelinians are!''Asked Violet of her sisters.....
''I wish they would give in and have it over with.''Said Joice.''But I8m afraid not.''
''Maybe they will.''Said general Evans who had an arm around her t ightly.
''It i If not and the Glandelinian forces start more trouble it will end very sadly for Glandelinia. We are ten to one of those Glandelinians and general Vivian will threaten a massacre if the Glandelinians will not decide before a week.Goverger and his aids also will not wait. And Governor general Vivian knows how to carry out threats when planned....''

''And they got poor Evangeline st'' Clare again.''Sobbed Jennie. ''We may never seethe poor little girl again.....''

In the meantime the heads of the Glandelinian governments were thinking very hard. They knew they could apply with a ll of general Vivian's demanded but one, but when and where, and how will they raise the five hundred million dollars, when sixty nine thrillion dollats was refused them by the main Governments and by the King in Glandelinia, and when it was also feared that all t he Angelinia Angelinian raiders would raid all the Glandelinian banks in the Calverinian cities held by Glandelinian aurthorities, and carry off millions of dollars, and when there was hardly a friendly nation that would or could loan the Glandelinian governments in Calverinia that much. The heads of the Glandelinian governments in Calverinia thr thought of borrowing money from the christian nations which she which Glandelinia was not warring but it had been found out before that they would de refuse to denote the sume and even if thgy did they could not give the right ammount, and that also the Glandelinian Governments in Calverinia would be unable to repay the loans they did recieve. The main governments in Glandelinia itself refused all payments to Angelinia, and even threatened to wage the war to the very doors of Angelinia if the Angelinian governments tried to force the prices and the fines.

Poor Violet and her sisters were impatient for the week to come to an end. Oh how they hoped that the Glandelinia governments in Calverinia would comply to their demands or their fathers demands and not suffer Glandelinia to be dragged further into this terrible war over the dhild slave question. Or suffer the government forces of the besieged city to be annihilated for the foolhardness of theit their government. Evans knew full well the yearning of their hearts. What joy would be there if the main heads of the Glandelinian governments agreed.But alas he feared the same. Where were the head men of the Glandelinian governments in Calverinia going to get the five hundred million dollars when they could not recieve it from haughty Glandelinia.I& they even gave the little money left just now it would not do. Probably Governer General Vivian was a little too hard after all.....

''Violet''He said I ''I believe your father is a little too hard in demanding that sum after all the havoc the Angelinians themselves did to Glandelinian property. Couldn't you little girls soften his heart and have him withdraw it and only leave the other nine!!!!!!!''

''No we could not do it.''Answered Violet saidly.''We tried already with pleads and entraties to persauds him but he would not relent and got angry with us.He is angry clean through about the past butcheries of children in Norma Catherine and elsewhere and that is the reason he demands the sum....''

''And he is not too hard Evans Dear.....''Said Voice vigorously.''The governments in Calverinia that are Glandelinian aurthorities do not have to pay it all at once but in advanse. To pay all the sum within two weeks. What I and my sisters are worrying about, will they decide or refuse.?''''

Evans made no reply to this but did some deep thinking.The main reason that governer general Vivian demanded the sum was not only because the war up to now cost his own beloved home in Angelinia eight million eight hundred thousand dollars to pay, feed and clothe the children rescued, and the causility of one hundred thousand homes, but that the ruthless federalism caused the total loss of I,000,000,000,000 dollars in the wide spread destruc tion of hundreds of large towns, thousands of villiages and scores of cit ies including one hundred to one thousand miles of forests and jungles and ruthless loss of thousands of passenger ships from their submarines in the past year of I9IO all Calverinian property.No wonder Calverinia was almost bankrp bankrupot. There was no way out for Glandelinia. Glandelinia must pay the price withig two weeks otherwise all her kinsmen would be driven by force out of- Landelinia and all Glandelinian property seized and ruined. And indeed governer general Vivian though justified in all his demands would have been still more justified and would have overthrown Glandelinia more easier if he had started to drive in at once at the besieged city instead of waiting for an answer in his demands and seized the great fortifications of Vivian Wickey before the foe got it but it was now too lA late and it seemed so them now to resume the war would indeed be to the utter dissillusion of Glandelinia.

General Vivian however was no fool and he felt sure that he would not recieve an answer to his demands at all and never intended to stop his main army from advancing to support Hanson his brother for he was bound to crush Glandelinia and make her atone for the past cruelties during the long ten years child slave rebellion.-In fact the Glandelinian governments in Calverinia realized that the governments of Angolinia were in real earnest however and finally before the first week was up the Glandelinian forces were withdrawn into the city and the headmen of the governments came to sign the papers and to his surprise governer general Vivian recieved this;

''Sorry can't apply with your demands.Send demands to main aurthorities to Glandelinia proper. They alone have the ammount to pay.
Government of Hanglandelinia.''

W ithin a week after it was reported that over seseven million two hundred and seventeen thousand children who were slaves had been seized by the Angelinians from the child slave places in the city which had been forced after another terrific struggle and these children happy over their sudden freedom were loaded on trains bound for Angelinia and Abbisannia unde under the guardianship of Angelinian soldiers and even now more Angelinian armies were marching o into Calverinia from the south. They were due northward. Violet and her sisters were with Evans during the long march for the Mc-Hollester Run and indeed showed their feelings that were caused by the decisions of the wicked Glandelinian governments in Calverlnia which they fa feared would soon cause more frightful bloodshed than ever, and also the whole world was apprehensive and it was reported that two nat ions were preparing to sent two men to mid try to ask Angelinia to make a mediation over the situation. Hns cheered however, yelled and shouted in rage, muskets were fired in salutes and there was a great scene of fury indeed. The rebellion of the child slaves was still cont inueing but danger of their losing was now over but little did general Vivian or his bort her realize how much it was goinbg to take to reduce wicked Glandelinia and force her upon her knees. Town after twon was passed by the new christian armies besieged Norma being left far behind, some armies were marching, others taking trains, and still others ships up the Mc-Hollester Run, and within another day all the christian armies were within twenty miles of the ridges known as ''The Calverinian hills'' governerg governer general Vivian halting his army near Abbisann for a grand review. Violet and her sisters decided to make a trip around the town of Abbie98 Abbie-Ann where the first battle along t he Mc-Hollester Run had raged, with Evans and did so with their fathers consent and with the consent of Evans also who had the main say.....

They saw the newfortifications recently erected by the Angelinians.In the meantime Violet and her sisters passed through the city of Abbie-Ann and were indeed an attraction to all who observed them. But the little girls hardly paid any attention to the flattering remarks about their celestial appearance from passerbys, and when some soldiers stopped to talk to them the little girls answered readily enough gaining staunch friends by the whole sale, especially when theu their true charoter was known. It was believed that it was they who was the cause of the speedy success of the rebellion and so the little girls were held in high esteem. Chn Children of all kinds and nationalities gazed in friendlieness at them.Little bashful boys summoned up courage to talk to them, and many a child got a dime or two from Violet and her sisters who told the children all about the seige of Norma and how Manley was coming with an army to raise the seige and how their fathers and uncles armies were going t o st op Manleys advance at the Mc-Hollester Run. A whole day and night was spent in Abbie-Ann by general Jack Evans and the little girls and then late in the morning the return for the christ ian lines began.....

''I believe I smell sulphurious fumes.''Said General Evans suspiciously. ''I wonder where it is coming from.There is a luminious cloud in that direc tion on top of that mountian.I think it is from a volcano.''

The little girls saw the mountian but realized it was many scores of miles away and from further information from many soldiers and people Evans and the little girls learned that it was a forest fire set by Manleys army who had made it to delay the advance of the mighty christian armies. They soon reached the christian lines and two days later on September I4th general Vivian seeing that it was all quit quiet along other parts of the great drama of war decided to move northward further with a small portion of the army and take possession of Calverine Hills and to leave his immense army under general Aronburg near Abbisann and the others under Flanders near Jennie-Wren-Town (Calvsinia) and to send forward the other under general Roswell Buster Johnston to make a great barrier so that Manley could not advanse any further, and gave them instructions to report to him by wireless or telegraph if any trouble should start. Thus the two great armies were gre getting ready for the great storm that was about to burst.

It was general Vivians intations to take his little daughters away for a while from the dismal scenes left by the outbreak along the Calverinian border and at Norma Catherine and Julo Callio, and to mass his armies upon the main hill of the Calverinian ridge called Abbisannia, and stay untill any further outbreaks came about. General Evans proposed to masx mass his own armies in the way of Shoemannias own armies and advise advised genoral Vivian to be caut ious of his seizure of the Calverinian Hills and then told the little girls of governer General Vivians intentions a and they were filled with rapture.....

''Oh won't that be just wonderful.?''Said Jennie.''We have always wished to see the beautiful Hill called Abbisannia and it is said its valley is a Fairy Land of forests and villiages.''

''Yes it's a beautiful country all right.''Said. Evans.''But pretty warm also in the summer and vol cold now. Though I'm sure you little girls are used to the weather so well known in Calverinia.''

''Yes we are.And winter seems quite early too as it usually only begins in September. Yes that valley is a hot place but easy to get used to.''

''And it is a land of wonders, free from dangerous swamps, bogs and quicksands and full of Blengiglomenean Serpents.''

''Well I'm game and where ever general Vivian goes Is my orders.''Said Evans.''This part of Calverinda my mother and father came to live in when I was only three years old. At that age my father inlisted in the Concentinian army and w when this Glandelinian storm threatened, and so I have had much experinc experience with both the Abbisannian, Calverinian and Angelinian climate.Winter has no terrors for me in fact I'd rather see it than summer.''

''We have had much experience also.''Said Catherine.''Summer hes here is sometimes very long and lasts eight months and from experience I do believe you know how hot a Calverinian summer is.It's a trifle warmer some winters and exceedingly cold in others.''

''Well I'm resigned''Said general Evans Evans.''If I stood the heatwaves elsewhere I can stand the heat and cold waves in Calverinia.But Calverinian summers are not always hot without a cool wave.''

''No''Said Hettie.''But all summes the hot waves are very long and frequw nt many lasting over three wea weeks while the cool days only last a day or two.....''

t They were soon on their way tward the Calverino Hills but when they reached the town of Pallaway there was no stop there the marching armies tramping along the Abbieannia-Bondinia and Calverinia railroad lines for the hill called Abbieannia the other section of the advancing army having tal taken for a short cut the Pandora and Evangeline St Clare running from Calverino.All the while during the forced marching scenes changed itself. All was se scenes of beauty apparent peace and the like all the while and I indeed could almost cry to think of the hell and damanation to occur at these beautiful places soon. They soon reached a town called Bondinia a short stop was made when the scenes of desolation was again exposed to their view. Sometimes the little girls riding with the wagon trains or on horseback watched the desolated fields, ruins of houses and the like and tears would fill the eyes of the little girls as it would bring to their memory the past scenes of horror and misery and they realized worse was yet to come. After reaching the boundary of the Calverinian Hills some armies stopped to change formation and as the Mc-Hollester and Pandora Lines ran alone side the Mc-Hollester Run the most of the army took that right of way some of the armies waiting at the stations to watch for trains loaded probably with Glandelinians but none came. As the advance was soon resumed and continued for a day scenes of desolation began to change bac, to the natural kind as before the snow covered ground b making the scene more beautiful and finally two hours later the scene resembled a thing of the past.

In the morning just before daybreak without the little girls knowing it their wagon train one wagon of which they had slep in pulled into the first station of the Mc-Hollester and Pandora Railroad in the Valley where the army made a two hours stop before resuming the mardh march as it had a long ways to go yet and the other armies were readily catching up. Then daybteak daybreak came and all were aware now of a real wints winter de edal edan. The air however was sweet scented with flowers coming from no one knew where.Some of the generals asked Evans how far they were from the Hill called Abbieannia, and he answered that they were within sight of the ridge already.

"I thought so on account of the climate."Said one of the generals."And the country all around is like a winter paradize.I never saw such scenery of woods before.I only hope we can get possession of those hills before the enemy does."

Evans wondered how far he would have to go yet and he on ,looking over the situation realized the point would be reached in the afternoon. However the armies had been marf hing so fast that their destination was reached at twelve o-clock sharp and soldiers soon occupied the summits of the ridges and work at placing artillery in position was bgun begun. Everything around however resembled the regions for all kinds of Winter sports only the weather that day was quite cold but not near zero. However the sky was becoming overcast tward that time, not much only enough to hide the sun at inv intervals.It was the brightest and most beautiful country general Evans had ever seen in his life and he felt sad to think that a tremendous battle would have to be found here. The buildings of towns and villiages far off were similar to those of Angelinia or Abbieannia the people however were the same and the language also. Though al in that twon as the Vivian Girls passed through had b never seen the little girls before, nevertheless by their beauty the people knew who they were, and were glad to see the great Angelinian generals and the vivian Girls. To Evans to be in this part of Calverinia was a delight for now an he and the little girls were far away from the scenes of the horrible seige of Norma Catherine, and he believed this would soon make the little girls foe forget what they had gone through in the past.He believed that they would enjoy to witness a common battle but not the scenes at Norma again. But to tell the truth gentle readers poor violet and her sisters were to see more horror and sorrow and though some of the ruins would probably be in the course of rebuilding, and the regions where forests had been burned would be probably turned into farms, all these would soon be a reminder of what had been, when the great war progresses onward with reredoubled fury.

General Evans by his friends General Vivian and Hanson had been appointed to be the guardian of the vivian girls.The town of sacremento was quite large being almost a city instead of a town and the little girls decided to remain here for some time untill they would had to leave when the enemy came within view. Then the o people of the towns would have to flee to the christian lines. So their abode was appiunyed by the great general for the time being. Evans and the little girls took their choise of rooms.Des ite the coldness of the day it was delightfully warm inside inside the manison or government building, and inside the flowerhouse belong ing to the place many kinds of flowers were blooming in all their glory.

Evans made wreaths of some of the pretty flowers and crowned the heads of Violet and her sisters with them. Then they went into the main parlor and remained there to watch proceedings.

"General Evans."Said violet suddenly"How do you like it out here?"

"It is just grand and you little girls make it more beautirful."Answered the general as the little girls clung closer to him."It is not even so cold outside as I feared it would be.But let it get as cold as it wants.I'm prepared to meet it."

"It will be colder soon than this."Said Daisy."And in summer you will be sweating when some day you will find it is one hundred and twenty in the shade."

"Goodness does it get as bad as that ?"Exclaimed Evans."Why I b never thought Calverinia got that warm in summer."

"Well not always."Said violet."But in winter sometimes we have sixty eight below Zero in the coldest seasons and so much snow that we hardly could go anywhere in the cities. And here in winter and summers storms are very frequent and terribly severe. Wait untill you see some of the real Calverinian blizzards or snowstorms."

"I have heard of those terrible snowstorms but never witnessd witnessed any yet that I can remember."Said Evans . "But let them come. If"It will be harder for theenemy than us.And I don't care as long as the enemy do not start trouble on the coldest days."

"I do not believe Manleys armies will come at this part of the christian line."Said joice."Not right away anyhow."W

"We seem too far."Said Daisy.

"Indeed you are mistaken for they will indeed."Said Evans."That is what brought us here to oppose their advan ce when they appear.We are in their way.This part will probably get the worse of the battle that may rage and their attacks may sweep upon the entire christian na line."

"Oh yes we remember it is true."Said joice again."I forgot about it.I was thinking about Norma."

"But we fear them not."Said Jennie."I even say let the Glandelinians com come."

"I thought you little girls were afraid of those Glandelinians who are worse in their depreа depredations than the worse tornadoes of wide extent."Said general Evans.

"We thought we were but experienced different."Said Hettie."But just the same we don't like them."

"I don't believe they will come for a while though."Said Angeline.

"No maybe they may not yet."Said Evans."But they will come as soon as possible.But us christian generals have been teached a lessi lesson by the last two disasters in the war and I doubt if we will be surprised by the enemy again.The christian line will have in another day a long line of lookout stat ions on all parts of these hills and positions and along the river banks.And as I have learned we are to set up other stations as well including signal stations whose watchers can easily fortell the approach of that big gray scoura scourge before their approach is seen by ys. Every christian generals have guns enough to hold all the occupants of the house."

'I've heard of some of those great guns and seen some of the m."Said violet ."But I have seen only a few minutes ago somet hing like a tunnel proceeding from a cinderal tube inside the house like a firescape and I am wondering if it has been made so that refugees can escape that by from the enemy in case of being too hard pressed or in case of being entombed by wreckage above them caused by exploding shells.In big buildings people reach the cellars by means of escape pipes just like those firescapes in front of big school buildings only their sliding provisions are more steeper."

T "They probably use those on the upper floors is case thebuilding is a tall one."Said Hettie."There is one of those cellars under this house I'm sure."

"Yes I believe there is."Said General Evans."Come let's investigate anyway."I have a handy flashlight and can find the way."

However they searched a long while before finding anything untill entering a large room they behind right in the middle a cubelar room where opening the iron door they saw what appeared to be a circular slide.

"It's one of those escapes."Said Evans."It leads no doubt from the top of the manision.Come we can slide down to the cellar."

They all hastened swiftly up one flight of steps aft er another reaching the fourth floor of the building which was four st ories high.They had trouble here as also in finding the escape and Evans said;

"If this house was filled with tenants and they had the same length of time finding it as we have there would be a good chance of the enemy coming upon them before they could find it."

Finally however they entered a roco room and right there it was a door of great width being on the side but it was shut and bolted. Evans opened it and peeked in.

"It would do for a convei convinent fire and typhoon escape also." He muttered. "You little girls had better wait here untill I try it out myself. I'll slide down alone and in case the door is locked in the side a all of us won't be caught in the trap without any one around to do any thing for us. If all is well I'll come back, but If I go no further than the first floor I'll call to you not to slide down untill I force the door open."

With this Evans let himself go and this was the fastest descent he ever made in his life going down fasters than the cars on the Royal Gorge Railr Railway at Riverwi ew Park. only that he turned five times landing on something soft and in utter darkness.

"Gosh" He exclaimed." I fairly flew down and no mistake at that. But everything is all right."

He called and recieving an answer shouted;

"Everything is clear but do not come down all of you at once or otherwise I'll be dressing some brusises on you. Come one at a time. The descent is as swift as lightning."

"I'll go first." Said violet and down she went the rest following one by one untill all were down, every one of the little girls having the most exciting downward ride in their lives.

"My but that is worse than dropping down into empty space." Laughed Violet. "At first I thought I was really falling and sno sn snd not slid ing at all."

"So did I" Said Evans. "You cannot imagine how I came down being heavier that three of you little girls toget her."

"I was down here before I counted three." Said Hettie.

"I counted ten.." "Sdd said Jennie.

"I counted seven." Said Catherine." And you would not believe it Evans but I was going down head first. I slipped as I went in."

"I counted twenty before- I got down." Said Voice.. "But I was a trifle scad scared at first. I thought I was falling.."

"I di did not cound as I was too excid excited excited." Said Daisy. "But I know I was down before I could think of the end of my supposed fall."

"I counted five." Said violet

"I too "Said Angeline." And my wreath of flowers came down after me besides one of my shoes which came off my shoestring being loose."

"Well it was some excitement." Said General Evans. "Shall we try it again for the fun of it?"

"Not unless we have to because of a typhoon or the enemy." Said Voice.

"For the present we have had enough. Le t's see what the cellar looks like and find the tunnle tunnel."

Evans produced his flashlight and saw that it was only a large room with the floor covered deep with straw for a floor. On one side there was a door and general Evans pulled it open. It was a tunnel.

"Let's see where it leads t o." Said Voice. "I hope it won't give us another Royal Gorge Slide."

"No it slants upwa upward slightly." Answered Evans. "But it appears to be of great length."

They followed it and walked for quite a distance upward before coming to the a exit and ermej ermerging from the opening they found themselves in the main Conversatory of the manision which was filled with thousands of biggest, most beautiful and sweetest Roses, and other kind of flowers, that any mortal ever saw or smelt and and the little girls after ermerging from the tunnel into the flower house spent whole minutes in gazing at them and inhaling their perfume. All of the ten thousand roses were in full bloom as well as the thousands of other flowers, with lovely bus buds and other bloss oms whose delicate blush was one of the fairest sights in the world, so gentle so modest and so full of sweet tranq- uillity did these roses seem t o be and so very dw delicious wa their fragrance that Violet cried;

"Oh Evans is not all these flowers just too beautiful for anything.? If the beautis of flowers are like these what must heaven be like?"

"Pooh, pooh." Said Evans. "You little girls beat those flowers all to pieces. None of them are as pretty in features and sould as you children are."

"That is all we hear about ourselves." Answered violet. "We aretoo beau tiful to our liking. I'm afraid some will w some one will take us some day and kidnap us for thir own....."

"That is if they can." Thought Evans to himself. "I'm too slick for that at las least...."

Hearing general Vivian calling them Violet and her sisters hastened into the house with general Evans and thus ends the interview with Evans and the little girls for a while, Evans wishing to see a little more of the Calverinian town and so took a stroll out alone meeting many people who spoke to him and soldiers who saluted him, a and finally he came to a street that was wider than usual. Here there was a lot of people and children assembled, all men wi women and children, and joining the crowd he saw that it was only some of those religious people that generally sings in the streets on Sunday and he left wondering who they were. It was late in the w evening when he returned to his headquarters and he related to general Hanson, his brother and theothers what he had seen.

"It happens very frequently." Said General Hanson. "And is nothing unusual. I've seen hundreds of those occurances during my childhood. They are of the Cathelic Religion and do this to get as many people as they can to go to church on sundays. As you know the whole of Calverinia outside of the Glandelinians are Catholics."

Early the next morning general Evans was the first one to be awake and he knocked at the door of the room where the little girls were in and recieving no answer opened the door and entered. He saw that they were still sound asleep and so did not bother them but went out in the main garden where beautiful flowers had grown during the warmer weather. The day promished to be bright as there were no clouds and also to be a zi sizzler in coldness. He then went to the Conversatory and paused before the surge of beautiful roses and looked them over carefully, and then picked a handfull, and returning into the house by the way of the s o snow covered garden entered the room where t he little girls lay, and put them into one of the flower vases. As they were still asleep, he did not wish to dis- turb them then, and went back into the conversatory seating himself as comfortably into one of the garden benches wi which he had carried in proceeded to read one of the maps of Calverinia which he had secured to look over the situation of the country and find where it was best to a engage the advance of general Hanley when he arived. It proved to be a very ine i nteresting map and so intertaining also that general Evans was so engrossed that when the sun was rising he was not aware that he was surrounded by seven beautiful little human flowers. Finally as he continued to study the map violet dropped one of the roses she had picked upon the map which he had laid on the table examining the position of the Calverine Hills. The falling rose made him start..

"Oh its the little Fairies." He exclaimed. "I thought you we were asleep yet."

"Papa woke us." Said Violet. "And somebody gave us a nice vase of beautiful roses, and it was you."

"These beautiful sights we have already observed makes us feel happer than usual." Said Jennie. "Our brothers whom we thought were left behind are with us in the camps and even some of our best friends whom we thought were lost were not killed after all, and here for a while we have a real home with a house garden of the most beautiful flowers." And I'm glad that we are far away from the horrible scenes at Norma Catherine..."

"Yes and when battle after battle I saw those poor mangled creatures among the fields thicker than grains of sand, having lost their arms, thousands their legs, or heads, and when I heard how many were killed, oh wasn't that dreadeful dreadful, and oh a great many other things, we have felt we would be glad to live in Abbisannia itself and go away from all the past misery. We yearn to go to Abbisannia and hope that some day we will get out wish. We have hard that a battle occured at Fi illmann Glorinn but that the enemy got worsted." And the little child ernestly laid her little hand in his.

Evans certainly looked at poor violet and her sisters with the greatest awe and he wiped his eyes many timew as he looked at them. He could plainly see that the recent disasters of the Norma Catherine seige and horror especially the recent sufferings of the, litto e girls, and the sights they had witnessed, had caused them overpowering sorrow, and now they deserved all the happiness they could get as los long as it will last and now while on the Calverine Hills they were beginning to forget the past, forget their sufferings, the false reports about the deaths of their brothers which had given them more sorrow than any other, all their misfortunes recently stated, and now they laughed and played again, and Evans as they surrounded him felt as if he was in the presence of child angels.

Now many things had spoken in their souls oao calmly and clearling that all miseries were not as yet a thing of the past, for they frequently heard about the frightful progress of the war, as of raids, wanton havoc still going on and the general mobliising of armies, and of fugitivies of other nations attempting to flee the war zone in vain. The rays of the rising sun formed the same kind of strange glory about them he had seen befo before, in their snowy white dresses, with their glossy golden hair, glowing cheeks, eyes unnaturally bright and abnormally beautiful. The appearance of the little girls impressed Evans suddenly and as painfully as many times before, their beauty always seeming so intense, yet so fragile that he could hardly bear to look at them. He drew them gently to him and suddenly folding two of the litt,e girls in his arms held them fast. Finally there was a call for breakfast, and during the breakfast they found all the generals very much elated. The Glandelinian governments were not complying with any of general Vivian's demands and had sent in a report that to send him the five hundred million dollars was like in sulting a fragile person, and that it was-under any conditions impossible to do so. They had even notified Governer General Vivian that if he made the fine smaller they would then refuse to pay and that all the prisoners captured by his armis armies already and also by the rebels should be instantly releas ed or otherwise another great massacre of ch children would be committed. Never would they pay such a fine.
All were surprised over the news and all wondered what Governervgeneral Vivian would do.
"I'm going to see that papa will not yeild to their deman ds or uncle either."Said Violet indignantly."It's just the same as handing back to the children to the Glandelinians, after having set them free."
After breakfast Evans went into the conversatory waiting for the little girls to appear after finishing their interview with tha their father and uncle. And hour passed and still they did not come. Finally he waited for another hour and was about to go in and see what was kp keeping them when they suddenly appeared.
"How did you make out?"Asked Evans.
"He believes just as we do, tha there is a trick in it."Said Violet.
"We are sorry that we pleaded over the nonsense and won't do it again. We ourselves agreed that papa must by all means get the full fine under any conditions or make the Glandelinian government give up the whole Calverinian country to Angelinia, one or the other."
"I believe they-are u just trying to get out of it."Said Jennie very seriously."The Glandelinian government as we believe are trying to talk papa into being afraid of them, or take him for an easy mark.But they will soon find out that they cant and we have begged him to make the Glandelinian government give up little Eva or take from them the whole stretch of the Blengiglomonean Islands."
"He ought to take possession of those islands anyway and force them to give up little Eva."Said general Evans."And besides in it is a trick all right .And besides they got Bloolinia to back them up, and if they can hold onto their money the Glandelinian government will try to start an uprising among the disloyal Calverinians."
"That is just the very thing."Said Joice."And I said it to papa too.And he won't relent which shows that papa is too sly a fox to be caught napping."
"Glandelinia has to pay or yeild the country of Calverinia to the Angelinian aurthorities."Said Hettie."For papawill notify them on this for the last time, and he said so too."
"How far is the Blengiglomenean Islands."?Asked Evans.
"I do not know but papa does."Said Hettie.
"Yes "Said Violet and in the main path of the enemys fleets of war ships at that.I would not mind being there for it is full of adventures throughout the entire trip but we would just now be killed altogether. There are great wonders there though. And some of the generals are going down the river to morrow to see the lay of the land.It is papas intent ions to find out so that he can form new positions.Hanleys armies are only three days away now and the battle we expect may soon commence."
"I would like the trip myself"Said Evans."And so I think I'll go to direct them in their work."
"Papa intends going but he did not say if he would."Said Angeline. "But when he says he is going, it is s oon all right for he ha has to for the fact that delay with the near approach of the enemy is very dan gerous and-----"
And he is going when the others go."Interupted a voice behind them..

At the intteruption they gave a start and beheld Governeger general Hanson Vivian standing behind them."I heard everything and to morrow we start. He continued."Those islands doe do not belong to Glandelinia at all but to Abbiesannia and Glandelinia is only in possession and has fortified them to hold off fleets from coming too close to the Mc-Whirthian fortificat ions. Thise islands are st olen property.But as to your intended trip we will accompany you with an army of men."
"Oh Uncle we did not know you were here."Said Violet."We never heard you coming."
"I came out int o this flowerhouse as soon as general Evans did and was out here all the time looking over the flowers."Answered Hanson."And you would like to make the trip with us would you? Well we will all go for there on the Calverine Hills my intended position is to be.On the trip I suppose we'll go and pick up some adventure.Us highest generals will go on a fleet of Abbiesannian and Angelinian batt leships so that in case werun into enemy shore batteries we'll have some real excitement worth while.What do you say?"
"That will be just grand."Said Joice.."How long is the trip.?"
"Only about twonty miles."Said Hanson."I guess we could make it in less than a day if the weather is not bad and the river is not frozen much. Anyway it is a safer trip than to the Blengiglomenean islands which is a couple of hundred miles from here and which is a six days trip on the fastest ship in this freezing weather.."
"But how far t o do wshave to move onward before he find a real selected position for your army?"Asked Evans seriously."We may be outwitted by the enemy if we make this move don't you think. You are already occupying the Calverinian hills.Why not say here?"
"I intend t o."Answered Hanson"You don't understand that is all for I- mean to make an advanced position to decieve the enemy. You see the Glandelinian army coming upo upon us have swelled so from reinforce ments that their strength is equalvto our own."
"I understand now."Said Evans. "And that is good.But when do we start?"
"To morrow we will be nearing the selected ground.We are to start that portion of the army on the advance this morning and the people of the towns have been advised to move for the christian , lines before the enemy are approaching.Gneral Vivian is already preparing the force to move."
"So soon? Why I thought you said we were going to morrow."
"Yes we do on taking up the position."Said general Hanson.
At this moment they went in and in a quarter of an hour more the whole force selected were already on their way to the river. They reached a railroad station and while the army halted for the arrival of the transports ships Hanson asked the agent to retire and tha the Angelinians who were coming were going to tear up the railroad so the enemy could not use it.
Hanson then asked when the last trains were due.
"There is no other train due untill elevel thirty."Answered the agent politely saluting. "The nine oc, o clock train has passed full of fugitives going nort h.Your clock or watch must have stopped.It's quarter to ten now."
Hanson ,looking at his watch saw that it was so. He hoped that the Angelinian government special would not come on this road and so warned then by wireless to send no more trains either south bound or north telling the reason and so on.The agent was a very jolly and ples pleasant fellow and though knowing general Hanson and his brother well and even Evans he never saw the little girls before.
"I suppose those pretty little girls are your children?"
He said to Evans seriously."Will you give me one general? You have seven and I have none."
"Evans laughed for he himself was very good natured in a way though serious and grim in the duty of war."They are general Robert Vivians daughters the daughters of my aiding chief and best friend-I have beisdes my second Lieutenant Hanson.They aare known as the Vivian Girls."
"You don't say !"Exclaimed the agent more seriously.
"I have heard of them very much as much as I have heard the clock click but never saw them before. And you are gonna general Jack Evans the chief commander of the christian armies?"
"Yes."Answered general Evans."And we have seen lots the last four months of war and strife and had hoped to see no more espe especially for them, but I know worse is to come."

857. 357

The march was cont imued and soon they were viewing more of the beautiful country the little girls enjoying the ride once more in the generals company on horseback watching the straight outlines woods the snow dov covered fields and plains snow covered hills, and mountians in the distance and they cried wit h excitement and gleed glee when soon they were marching along what appeared to the little girls to be the sea but which was really the great Mc-Hollst Mc-Hollester Run River and waved to every farmer and everybody within sight of the, theme. Socn they noticed the river was moving at a tremendous speed, and they wondered what made it move so fast.

Tward evening the first point of the stopping place was reached and for the first times in their lives violet and her sisterx were close to the shores of the mighty Mc-Hollester Run River and saw its br beaches which was just like the beaches of the Mc-Whirthian seas. At the beach which they spent the latter part of the evening thy also felt the cold winds coming in front from the west the river appearing rough and all warnings had come that a blizzard storm was approaching.The beach front was crowded withpitched tents and soldiers the surf of the ri ver rolling far inslad with a tremendous thunderous roar.

Violet and her sisters liked to watch the rolling surf and it reminded them of the great sea, and so stayed there for a while watching the foaming surges more than anything else. The very eveni ng was getting very hazy on account no doubt of the approaching blizzard storm which was supposed to be due on the morrow. Evans asked the little girls if they wushed to bathe in the surf and show the soldiers somet hing as the little girls seemed immune from cold and could stand water that would be too cold for the strongest stoa stomach to take. He knew that also there was no one in the crowds of soldiers were they able to stand the cold water who could sw swim any furt her than the little girls could and that they could &so swim better than any one else. Nevertheless the little girls did not have the inclination to bathe in thesurf just then, as the water they feared was not cold enough yet to satisfy them. However as Evans coaxed them finally the little girls decided to go in, and so securing some heavy underwear that would cover their whole person as they did not want to appear in their own underwa underwear they dived in to the surprise of the soldiers. The little girls were soom hav ing lots of fun at the expense of the flabbergasted soldiers, swimming the roughest breakers like swift horses, and attracting unconsciously nearly the whole army and many of the christian generals.Many soldiers feared that the little girls would freeze to death but Evans quieted them and so did Hanson and his brother who laughed at the sprur surprise and fear of the soldiers and other officers.

Violet and her sisters however were unsciouness of the atreatt raction of the crowd untill some officer came riding up on horse-back and shouted;

"T he enemy is moving forward from the nort hwestern quarters of the Mc-Hollester Run grounds and advancing tward the main town called Lucillis Jorden.Everybody fall in line quick."

Evans had also heard the warnings of the signal men and warning the /littles by shouts and gesutres they all swam back to the beach and were soon soon dressed and ready to resume the advance with the army.General Evans went to a high hill with the little girls to watch the enemys pproah, but saw nothing in that direction to indi cate the coming storm, but he did see the people of Luli Lucille Jorden flseing and the t own was in flames and miles of forests in its vinicity.

If it had not been for the fleeing fugitives he would have believed that it was a false alarm.He did not know eithor whether the enemy set the town on fire or the fi fugitives themselves who were streaming for the christian lines. He went to one of the signal stations which was only ten feet away and requested if the officer was mistaken.

The man being surprised used his powerful glasses and then said;

"No indeed.The main wave of the foe may miss this section to day but nevertheless the Glandelinian army is six miles away to the north west.The foe advance can be seen from the top of this signal station."

Evans Evans mounted to the top the little girls coming with him notis ing that the fugitives were indeed fleeing that other towns were burning and that explosions indicated that bridges were being blown up across a creek. They also saw what appeared to be a thick culumius clouds of peculiar colors far in the valley that appeared ominious nd which spreading in the sky had a parabolic curve at its upper portion and which seemed to have a peculi ar motion upward and rolling fast.This indicated the forest fires set no doubt by the fugitives themselves to harass the foes progress. From its formation and the di rection it seemed to be moving

858. 358

Evans had doubts wheher the fire would really stop the enemys advance, but had hopes that it would for the present as he did not like the idea of a tremendous battle so soon for to him that very fire had some kind of a solume warning that the battle to come was going to be really simply terrifying.He decended to the be beach again and remained with the little girls watching the soldiers taking down their tents and quickly p making preparations for the advance. Though the darkness of evening was slowly gathering nothing as usual happened though the fugitives were coming in. Evans again went to the top of the signal station but the cloud had spread thicker ad he could not discover anything else anywhere. Hanson apparing on horseback when Evans ret urned and when Hanson asked the reason why the soldiers were hurriedly preparing for the march Evans explained the reason of his orders and Hanson went to the top of the signal station himself as he knew Hanleys army as well as he knew the A.B.And C's.

It wa was sometime before general Hanson returned and Evans inquired if he had discovered anything.

"Nothing in sight as far as I can see and I've used my glasses."H He answered saluting."But there are big fires raging, and si xteen small towns are going. There are explosions, and people are fleeing to my lines in a hurry."

"It is best to be cautious."Said general Evans."As all the signal stations on the hills as I have o bserved are indicating all kinds of warnings and their flags are waving incessantly.The enemy are coming but too far to be seen as yet. As long as they keep signalling no fugitives will be safe without fleeing for our lines.The first branch of the enemy may have been too far off to be seen yet.We will have to remain here as we cannot advance any further. The men w are preparing to march it is ture but I'm only concentrating them into position."

However it soon began to grow dark and as nothing further happened, violet and her sisters were soon viewing the town of Hansel going tward the docks of the river of the warf.Every body in the streets looked a at the little girls as their beauty att racted them and especially the little boys gazed after them wonderi ng who they were. One young lad thought he recognized one of the litt e little girls for he remembered about fifteen months ago while sitting on a curbstone in the streets of this very city during a hot night watching the lightning of an approach ing thunderstorm a littlegirl looking very much like Violet came up to him, sat down alongside of him and held a long conversation with him. He had been awed at her presence but nw nevert heless spoke to her as freely as she spoke to him and when about to leave when the storm was about to break she had promished to visit him again, telling who she was, but somehow or other she had failed to appear and he had not seen her since. As the party approached to where he was standing he eyed them closely especially Violet, and believed surely she was the same little girl. He was not at all shy or bashful now and decided to find out about this under any circumstances and when they were near enough he doffed his hat as the party of the little girls g halted and said to Violet pio politely;

"Wasn't you the little girl, that sat with me on the curb stone so long ago during the approaching thunderstorm?"

She looked at him closely and said;

"I don't remember anything about it My friend.It may have been some other little girl or one of my sisters."

"Well she said her name was Jennie Vivian."Said the boy looking at another resembling the same little girl."And she looked a little like you."

Jennie looked closely at him and said;

"I believe you are right as I recogni ze you instantly though it has been so long ago.It was me.These are my sisters."

The lad looked at her closely and said as henoticed a mark on her neck which he at once recognized;

"You aare the little girl.And my you can't imagine how bashful I felt in your presence. If you little girls don't object I would like to accompay accompany you a little distance."

"Oh we don't mind at all as long as Jennie knows you."Said no joice."We are friends of everybody we meet whether we know them or not unless they are Glandelinians.Ain't that right Jennie?"

"Yes indeed."Answered Janie."I took to this boy that ve very evening the moment I saw him.I was coming home from Benediction that sunday eveing and saw him sitting on a curbstone across the street watching the lightning in the distance and some strong impulse compelled me to speak to him and he is a good boy."

"I think you had better come with us lad for good and be my trusted orderlie as I need one."Said General Hans Hanson who was with the little girls."But first tell me where you live."

"I live no place."Answered the boy."I work in a hotel where I get my wages, and eat and sleep as well.All my parents and relatives are dead having been killed by Glandelinians.I'm an escaped child slave. I fled from the child slave houses when I was six years old."

"When you can come with us."Declared general Hanson "You look like a trifty good lad and as you are of the age of the eldest of my little neices here.I would like you to keep us company. The hotel can give you up. At least it will have to."

"I'll have to resign my job."Said the lad."I can tell----"

"Poof"Said Governer Vivian."I and my brother are the governer generals of Angelinia and if we wish you to come with us there is no one in this country or in the world can hold you. They can get some one else to take your place and if you are with us you are not running away. And you will see advat adventure."

At this moment the manager of the hotel came out looking for the boy, and seeing him with the governer general and the others walked over saluting polite ly and saying;

"Your excellency this is a fine good boy I'll tell you, goes to Holy Communion every morning, sings while at work, and does everything to please us.Does he know you two governer generals."?

"No"Answered Governer general Hanson"But he knows one of the little girls , ad as we ourselves have taken a liking to him we asked him to go along with us. He wished to see you or his emplor employer first. You I suppose cannot spare him."

"Well he is a good worker for us."Said the man"And got good pay from us despite being only a young lad."But if he wants to go along with you and the little girls here I'm willing to give up up him up to the army.It would be best for him to be with these little saints as it would do him good."

He then turned to the lad and said;

"O I only owe you a weeks wages as you have been payed last month, but I'll make it four months and put a twenty dollar tip to it as well."

And he handed the lad sixty hundred and fifty dollars, and a twenty dollar dollar bill besides."Good bye my boy, serve your new friends well, and as well as you have done me. And you will never never regret it."

"The lad bid him good by and said he would return after the war and soon they were off toward the docks with a number of generals and soon reached it. There were many ships lying at anchor all gunboats but Hanson and the little girls headed for a large battle ship all painted gray and were soon on it, the admiral of the ship and the marines greeting them all like long lost friends.

"My but we are glad to see you all again."They said."We got your od order this morning and the ship is ready to go out when ever you like."

"We will start to morrow morning."Said Hanson."The enemy is advancing close close now and I expect the storm before long, and not knowing how strong the Glandelinian army is U do not care to encounter it on the shores with only a few ships if possible."

In the meantime violet and her sisters had been kissed and embraced by every sailor on the ship by the rear admiral also as they were well known by all.

"So you little girls escaped the Glandelinian scourge in Norma Catherine after all you went through!"Asked the Admiral."Well how fortunate.We feard feared that they would get you."

"We are safe."Said Jennie who was still folded in his arms."And one of our guardians did it all.If it was not for him we would have perished."

The lad was by them all this time and when the admiral left to attend to his work he was alongside of Jennie who with her sisters were looking over the railing into the water be, below.For the first time in their lives they were going to ride on the big Mc-Hollester Run river. At this moment Evans approached having been on the ship first and he himself had a long hearty talk with the lad as he knew him for ya years.

Two hours after boarding the ship the start northward was made and tward midnight one of the northern shore portions of the Mc-Hollester Run was reached and even there it was seen that the distant shores was in the possession of the foe who had halted and their campfires could be distinctly visible. The ships went from island to inland seeing nothing but the recent havoc of some great storm of fury done by the enemy already and Hanson wondered what the reason was.

They had intended to put in at the docks of a small village on one of the River islands called Aronburg Francoe but was unable to land there as the small bay or inlet was mysteriously crammed with wreckage and the quays were over,loaded with wreckage of trees.Manly Glandelinian fortresses were exposed to view, fires in the distance from camp fires were burning and all was as silent as death. One island later called the island of death where so many child slaves had been killed by their cruel masters, was a spectular scene indeed.Landing by boat on its shores was impossible though pontoon bridges were seen, the waters of the sea river riverport of Greenburg being impassable on account of wreckage, and all approaches was guarded by strong fort resses, and the distant shore appeared a desolate waste. All the child slaves on these islands of terror as general Hanson Vivian and the others knew had been massacred by the Glandelinians daily, and every river island they passed was worse that the island of St Martinque after the disasterous eruption of the Volcanoes on it. Glandelinia as it is seen will be compelled some day to pay a great great priceafor their cruelty on these islands, and Hanson decided to have floating fort resses to destroy everything on these islans islands which they knew just now they would not be able to land upon without disaster on account of the threatening fortresses flying the flags of haughty Glandelinia.Hanson decided to bring on the whole fleet in the River and force a passage through or know the reason why.

"I've seen the havoc on the Plengiglomenean Islands after the great typhoon that swept Abbisannia when the waves hurling themselves upon the rocky shores roared like a thrillion cannon."Declared Hanson."But never such havoc to christian property as exposed to view here. I'm going to revenge it.I'm going through here if I have to blow my way through hell to do so. And now on account of these darn Glandelinian fort resses it is impossible to get within eight hundred yards of the shore without their fafiring on us without warning."

"But there is no use then in making the trip further north without force forcing our way through."Said Evans."And the other islands may be in the same condition."

"I'm going to try it."Said Hanson."We'll make it if we encounter t heir storming fire or not."

The ships then halted and Hanson signaled for the main fleet to come on and then waited for morrow before the trip would be reco recommenced. The weather was the calmest ever experienced.Violet and her sisters enjoyed the scenery, w enjoyed the calm weather despite the heavy snow that was falling and continually hoped that the blizzard would cont inue so that the conflict would not come.Seven hours of preparations had been spent during the night before the weather being almost intolerably cold, the river rought rough and wild and soon the wind did began to blow furiously the snow coming down more heavily and general Evans continually wished that he could go to the tropics and no body dared to poke fun at him either for they all suffered knowing it to be one of the well known Calverinian blizzard storms. Tward night fall the weather calmed down a bit the winds becoming more quiet and the river becoming still. Yet nevertheless it was cold enough to cause for many a sleepless night on the ship and so they did the best they could do to keep comfor table wishing that some warm winds would come to drive away the frigid air which they feared would be worse on the morrow.Fortunately the river waters moved so swift that littlefrezing could be accomplished. The next morning broke bright and sunny but still uncomfortably cold. However agai threatening storm clouds were approaching in the far southwest, and Hanson studying them closely gave the alarm that another snowstorm was coming. However though the alarm was general nobody believed that the storm was of any severe character but nevertheless all on board were ordered below. Some had to be shouted at before they payed any attention but finally every one even the Vivian Girls with general Evans went below. Hanson surveyed the approaching snowstorm with serious misgivings as he knew the elements was frustrating his plans of forcing his way past the fortresses on the islands.He asked the admiral if the storm would be moderate or severe and shaking his head the admiral said;

"We will be delayed for another day I fear."It is an approaching blizzard storm of the worse kind."

"Good god"Gasped Hanson."You don't say.We will be delayed after all the trouble we have had in covering this distance. It's just bad luck that is all."

"We can't dodge it that is all."Said the Captian.himself."I'm figuring that if we can reach one of the islands not in possession of the foe before the snowstorm breaks upon us we will be all right untill the weather clears. Then probably we could make our attempt to pull through the barrior but of course we don't like this delay."

"How far is that island from here?" Asked Governer General Hanson."

"About two miles."Answered the captian."We could make it in less than an hour I'm sure.But then there is a minature atoll about one mile to th the east also and if we could get there in time we could arrage for the preparations of making the passage in the storm.The enemy would not see us and we could manuever untill we have all those fortified islands surrounded as in a eclipse.Then we could rain a storm of shells until we force their surrender."

"Head for it then and put on a full steam."Said Governer General Vivian.

The captian disappeared into the main cabin to give the orders and soon the ship was again heading northward with the fleet following all guns ready for the duel expected to follow and soon the islands heaved in sight once more a weird gray darkness gathering rapidly and it was already beginning to snow heavily.

"We are in just in time."Said Hanson."We will get ahed of the storm for once."

They had just neared one of the islands when the snow pall got thicker than the most impre impentrable fog.Still as all was as sicent a as death Hanson wondered why the enemy did not open fire or manifest themselves by hailing and he believed it was possible that the christian flert fleets were not seen. No a sound of a gun proceeded from anywhere and finally the snow pall began to slacken up a little again and also it began to grow lighter to the surprise of them all. They wondered what it meant and inw inquiring the captian declared that it may be a local snowstom storm and that the snow pall may be so heavy that they were not seen. Fifteen minutes it grew perfectly light again the sky being only gray in color but now a staff stiff gale was blowing from the northeast, and the river was getting very rough. The captian stated that probablt they were too far from the islands to be seen by the enemy and declared that they would be unlucky anyhow as the snowstorm would soon be over but two hours passed and inst ead of abating the gale became a scream ing tempest of terrific violence all the t rees on the islands within dim view writhing like snakes before the lashing of the wind and now the snow came down in such a thick sheet that nothing could be seen not even the nearest of the following ships.The captian and all on board now reäl realized what was raging.

"We i are indeed in the main path of a gigantic blizzard storm." The admiral said."It is a mercy of God that the main portion did come upon us for it hides our movements and when we who know the lay of the islands and can find their positions in spik spite of the snow shroud gets every island encircled all the fortifications will not shelter the enemy in possession and will prove a death trap ins ted instead if they dare offer us resistance.If we capture these islands Hanleys main line of advance will be broken before the battle is actually begun and which advance no doubt is delayed by the storm. We may however be stalling as it seems also to the enemy but thanks be to God that the blizzard has come.The fortifications are weak and none of them can resist the guns of our ships.They would be annihilated sure."

The river was now furious the waves pounding the shores of the nearest islands in a perfect bombardment the roaring and thundering surges many hundreds of feet long bombarding the beach as incessantly as battering rams .Governer general Vivian was feeling anxious for he had no believe that the manuever could really be accomplished as Evans proposed, and though three hours passed the wind still blew furiously the snow still poured thicker than ever and the river was becoming as rough as the sea would itself. The enemy however could not see the slow manuever of the christian ships in such a pall of snow and only tward night time did the snow fall let up a little, and now the plan was prepared for the bombardment. The enemy indeed realized their peril and forwith surrendered the prisoners being loaded on the empty transport ships following the fleet . It was not however untill morning when the blizzard abated somewhat did the ships effect boats to make a landing to see how one of the islands appeared. At the southwest coast was a large city seen easily in the distance and into the dock the captian ran the boats. The only ruins observed t was thewreckage of the smallest wooden houses. And to their relief it had stopped snowing and though still overcoast with slowly moving black clouds everything seemed to be favorable.The quays were crowded with child slaves the small bay being a mass of clandelinian shipping which had been surrendered, and as all the christian soldiers landed all the nearest crowds of child slaves now set free cheered Governor General Vivian and the other heroes and heriones as well.

They had landed at the Kauffmann warfe on the island called St Ann and one of the islands where the children had not been massacred as yet.This island though in the wide river had high snow capped mountians .Nevertheless from this lan island to they returnd back to the main land having accomplished as much as they wished.They reached the main land in no time giving the soldiers l all sound pleasant news and telling the fugitives what their plans were. Afterwards they made a trip through the valley bordering the great Calverine Hills which they surely observed had beautiful paradize like jungles especially in summer where trees of all descriptions grew, and here Hanson was told that in summer the valley itself was a maze of all kinds of flowers and also being alive with all kids of prteeily colored b birds, timid animals and insects. The orderly told them also that the u jungle was alwys always alive with snakes and wolc wolves but that these animals were different than others and never harmed any human beings unless persecuted and hunted down. When left alone they are harmless as little kittens but if molested by hunters these fellows had better be armed to the teeth or otherwise they will be reported among the missing. After traveling through these jungles they finally came to a large open plan plain at the base of a steep depression which on all sides far beyond was boardd boarded by high rocky wals walls walls of tremendous height. Where thy they stood there was an abrupt decent and the appearance of the plain was like somewindless lake covering a width of a mile across & at its widest. It was a wide space of absolutely cold lave floe which presented a most curious appearance the naked surface being a sort of indeterminqte white dust color. General Hanson with his inquiring mind would have stopped to investigate this curious surface unlike anything he or the others had seen before. However they had no time to waste and the gude leading the way across the baked and barren wastesniffed curiously as they went at a strange smell, pungent but not unples unpleasant which steamed up from the dry appsently hot surface all about them . The first peculai pu peculiarity that they noticed was a strange springiness in the surface upon which they trod. Then they were struck by the fact that the white covered sura surface was seamed and criss-crossed in many places by small cracks, like those in sun scourched mud excel except that the cracks though very deep and broad were deep blood red in colar and also that an unusual heat proceeded upward while despite the coldness of the winds their feet began to feel very warm. Yet these things caused them no misgivings.But presently to their consta consternation they all detected a slight but amazing undulatien and an immensely long slow wave rolling across the dry surfae aurface before them, while suddenly in the distance a large cone of fiery matter rose and burst with a deafening explosion.They could hardly believe their eyes for assuredly nothing could look more like good solid ground than that stretch of barren plain. Hanson stopped rubbing his eyes in wonder while the little girls huddled around Evans staring at the unstaple surface and the distant storm of fiery cones in horror.

"What is it?"Whispered Violet to Evans.

Before he cl could reply the surface of the plains all along the edge of the shore with a crashing detonation had given way beneath the weight of some red glowing sticky substance which made a frantic snorting and awful groaning sound. And the whole surface which looked like a dense fiery ooze glowed like a lake of white hot matter and bubbled and roared in a series of explosions all at once. The slow torrent decending from a high elevation was hidden in tumultous roling clouds of black, white, green and yellow and was being forced forward into this queer plain and it was the pressure of this furious battling mass that was creating the horrible bulging undulating on the mysterous plain and now Hanson's quick intell igeance86o took in the situation of the whole thing at an instant. The naked white surface beneath his feet and those of his follows followerd followers was nothing more than a thin crust overlaying a lake of molten lave. His first impulse was to turn back and Violet and her sistes sisters with wide eyes of terror were already praying frantically. But to turn back was utterly impossible That was led to the long strip of fis fierce y steaming roaring bubling lava swallowing up as it seemed the new f flow pouring into it. There was only one way of possible escape left open and that was straight ahead.

But would the thin cooler crust continue to uphold them! Already under the wi weight of the whole bunch pressing together it was b beginning to sag hediously, and amazed, and quaking with awe the general and the others extended themselves like a fan over a front of thirty four feet and then seeing that the perilous sagging of the crust was at once relieved Hanson ordered them all to advance cautiously but quickly keeping the same wide open formation while he n himself brought up the rear.

But in a few minutes every one came to a halt irrestibly in order to watch the monstr monsterous drama und unfolding behind them. For nearly half a mile on either side of their rear between the still and unbroken surface of the beds of dust like expanse expended the edge of the fiery and fiarcely burning forest stretched a sort of canal perhaps twenty yards wide of white hot molton matter beaten up with thrashing bursting bubbles that whistled and roared and threw baloons of vapor for every outburst. The mall of matter still flowed from a far distant steep rise some parts seeming to battle madly to force its way over projections thrusting more and more down into the glowing pitch and the scene was one of the wildest confusion. After they had gotten out of this region of horror they realized that most of this surface was nothing much but a large Calverinian volcano with three immense craters and that where this appsent wide plain was a very deep gulg gulf which had filled up with molten lava from the depths below. Nearly two days was spent by them all at the edge of the main seven mile crater which was boiling into awful oceans of lava varying n in a wide range of beautiful colors and in heat which reached nearly twenty thousand degrees. While the hot lava boiled in awful masses underfoot and the fumes and vapors of sulh sulphur rose over the entire region they all encamped themselves on the ld ledge of hardened lava at the edge of the active crater. All the while they were on the ledge of the crater they constantly took their lives in their hands and at the end of their last day which is the one of thousands which are always in a process of disintenration, the lava below became umusually active. Cones forming on the lava spouted in sheafs hundreds of feet high and the next morning while they were away from the edge and but a few hours since th the party had walked over the scene of their dangerous work a sudden cracking of the lava bed and a shifting of the mass of matter precipitated the entire ledge into the boiling caldron of death. That afternoon when they returned, to the spot not a sign of their location was visible, everything there g having joined the awful mass of molten matter below.

"I never had life like visions of Dantes Inferno of o or of the real hell."Declared Governer Hanson who watched the ruins of the destroyed spot."But this horrible crater seems a good resemblance of both, and I never prayed so fervently as I did when I realized how near to a horrible death we all had been. When I think now how all of us risked sudden death for hours on the edge of this terrible pit working out plans on its edges with the cold breezes back of us and with the lava twenty thousand degrees hot ne beneath us I'm exceedingly thankful that the lava slide occured when it did and not two hours before."

Several days after leaving the cater on September 28th they proceeded to return to the spot a of the concentration of the armies and Hanson inquired if the enemy had appeared as yet.

They answered that the enemy was within sight but had been quiet since they ca came.It wa also found tha the frightful blizzard did not cause much havoc in the region of the concentration christian lines and being satisfied that the islands in The river were the only ones that held child slaves the party decided to form the christian lines and get them ready for action before more reinforcements came for the enemy.

All through this time they encountered thesame kind of bad weather.The weather was still unpleasantly cold though it was still September the cold intolerablecad especially tortured the Glandelinians miserably. All those days even while they had been i specting the volcano for a good position for the christian army not a warm day was encountered, the atmospehere was bright and intolerably transparent and general again had feared the approach of a snowstorm which he feared no doubt was coming their way. Not long after the christian armies were in full concentration it now being the twenty eight of September the soldiers of the signal staions saw something like a long roll of white smoke along the plains to the northwest. I t was the color of sulphurious vapor having the appearance as any sailor had noticed when approaching a distant submarine volcanic erupt io n.Yet the smoke seemed to hang long and suspiciously, and yet inst ead of being stationary was seeming to roll forward at a slow speed and increase in volume.The signal men had observed this before any one else and attracted the attention of general Hanson to it by f violent telegraphing. The problem was "How in the world can the enemy set forest fires when there was already so much snow on the ground.Or was it a forest fire?" Hanson looked in the direction and was suspicious also. Hanson and some of his generals notifying Evans decended to the outside of their headquarters ordering all the soldiers to be at their pos t positions as they believed the st orm was about to break.

Even before all the soldiers could do as ordered an awe inspiring shroud of snow began to hover over the distant lands.The approaching shroud as it really was approaching became thicker as it advanced then the wind began to blow while in the distance a dull roaring as of long lines of cannon were in incessant action came from the direction of the line of smoke formly seen but now hidden by smoke or snow I mean and how long the suspense of the terrified fi fugitives coming from other towns held from a panic can never be told. It indeed was-an attack of the enemy the Glandelinians coming headlong upon general Kindernines position in the plains and amid the frightful din of the battle tempest the crashing of hundreds of thousands of muskets all at once Kindernine threw forward all his reserves and over his works poured the surges in gray driving back his men amid the yelling of fury like millions of demons.The sky splitting thunder of shells tore the air in convulsions the crashes coming every three se seconds and amid the snow storm the two lines tossed back and forth the cannons of the christian batteries swelling to the din and crashing and banging with an earsplitting racket all along the line. From the left of Kindernines post position the enemy poured like every sweep of a storm wave and terrific battles were fought against the enemy in endeavors to shut t the gaps in Kindernines army.Little children far to the rear of the sudden battle line screamed in terror, cried and wept, and indeed it seemed as if the enemys storming attack would never abate. General Hanson who was far from the scene himself despite the snow with the help of his glasses got a glimpse of the battle raging and declared that it was a worse sight than any he had ever seen before and the slaughter itself was some thing terrible. He wondered if the terrible Glandelinian wave of assault was very extasive and moving tward his own positions also. If it was what a scene would meet his eyes when the battle extended.But all that awful hour the christian line stood against the wildest waves of Glandelinians that was ever believed to be in existance and two hours later the battle had increased so furiously along Kindernines line that all began to fear that he would be actually be forced and all aid possible was sent to him.

But tward four oclock that afternoon the enemy began t ovrecede.Despite the abatement of the desperate assaul t t the firing on both sides was still perfet ly severe and general Hanson had to take precautions less his lines be attacked next. However it was found out that this attack was a demonstration on the part of the enemy for the enmy enemy did not continue it any more.The next day was the twenty night ninth and after another interview with their father Violet and her sis e sisters listening to the noise of confliot along Kindernines front and feeling hungry secured for themselves a few slices of bread with butter on it and rejoined Evans who was inp inspecting the trenches.

"I wonder what has become of the wicked Tamerlines tha have butcher ed so many children during the child slave rebellion?"Asked Violet as she offered Evans one of her slices of bread."They disappeared very suddenly, mysteriously as they were not heard of since the outbreak of this war."

"I don't know. 'Answered Evans.''They may as I believe after the horrible disaster to the Glandelinian child slavemasters grew discouraged and know i ing the rebellion itself lost to Glandelinia probably resigned their respecitive commands to avoid being forced to surrender to thechristians. That is my opinion."

"I believe that too."Said Joice."I hope they don't try to s start further trouble."

"I don't believe the they will as trouble is after them."Said general Evans.Governer General Vivian since the war broke out has sent large numbers of men to scour the whole world for these rascals as they are wanted for the murder of so many children."

"And who is really responsible for the murder of the little girl called Annie Aronburg?"Asked Jennie.

"The Aronburg child murder?"Said Evans."I have never heard of any one by that name.Oh yes I have too------I understand----- I see what you mean now. The assassination in cold blood or the Aronburg child. Phellinia Tamerlins the real guilty one is the man wanted for it."

"And I doubt if they will ever get the men."Said Jennie.

"Governer general Hanson Vivian wanted the Gemini to go in sea searcho f of the rascals but they declined just for the present saying it was of no use. Other wise they would have went. They could not get away from the Gemini I'll bet."

''Why don't you do it yourself?''Asked Angelina.''And we could hlp help you as we know them and could betray them!''

''Nothing doing.''Said Evans.''You little girls wat went through a enough trouble already.The government officials are as slick as the slickest detectives and if they are unable to run down theassassins then the devi devil can escape holl too/. No criminal has ever yet escaped the government officials and neither can they.''

B''But then the murderers are slick themselves .''Said Hettie.''And they had a good start and may have escaped already by sea or taken refuge on some unknown island.''

''I'mpossible surely.''Said Daisy.''Papa has all the seaports strickly guarded so that nobody not oven Angelinians can board a ship just now and men no matter w what nationalty are stopped and examined closely before being allowed to board ship and all part s-of the shore line are as also guarded. So they must be somewhere in Calverinia.''

''They will get caught never fear.''Said Catherine.''And Daisy is right at that. There is no way for those rascals to keep themselves hidden long for the searchers scour the very mountians all the rivers and lakes all woods and every plan place known caves and the like for them, even with tb the help of blod bloodhounds. They may possibly remain free for a couple of months or so but not , longer.The only wy they can possibly escape is to rejoin the Glandelinian army and which they may have done .No one ko knows''-

''Just at that moment Governer General Robert vivian approached and said ''Evans my boy those rascals have escaped down the Norma Ru Mc-Hollester Run River in disguise despite the villia gence of all the coast guards. Federal Bernardson told me so, And also Hanson.I'm going to send some of the Gemini after them mu myself and they will have to go wi whether they refuse or not. And- I'm sorry to say this, but it is too dangeous a monkey buisness for the Gemini to refuse to comply with orders, and my daughters knowing the rascals will be the chief trailers. This will have to be done as soon as opportinity presents itself.

In the meantime Geminian members had boarded ships and the search for the rascals had begun long before this. From the ship agents they had learned what ship the fugitives had boarded and so the search for that very ship had been started.

''I bet we are going to have exciting times.''Said General Evans to the little girls who were on some high hill viwing the Mc-Hollester Run River watching the great foaming surges in glee. Those fugitives no doubt may try anything they can think of to halt the persuit of the government officials but they won't succeed.''

''I should say not.''Declared violet.''Papa is bound to have the rascals captured and he will.''

It waw was evening at this time the evening of September the twenty ninth and after talking with the little girls for some ho r hours they all went into the general headquarters dropping into their beds for a much needed rest. It was sometime in the night when general Evans was awakened by a frightful crashing sound something like thousands of violent ex plosions going off in bewildering reports at once. A column of Glande linians tremendious in size had struck suddenly big waves of Glandelinians sweeping against the christian lines from end to end while ral rattling peals of thunder from exploding shells seemed to rive the skies, and the frequent flashes of the x shells filled the room of his headquarters with a dazzling light.In the blaze of the lightning of the shell explosions though happily the attack was far from his own lines Evans sasaw mounting a monsterous surge on the river a peculiar almost globular object approaching a ship at anchor in the river the object having a row of glass nodules like thick electric light bulbs bulging around its top. At first he thought it was a peculiar kind of fish but examining it more closely with the help of his glasses the flash of some flame near by on the shore revealed a truth- that may made Evans cry aloud;;

''Good God .A mine.And its heading tward the ship.''

It was true. Each nodule held a thin flask of sulphuric acid, and the breaking of any of these flasks, would bring the acid into contact with zinco and copper and cause anc an electric spark that would explode fulminate of mercury which in turn would se set off a charge of guncotton which would donate four hundred pounds of wet gun cotton and if the shi ship lying at anchor was hit by this mine it would be a watery grave for all on board as no small life boat would ride such waves lashed by the gale then raging. Back to his headquarters rushed Evans arousing the other generals and then calling for Hanson and the others.

''Nobody knows how long that mine has been floating in the water.''Said general Hanson surveying it with his glasses.''You know as well as I do what it will do to this dreadnaught it i if it hits it.The ship cannot steam out of its way in time and so all we can do if have one or two men rope it and explode it before it reaches the ship.''He stopped und then went on quickly in a voice that was high and shaky. to one of the soldiers coming up;

''Frak Frank secure a rope as quick as you can.There is even no time t o tow it away.''We got to explode it and though the river is becoming calmer now it won't do to put a boat too near for this sea on might heave her on the mine.One bulb smashed and the soldiers in the boat would go to kingdom come in a hurry.''

''I can jump into the river and take a rope to it.''Said one of the soldiers.

''All right.''Said general Hanson.''Take the end of this rope.''He directe directed quickly.''Tie it close to the ring bolt close to the lantren on it and make a clove hitch round the base of one of the bulbs.Then we can explode it while it is still at a safe distance.''

The soldier seizing the rope rushed for the beach first waded in and th then a few hundred strokes brought him to the mine.

''Steady now.''J Hanson continued.''Not too fast. S Don't let the sea heave you against it.''

Very cautiously the soldier thrust out his hand and grap grasped the ring bolt to which the lantren was fastened. He felt the blunt flaskes press against his breas t and the thought of the four hundred pounds of gun con cotton that were directly under him made him feel as if he was doing a task that required a man of great nerve more greater than his own, but still he did not falter. Treading the end of the line through the iron eye he made it fast. Then he carefully tied a clove hitch and dropped it over a bulb.

''Easy there,easy. Don't pull it too tight.''Hanson warned him from the shore.

The soldier drew the noose around the glass neck just close enough so that it would not be tossed off by the motion of the waves of the river. Then he pushed himself quickly away from the mine and was soon on the shore again.

''Now c''Cried Hanson w to all who were present.''Down.

''He saw one of the other soldiers give a quick hard jerk and the rope tightened at the same instant all within sight threw themselves flat on their faces on the snow covred ground near the beach. There came a thunderous roar, and a volcanic w eruption of water arose from the river. A storm of whistling iron fragments screeched over the soldiers as they lay prone and even over the decks of the battle ship itself in the river which rocked and reeled in the mighty seas that followed. Nobody however was disturbed on the ship thinking it wa only one of the shells going off in the direction of the eg engaged christian lines and no one on board that ship knew of the danger except generals Hanson, Evans and the soldiers who had witnessed the explosion.

- A few minutes after this occurance some soldiers had persued some Glandelinians who had been caught spying within the christian lines and they were seen going into an orphan asylum.Soon the persuers were upon th e building and pounding on the doors to gain admittance. Most of the inma i inmates were children all girls of all ag es.H The soldier in the lead told the matron the reason of his disturbance and a search was made but no suspicious persons were found within the building. Suddenly the captian realized that there had been a mistake in the undertaking for he was sure his men had shot down the spies and tolf it to his officer expecting a reporach for what he believed was a wild goose chace.

''No they were not.''Said the colonel sullenly.Though we cannot find the murdering spies they are nevertheless hiding in some my sterious recesses of this building and so the place will be surrounded untill they are found. And they were some of those Glandelinians who caused most of the cruelties during the child slave rebellion and we will find them if we turn the whole building ins ide out to do so.''

The building was therefore guarded Hanson reassuring the inmates and the matron that they would be transfered to safty and to the christian lines untill the enemy was driven from the region of the Mc-Hollest er Run.The cleaning of the building of its inmates was quickly begun the christian officers watching every hired man closely and suddenly one of the soldiers stepped in front of a woman, or what appeared to be a woman, and pulled off her hat and hair which proved to be a wig, and to their utter astonishment a disguised man stood before them.

He was bout to make a break when three of the soldiers threatened to pierce him with their bayonets while two others grabbed him, and halting the rest of the workers there the other soldiers scanned them curiously and as the matron pointed out some that seemed strange women to her several more were then discovered in dus disguise and the Angelinians forwith made them prisoners. All of them about five spies had worn different disguises but they were all officers who had been persued by the Angelinians but the ps personal spies it was evident had escaped. Thus it was seen that in most cases no fugitives were safe or able to escape the persue ing christians and Glandelinia already having lost thousands of her best child slave trai ders that had been operating in Calverinia was declared to be already on her knees to Abbisannia and Angelinia but in fact this was not so though of course the christian government was relentless and showed showed no mercy to the wicked who were hunted down like rabid dogs. All through the war from the beginning arrests had been occuring every day at many important Calverinian cities and a Glandelinian chieftian called Calmania Shumania who had been a fugitives for two months was arrested on a Sunday afternoon but the proofs of his kind actions and of his sheilding the Vivian girls and favoring the rebellion of the child slaves, and also the Angelinian cause, and of doing much for the Vivian girls and others whon in trouble, and of his favoring the priests and religious and of hiding them when persecuted, caused him to be released in quick time. During the rebellion itself there had been 14 11,678 Glandelinian child slave masters captured. It had been a great Child slave rebellion but more stirring things were occuring and were to occur during the war itself.....?

During the late part of September 29th general Vivians army started immediately to advance against the Glandelinian armies and bring on a general battle. By this he could exactly threaten the city of Calverine from the nort h. According to the plans of the generals it was thus;

"In case the enemy would be successful in the battle the whole christian army was to draw to the higher hills beyond and form a position that could not be assailed. T hus the enemys victory if won would be of no avail. General Vivians advance had been planned for the morning of the Th 30th of September but according to some mistake it had been commenced the day before.

The enemy on account of the capture of the fortifications in the rivw ri ver was in a thicklish position and he the leaders saw also a vastly superior christian force opposing the advance of the main Glandelinian army to the aid of Norma Catherine. If the Glandelinian army could not be successful in br breaking up the mighty christian army opposed to them the city of Norma and even Julo Callio could not be rescued and it would be then apparent that Glandelinia would be xr crushed right there and then. The enemy could not cross the river to pass the christian army because all bridges had been destroyed and all attempts to make pontoon bridges had been completely frustrated by christian batteris since the day the enemy first arived in sight. The enemy army confronting the christian army was 78,999,000 strong. The christian army was 200,000,000 strong and another big army was ready to give aid. To stand against such a host seemed a maddening thing to do but the Glandelinian leaders decided to strike at leleast and win a passage if possible, ad and in unsuccessful to retreat.

THE WHERE AFTER THE SEIGE OF CALVERINE WAS RAISED

BLOODSHED IN THROUGH CALVERINIA? .....
THE BIG SEIGE OF CAVALIERIA- RUSTINANA.....

Chapter 27

This was one of the most bloodiest seiges of the first year of the war entirely. In the first conflict during the seige when it did seem that the christians were pressing them heard the Glandelinians were victorious. From three hundred thousand to four hundred thousand Glandelinians during the afternoon of this day made a series of assaults and sorties that lasted fully four hours and ending as a considerable success for the enemy, and prevented the christians from breaking their lines. This first battle of the seige forced by the christians was a most frightful one, for so early a part of the war being nearly as violent as Calverine Hills and surprising to all the nations of the world indeed that it came out as a gl: Glandelinian victory and prevented the christians from immediately raising the seige. The christian troops in being assaulted so many times fought in the most hardest manner, counter charging again and again and still again but to no avail. They toied all that brave men could do charging and repulsing charges in turn but numbers and losses told fearfully on the divisions engaged with the Glandelinians and so the wisest thing to do was to abandon the battle, and retreat back to their proper works, trenches, and fortresses as quickly as possible.....

The conflict was fiercest in the vinicity of Germania Wreek, where so many of the Glandelinians fell in those few hours., a loss that seemed too incredibe to be real, a less that at first the Glandelinian survivers were appalled, and would have been thrown into confusion had it not been for the bravery of their surviving officers, who again and again, and still again rallied them. D r paring the battle in one charge the Glandelinians had hurled against the christian line over two million men supported by six hundred and fifty six thousand eight hundred and eighty nine cavalry men and 29,000 pieces of artillery. Thirteen Glandelinian generals were killed, and twenty seven wounded, five mortally making a total of fourty altogether. The names of these generals were withheld, though general Richard Hagan was the main Glandelinian commander. The two main christian generals who commanded the beisging armies were Hedda Zimmermann, and Jaia Ywreede.

At the time of this battle the seige had only been four months old old the seige before that having been only active so far as raids, artillery duels, and demonstrat ions and sorties. How the christians started making new fortresses and within a week after the first battle of the seige started in operations north of the beisged city when suddenly the Glandelinians under general Angelis and galsted struck a heavy blow against the-se contrating line of christians near Rhebeth. Hecres of hundreds of thousands of Glandelinians all day long continually charged furiously against the christians who counter charged and minbled with the foe in titan tug of war as the two opposing lines clashed but the attackers finally cut the christian forces all to pieces and drove them back upon their own works stopping the consentration completely. After this tremendous engagement in which the Glandelinians were also victorious in checking the consentration there was throughout the whole night great explos; explosions by the thousands seeming to rent the air and tear the earth asunder and as the christian and Glandelinian cannon continued to hammer at each other throughout the hours of darkness in drum drum salvoes, and the skies and plains and the outskirts of the city were almost cheated in darting flashes and clouds of smoke. This action was more severe than the first battle so severe that weeks later the losses of the Glandelinians were not as yet reported though many hundreds of thousands had fallen in that one single day and that thundering night of horror. It was indeed a horrible twenty four hours struggle and though the Glandelinian assaults during the day had ended as a sort of Glandelinian victory and stopped the christian consentration the christian artillery however during the night had kept the foe from making any other assaults so far, and so the ensueing mor ing came without any further hostilities. In this desperate struggle nineteen Glandelinian generals had fallen killled and wounded and a second time no generals fell on the christian side. Their losses in privates was heavy nevertheless.

A day later however the glandelinians desiring to force the christians to raise the seige strike the whole beisgeing christian line a terrific blow starting indeed the most fiery westhing contest of the seige. It was indeed a battle this time that made a most terrible clamor-and one to test the bravety and co courage of the beisgeing christian troops. The glandelinian general gaisard pegan sent his largest and mightiest forces forward to storm the christian lines but were repulsed, and then the christians rushed forward to storm the heights in possession of the enemy, and though these heights seemed for a whole day to be long ranges of volcanoes in eruption from the din the christian cahnons supported by a-shoot of cannon fire pouring a vertible storm of destruction that tore all the glandelinian divisions to pieces on the summit forced them to giveaway and the assaulting christians carried the heights in the face of seeming impossibilites. Three or fours times many hundreds of thousands of brave and courageous glandelinians led by their generals assaulted these captured heights in their desperate attempts to retake them, assault ing with all their courage and fur fury, but the christians themselves fought with the stubbornness of angels the christian fire sweeping all before it in avalanches of roaring, screaming, destruction,, and again the shattered glandelinian armies had to recede with all their biggest columns cut to pieces and routed in disorder. several times during these assaults the glandelinians by sheer desperateion did manage to reach the top of the heights but in the hand to hand slashes suffered intolerable losses and were compelled to retreat to the shelter of the city. General pegan began to realize indeed that it was impossible to win these heights, and fearing a disaster to his forces should the main christian army beyond the heights counter charge en mass, he retreated into the main sections of the city leaving behind many cannons and lots of ammunition in the hands of the christians who advanced and took possession of the works and fortresses I stand abandoned by the rebels. During the lull in the activities while the christians prepared now to force the enemy out of the city christian cavarly continually harassed the foe on all sides by swift and unexpected sorties and causing the glandelinians lot of trouble, and hardly giving the glandelinians a chance to rally. The number of the entire army of besieged glandelinians was about 2,000,000 against thirteen million christians. In this contest the foe lost over eight hundred thousand in killed wounded and prisoners losing also four generals more in killed and seven in wounded. During one of the sotti sorties made by cavarly the glandelinians suffered the loss of one hundred thousand which had been taken as prizeners and already over one million christians who had cautiously and secretly advanced into the town were in possession of many houses and awaiting the moment when the main christian army should ar start to strike the final blows upon the besieged. The The other portion of the christian army being chiefly under general Constantinian Arenburg who was the whole main commander had now arived to join in the seige and a part of Arenburgs army met serious resistance at the Fair Grounds and Riverview Park but were driven back into the city with serious loss. The christians themselve themselves however did not lost many in killed or wounded. One division of glandelinians who had been almost trapped in River View Park played a clever prank on some christian general and his command and by that managed to get away and then rallying struck this christian division a blow and defeated it with great loss but failed to follow up their victory having lost in five days over five hundred thousand in killed and wounded. Later the same christian divisions made a rally and toard evening engaged the same force of glandelinians once more with redoubled fury the christians being fun finally successful in their prolonged attacks on the rebels repulsing-counter attacks of the foe with sanguinary losses. During the evening t however the glandelinians managed to hold their ground with a great stubbornness and-finally broke away from the christians and retreated into the city. This the glandelinians had been victorious and then vanted in two battles in a day with losses incredible. The christians had now captured the last seven strong fortifications one after another in quick succession and during the night advanced toard the inner portion of the city itself where now within the streets a four hours fight of the most savage description occured in which four hundred thousand gangelinians fell. Another scene similar to that of the resent battle of Eristle geo Station. the christians however won this four hours contest but t at fearful losses in men and officers. On the morrow the christian generals then threw heavier forces against the thousands upon thousands of fortified houses within the city with the purpose of pressing foward further, while artillery of small size was brought i t into the houses and placed in windows and after a fearful bloody engagement of a whole day, in e which one house took a whole hour to capture the christians slowly progressed onward untill one thousand half-ruined houses were now in their possession t though at fearful loss again. The glandelinians held these houses as gallently as if they had been fortresses, fighting very stubbornly as stubbornly as men can stand their ground against charges and attacks of the most feroic ferocious character but in vain, and so within the approach of another day the christians were already within o possession of two thousand houses and many streets foraly holdby the enmey the foe being driven further and further into the city, the christians capturing every breastwork and other obstruction in the hard con contested streets, and capturing many thousands of prisoners and setting many houses on fire. This conflict was now very stubborn and substantate, and extremely desperate near nearly as bad as Inzilla Nielsen, but was slowly but surely turning out as a christian success though at heavy cost to the christian troops assaulting these places. Their losses were great deal heavier than the losses suffered by the rebels, which were not so exposed as the christian attackers were. This thunderous battle raging from street to street and from house to house continued the next day without intermission becoming indeed a battle which raged with the most frightful fury. The christians launched many times the most violent onslaughts against street after street, and driving the foe from houses by the score, but in moving the enemys main positions in other streets crushed themselves against long lines of blasting artillery fire. The christian forces however in recovering their formation made the hardest onslaughts but which ever way the battle raged now the foe could not be ousted out of their other positions and house fortresses fortresses the glandelinians showing great heroism during this fourth fearful part of the battle cutting down every hour scores of thousands of the christian assailants every time they made the onslaughts, and sending them back through the streets flying with their many columns in tatters. And all this in one morning. Losses in officers on both sides this time was very great but nevertheless being heavily exposed the a christians suffered more heavier in total losses of men in leading general officers, besides lots of ammunition, guns and prisoners. During that one morning the christian generals had been hemmed five million six hundred and seventy seven thousand nine hundred and eighty eight men against the foe positions and scores of thousands of houses at one time but in this one morning the christians had lost one third that number and thirty four generals, nine of them were killed, and twenty five of them were wounded. In the nearest streets and houses the foe had been numbered about two million nine hundred and fifteen thousand, this small force under general Preoile vivian holding out so successfully against them he so mighty host of christians. Two main glandelinian generals had been mortally wounded, and one was killed a small loss ac accordingly to the christian side in officers. Such resistance did the foe suffer the christians to meet, and worse to come other forces were approaching that the christians had to abandon the siege and leave the enemy to themselves.

Simultaneously to this great a t activities of the christian forces began anew at vivian Yickey and became a regular storm of battle. Some of the attempts of the christians under general mansion were made upon the great line of St Emmanicus fortifications to the front of Lucillia Dickson but two christian generals were mortally wounded and one killed and the whole christian force man making the operations were driven toard the region of gunbourn Creek. Losses among the christians in killed and wounded were not reported by by the christian generals but for this part the glandelinians had won a crushing victory nevertheless. This struggle was generally called the battle of Everette True on the gunbourn Creek where it had raged.

vandals or Ineans men what ever they may be had been active since th the great flood receded but it was not until the end of October that he they committed the act that brought the whole town down upon their trail.

The glandelinians then having whipped the christians in this fashion fearing the retreating forces would fight their way through gunboats junction struck a terrific blow at the sadly stricken christian army. In their defeat at the other battle the christian army had been put into a more terrible condition so to say than a person who would have been crucified on the Cross and burned at the stake at the same time if it could have been done, but nevertheless they licked the glandelinians during the attack at every inch giving the glandelinians such heavy losses in generals and officers of all ranks and such whole sale losses in privates and so on that the glandelinians fell back staggered, and confused and horrified. When general mansion seeing seeing the danger rushes fresh troops after the demoralised glandelinians and drove them back in another fearful charge tward the fortifications of grandesallis with more fiercer losses and the christian force that raged the battle that afterno on was over 1,,649,444 strong. The glandelinians retreated over the grounds of Chapelin un tward the fortresses of St Emmanuel and here made a stand but were worsted again with the loss of six hundred thousand in killed and wounded in a three moment of only twenty minutes and two hundred and fifty officers all generals killed, and with the loss of ten million prisoners, and thousands of guns, and ammunition.

Horrible in deed was this terrific disaster and the foe at this point preparing to defend the portifications of St Emmanuel requested through their leaders that if help did not come to them from Purgatorian they would immediately surrender the fortresses without further resistance.

"These christians are not fighting like human beings." Said one of the generals. "We call them dogs. Well so they are, dogs of hell, while we are little puppy cats from out of the Voombeguring the fights hell however general Purgatorian sent reinforcements and after more terrific fighting of the most savage description the enemy were successful in repelling assaults by the hundreds near the St Emmanuel portifications. The christian attack on this occasion was extremely violent, a damnation of horror, and a n hundred thousand cannon along a twenty mile front, mingled with the roar of hundreds of thousand explosions shook vivian Vicky and the surrounding country like a disasterous earthquake and in that one day thousands of big and destructioure conflagrations broke out. Amid all the terrific violence of the christian assaults which seemed at first to tear all before it the glandelinians were successful in repelling the attack hurling back the christian attackers for the distance of ten miles and following up the success by a terrific counter charge of many millions of men. Terrific as this hell of battle was no landelinian officers were reported to have fallen but this battle of of quradq was one of the fiercest ever fought yet, and after it the ground was torn in hundreds of thousands of horrible shell craters. Simultaneously other christian forces ten miles east of here made some attempts to drive forces of the foe from the base of the Hills of Evangelinia Grainia hurling for a whole day tens of millions of men against the fortresses of Lucillia Unknown but were repulsed with disaster and suffered inhuman losses beyond incredible. Two glandelinian generals however at this point were mortally wounded and ten were killed.

Another horror he ppeared at the same time. Great attacks by a dozen christian fleets were made on the portifications of Ne-Thirther Janet once more and lasted fourty days and nights without ceasing. The attempt of other fleets also was made on the Glengiglamsnean and Boy ring Islands. It resp resulted in a repulse and great losses in christian ships. It was indeed one of the most marvelious and most violent battles on water and land at the same time the large christian fleets consisting consisting of some score s of thousands of strong battle ships, crusiers, and some submarines, making a violent assault on all the fortresses facing the bay and river and against all the fortifications on the islands keeping up a most tremendous commanding the world ever heard of, to which for all that time without respite the glandelinians had given a fierce response. The christian fleets were opposed by glandelinian ships also great u in numbers and bigger and stronger, the foe ships having better advantage, and better cannon and were quick fir fires and the landelinians showed such stern resistance that to take these fortresses by sea or land seemed utterly impossible. and the christian fleets had to withdre withdrew to their own seige line and resume the investment of the fortresses.

During the artillery scter storm that shook the world a large glandelinian fleet of snow wi white ships also took part in this thunderous battle having swelled the world shaking bombardment to a deafening warfare of millions of titans, inflicting the most cruel haves among the christian fleets, sinking many, and causing many of the fleets to perish beneath the war shaken waves. AAll of the island portifications were bombarded simultaneously this bombardment also being so fierce that most of the fishes in the bay were killed by the shock, and the very glengiglamsman creatures in those islands living in cleffs and forests of the islands retreated to the higher hills not because of fear but just to view the real cause of the racket and to watch with interest and did not even know what to make of it all. Many times the firing of the chrim tianofleets found their marks, and literally blew glengiglamsman creatue creatures out of their caverns by acco accident. The men monsters t ough they could stand the din of the noise were nevertheless nevertheless somewhat frightened by it all and as the noise shook o al all of the islands like earthquakes and lashed the sea into waves the creatures thought the whole world of humanity had gone literally made. (Maybe glandelinia, and gone made and herself,,,'.....)))))

On the same day the glandelini ns were victorious near the region of Fort Protest in, the Glandelinians repulsing sixteen christian assaults and finally carrying all before them. Their own losses however was nearly eight hundred thousand in killed and wounded and twenty of their generals were killed and wounded. This battle was also as very severe one the Glandelinians winning a good and complete o victory sweeping all before them, cutting and sweeping down all attacks and opposition and taking many kristian cannon but failing to capture any christian soldiers however or any battleflags. The Glandelinian divisions at this point commanded by general -Archibaldins fought very stubbornly thu though at one time two parties of glandelinian glandelinians mistaking a force of Attacking Calverinians as their own co r comrades were almost annihilated. They nevertheless saved Fort Protestia from capture.?..?? Several days bee before this great events, the glandelinians also had a bloody action near port Hoik but nevertheless held their ground against all the hammering onslaughts of the christian soldiers hurling one million two hundred thousand K ginnermannians against the christian line in a fierce and horrible counter charge. This assault turned out victorious and caused a withdr awel of the christians from the assault but the glandelinians lost fifty two Officers in killed, while ninty four were wounded, thirty one more of which were mortally wounded. The battle caused for both sides an equaleless as what occured at the battle of Bristle poe Station only lasting shorter in duration however.

Simultaneously general geoardine Stanok had a serious and bloody action with general gannon Kaes man at gorm Catherine Proper near the gorm bridge but failed to make any impression on the solid christian lines. During this severe action which raged all day and night without a moments pause, both sides lost two hundred and twenty five thousand in killed and woune wounded which was increased to thirty five thousand more before general Gannon arived on the scene and saved the day. During a fierce flank attack which also failed fourteen glandelinian generals were killed. During the main action with general gannon howeb however fifty more Glandelinian generals were killed and wounded, while nearly a thousand and one generals and officers of all ranks also fell or were taken prisoners. During the worse of the engagement genera general Stanok almost annihilated general Graoms right wing. This battle also raged near port Hoik. The main glandelinian losses in privates was not totally predic ted. There was then a lull and with the arival of general Francis Baldwin on the christian side, being sent by general Mansion, the glandelinian generals sent against the whole christian line a force of ten million glandelinians and after an assault of four hours duration they were disasteriously repulsed with the loss of two hundred and eighty thousand more glandelinians in which two hundred and fourty six were taken prisoners. Seventy six more glandelinian generals were killed in this bloody action of the battle and unknown numbers wounded. Whole loss of glandelinians in the bloody battle of Madame was 3,989,986. in slain, and three million nine hundred and ninty five thousand wounded and two more million as prisoners. This conflict lasted for two days October 9, and 10th.

on the following mor ing the christian artille y artillery were then massed and started bombarding the fortresses in this location but nevertheless the glandelinians managed to hold their ground amid terrific slaughter. On account of the bombardment the glandelinians lost fifty six thousand more men, and six hundred and sixty seven guns. It was believed that this severe bombardment of a full day made great conflagrations that laid a part of the es eastern se tion of Julio Cailio in smould rg asouldering ruins but it did not daunt the glandelinians in the least. However3eless Nevertheless nevertheless thirty five thousand houses were burned and razed by the christian shell fire. On the morning on of the fourth day the fierce glandelinians wishing to break the besieging lines under gansion decided to crush a part of the christian line under general Bernard gansom. For three hours during this reexamination of the bloody battle immense waves of glandelinians advanced and attacked like a storming hurricane facing the deadliest and most annihilating christian fire as if it was nothing at a all. This battle made the whole region resemble some great conflagration and as fast as the glandelinians were checked or thrown back b new forces were sent to the attack, but only crushed themselves ruthlessly against the solid christian lines. The battle raged fiercely all day long and in the afternoon the glandelinians for a while did seem to be on the point of gaining the d day and over sweep the whole christian line back. Had they done so they would have made a bad gap in Hansom main line of seige, be he had felt sure of this great attackimpending and hast in time he sent heavy reinforcements and a great park of artillery and a squadron of great guns, and soon meeting this terrific resistance the apperently victorious glandelinians were finally checked with great slaughter but not even then driven back and they only returned as heavy a musketry fire as they received thinning the christian like fearfully.
Nevertheless the thousands of christian guns were making fearful havoc among the glandelinian forces exposed to it, cutting immense swaths in every part of the foe line from end to end, tearing whole lines down, and deforming the main columns which was preparing to stand its ground and remain on the defense defensive.
An hour later one christian general after another had his own forces to the assault to break down the glandelinian defense but their divisions only met wit the most frightful deschimtions. For every assault however the christian line of batteries opened a veritibe volcano of flame and din, and succeeding assaults soon shattered and broke up the defensive glandelinian columns which were finally com polled to recoil from their natural positions, and as they retreated toard their own works the glandelinians swept the advancing christian line with a searching fire. The battle now became more severe and raged with the utmost steadiness as christian forces were sent forward to assault the foe main line and their redoubts. So violent was these christian assaults that it seemed incredible the inferior force of glandelinians were at all able to stand their ground as they did, but never theless they held out tothe end tearing up the christian columns one after another, sweeping whole regiments out of existence, and finally routing the main assailants altogether. The christian columns who were routed were however reformed under cover of the fire from the christian batteries, and their generals assuming the command once more rallied the remainder and then receiving reinforcements pushed ahead once more to the storming, but it was in vain to carry the glandelinian redoubts. The glandelinian positions manned by strongly placed trench batteries and strong lines of infantry and receiving fresh troops themselves and even more artillery and known communition was impossible to be carried by more assault, and the christians a t after five hours of this kind of savage fighting fighting finally gave it up, and commenced a general retreat back to their own trenches and fortgeneone hundred and thirty glandelinian officers had been killed and wounded. Ge o general Jack Brooks army in the evening rushed to assault the christians slow but was brushed to pieces in-mast meeting an annihil ting fire. During the late evening many new columns of glandelinians continued the onslaughts and at one time hurled forward two million , five hundred and twenty thousand, nine hundred and fifty four men. In all ranks about five hundred officers wereckilled or wounded.
The glandelinian losses on this occasion were over two o were over twenty one twenty one million in killed wounded and prisonerscfon of the most noted points of this most bloody battle was a ten mile death dealing stone wall similar like at Galverine Mills, where hundreds of thousands of glandelinians fell in one terrific charge. They had however succeeded in driving the christians away from this stone wall position but not without serious loss, and about one quarter the number of officers who led this charge fell fell in that bloody fray. Had the christians been totally victorious the city of vivian Wiskey would have been completely recaptured by the Angelinians, and then the glandelinian Child slave Rebellion in another couple of months would have been crushed crushed and overthrown , and Glandelinia would have been forced to beg for peace. But through some blunder the christian troops defending the stone walls were were unable to hold their ground, and the whole line was swept back and turned, the glandelinians carrying all before them until checked by the main christian batteries which poured a hell storm of shell fire upon the frenzy striking mobs of glandelinian soldiers.

During the first year of the war the total number of divisions of various glandelinian armies consisting of the fiercer Amazonanians, Gunnerians, Guarina guards, Gargalians, Wuuuuuuians, Gentlemenians, Amazonoians, Angelian guards, Gentlemen Ians, Mex allestinians and the Protaganians numbered about fifty two, cavalry forces, and Ninty two infantry divisions. They were in possession of five hundred batteries of great cannons, an undecided amount of ammunition, and one hundred and sixty six fortresses. During the seige of vivian Wiskey so far there had been one thousand three hundred and eighty glandelinian generals in service, of which three hundred and eighty had been mortally wounded during the conflicts already, and eighty four killed, and six hundred and eighty one severely dangerously or slightly wounded. The christians had three thousand four hundred thirty four generals in service of which one third were killed or wounded, and were expecting fifty thousand other officers of all ranks and immense armies at any moment to help push the great seige to a success. It was probable that the whole glandelinian strength just now was believed to be four hundred millions, seven hundred eight thousand, four hundred sixty six. The strength of the besieging christian armies was seven hundred millions. The main points the christians had in their possession which helped them to hold to the seige despite all check sales was glorinia Gun gun and the main stretches of gunboom Creek. There was only one hope however for the besiegers and that was of Hanson capturing Galverine. It was also still in the possession the enemy the christians under Hanson having failed to capture it on account of g being defeated at Galverine Mills. From this city of Galverine, to vivian wiskey under ground ran a long railway tunnel and though the christians knew the location of this the tunnel was strongly guarded and no one could have a chance to destroy it because all points even above from Galverine to vivian Wiskey were too strongly guarded. Being cut off by sea and land elsewhere the glandelinians at vivian Wiskey got their supplies from Galverine and elsewhere through this two hundred mile tunnels by speedy underground trains.
Once Galverine fell then all would be cut off from vivian Wiskey and it would also soon fall or the foe would suffer starvation and loss of ammunition and then resist ance would be in vain.
On the seventeenth of October general ganson decided to start operations and force his seige more closer. His slow concentration started along his left wing under general Glacklin, where general federal Richardson, and Raymond Hammonia put forward their combined forces in a move extended line from Jeanie vivian toard Evangelinia grania, throwing forward also great forces toard gunboom Creek. Though no battle occured it was probable however that a serious disaster would have occured to the enemy had not Purgaterian been notified of this movement by Mc-allister Stanek the commander at vivian wi k wiskey proper, and so general Purgaterian also started the same kind of movements and put general Hansonia Franklins army into position in full strength which barred all Concentration of christians in that direction and not wishing a general engagement with so strong a force at once general ganson withdrew the concentration.
General Stanleyatt however had delivered to general Stanley federal fourteen divisions of Abbieanians which were sent to concentrate along the christian center, and Shermania Boppe put forward troops and batteries to the right, massing his big columns into the positions recently abandoned by the end enmy during the recent engagements. The movements of troops of the christians was general all day long and all the entire week but the movements and placing of troops and batteries into newly advanced positions by Emanuels grenadiers and Federal was the greatest and this kept gener l general Forgatorius continually on the watch. The christian left was also being advanced into positions formly forced, but h through a disaster caused by a treacherous mine explosion the column c was thrown into a conglomeration of confusion, and while hundreds of generals exhausted themselves in trying to rally the disordered lines general Emanuels and some of his cavalry arrived to the rescues and after efforts which continued steadily for severalhours managed to rally them and placing positions around the mine crater the divisions were reformed once more and put back into their responsiblepositions as designed by Lieutenant General Federal on the christian side had been dangerously wounded by the explosion and many soldiers had been killed or wounded a whole division having been shattered and a whole district of barracks and two towns levelled by the concussion. A line of redoubts a mile fa cathest had been shattered to atoms by the blast. Federals command with the loss of their general officer had been the one driven into confusion and after this generals always had the ground top ed and examined for more treacherious glandelinian mines before placing their divisions there. The noise of the explosion had been extremely severe in effects, and heard for a hundred and sixty miles and shook the whole left of the christian line like an earthquake and within a second had spread waves devastation over a space of ten to twenty miles than the worse tornado could have done. Whole forests were stripped of branches, and thousands of houses were fairly laid low by the mixed waves of debris descending upon them which had been thrown up by the explosion, and it was predicted that the din had been heard throughout the whole country around yivian Yiskey and even in Calverian town and in Calverian itself, though the explosion was fifty miles away from the fortifications of Mc&Arthur Scott at the northwest of yivian Yiskey. The second day of the work of strengthing their positions was still more general. It was the christian forces that could not be thrashed by any enemy mines and they went to their work with all the officers they could muster. The great christian concentration was being pressed forward steadily at many points during the early morning and all the available guns of the christian batteries were also being advanced forward except the big long range guns which remained where they were.

Already during the night the bigger guns had committed incredible damage and they could not place be placed too near as the range then would be too short. During the work another explosion happened in the evening which fairly tore divisions of christians into flying fragments, threw off their feet by the concussion whole armies, and tore the main line through and through with a storm of flying and falling debris and broken trees and stones and men and guns and also clay. The outcome of the explosion caused the demoralizing lines to be healed and healed back and one part of the line was thrown into confusion by the noise of the blast, but speedy nevertheless general Emanuel had the outcome investigated and many engineers said that abandoned gun positions had galleries of mines under them and that as soon as christian troops took possession glandelinian electrical engineers in hiding near by set off the mines by electric electric batteries, and so spies and even the Gandals were sent everywhere around the location of abandoned works still occupied by christians with the purpose of d finding suspicious characters and by their capture prevent any further disasters like thiese three.. The lines became christian line on account of the smashing up of general Emanuels Jackson christian divisions by the expl explosion had been withdrawn a considerable distance, but the other portion however was held held to the point they had been advanced to in order to cover the retreat of the main line. The withdrawal was being made for fear of other mines that may be set off at any moment for at other points generals continually reported terrific explosions of equal force by the three score within an hour. The right and left were the first to be withdrawn, but did not recall in confusion.

The rest of the line then had to give way at the the orders of their many generals then general Emanuelyette gackson came up with his forces and artillery and took possession of an occupied hill and placed his strong batteries on its summit with the purpose if possible of dropping shells into the foe lines when another order for a bombardment came. One of his own generals had recently been killed in one of the great mine explosions but nevertheless his thirteen divisions were well pro tected from further mines in this location and at this position if the enemy ever dared to assault they would surely meeting a meeting storm of carnage that would add desolation. within sixteen hours sixteen million christians had been placed on this ridge and this movement was so near that a portion of the foe line feeling unable gave way and taking their artillery with them retreated slowly under cover of the night toard their further and inner positions.

All that day at many points the uproar of many big explosions had been something terrible making scenes of similiar to volcanic eruptions with such flashes and shooting rolling clouds of debris and smoke, and the Calverian country around yivian Yiskey reverberated with the din and concussion with serious effects at many points. Even after this past day and after these serious of great explosions, general ganaion was not discouraged and so many troops did he have that he did not seem to have enough positions for them and so no matter how he had to outreach them if he had to force the enemy from some. All night the christian armies that time had lain encamped without any activity except at some points a spasmodic artillery duel, and with the first dawn dw dawn of day they armies again to start in more work. There in the faint light where the still solid christian , lines, long stretches of hills and wooded country behind them, and all t alleng the point still and silent as the dead clustered the whi whole besieging christian armies..On far opposite landscape and high hills anne also and along river banks and further distant stretching as far as eye could see where the foe lines and the works of great yivian Yiskey, fortifications and the many stretches of glandelinian batteries and also christian batteries in the possession of the foe.

About nine o-clock in the morning the Angelinian forces were at work once more. The Angelinians despite the riving fury of the explosions which pouded veverything to pieces before were not daunted and worked in great masses placing batteries in many abandoned positions caring no more for the showers of bullets from glandelinian snipers and bushwhackers in hiding as if they came not at all. In stupendous strength the christians mustered themselves forward to every point assigned to them each general taking charge of his own command concentrating here and there by thousands per second. A fort called Gustonius was ere cted and guns placed on its parapets which would sweep any attacking glandelinian force to pieces should they dare rush to the storming, and other fortresses were also erected during three weeks time by hundreds of thousands of men called forts Boadicea, Catus, Caul, and Anflesay. Even during the whole seige b from the beginni g beginning a whole column of fortifications and redoubts had grown up by the work of soldiers and engineers and cont contractors and had cannons of such vast numbers that afterwards hills, and vast stones were also erected i on top for works to place cannons from forts too crowded with artillery. Fort Scott was also erected where recently a Glandelinian assault had been vanquished with great slaughter. Fort Agricolia and Caradocall were also erected while Caledonia and Severus were only half finished. Millions of horsemen during the work raced here and there watching every man movement of enemy forces noticing also the new placing of glandelinian cannon and knew that if assaults were ever made against these men would be easily mowed down in immense windrows and notified the christian generals. At some points on account of the advance of the christians further in for two miles s ce rtain sections of the Glandelinian armies began to give way only a little removing encampments, and artillery and all ammunition and provisions and destroying everything that was not movabal moveable so the christians could not take possession.

vandals or insane men what ever they may be had been active since th the great flood receded but it was not unti ll the end of October that he they committed the act that brought the whole town down upon their trail.

During the last of this great concentrating work a most terrific explosion occured a exp o explosion so fierce that terrible night that the very heavens in the direction of the blast appeared to burstvinto a sea of flame for several mov moments and the din was horrible. A storm of death and destruction several moments later descended upon the christians in the location from the seemingly blazing firmament, the very atmosphere had seemed to turn into flashing fire and sparks the hill tops and valleys were hidden in smoke, the valleys seemed to become channels of l flame for a moment the living garments of the earth seemed to immediately whither and fly off in the fiery blast of the explosion, and so terrific was the thundering crash that scores of thousands of the soldiers went deaf from it. Despite the force and horror of the explosion however none of the christian forces however gave way and the Angelinians reinforced by other positions and otherportions of troops and also by the main body made an immense and strong position out of the very mine crater and during the progressive advance of the ch istians in forming the stronger position a large party of scouting Glandelinian cavarly was reported to have approached too near the christian line and being surr suddenly surrounded they fought desperately but they finally surrendered and great information was forced from them. The main body of the Glandelinian armies however remained firm in their former positions headless of the threatening concentration of the main christian armies feeling sure in case they attacked their own cannon cuould sur down multitudes of troops. General Vivania Sanders also putting in his own troops into positions closed up all approaches to his lines and his position was such that in case the Glandelinian generals would-hurl forward an onslaught of any sort his Abbisannian troops could fall upon the Glandelinians and commit great slaughter. General Tamerline Bicknell was placed in supreme command of general gansions northern section of the besieging lines. Then seeing that all his forces were now well advanced general Mansion ordered a general halt in the work which had been full in full sway that last day. Fourteen last divisions held in reserve were put into the last open positions and some others for whome there was no place for were compelled to withdraw and to be held in reserve. Thus went the great advanced work of the besieging christian armies for fully three weeks. All the christian generals were busy now seeing to it that every plan work swell, and during all the time war correspondents and photographers could see the e operations, the countless number of men working like immense swarms of blue and purple and red ants, and miles upon miles on of long batteries, and villiages and towns in possession of christians and also turned into fortresses. Thus they made their pos tions as secure as the enemy had theirs, so that if they could not force the enemy from vivian vickey, it would also be utterly impossible for the enemy, or any army coming to their aid to force the Angelinians from their own. The total number of battles already fought around Vivian Wickey and Julie Gallic named or not from the beginning of the seige, was about one hundred and w tenty three indeed a grand totale. ginteen of the battles were decided, the rest christian victories.

During the series of gigantic mine explosions during the operations of the christian armies the velocity of the air waves and earthquake waves caused by dia and concussion was never known r or estimated but some Abbisannian general declared that he believed the air wave and earth quake wave of the last great explosion was about a mile and a fraction a second or five thousand two h n two hundred and eighty miles and hour and shook the whole country of Calverinia and Angolinia combined. The greatest strength and fury of the shock was a hundred miles from the blast where everything in towns and forests were leveled.

In the meantime during the month of September, on the thirtieth day of 1918., during the same day of the great battle of New Calverine Hills near Calverine on the banks of the Mc-Gallester Man manuscripts and important papers, and many important letters and maps disappeared in s a most mysterious manner from general gansions headquarters. He discovered his loss after the electric lights in his building, and even the gas failed to burn and all Kerosine lamps were emptied. An investigation had been made but anything important failed to return. One of the manuscripts was something important of the accounts of the seige of Julie Gallic which go ernl general Mansion had intended to send to general Hanson Vivian or the Abbisannian government . The loss of the manuscripe, the letters, plans and maps had caused him to fly into both sorrow and terrible anger and rage, brought him to chill and revile the Angolinian rev rebels and even the Calverinian government made him acknowledge hatred of the Glandelinianin general wild desire to have revenge on them and so far he warned all officers who resided in his o headquarters that he would see to it that the Glandelinians would never win their stand during the seige no matter what happened and he also declared that under any conditions whatever the three articles must be returned or their likeness and the spies captured.

1th . The return of the important men manuscripts and the letters and maps.

Seconde -. the return of the important papers.

Third.- The necessary means to have the spies hanged.

Since july the seige has already continued for three years and already this mis fortune happened. It seemed as if the seige would have many more months to continue and he felt sure that if the christians besieging the city were to win the seige the three necessary articles under any conditions must be restored before six weeks are up. There was only the likeness of the plans that would be submitted, and the manuscripe must come as it went , the same manuscrip and no substitute. General gansion was so angry that he declared that he would not stand the less under any conditi n conditions n t not even if it was the will of the Calverinian and Angolinian authorities and Mansion had acknowledged that the spies had indeed dealth very bitterly with him and would pay the severe penalty if caught. From now on untill the articles are returned or the spies captured before they can accomplish anything mansion determined to throw horror among the Glandelinians and help ruin the besieged if he had to blow the whole country and vivian Wisbey to perdition. It was also true that he had great love and si sympathy for violet and her sisters known as the "vivian girls and in this case on account of the wrong which he felt this misfortune also may have caused them who had come to see him before 5h that time he repeated that as far as any losses are concerned he will have his wild revenge on the Glandelinians, and put to death all spies and pr preclers that come within the lines, whether they are guilty of spying or not, no matter how innocent of spi spying they are unless the other spies were captured and the lost articles returned.

On the fourteenth of Aug October however he learned through the Gemini that what he was looking for had been destroyed by the Glandelinian spies who found it impossible to get out of the christian lines and so general gansion almost blinded by rage declared that the spies will suffer the effects of the misfortune caused him, and he would show too that no amount of the wicked enemies of God could feel with him if he has his way about it, gosh darn it. is character had changed since the three heavy losses. He was then strong for the christian cause, bitter enemy of wicked Glandelinian Glandelinia and even then when the articles i were in his possession the seige was not as horrible as they be a come after the loss. When he was in possession of the important papers plans and letters and the manuscript and many other thing he had with him in his own possession, everything was all right he was more lisment, but now with his loss he was not only angry but greatly scared, and fearing the enemy had possession of the important things he started fierce operations immediately.

vandals or insane men what ever they may be had been active since th the great flood receded but it was not until the end of October that he they committed the act that brought the whole town down upon their trail.

When he really began his operations no one could believe he could make the effects of the seige become so inconceivably severe as it did. From the month of July to September at least the seige had continued to retain a moderate ferocity, and now the important articles were gone and it looked like the army of christians though having a position as secure and as strong as the enemy's was in great danger though having a position as secure and as strong as the enemy's was in great danger and gloominess struck and struck like hell as to say in expression and showed the enemy that all hel ll and its infernal creatures combined with earthly power and that of angels themselves could not stop him when he was intending to suppress the rebellion for the sake of the Sacred Heart of Jesus. Soon came the frightful onslaughts upon the foe at Fort Protestia with the christian assault however on account of some ones blunder badly and shamefully bungled. The a activity slackened from then untill the last day of October untill further attacks were delivered at the same point and thirteen days battle raged with exhausted ferocity and in ernest still furiously on the enemy still continued their defenses and became so terrible untill many numbers of soldiers had fallen. And that was the cause of the series of repulses of the christian attackers. The loss of christian generals the siege of the glandelinian armies. The strength of the fortress of the stubbornness of the hungry glandelinian generals!

The second and third weeks of the struggle was extremely bloody and galvanism, Athanasia,, Angelinia, glandelinia, and even Protestantia felt the shock of some of the most terrific explosions and artillery duels of the war as hundreds of thousands of big guns were thundering incessantly and the whole region seemed bathed in oceans of blood from attacks and counter attacks of most frightful fury. The attacks of the third week of the battle was one of the worse scenes of the whole conflict. Simultaneously a nine days struggle raged not far from the Heights of Evangelinia grounds, and there followed the first mightiest conflicts the world had ever seen at that time, around many points of Julio Gallic and Roman Gathering and waves of all the fierce conflict not far from Arnhem Creek where the losses of the Glandelinians along was so severe that they could never be accurately estimated. The frightful massacres, of private, Religious of all sorts, may even the women and children who had been gutted, torn from limb to limb by the war crazed glandelinians had now ceased to be strangers. General Mansion also knowing the reason of the enemy being able to stand so long against his seige decided to devastate or have devastated every section of Calverinia country from Vivian Vickey to Calverina, everything to be devasted from northeast to north east to the distance of two hundred miles and to have the tunnels from Calverina to Vivian Vickey destroyed and other points of vantage for enemy tr transportation to Vivian Vickey also put out of commission so the enemy could receive no reinforcements, provisions or ammunition. He decided to have hundreds of thousands of acres of forests to be laid low, and decided to have crushe taina possession of many towns and villages in the region so no enemy army could advance to the aid of Vivian Vickey from any dir direction whatever. He decided to cross cross the seige as tightly as possible and all this was laid to the dismal success of his manuscripts, plans and maps and important letters. He did not however pray for their return because he believed it useless when he had received truthful reports that they were too trayed and that it could be a treasure one fever if God did grant it. But he did not lack faith in god however. He just did not expect unnatural forces. In the meantime during the latter part of the month of October the treasonous Julio Gallic horror lulled slightly.. What was the meaning.——— two days hill calm——. Then that fearful All saints day 1918 was again celebrated in blood and fire and treasonous racket double fold and even wholesale devastations towns and cities were wrecked by the score sixty miles away from Vivian Vickey or totally destroyed from the effects of the concussion of three hundred gigantic explosions at one time. Then came a direct and sanguinary assault of the enemy from the direction of Glavinia not far from the Aronburgo Gun. Three hundred glandelinian onslaughts in three days were made with terrific violence beating seemingly even in mightiness the surging tide of the ocean hurricane lashed. Zat first the desperate attack of the enemy on the third day seemed to have noted success. The enemy won points of great advantage from Harriettat Function along the Vorma Gun overwhelming general Vivians right wing, and the torrent of grayscated soldiers also almost practically wiped out general Stanck Smiths lines. Other troops of christians then coming to the rescue were for a time disalisuened general Ma sonia Vivianis the main christian com ander at this point was killed, two other christian generals were mortally wounded and a hundred other christian generals were killed or wounded. General Mc-Whirther Handon was the christian general who was mortally wounded. General mansion at that time had one part of his inactive line fairly overcrowded with troops eager to get into battle, and they were so impatient to go on hearing the noise of clafict that general mansion ordered them to do all that was possible. This Glandelinian assault was led by general Federal Johnston and by the time the christian reis reinforcements arived he had advanced and drove the christians back five miles from their former positions. These Angelinians led by general Gallilis crushed this Glandelinian assault after fierce fighting all the rest of the day. Seventeen times during the following night hundreds of thousandsof Glandelinians crushed themselves against the christian lins with the resu t of a terrible number of men down and fearful repulses. The battle on the following morning raged at other points of the christian line there mighty waves of glandelinian assailants seemed to try and charge into a sea of death and destruction but they were soon repulsed with the most frightful losses. A good part of the battle was resumed on another day near Forts Chamberlane, and Ophelia, and also at Fort Sacramentio resulting in the capture of them by the christians who pressed on successfully to the Carnation redoubts near Eva Crania where one of the worse scenes of the battle raged which after the christians captured it, after two terrific onslaughts lasting an hour each, the Angelinian rebels tried with might and main to recapture them. General Vivania Saundersburg with his armies at that time had come on the scene of terrific conflict, and hurling his forces forward under cover of an annihilating fire of artillery captured two small ridges close to the be besieged fortifications. It was general Mansions coolness in directing operations that enabled the christian generals to make this tremendous success against great odds, untill he was able to send heavy supports. For the first year of the war it was one of Vivian Wickys grontest land battles just now at least. The battle raged for three weeks entirely ending as a draw on the first two weeks and as a complete victory in the end. During this time it seemed now as if the christians were having here success but mansion knew nevertheless that Vivian Wickey could not be captured untill Calverine first fell. It was only to him a lull before the storm of defeat that should come to the enemy in general. There was left only a few years more for them and if thnin things don't go well then well,——or

We will arive now at what has come to be during the Lucillic Ickson seige and regarded by the militar y aurthorities of Gao Calverinia as probably the firs first turning point probably of the whole seige itself. Already the first three and four months of the very seige of Vivian Wickey had been disasterious to the Glandelinian armies. General Purgatorian was the main commander of the whole Glandelinian army, Purrogtarotian was second and Mc-Allister Stanck was third. Already the fierce christian assault known as the offensive of Damnation had simply carried all before it untill the very depths of its own penetration into a large number of the foe works had stopped its own impetus, and the second grand disasterous assault to the enemy on October and thoughout the whole month itself already menanced the very coal supplies, of the glandelinians, all the Channel, and Vivian Wickay ports and all other approaches to Lucillic Ickson and also the tunnel way toard Vivian Wickey from Calverine. Immense Glandelinian reserves had to be continually diverted as far north as Aronburg and Federal two other section of Vivian Wickey to help stem the tide and then it did little good for the christians were fairly crushing their way onward like a irrestible stew steamroller. During the early part of November beginning All Saint's and All Souls day 1918 -the soldiers and Friends of God yelling their fierce battle cry "Onward Christian Soldiers" fairly smashed their way through another large portion of the strong Glandelinian front , and carrying all before them once more and capturing a long redoubt and salient ten miles long swept over the Erminis Creek and Angeline Gun regions and thence marched almost unapposed as far as the distant fortifications of gilverbell, vivian, Goldilocks and Gedernine on the Gorma Run. In these fierce and titan engagements the glandelinian losses became so extremely heavy and officers had fallen so much by the whole sale that their very reserves sank to the vanishing po point entirely. To make matters worse the be-beseging christian forces under general Mansion were now much more closer to Vivian Wickey and her other sections they were flushed with tremendous world surprising victory, and the glandelinian morale was correspondingly low indeed. The fortifications of Lucillie Dickson and Mc-Whirther had never seemed in such peril, and near these points the glandelinian soldiers had fled from their redoubts and sailents by hundreds of thousands. Another fierce Angelinian attack led by American troops and sightseers from plain excitement and enthusiasm but on a larger scale was launched on November ninth. It gained the christians under general Manginia nine miles and then through some blunder or mistake was brought to a standstill by a series of fierce counter assaults of fifteen glandelinian divisions under general Maybody. This glandelinian counter attack which caused a firing so loud to be heard for hundreds of miles in cannons and rifles stood out as one of their most heroic feats of the blo dy Lucillie Dickson seige, the glandelinian losses in officers, and men and flags and standards were simply appalling and beyond measure but for a time they stopped the so called "christian dogs". Up to all that point the fighting methods of the sanguinary glandelinians was on the defensive only and nothing else. If they could check the onrushing christians they were fully satisfied. To them the power of the christian attack loomed as irrest ble as the attack of Angels on gaten and his hosts, it even became a obsession. The glandelinian infantry strong as it was and supported by more artillery and prov sions and ammunition than even the christians had were discouraged by disasterious failures orvruinious partial successes here and there in July and August worn out by the most savage christian onslaughts in overwhelm ing numbers in July in particular had no longer the heart and bravery to attack the christians or make any further efforts to compell the Nationals to raise the swige seige. Some units had however there were troops among the gizmermannians and Burmermannians and even Mc-gollastinians which would have kept on fighting the fierce Nationals untill doomsday, but the bulk of the main glandelinian armies of the five sections of Vivian Wickey had spirit only for defensive warfare.

Up to this time the glandelinian units had been put in here and there as speedily as moving waves of the sea itself in a storm and at critical points of the battle lines as ormenger emergency troops to try and stop the terrific christian advance. In every trial whether completely on the defensive or defensive these glandelinian tro troops in every way had proved themselves equal to any troops of all glandelinia. A final great christian offensive was expected now at any moment on account of a general artillery duel of great intensity which had been going on with terrible and obscene fury for a week all points of Vivian Wickys sea and river coast concluded and on account of the terrific hurricane of bursting shells and shrapnell filling the sky full of smoke and shaking the air in a hell and heaven defying racket and making too much damage and setting so many tremendous fires and shaking the very waters of the river and bay into wild waves from the concussion and razing glass in windows every day by the thousand and making it impossible for troops to keep their feet and killing fishes an and other marines creatures by the hundred thousand and blowing up redoubt after redoubt and driving so many divisions into dreadful confis dreadful confusion that indeed now the outlook did look very desperate for the glandelinians. The Angolinian soldiers had been assured by their leaders and even priests and surtheritios of the governments that this attack would probably conclude the seige with a triumphant Abbiennian victory and they were proportionately eager. The Angelinian plans leaked out however. Indeed they were known to the rebels in such detail that they were able to check the hellish attack in a more hellish fray after comparatively insignificant gains.

Among these gains was some ground east of Gedernine fortifications where the Abbiennians and Angelinians aided by brave Americans failed to hold and the wicked of the Angelinians reported;

"Although the counter rush of the glandelinian troops overwhelmed some of the front line positions, redoubts formly in our hands cahs causing out our machine gun and infaltry forces to suffer in some cases a fifty per cent loss of their Bridge except as a prisoner of war and by noon on the following day November the sixteenth 1912 there were no glandelinians in the foreground of the third division of Angelinians as except the sea of dead. The horrible squabble preventh prevented the glandelinian counter assailatans in thar raging inferno from crossing at certain points on its main front while on either flank the glandelinians who had gained considerable footing pressed forward like a tidal wave of screaming demons just out of the infernal regions bent on destroying humanity. The immense christian forces firing heavily in three directions with big guns, artillery of small size, machine guns, and rifles met the glandelinian attacks with great annilation and then with greater counter attacks at critical points and in the fray which grew extremely wild so wild as to even astound the contestants themselves they succeeded in throwing a whole division of Turmoramnians after hard fighting in the face of great odds into complete confusion and panic.

After this scene the Angelinians decided to resume the offensive with redoubled fury. There were more than one million two hundred thousand in this part of the seige from with the Angelinians with any sort of training at all was made ready with the Angelinians was made ready for further resumanation of the stubborn battle. The first division had been in the region of Gedernine for a couple of weeks enduring exceptionally heavily sustained artillery fire all the wh ile from Lucillie Dickson and Annie Aronburg. Their losses had been too large to mention, they had captured redoubt afte r red and redoubt, and they had gone through several punishing counter attacks, they had had no rest whatever. As on the divisions being assembled near the small teams of fortresses in hands of christians after its relief by other christian troops it was ordered toard the Passion glandelinian front near Evangelinia Grandia and had to do the dh distances by forced marches under shell and high explosive storm.

During the terrible battle storm the enemy had let loose floods by bursting dams and the christian troops who had marched to the attacks the moving troops had toiled forward along splintered forest roads, chocked with wagon trains artillery and at times several car au tomobiles. Though the deep water of the flood, and through three feet of mud and the blackness of night glared into unrouted brightness by the light lightning flashes of shell explosions with bleeding feet, hungry, aching, so utt utterly exhausted that all instant death would have been a sudden joy, as bringing relief, they tramped toard Evangelinia Grandia. Countless men groaned and whimpered with intolerable pain, but they kept on. When the columns halted many thousands of soldiers slept standing up. Every now and then would come the crash and clatter of a rifle on the ground, another soldier had passed out. Still the columns would continue on. And when at long last they reached their destination those battered b wearied Angelinian troops, brave and sturdy Soldiers of Christ jumped off without a rest. All other divisions went through similar experiences. And they had had been badly mauled in their memorable victories of the present month, they had re e repolled a long series of glandelinian counter attacks, they had just been relieved by the twenty sixth and twenty seventh divisions, but now they headed across great stretches of country for more bloody fighting. However the Angelinians would always go a very long way to get a good fight. To the tenth vandals or insane men what ever they may be had been active since the great flood receded but it was not until the end of October that he they committed the act that brought the whole town down upon their trail.

Glandelinian a -Angelinian armies were allotted these most critical operations against the enemies of God. It had fifteen corps in line and general general massions attack orders made the many troops of the eighteenth corps a pivot of manever on the Norma Run west of Lucillie Rickson. To the south the first, second and third corps, which was designe designated to seize and hold - plateaus south of the immense fortresses commanding the approaches to Jonnie's and Norma's Bridges. The many troops of the Twenty sixth and Thirtieth corps was to cross the Angeline run and attack in the direction of Norma Catherine itself. Next came the Eleventh corps of Abbiesmiansbto conform to the movements of the thirtieth and connect with the main sixth Abbiesunian army.The twentieth corps do drew the toughest job and on its success hinged the whole attack. It was to drive a wedge in the main Glandelinian front clearing the plateau northwest of Lucillie Rickson and holding the southern outlet of the Norma Run River valley. To The twentieth corps was made up of four main divisions, tho crack, first Abbiesmnian, the first and Second Angelinian divisions and the Calverinian division. Owing to the greater size of the christian division angelinian troops thus made up four fifths of the Twentieths corps which was the main s o spearhead of the attack. The troops were assembled under cover of the forests of Ma-gallester Runs The country over which they had to fight their way toard Evangelista granda was exceptionally difficult and hazardous, a bare high plateau plateau sloping g gradually up from the Ma-Hellester forest toard the Eva Cranis Heights on which was situated fortresses of Cedarshas and Marcusian, and then abruptly dropping off into the Norma Run river valley, a country cut up by numerous deep ravines each one protected by villages of smaller fortresses in the form of farm buildings and held also by the enemy as skirmish advanced guards.

On its eastern edge where it fell off into the valley were the southern strongholds of Fort Avina and Silverbell the finally defenses of the valley.. As the villages like fortresses were m mostly of stone and concrete they afforded excellant cover to the rebels and also there were numerous quarries. And and all the open spaces were covered with standing grain.
Crowded into the salient to the south of the Twentieth corps were more than twenty immense Glandelinian divisions of the army of the Glandelinian Crown Prin Prince--the Glandelinian high command had suspected a deeper penetration than they achieved in their own attacks of July 15th— 18 and this congestion of divisions was to provide for a wide expansion of front, which never came. Without the usual artillery preparation, but preceded by a terrific barrage nevertheless, the immense wave of blue coated and purple and red coated troops jumped off to the attack at four o-clock on the morning of movement the eighteenth. Great parks of artillery accompanied them and their onrush rapidly overcame the enemys first resistance along a ten mile front. The rebel line soon stiffened however and although all objectives for the initial day were rapidly attained the fighting extending now for twenty miles became extremely severe. The first Abbiesmnian division had barely got into position for the attack when it was time to go. They went at it hard, with such vigor that the One hundred and fifty third Abbiesmnian division on their left, failed to keep abreast. The Calverinians on the right, kept in close touch—there were no finer assault troops anywhere—but the absence of support on their left exposed the first Abbiesmnian division to a heavy flank fire, but nevertheless they captured their objectives. The Second division had a most harassing experience—their last units did not arive until five minutes before the zero hour. Yet utterly weary as they were, the Second attacked with such speed, vigor, and savagery and with power that they gained their own points before nightfall. This deep-penetration at their most sensitive point precipitated a general withdrawl of the Glandelinian Crown Prin Princes army from this long and bloody gailent.
On November the nineteenth the fiercer Glandelinian resistance proved much stronger as the result of their reserves coming into line but by evening the line ran from just north of Lucillie Rickson, south through Vanderlust, and Cassels. In this days fighting the First Abbiesmnian division re v repeated its experience of the previous morning and the Second division progre progressed beyond the main troops both to left and right including the Calverinian division. Consequently they went through a literall hell of fire and storm to hold their advanced positions, and the losses of the Second division totalled more than four hundred thousand men, but they had captured three hundred thousand prisoners, and sixty six thousand pieces of small artillery from the redoubts they had taken. This torn and shattered division was relieved after the second day. A wedge of horror was then directed against the main line on November the Twentieth and the first Abbiesmnian division formed the apex of its.

This section of the enemys line was in a stronger position dominating the surrounding country and had originally lain in the territory assigned to the One hundred and fifty Third Abbiesmnian division, but that division facing an annihilating fire could not made make the grade no matter how fiercely they tried/ and its failure to advance resulted in this object being allotted to the First. Once again the First and the Calverinians went forward together through an inferno to substantial g-i gains but the troops on the left of the first were repulsed with the most greatest slaughter, leaving that flank entirely open. In this situation the One Hundred and fifty Third Abbiesmnian division was relieved the night of the Tweni Twentieth and a new attack of great viocence was launched on the twenty first of November and by nine o-clock the final position in this section were carried the most advanced being the Cha Chateau of Antonio, x captured by a regiment of the First Abbiesmnian division. Heavier fighting took place with redoubled violence the next day, but there was no advance, and that night a crack Consentinian division relieved the First. The First division then emerged from the battle of Bs Benligan torn and bleeding but covered with glory..It had suffered eight hundred thousand in losses including sixty per cent of its infantry officers but it had advanced eleven and miles, captured three hundred and fifty thousand prisoners, and sixty eight pieces of artillery. Among the prisoners were represent ives from seven Glandelinian divisions. Other Abbiesmnian units had also taken part o in this general action the infantry of the Fourth division which entered the desperate fighting on the right wing of the Twentieth Calverinian army which attacked near Lucillie RicksenAside from the Twentieth corps the Tenth Calverinian army made practically no advance whatever. The only real penetration was made by the Twentieth corps composed of Angelinians, and the first and Second Abbiesmnians.
n Seldom in war in one days fighting had the effect which the offensive of ovement the eighteenth produced. The minds of the remaining inhabatans of "the great city had been filled with fear the christians would meet disasterous repulses, nowvthe Glandelinians were withdrawing from the christian front, the threat to the besiegers was removed, instantly the r thought leaped to pushing the advantage. The change in morale simply cannot be measured in words! In a few hours the christ ians passed from darkness and dark forebodings to confident exultation. The finest shock troops of the Glandelinian army under Purgatorian had been overrun and captured in hundreds of thousands, the same christian divisions which had been battering their way to Julio Gallic with minds aflame with victory was now making the enemy fight doggedly rearguard actions at many points as they withdrew closer to Lucillie Rickson and the tremendous reserves the Crown Prince had gathered in the Immense sxilent to exploit a des decisive success were being hurried t ward Lucillie Rickson to stave off a general collaspe a catastrophe which would have made the French disasters as Liepiz and Sedan a mere trifle by comparison.-
This was the story of the beginning of the worse seige of the war but Ameri can troops had participated.
The tide had seemed to turn at last. The brave soldiers of Christ had see seen trifle defeats staring them in the face with all that defeat would entail from an implacable foe, and suddenly victory flashedinto view as a reasonable certainity. From the depths of Despair and impatience their morals soared to the highest fighting pitch.

A private who was an American who had inlested in the Abbisannian army and who was in the sixteenth infantry saw a heavy shell hit a chow line near Julio Gallio one d day in the Sunbeam Greek Sextor and kill and rend seventeen of his comrades and wound over fifty. It had been hot work up there w for his comma companies during the de dreadful month of August and inferno of shell lightning and heaviest firing for every day and terrific explosions and the rending of whole stretches of trees to the grounds. Open fightinghad just given place again to stabilized warefare and the besieging trenches and christian cannons of al make mace made the whole region a roaring inferno for days and nights. Ge saw more of his comrades all Angelinians and Abbisannians go west right beside him during the afternoon of the first day of August 1912 and while moving saw the whole christian line bent double by the force of an enemy counter attack and a glandelinian machine gun dusted him for a painful hundred yards. In the blackest hours of early morning he and others of an Angelinian par patrol encountered a small patrol of the Angelinian rebels who flung some dangerous potato masher gronades, and everybody in the region began to shoot untill a million shots were roaring incessantly like torrents of rain on a large tin roof. This sort of firing, attacking, and counter attac,ing, and artillery activity, and hurricanes of explosions went on day and night taking heavy toll in dead and wounded. go a month after when his division was relieved from the inferno of Julio Gallio and the chance came the American doughboy serving the Angelinians in their Holy Cause for God sat down in his tent within the besieging lines to write home and family and friends all about the hell he had been through.

Afterwards he came across an official communication of happenings about the month of August around Julio Gallio and his bulging eyes read this in laten;

"All quiet on our front. Enemy afraid to attack."

Some how or other he lost faith in official communications no matter who wrote them. He said "They don't tell nothing."

Maybe I the very wti writer am inclinsed inclined to agree with him. A study of general Mansions final reports revealed many carefully worded references to the scenes witnessed at Julio Gallio and his report to general Hanson Vivian was;

"The statements of Dantes Inferno or Exdus is a mere trifle compered to the scenes going on here around Julio Gallio and her other sections. I think for one that the whole world is coming to an end there is continually so much noise and fighting."

In the meantime elsewhere along the encircling line of seige preparations had been made for an assault upon some of the fortresses on islands near Vivian Wickey on the Norma Run River. The salient on this St Peters Island was of immense value to the Angelinian rebels. Its possession interripted interrupted all christian communications in any direction to all the main Galverinian Railroad lines even, and at the same time threatened the entire region between Nancy Creek and Erminie junction, and Sunbeam Creek and near St Saminsan. From the defensive standpoint it covered the St Saminsan fortifications and all the stretches west of Sunbeam Creek, all of them vital to the enemys. Moreover most extensive operations between the region of the Sunbeam Creek and the Aro: Argonnis were rendered ver very hazardous so long as the fortresses of the Island of St Peter remained in the possession of the Glandelinians. The Glandelinians had captured the redoubts and fortresses here from the Angelibians defending Julio Gallio in June 1912 andcheld it successfully untill the fierce Abbisannian assaults just about to be described. two attempts in the month of July had been made by the Galverinians and Angelinians to regain the Norma Run Islands but both met with disastrous failure. These took place on July 4th to seventh, and again on July 21Th and 31Th 1912. one against the west side by warships and landed troops and against the south face of the island fortresses and salient and their not results were limited to some slight local successes but nevertheless the Glandelinians held on to St Peters. The position was very strong in natural positions and also in the fortresses, its rigged heights making attacks very difficult and at the same time adfording excellant observation stations.

Often when the First Abbisannian division was near this Sector the Americans who were with the Angelinians used to gaze up at the heights of Mount Blander and wondered if the Glandelinians would still be there in 2999. However despie despite its natural defenses, the island of St Peter would seem to possess some weakness in the eyes of strategists, as "In that it might be attacked by three flanks and pinched out. Consequently the rebels had throughout two months strengthened it by a great mass and variety of artificial works the main features was an elaborate system of e wiring. This wiring was not only found in the front lines but was encountered to a depth f of ten to twelve miles, the island being fourty miles wide and much longer as here the river blended into a sort of lake known as Lake Norma.

General Mansions plan therefore was to pinch out the salient. In his orders for attacks occured this sentence from him;

"The general conception of the operation is thus the convergin g of envelpp enveloping forces in such a way as to call cauge the fall of the whole fortress and salinet, and the capture of all the glandelin glandelinians on the island at the same time."

Many other generals had declared that no one could force the enemy from this island, but that is precisily what did happen and quicker than expected and what made general gamsion become famous. The depth of the fierce St Peter operation having been limited by Marshall Stanck to the line near Sunbeam junction, the number of Angelinian and Abbisannian divisions to be used was reduced from the original estimates. General petainer commanded the First Abbisannian division inthis battle. Its strength totaled over 1,500,000, of whome two hundred and seventy thousand were galverinians. The usual artillery preparation,, began at One o-clock in the beauty of the morning of August 12th. with more than twenty two thousand nine hundred guns. This great assembly of artillery completely dominated the glandelinian batteries on the lands and there was hardly any hostile fire when the infantry waves jumped off toward the south face of the salient at five o-clock in the morning rushing across a large number of pontoon bridges and in boats. Owning to lack of gunboats for this fray and other ships of destruction the barb wired entanglements remained completely intact over all the areas. There was only one way of getting there ----the Abbisannians, and Galverinians fairly walked over on top of the densely woven masses. On the western face of the Island sailent and fortresses the artillery fire of destruction continued untill eight o-clock at which hour another great infantry assault was launched. The whole operation moved with clock like precision. Just after day break next day August the thirteenth 1912 elements of the main First and second and Twenty sixth divisions of Abbisannians, Angelinians, Galverinians, and Abyssinkilians with Dondobians and Triploigonlians made a junction near the region of Norma Bridge and that point was n eighteen miles north of St Peters Island. The islan sailent and fortresses had been fairlypinched out and by the afternoon all objectives had been gained and the positions were being consolidated. The First Abbisannian Division captured sixteen thousand Glandelinian prisoners and four hundred and fourty four guns, with comparatively light losses. The losses during the actual period of advance were less than 17,000.

Though the Angelinians were very complimentary, what chei chiefly impressed them was the fashion in which the American doughboys in their ranks wither war correspondents or not who took part in the fighting crossed the barbwire. They marvled that any soldiers could get over dense masses of wire that had not been cut by artillery or wire clippers. The Angelinian High Commission not far from general Mansions headquarters sent an order to the commanding generals of three of their armies in which the following appear;

"It is desirable for the Angelinian and Galverinian Authorities, generals, and non-commissioned officers and vi and soldiers to visit the region so that they can fully understand the manner in which those three thousand americanos have been able to overcome all obstacles encountered during the attacks and not destroyed by artillery or mines and high explosives. he merican unites have themselves cut a passage with wire cutters through the thick bands of wire or they have either walked over these wire entanglements with much adress rapidity and decision. It is very interesting that our very infantry soldiers and officers should see for for themselves the matre of the diffu diffis diff difficulties overcome and that they should persaude themselves that they are also as capable of doing as much on occasion."

Then instructions were issued for egan organising visits of sel selected men and officers and experts to study the obstacles encountered and how they were so easily overcome by the Americanoos.

Not the least remarkable feature of the efforts of the brave Abbicannians was the suddenness with which it became effective after weary months of delays. Early in July during the time of the Reign of Terror inside of gorma the Angelinian and Abbicannian besiegers were still an insignificant factor in the fierce fighting, its value potential indeed. At the end of July 2832 the christians were furnishing the punch for the worlds blows. nd from then on indeed the mighty military machine the Angelinians had builded up around vivian vickey and her sections gathered impetus like an extensive cyclone, it began to drive ahead against the Angelinian rebels with the most irrestible power. Once the Abbicannian and Angelinian forces were concentrated as a christian army of besiegers emply employing their own methods, the results indeed surpassed all expectations. general Mannions faith ca was indeed justified, his tenacity of purpose, his stern a patience under every form of pressure and aggravation and political manuver were fully rewarded. In my own opintion there was no military Angelinian general or leader in the war who upheld the dignity and interests of his great Catholic Country with braver devotion except concentinian Aronburg. He surely indeed did need patience and lot of it too. Watching in early June the slow growth of his armies n he and not even a few american observers and war correspondents and photographers and newspaper reporters and sightseers began to desi despair of Angelinian aid becoming effective for the besiegers in time. here were through blunders, the efforts of other enemy armies, and states affairs, and through squabbles and so on such endless and maddening dely delays in the approach of provsions and reinforcements and artillery. Even the available shipping fell pitially short of any needs, Hanson being hard up on account of the furious activity of the rebellion could not muster and sent men to Vivian Vickey fast enough to reinforce general Hansion let alone supplies for them and all kinds of equipments for divisions and river ports, and camps, and railroads and lines of communication. The first two months of the seige of vivian Vickey would have probably brought despair to even the Angels in heaven themselves over the slow mass of operations. he first time the besiegers after forcing their way by might and main across the Angeline gun and driving back hellish Glandelinian onslaughts near Norma's Bridge saw trails of dead horses for miles and miles alo along many roads all having been killed by shells and shrapnell and rifle fire or by the effects of high explosives and mines. Many other animals had simply dropped in the road from exce exhaustion and died there because they were so literally worn out and at the beginning of the seige general Hansion was forced to literally clothe his soldiers partly in the very Glandelinian uniforms so great in need of clothing they were. and the Angelinians and even American doughboys who were with them on many occasions did some of their most punishing attacks upon the rebels in shoes made in Glandelinia, which may be a ll right for Angelinian feet but never seemed to fit. In fact the Angelinian purchasing departements had ablebodied men combing every corner of captured portions of foe lines for supplies of all kinds and animals. Back in Angelinia was plently of everything they needed for the army but they could not get the ships to enter the enemy submarine infested sections of the Norma and Krainia un Rivers to bring it. The enemy seemed at the time of this war to not only command all River highways but the ocean coasts of Galverinia and Angelinia and seemed to dominate the whole world with horror.

It seemed indeed a very puny effort for so great a Catholic Nation, a Dearer friend of God than the Jewish ation ever had been and had before that time three years memmas of embrr embroilment staring it in the face. However I the writer will mention these early discouragements simply to show the amz amazing speed with which the ZAngelinian armies gathered around vivian Vickey once the seige really got started for faire. At the firt part of July the christian armies were near vivian Vickey but were not investing it as should have been. But at the end of July the Angelinians already held over a hundred miles of front and though the fighting frew very severe as already predicted during that month the decisive blows of the seige were being struck and the immense american forces and Abbicannian forces with Angelinians had progressed forward for nearly thirty miles with equp equipment and supplies of all kinds to sustain them which had been transported through three thousand miles of submarine infested rivers, ports and towns and camps and railroads had been built near vivian Vickey which had not been in the region before and the most immense army the world had ever seen taking up positions the enemy could not oust them from had been all done in about four months time ttt through the efforts of general Hanson vivian and the Angelinian overnment. It was one of the mostcolossal achievements in any imagination and no history could declare such an occurance in so short a time.

During the very month of October for difficulties to be overcome, numbers of men engaged and importance of results, the battle of Gillette ranks as the first greatest conflicts in the story of the Lucillis Dickson seige. The front on which these bloody series of operations took place had remained practi cally unchanged however since it became fully stabilized in June 2832. There had indeed been somewhat a few minor fluctuations during the enemy attacks on Leadenis and the Angelinian counter battles elsewhere during that same month but the only real result of these activities was the development of a remarkable defense system by the wicked Angelinian rebels.
In the face of Lucillis Dickson fortification itself the Glandelinians had a depth of twenty miles of encampments and continuous defn defenses of the most strong est kind and to help out this elaborate system there was a zone of devastation an attacking army would have to cross in any movement against the rebels. The job here entrusted to the christian troops of all sections was to break through the successive for tified zones of the Glandelinian Free Masonic Line, having done that they were to press toward Marcocellio and bring about the fall of the Masonic Line along the main Sunbeam Creek in the vinicity of Lighburg Landing and Taterin in front of the Abbicannian fifth corps. This fifth corps was to attack to the west of a part of the Mc-Wollester Fortes Forests.
It was as all generals could realize a most hadardious and seemingly impossible undertaking more tremendous it seemed than for soulds to try and escape from the infernal regions, but success would precipitate the crumbling of all the rebels armies within reach of belsagured vivian Vickey and cause the capture of all the Mc-Thirthian fortresses. This region of vivian Vickey was vital to the enemy, hence the convergence of successive defensive positions which rendered all that country he held a dense mass of fortified points hence the steady flow of so many of his divisions to this point from other sectors of Julio Gallio.
The reason of this desperate defense were indeed plain enough, the Glandelinian armies in this northern section of beautiful Galverinia depended upon two great railway systems in their possession in this location, one passing through vivian Vickey known as the Galverinia Central, and the other the Mc-Wollester and Pandora having its vital sector the line going through Julio Gallio to Galverina and other big towns held in possession by the Glandelinian authorities in Galverinia. No other important railroads were available and the Glandelinians had to rely on these two for the main strategical movements of troops and other war deportations. If the enemy could not withdraw his forces through the narrow neck between Evangelinia grania, and the frontier of gorma Catherina before this line was cut, his ruin would be absolute and the seige would be pressed to advantage by the christians and end in horro horrible disaster for the Angelinian rebels. A moderate penetration of this front meant much more than a deep one on n any other to the christian besiegers. If the immense Angelinian armies could only smash through for a gain of eighteen miles, it would be certain that a penetration of sixty five miles could be made further west, and as for the effect on the Angelinian rebels such an advance would be infinitely more menacing. That the enemy realised his vulner ability here had been evidenced in July and August by his most herculean efforts to p p improve his positions through the reduction of portions of the christian lines, and by the tremendous labors he ho had put forth since then in adding up to other defensive positions outside of the portifications of Lucillia Nicksen and Gedernine.

If here were driven back here by the Nationals the jig was up for the whole army and seven sections of the big city and he knew it. A great Terrian also aided the rebels as the re were great natural barriors to an anyo advance the Evangelinia Grania heights east of the Sunbeam Creeks north Bend afford afforded the enemy excellant artillery positions for oblique fire on the western banks of Sunbeam Creek, and his right flank was covered by strong batteries a le located in the almost impassable Mo-pollester port woreste, Midway botwesn this gigantic two thousandmile forest and the beautiful Sunbean Crock were the main frowning heights of Evangelinia grania which also had been strongly fortified w by one third of the whole Landelinian army. Densely wooded fastnesses and other naturally difficult places offered ideal positions for strong machine gun and rifle and grenade ambushes. And the rebel Angelinians certainly utilised them. So complete had been the success of the St Peters Island operations that on the second day of that attack reserve d visions of christians and artillery unites were withdrawn and directed toard the vivian Wickey Section of the battle line for the Evangelinia grania. Things were speeding up everywhere and a wild artillery battle was raging along a sixty mile front. The movement of the immens number of troops and the amounts of ammunition involved in this battle of Gallitte over fields and dales and over meadows and lanes, and over few roads available and confined entirely to the hours of darkness amid an inferno of lightning flashes from a storm of bursting shells in the sky or elsewhere and their pounding heart she shaking thunder was one of the most difficult and delicate problems of the war. he congestion under heavy fire of shells was terrific beyond comprehension. yet they ever evolved order out of the chaos of moving and marching and double timing troops under fire and trucks and wagons, and artillery that streched three roads fields and meadows and lanes and glens over all morning day and in the blackness of night, in rain, and in the flash of shell bursts and in dead and with hundreds being killed or wounded per day was a marvel. ut they got the tan los straightened out somehow, the artillery reached their positions selected for them by the main generals, the infantry arived at their own places, and supplies came along for them.
he most big gigantic christian attack the Gianchilinians had twenty seconds divisions in line and more than twice the number in reserve. All signs pointed to an expectation on their part that the Angelinians would enlarge the St Peters operation, into an advance on Fort Silverbell and successful ruses were carried out to encourage the enemy in this belief.
A most violent artillery fire along a fourty mile battle line, an artillery fire of preparation opened at three thirty o'clock in the morning of October the twenty sixth, then to the surprise the fortifications in these locations opened fire up upon the christians to prevent assaults if possible and an inferno of shell explosions seemed to tear all before it and the sky was whitened by smoke as if a sea of clouds enveloped it and the enemy smoke hung over the land like a dense fog. Three hours later after the great artillery storm had commenced the christian infantry finally rushed off, accompanied by artillery. -he nine divisions which led the attack consisted of Abbicanians, Comentinians, Agelinians, Alverinians, Wyanhillians Deathfeam, Wipenligans, -ipaligualians, and other forces.

There were six other divisions in reserve and the first army had 27,000 guns, one hundred and eighty nine armoured coaches of steel, and eight hundred and twenty one airplanes. and americans thereof we manned one hundred and fourty two of these armoured cars and some of the airp, airplanes for escorting. he Angelinians encountered a most critical problem at the very outset of this tremendous battle, the restrictions of communications across the land only fourteen roads were available and during the bib bitter fighting earlier in the battle the artillery fire assumed such tremendous force and activity that they v virtually destroyedall the roads. he soil was spongy and the attackers lacked materials but the Angelinian engineers were a hard breed to stump, they found up communications somehow, and made possible the movement of troops, artillery and supplies.
he fighting over a distance of thirty miles entirely was fierce beyond description and very dogged. n each side it seemed to be felt that the end was near and each army put all it had into the main efforts, straining for a n knockout. For the whole distance of the roaring inferno of battle outlocks could see the long lines of artillery in action, the long surges of smoke from mine and shell explosions, and the sea of smoke from machinery and smaller guns and also from aei artillery.
he uproar from the distance of sixty miles from the battle was terrific in the extreme and the sky reddened from the storm of bursting shells so bitterly was every foot of ground contested that in many cases no quarter was ste even asked for or given. en fought most desperately untill they dropped, without thought of surrender. he ground over which the Angelinians advanced under a screaming tempest of shell, shrapnell, and canister, and a curtain of machinery and machine gun fire was exceptionally rugged, and difficult, on steep heights, dense woods, farmlands interseoted by rivulets and streams with many fortified villages of fortresses, commanding approaches all the approaches to fairly ruined destruction, and for all the three days of the battle there was a heavy fog of smoke, but the fighting christian troops doggedly struggled through the thick mud, and the bleakness of night against terrific seemingly annihilating machine gun fire, and a crashing inferno of shells that roared like a billion thunderbolts. hey moved in large but torn and shattered waves up the slopes of plateaus whose ridges were living seas sea of flame and smoke of enemy rifle and cannon fire, and stormed the positions. hey charged thousands of machine gun nests and bayonetted the gunners. ith rifle fire and hand grenades and the cold steel they cleared the Landelinians out of farm houses and small wooded woodon fortresses and out of sailents and villages. nd all the while the world reeked and quivered under the thunderous clamor of scores of thousands of mighty big guns, red hot from the furious speed.
Loop was indeed something to be snatched when a man could get it en grew so utterly weary and sick at heart from hear, and hunger and a lack of rest that death in all its shocking hor r horrors had no terrors for them. they would ignore bursting shells to take a nap. Yet ashing, worn , cut, hungry and desperate as they were they fought their way forward and never thought of quitting. Human fortitude can rise to wonderous heights. ontinuous fighting was maintained along the entire front with especial successes on the extreme left, where the capture of the greater part of the sailents was completed but not one section of the two main railroad lines were captured. he enemy here contested every foot of the ground and after the struggle the forces of christians at these points had to make more rapid retreats farther west and withdraw their forces back to the line of seige before the interruption of their own communications through Alverinia was cut off.
Mixed in thi this long conflict the greatest combative force was assembled every ever seen under the anner of the fire wounds t sometimes became necessary tovrelieve some of the h exhausted divisions preliminary to another general and desperate assault n an attack along the whole front of still greater violence launched on October the twenty second the strong hold on Laris ann was captured but a counter assault of the foe partially broke the christian line of general attack. Their points were also retaken by the enemy and a counter attack was made north of Ypr "Frenchie" machine regain since the Mandelinian offensive counter attacked was seventeen miles and this time the Christians had been compelled to throw into the fight fifteen large reserve divisions. "a local but severe operations during the remainder of the bloody month the first corps under general Siebmann regain advanced through ypres, the fifth corps under Emmerstein re-captured the redoubts, the Third corps superintended by general Mc-Allister accomplished the extremely difficult reoccupation of some of the lost ten main heights, and the seventeenth armenmedian corps drove the Angelinians a good distance from the main ridge south of Passchendaele. By the end ofOctober the whole Christian line of offensive had been entirely broken, the Mc-Hollester forest was again in the hands of the Mandelinians, and an advance of twenty one miles had been made, one hundred and eighteen thousand six hundred prisoners, seventeenmund three hundred and seventy cannon, 70,000 machine guns and a great mass of material had been captured from the repulsed Angelinians and the Mandelinians had increased the number of their divisions on this front from twenty to sixty one.

The vital railway story through Ypres to Calverian which had been imperiled was safe.

The demands of incessant battle which had been maintained day and day and night after night for more than a month had compelled the repulsed christian divisions to fight fiercely to the k limit of their capacity. Combat troops in immense numbers were held in line and pushed to the attack until drained beyondthe of further efforts because of loss losses or exhaustion, artillery once occupied was never withdrawn and many batteries fought untill practically all horses were slain and the guns had to be towed out of line by men themselves. In the Angelinian ranks the Germans themselves had shown unrivaled fortitude in this continuous fighting during most inclement weather and under many many disadvantages of position. Yet while the high pressure of the dogged counter attacks of the foe was a great strain on the divisions it did not appear calamitious to the Angelinians, though in being repulsed their divisions had been thrown into confusion by the furious assaults. Once a christian division was engaged in the fight it became practically impossible to bring it relief and their morale had been reduced untill their will to resist had well might reached the breaking point. In this month the christians suffered the loss of [illegible] killed and wounded. 4 captured two hundred and twenty six thousand prisoners, three thousand eight hundred fourty seven cannon, thirty three thousand machine guns/ and large quantities of war material

Indeed upon no one in this most bloody Mandelinian war called the child Slave rebellion has the toric ferocity of this long terrific and hellsgigantic tug of war imposed a most heavier burden than upon the little children of Abyssinitie, Angelinia and Calverinia? Millions probably already had been made ep orphans, or starved, and thousands in the path of advancing enemy armies had been either massacred or thrown into slavery, and even forced to witness scenes of horror, and battles, and violent explosions and such great fires and other horrors of devastations that would try the nerves of many an older person of great bravery even. Those who had been seized and captured were oft enslaved mutilated, and indeed the lot of the little ones in the war infested regions had been a very hard one indeed.

Many a Red Cross conv convoy even made up of Germans as well as Angelinians and the Abbicannians were were saving spled splendidly for the children and old men and women sent to safer localities and back from the invaded countries of horror and war torn Calverinia, feeding and clothing them untill such a time as they can untilll they can be returned to either their scattered relatives or adopted by those who would have compassion upon them, even then all persons were ruled on the fact that they had to adopt them under conditions of being suspected as alien enemies and be deported immediately. Mainly all this was the responsibility of the attention of the Germans Calverinian city of Ypres vicinity. And dear readers, why was it this that this immense city so strongly fortified as to be able to stop all nations of the world fell so easily into the hands of the wicked Angelinian rebels the Mandelinians, and so early during the child slave rebellion June 7th 1928 the guns of the Boar Sword Hurrah?

Was it because the Authorities of the Calverinian governments did not believe that the Mandelinians could ever capture the city and its fortresses even if the garrison was moderately small?

Or was there something like treason in the whole situation?

The city is so le large that many estimates may say that it could hold 850,000,000 inhabitants or probably more and still have room time a million factories fo factories stores and so on. The city has five large sections the two main ones being German Catherine and Julie Cullio. One part of the city the sections called Julie Cullie and German Catherine is divided by the German River running through it and the rivers big delta divides the other sections called Arumburg Federal, Amsie Arumburg, Ho-Thirther Hunst and has an extension of nearly a hundred and fifty miles in length and a hundred miles broad. the largest section is Ho-Thirther Hunst. The next largest is Julie Cullie and German Catherine is Third. Each section is strongly fortified, but the fortresses of the sea board are the strongest, consisting of those of the Ho-Thirthian fortifications of Ho-Hollister glandher and of those of the Boy ring and Mangiglemoman islands. Julie Cullie section is fortified by a literal sea of great fortresses builded by Abbicannian, Angelinian, and Calverinian engineers. These forts were called by the names of every saint in the List of saints by the Abbicannians, but the Angelinians withdrew these names completely on account of their horror during the war of 1928? with Mandelinia and Calverinia and were first called the fortresses of Damnation.

These fortresses before the capture by the Mandelinians during this interesse strife were called Marmeshan and silverbell and Michael Bellian fortifications. The main ones are called fort Stanlien of Lucillis Richson extension No. one, Fort Catherine, fort Andrew, fort Gang, fort Sch,color, Fort Goldilocks, fort Child Love, fort Collyer Collyer and Stemak, fort Vivian No, One and Two, fort Angeline, and fort St Andrew. March are on the highest rocks and hills facing the great beaches of the German river and also the Vivian Vichey Bay and each fortress was armed with over ninty thousand cannon each. The Names of these were forts Gertrude Angeline and fort Genesee. German Catherine is guarded by the Canadian and Lucillis Richson fortification Fortifications, the most strongest and most largest, the highest, and the most massive fortresses in the world. The Ho-Hollester fortifications are the strongest of the whole bunch and fort Coderick comes second.

Ne-Ghirther Junt and the other 22 sections of the city are fortified by the heights of Bwangelinia Grania, and other fortresses and the batteries of Battery Line river, and all shore and river batteries. Fort Gadernine 32 guns and a hundred other forts besides fort St Andrew and St Phillip these latter having retained their original names. A Part of the Lucillie Johnson fortifications especially that of Gadernine also guards Ga ia Aremburg and Aremburg Federal. Ordinary cannon balls would have been as good as hurling a rubber ball against a brick wall as these walls of the fortresses. How small the garrison was when the big fortresses fell into the possession of the Glandelinians was not estimated but nevertheless the enemy had to fight hard at all sections of at least nine Gallic near all sections of the Vivian Section garrisons fighting a hundred battles for the whole month of July and till the middle of July before they finally took it and suffered a greater loss than any Glandelinian army ever suffered before and many generals also.

After the capture general Furgeterian who was directed by general Ne-Gallister Stanek themain commander was there in possession of Gallic Gallic and Gaura Catherine, and general Francis Morel later struck off after driving his way through all sections of the city in street to street fighting of the most savage close character for two weeks during June finally took possession of the other sections of Vivian Vickay, and at the request of King Glandelin of Glandelinia then residing in the city of Vanity Fair took full command.

A month after the fox captured the city of Vivian Vickay the christian army under general Phillian Gubloster Gaurian came up with his army and after fighting his way through to Gaura was started to besiege Vivian Vickay and her other sections. Even at this time the size of the besieging armies was enormous beyond but as this story relates it, it took over two years fighting and metal hammering before the city and all the fortifications was recaptured.

As soon as the Ne-Ghirther and all the other fortifications of Vivian Vickay fell into the possession of the fox its capture caused a most tremendous sensation not only throughout Calverinia, Abyssinikiv and Abbinannia but throughout the whole world. To them it seemed to be something very unusual indeed. They did not even understand how it could ever possibly be that enemies of all children, of god, and all Christianity could capture a stronghold so powerful and so famous as to in modern times step fleets and in some armies of all the nations in the world when during a great war of 1918 with other nations ever were misunderstanding. It was even believed that if all Hell would have been arrayed against it, and especially these great Ne-Ghirthian fortifications they would not have been able to prevail against them. Yet a very small Glandelinian army captured it by the seaside, and a larger army by the landside.

On September 1918, the enemy to a strengthen their captured prey established a vast navy in the many sections of the bays and rivers, the rivers especially which ran through the city and also a large naval base in the beautiful Bay of Vivian Vickay, and also in Lake Bwangelinster and Lake Angelina. Close to this famous city in the bay of Vivian Vickay were two long strings of Volcanic Islands large enough to place England in and yet have eight of each. The largest of these groups were the Bhangiloonsan Islands. The other group whose islands though not so numerous were nevertheless larger were called the Bay ging Islands. Thus the fox/en swarm after they had secured the city and the fortifications discovered the importance of these 22 islands. Spies informed general Furgeterian that these islands too were also strongly fortified by immense millards, Augusts and fortresses and high rampart like breastworks and very mountainous, and all these fortresses were called by all the names of the saints but differently from those around Vivian Vickay. These however had been strongly garrisoned. General Furgeterian found this evidently to be a fact but to take them himself was utterly impossible. He therefore pleaded to general Stanek and also notified the Glandelinian government of his import at important capture and wrote this to the Glandelinian "Eng!!!

"If I can maintain the possession of the fortresses of this famous Calverinian city your many royal armies will be able to press the Confederation against the Abbissannian Confederation for the maintenance of the Child slavery. But this I cannot do unless the fortified Islands near by are also taken. I cannot spare any men to make the effort and neither can my superior Ne-Gallister Stanek, and advise you to effect their capture by the sea."

It did not take long before his advanse advice was listened to and soon they also were in the possession of the west rebel armies and the gallant christian defenders either put to flight, captured, or forced to surrender.

Vivia fortresses were then built and general Furgeterian assuming the main command of Gallic Gallic and Gaura Catherine themselves felt well protected from further attacks by his enemies the Angelinian nationals. He also fortified the heights of Bwangelinia Grania and Karma Rossana and taking possession of Gaturia and Liegsburg landing stationed great sea armies and strong fortresses there, besides reinforcing the strength of the other two fortresses by additional work and also place a towering chain of batteries along the banks of the Anfeline river in that location which they called the Battery Line river. General Ne-Gallister Stanek ordered general Furgeterian also to fortify the whole stretch of the Bunbean Creek, but fortunately for the christian authorities the A g Angelinian armies then approaching were too quick and when they started the seige they fiercely fought their way across.

This description gives a good idea of the capture of Avian Vickay. Now the most important thing of all on the subject is the were really responsible.

It was blamed on the governments of Calverinia by general Gaston Olvier, the Abbissannian and Angelinian and Abyssinikilian governments, and also by many other christian generals and the whole armies, all who charged them with careless neglect, and presumptious less full foolishness in not having the fortresses strongly garrisoned as they should have been.

But the authorities of the Calverinian governments denied that they had anything to do with the cause of this frightful misfortune and disaster and that the cause was more to the neglect of the commander at Ne-Ghirther Junt himself. They declared when notified they ordered the fortresses to be completely filled to their fullest, with soldiers and ammunition and if all this did not reach Vivian Vickay they cannot and did not understand why they did not be accepted. On this general Hansen Avian had ordered an investigation to be started and to be started immediately. He suspected three things; Carelessness,, Cowardice, and Treason. Another suspicion not fully assured was double crossing. But he could not confirm any of these suspicions. But he was determined not to let an any of these go unpunished as it had caused to him and the whole Abbissannian nation the greatest of all disasters. It even renewed the whole war and threatened to win the war in the favor of the foe. And as long as the foe remained in possession of this important stronghold the longer the enemy would be able to retain the rebellions. The Angelinian general who had been in command of the small garrison at Ne-Ghirther Junt was not to blame however and all cross examinations and two trials showed him completely innocent. And neither was he or his small force captured. When he saw that it was impossible to hold the fortresses against such vast numbers of the wicked enemy he first notified the Calverinian governments that if support did not come immediately he would there y withdraw his command from the forts rather/than allow them to be captured in so disgraceful a manner. No support came and so he therefore was forced to withdraw. On account of this tragedy General Hansen did not allow the poor generals name to be put/ published broadcast. The situation of the Fortifications of Ne-Ghirther were peculiar indeed. In the middle of the broad Karma Ban River was a broad island called St Gertrudes River Isle.

vandals or insane men what ever they may be had been active since th the great flood receded but it was not unti ll the end of October that he they committed the act that brought the whole town down upon their trail.

It was two miles long and five hundred yards broad. On this was the great two mile part of St Phillip. It stood only thirty feet high but was of reinforced concrete mixed with cross pieces of iron rods and heavy planks and stones and palmetto logs. Its walls were twenty feet thick and armed with ten thousand great c quick shot shield guns and 1,050 extra great calibre, and another thousand great c quick nine inch firing ba krupp and other big guns. Around the fortresses were an extra encirclement of great concrete walls and great blockhouses with high granite towers and protected by the first section of the glandelinian navy. It was able to hold a garrison of over two million one hundred thousand men. It also had a section of small former fortifications, and some stone stockades, and surrounded by high walled rocks and lava slabs.

On the opposite side on the west shore a mile and a half across stood stood the ramparts within rings ramparts of St Andrew. This immense fortress was sixty feet high, and thirteen miles long. There were also other fortresses on the east side of the river and three gun squadrons of cities big fleets could have to run a tremendous gauntlet of guns. Glandelinian warships of many other guarded a great length of the river and they also had scores of immense rafts and barges loaded down with an oil soaked bales of cotton and other inflammable materials to be used against attacking fleets as fire rafts. Near the Gellyer and Mimmit section of vivian Wighby was the north branch of the Great Gobernius fortifications, Lafillies, Johnson Mg. Comp.

This line of fortifications stretched for the distance of ten miles. The main sections of these fortifications was about twenty four miles long. They were also built of reinforced concrete and iron and steel and had a number of inner forts. The walls of these fortifications were fourteen yards thick and interlocked thickly with big one hundred pound slabs, large pebbles, fragments of iron and steel, and immense granite and lava stones. This line of fortifications was considered to be the strongest of all of them.

The height of the great Gobernius fortifications was about fourty feet and manned with one hundred thousand cannon of contmeter, mort meter and krupp guns. It also was armed with large swivil and a parks of gigantic nine inch machine guns. For Mc-Hollester north of the Gobernius guarded all sections of Liegsburg landing and Mercer Hill and Mercer Mine also at Liegsburg Landing were the great fortresses of Edmundine , vivian and Silverbell. These fortresses were not so large but built of thick iron and steel. These fortresses each were two miles long and three hundred and sixty five feet high. Each manned great Contmeter guns about ten thousand for every fortresses. There were also quite a number of other great fortresses and the entire length of the river in the possession of the foe was line with the strongest shore batteries placed on thirty foot emilacks and breastworks and other ramparts. Far in advance of these were the the Mario Stanek wooden fortifications made of great logs and two hundred pound timbers and though of wood were able to resist nearly as fierce as the other fortresses by the number of guns they had.

strings upon strings of heavy wire and iron chains were stretched across from fort to fort across both the gunboat Brook and Mc Gowan Gun River in a perfect maze as a river barricade the enemy having placed these themselves with the purpose of preventing hostile fleets from passing the forts during an attack. No fortresses however had no formation whatever of houses and forts in the European or American countries nor either were they in the form of stockades or block houses. They were the most peculiar fortresses ever seen. The highest ones like port Vivian Silb Silverbell and Mercurian looked like gigantic prisons of penitentiaries pents staring all of a gray painted color but with sides similar to t he gun turrents of battleships. The towers which were longer were of a more peculiar type. They were in the form of highly builded palts platforms or very broad walls within walls with great balconies above to protect the great guns. The interior sections were more in the form of prisons also which were to house the garrison during the time there was any inactivity. These enclosed the portions called the Mc-Shirthian for tifications.

SEE PAGE FIVE HUNDRED TWENTY SIX.

At a distance they looked like a big city of rem. ts within ramparts. No other great fortresses known as Mc-Shirther Manot guarded the main river fronts of porem Catherine. They were like the others but assumed a different name. Later they were nicknamed the fortifications of gunmantics. They were divided into ten sections.

All mostly known as Victoria, Emery, Auroncaillie, Fon Grenis, port Victoria, pottery line River, the Galabalian fortifications on the Victoria Heights, port Goldielocks, port Mary Ann, and the Fortresses of Follins on Weeping Willow lane. These received the most fiercest attacks during the first and early part of the Second year of the great war. One of the other fortific fortified positions of the foe massed by four p ramparts and chains of batteries was the heights of Evangeline Granis and the Great Turner Hill near Margarete Ferde. A certain section of ground a little beyond garbadn Creek was also fortified by sallents and fortresses and also a little beyond Jamie Avina and which stretched from Auroncaillie to the flanking town of Florimin. Of all portions of vivian Wisby Seven Catherine was really the most strongly fortified. Here circuited the Signatia gunboats, Latrova, Transportaplain, Vattruba, Brigman and Lucillia Gibson fortifications equal in strength to the main Gobernius fortifications. These were near the smaller sections of the Mc-Shirther and Aronburge Gun Rivers. They stood seventy feet high and were so strong that it was believed that no strong host of fiends themselves could carry them. They extended for over thirty five miles. Far in advance they were guarded by long lines of batteries of small and big guns, rifle pits, dugouts and fortified trenches of every des r description. They were the most advanced fortresses of all. To build all these fortresses it cost Abbiesmin two hundred thrillion dollars and took from the year of eighteen fourty one till till 1938 to finish them despite the fact that there were millions of men at the work.

So indeed does render what a capture the enemy had made because the garrison was too small to resist them. At the foes approach the people of the vivian Wisby section of Northwest Gobverinia escaped but those residing in the other sections were warned too late.

HOW THE ENEMY CAPTURED VIVIAN WISBY.

The capture of Vivian Wisby was first effected at the investment of Julie Gallie and Seven Catherine after fighting of most savage description that lasted fully fourty days. The Julie Gallie section alone was the one strongly defended and garrisoned, and thus it took the enemy over a month to capture it and force the christians and their armies to retreat in haste. It is not mentioned here who the christian general in command was but all the desperate efforts of the enemy to capture him and his army failed most disgracefully. No foe army and navy that capture Julie Gallie came up the Mc-Gallester and Gorma Gun River in many battleships and transports. The Glandelinian army was indeed immense in size and under the leadership of three generals Lucious Purvagtorian, Frank Purgatorian and Francis Mc-Allister Stanek. At the time of the capture of Julie Gallie there had not been a strong christian army within the distance of fifty miles. As soon as he had secured Julie Gallie, general Purgatorian found despite his losses in the months battle that his army which survived of the stubborn conflict was to vast to have all take possession of the fortresses around Julie Gallie, and so the remainder was sent to gorma Catherine. A little later another vast Glandelinian army came up which had been sent by general Mc-Aldi allister Stanek and fighting his way through seized the Mc-Shirthian Fortifications and thus had gold of the strongest possession in the world.

vandals or insane men what ever they may be had been active since th the great flood receded but it was not until the end of October that he they committed the act that brought the whole town down upon their trail.

General Hanson Vivian had been enraged when he had learned of this, and suspecting the authorities of one of the Calverinian governments blamed them for it, and threatened to discharge everybody and indict them all. The first thing he wanted to know why was the city of Vivian Wiskey or any of her fortresses so weakly garrisoned?

Why wasnot the approach of the enemy notified to the Calverinian governments so something could be done.?

And why was it that the Julie Gallic section resisted so pugnaciously and it took a month and fifteen days to capute capture it, while Queen Catherine, and the other sections fell so easily?

Why was it that the nearest christian army was fifty miniles away?

Why was it that knowing the danger of so small a garrison, a larger army was not sent to Vivian Wiskey immidiately?!?!?!?

If the governments of Calverinia was not responsible for the out rageous then where does the main responsible responsibility lay?!?!?!

Was it double crossing of some generals who were enmies of his and who wished to see a disaster?

Or was it from Cowardice, the action of some generals or men who wished so to save their own skin rather than save Angolinia from this disgrace?!?!?!?

Or was it carelessness? Or was any one bribed, or bribed by the enemy?!?!?. These were the questions that General Hanson Vivian had asked many of his advisors and generals over and over again. He was indeed bound to find out the cause, and on whom to fix the res ponsibleand if any one was guilty of misdemeanor, dastardly cowardice, carelessness or treason they would be punished according to the misdemeanor.

Indeed the capture of all the fortifications around Vivian Wiskey and those of the Bay King, and Phosphoricsonian palaces, had dumfounded the whole world, so that general Hanson had become utterly speechless. He felt the same about it as if Satan and his wicked host and all his followers out of Edden had won the rebellin rebellion in heaven instead of being cast out. ch the capture of this most important stronghold the very omellant to the enemy for to them it would enable the se use of strong navies and all the means to retain the rebellion, and a positive hope and expectation of winning the great struggle. General Hanson Vivian said in one of his statements to the Angolinian governments;

"It is most astonishing to be and the whole world let alone all of Abbissania how it is the fortifications of Vivian Wiskey and her other big sections including Julie Gallic and Queen Catherine was so easily captured by the se most wicked insurgents, the whol world has ever known. Ar according to the reports I have heard Julie Gallic herself was properly protected but nevertheless could not withstand the strength of the rebel Angolinians. The defenders gave the most desperate resistance for a whole month and a half but the enemy finally gained the victory.

At the other two sections however the foe fairly walked in as if it were their own residencies and gained possession of the most strongly constructed fortifications in the world. Following this came the horrifying "Reign of Terror" in Queen which continued for a month untill stopped by the coming of Vivian Wiskey by the Abbissanian armies under general Hanson. Previous to the outbreak of the rebellion I and my brother, even other general, your Excellencies, Abyssinikians, and Abbissanian governments had warned the authorities of Calverinia to see to it that the entire stretch of the Mc-Whirther fortifications were strongly garrisoned. When the misfortune occured Angolinia and Abbissania blamed the Calverinians for it but in my investigation I have found out that the Calverinian governments had immidiately complied with my request and cannot understand why the big armies that had been sent did not reach Mc-Whirther Fortifications. There is indeed a most tremendous mystery here and I will surely make a strict investigation and if it is cowardice, treason, or Cowardice, or even carelessness it shall be punished as far as the law of God permits. I h v Have spoken.

General Hanson Vivian indeed had made efforts to learn who the generals were that commanded the armies sent by the governments of Calverinia to Mc-Whirther and having located them had through his orders other generals put in their stead and thus had issued orders for them to present themselves before him as soon as they could conceit the same time he had sent for them or sent them the notice a few weeks after general Hanson started his seige. That was july 27th 1912. And it was not untill after the battle of Calverins on the Mc-Whitester Run before these generals recieved the issued notice that their commands were taken from them and given to some one else by the Abbissanian governments. I tell you dear reader general Hanson stands for no nonsense. He when he suspects any one guilty only asks questions, say no more, and sooner or later the same persons recieve their punishment before they least expect it. Hanson acts quick.

There were ten of the generals who had lost their respective commands on account of the disaster and they were generals Ben Gump, Andrew Jack Gump, Frank Chester Jiggs Gump, George Sixty Hoerlein, Sixty Hoero, Jerem Francis Moriathy, Napoleon Schleoter, Sandiford, Burgerenna, Jessin Hogan and Logan Zac Rac.

A week after they had been sent for to be sent courtmarshalled one of the generals who was the one who thought he could be witness was questioned. And this happened at the Court marshalls.

"Did these ten generals recieve orders from any certain court of Calverinia to move armies to reinforce Vivian Wiskey? the answers were so complete that at last Ben Gump was questioned first of the defendants.

"Did you recieve orders by the Calverinian governments to garrison Vivian Wiskey?" asked general Hanson asking as the questioner.

"Yes your excellency I did."Answered general Gump.

"Did you recieve any further orders?"Asked general Hanson.

"No sir."Answered general Gump.

"Did you start with your army immediately!!!!"

"Yes sir."

"Why did you not reach Vivian Wiskey!"

"I recieve a message from a courier on horseback that stated the fortifications of Mc-Whirther was strongly fortified b bby the enemy already and impossible to regain. I then thought it thought it unwise to march for the place."

"You did a cowardly and careless thing."said Hanson seriously. "It was your duty them to march your army to besiege the place. And when did you recieve the message to garrison Mc-Whirther?"

"On the twenty ninth of July!!!!!!"

"What!"Gasped Hanson.

"On the twenty ninth of July."Repeated the generals

"On what date was the message written?"

"On the fourteenth of April. I was surprised but thought it may have been delayed through some some blunder."

"Have you still got the written order?"

"Yes sir."I presented it to the authorities and they were skeptical that something was wrong and notifies notified you."

"They surely did not notify me at all said general Hanson as he took the paper handed to him.

''It's more strons'strongh than indeed..."gald general Gamp''Because I saw it writte written and sent off immediately."

''The mystery deepens still more ''Declared general Manson as he looked at the date of the messan message. He finally handed it back t o general Den Gamp and then questioned general Ad Andrew Gamp on the subject. Andrew had als almost the same report but he l also stated that the letter he received from the government appeared to have been tampered with. This report appeared to amaze general Manson who was more deeply mystified on examinging the telegramm and finding symptoms of them having gone into peculiar hands before they reached him.

The other generals as they stated had received their orders by telegraph but afterwards received orders from other quarters that the advance was not to be made. It was now evident to general Manson that this had been the work of some crafty Gharbilinian secret service agents, detectives or spies. In one had double crosse crossed or blundered or turned traitor as it had been at first feared but nevertheless there was carelessness in the whole thing just the same. After he had interviwed these e generals and sent them back to their respective commands general Manson decided to have the spies captured or located at least. But this was something extremely difficult when th the whereabouts of the successful spies could not be known.

None of the officers had seen any spies around their encampments, and though the spies had nevertheless been frustrated in their attempts to reinforce the garrison at Vivian Vickey.

In one way general Manson could not understand how these generals could have been so easily trisked by the enemy spies. Nevertheless it did happen and the greatest strongholdin the world builded by the Abbiesminns and costing them hundreds of thrillions of dollars in materials al so and a hundred million dollars in labour was now in the possession of the vilest rebels ever lived if they did live.

General Manson Vivian however was determined to regain these fortifications of Vivian Vickey at any cost. Yet he h never realised the cost his attempt would rea lly cause. At first he had to make up his plan. He l knew that general Mansion was already investing the many sections of Vivian Vickey with immense Abbiesminn armies united with the bigfest armies Angelinia ever mobolised yet and had massed the strongest batteries of artillery ever brought to bear during a seige.

The main thing that general Manson Vivian had done at the very start was to immediately tie up all railroads running to and from Julio Gallio to Vivian Vickey passport and, allstrain roads from Calverino to Vivian Vickey and h d sh had ordered army engineers to destroy all bridges on all roads approaching Vivian Vickey and also to tear up all tracks of the ro railroads and to destroy all wire communications.

Blockades were also started. Manson had done this to prevent any otherarmies of the foe frc from going to the rescue and support ofgeneral Mc-Allister Stanck from north, south west, or east. General Manson Vivian had through the efforts of his communications with other christian generals ans their armies made attempts to blockade the gre great Mc-Collester and other great rivers, even the great Norma Run and Erminie Run Rivers by battleships and mines and by causing a mass of wreckage and debris to be floating in their waters. He was successful in blockading apart of the Mc-Collester and Erminie Run but the foe were in possession of the whole length of the Norma Run and other rivers and the whole Vivian Vickey bay. Genera General Manson had also through the help of his authorities mobolized many standing armies to prevent movements of the foe troops in any direction tw ard Vivian Vickey Vickey. General Manson indeed took great pains with his plans before he started any general advance of his own armies tward Calverino. He decided to make Calverino his first goal. He studied his Geography carefully examining every map of the country around Vivian Vickey so as to know where to strike the enemy there the first fatal blow.

His first plan was after he captured Calverino was to move an immense army against Natalia and Lisghburg Landing as soon as possible. Manson while in the execution of his many plots containing Vivian Vickey, had recieved news that gave him the surprise of his whole life. This news also gave him confiddence in the armies of Our Lord undergenera general Mansion. And it also gave him confidence in the success of the well laid plans to prevent the enemy armies from being rushed to the rescue of general Purgatorians and Mc-Allisters army of Glandelinians.

According to what is related in the real History of the World modern science blames the mosquetioes for the fall of empires and to it attributes changes in the c ur ocurse of his tory. Herodiotus the Greek Historian says it plagued all the Fh arcahs. Dr L.O Howard Chief United States government entomologist and foremost living misquito expert had written that one one occasion, Saper ing of Persia was forced to abandon the seige of Nicibus and retreat in haste before gigantic gigantic swarms of the pest came out of the marshes and stung both soldiers and animals into frenzy. So many of Sapors beasts of burden ran away i under stinging assault s, that captive women and men were harnessed to the wagons. At another time Says Dr. Howard Julian the Apostate was forced to flee with his armies for a similar cause.

So general Purgatorian who read a good dea od of history remembered this, and before his advance on Vivian Vickey had through the work of experts secured thrillions upon thrillions of mosquitoes and raised them and their young, and so had held them in air chambered boxes filled with weeds untill the time came when general Mansions army bec began the seige of Julio Gallio. When agents managed to smuggle these pests within the christian lines whence they were let loose. Million f men and anim animals within the christian lines were bitten untill they were driven to frenzy officers and generals also, but big conflargrations were hastily originated that finally vanquished these pests. Mar Malaria smote heavily upon nearly one third of Mansions army but nevertheless all this did hot daunt the besiegers or cause them to retreat a foot. They held on to the seige all the tighter.

After this repulse the enemy tried, fires, gigantic floods, mighty explosions and the letting loose of pl agues, liquid fire and even gas attacks but failed to dislodge the sturdy besiegers though their desperate attempts inflicted woeful losses upon Mansions army, military materials and provisions. The working of general Mansions army h gave general Manson great confidence.

He planned to support Mansion with provisions and armies under any cinditions and i the face of any risk and n t a not to allow any foe armies to get near him. After making out these plans he decided upon some others. He was determined to apprehend the spies who had caused the fortifications around Vivian Vickey to be so easily captured by the rebels under general Francis Mc-Allister Stanck. And the main thing to be looked into was how did the spies get the information, that the garrison of the Mc-Whirthian fortifications was so small when even then gu 4 guards guards were so numerous and so strict that no spy could ever enter any of the fa fortifications and escape capture. General Manson believe that surely no matter what the excuse was some one must have surely double-crossed or tricked these christian generals and even the Calverinian governments.

He felt sure of this because he could not understand how the spies could have secured the necessary information and means to outwit the governments and the ten generals of their own efforts alone. This was indeed indeed the strangest case that general Manson Vivian ever had. Many other generals who have been known to have been ordered to strengthen Mc-Whirther Janet were also questioned and even cross examined but with the same result with as the other ten generals being tricked in the most mysterious way. General Manson however was positively sure that some one had doube cor crossed because he could not understand o how any of the strange spies could have secured the information of the strength of the garrison without outside help and from some Angelinian or Calverinian who may have d u double crossed for some revengeful method, or turned traitor or yeilded to the ferocity of the spies, through cor cowardice.

vandals or insane men what ever they may be had been active since th the great flood receded but it was not until the end of October that he they committed the act that brought the whole town down upon their trail.

Nevertheless no matter how they may have been tricked general Manson had os declared nevertheless that any of thoss generals had been tricked through nothing else but carelessness. Many protested to his judgement but Manson said to even his lw own wife who protested to his verdict;

"I cannot help it my dear Wify. This was the most terrific disaster that the christian nation has suffered, a disaster that has made the very world may the very Heavens itself look down on us and the Angelinian nation in general as the fool of all fools, whi a who are threatened with defeat by the enemys of God himself. Come what may I will not tolerate it at any case. IInnocent or not any one I suspect shall pay for it. As soon as I can pass the degree those ten generals shall bs relieved of their commands. It is enough. no one not even the vivian girls or my own brother or the angels in heaven can make me change my mind..As for those who may have been re traitors or cowards shall shall they shall not be shot or hanged. They shall be slowly burned at the stake like the dogs they are. And I'll tolerate no interference or shall have no dispute. go There."

During the time that he had been preparing for his advance on Calverine general Manson vivian had recieved the visit of the poor general who had been forced to abandon the Mc-Whirthian fortifications. He felt very much depressed over the affair, and very much downcast, almost feeling lack of faith in go d himself, but general Manson did his best to cheer him telling him not to worry, and not to despair in God.

"If any body is at fault he shall pay dealy dearly and heavily for the trouble he has caused you."Said general Manson assuming as much composure as possible."And I'll do my level best to have the city and its fortifications retaken as soon as possible. General Mrs Mansion is already besieging the city, and that will give me a good lead. It will take time to regain the lost fortresses but with the help of God and his blessed mother and a storm of prayers as well as assaults and battles it will be accomplished."

The general however felt it possible that something at must be done or should be done because the capture of the fortresses of Vivian Wiskey put the christian cause in serious danger. Through the capture of Vivian Wickey, the rivers, and the Boy ring and Blongy Blongiglozensan Islands the enemy would have means to maintian the rebellion and probably even win it at that. The city of Vivian Wickey being both a river and sea port and being captured by the enemy was used by them for army provisions, materials, ammunition, food and men. Calverine in the possession of the main rebel government was Vivian Wickeys main support and only through the fall of Calverine could Vivian Wickey be captured. They were already succeeding in doing this, and even during the beginning of the siege since the capture of the city the enemy had unknown to the christian generals and their armies even unknown to Mansion dug many secret tunnels and pathways subways and tunnels leading tward other sections not surrounded by the christian besiegers, and another thing unknown to Mansion the foe engineers were making mine galleries under the very christian lines at some portions. Thanks og to God later these were discovered and the disaster prevented.These tunnels had been made during the birth of the seige or even before it by hundreds of thousands of Glandelinian enginsers and even masons and contractors. It was nearly a year and a half before these secret under passage ways were discovered first by the Gemini Leader and then notified to christian spies and war correspondents and the information telegraphed to general Mansion.

At the start after the capture of Julio Callio general Furgatorian at Mc-Allisters orders had kept absolutely secret the strength of his army, the amount of his ammunition, the strength of his batteries and the main supply of his batteries. and provisions of all kinds. His army was in possession of two hundred trains of train supplies. All the railroad yards in vivian Wickey and outside of it were in his possession and all unused cars of any kind were used for defense against attack.He never theless had an ormormous army to his credit and under his command over a hundred and fifty generals. Mc-Allistor Stanek had the remainder and so did him other generals such at Furragatorian Bandeee and Mc-Whirther Osborne.

SEE PAGE FIVE HUNDRED TWENTY SIX.

General John Manley then under the command of Mc-Allister he u brought the Mobbotnite armies and the Furmaramians that captured the Norma Catherine Sections, and general Francis Mc-Allister stanek brought a still more immense army that occupied Mc-Whirther Junct and the sections of Arenburg and Federal and Gertrude Angeline. Manley knew before the reign of terror began in Julio Callio and Norma catherine that the christian armies would besiege all thoxsections on short notice, and to avoid being enclosed-in with the others and especially at the demands of Mc-Allister Stanek and the Glandelinian governments left the main command in care of Furgatorian and went elsewhere to bring new armies as hastily as possible to strike the christian besiegers a blow.

Did he strike the blowYes in this way he did. At the time of Mansons fierce advance for Norma Run as we see later in the proseeding chapyers he smashed armies and fought furiously at Evangelinia Crania and other places and prevented the place from being captured though he was driven from Sunbeam Creek and Glorinia, by Manson and his assailaning forces. It was a horrible time those awful months od of December and January and beginning the worse conflicts the world had ever seen.

But the main subject is on the capture of Vivian Wickey and who was really responsible. In as short a time as possible he had through the efforts of Abbicannia and Angelinia and even Abyssinkile all parts of the whole world it itself combed by Gemini detectives and disguised expert christian spies and s secret service men in the hope that the suspected traitors, cowards, or revengeful rascals and the Glandelinian spies would be qu quickly captured.Through agents he had all towns and cities and country property not occupied by the foe to be on the look out for the spies and the traitor. This order had beenccarried out immediately after two weeks contrary to the fall of Vivian Wickey and the n ones they were searching for were not found nor could they be found for who knew they were safely within the enemy lines at Norma Catherine. Many thousands of suspicious persons had been arrested within a weeks time but as no evidence could be placed against them they had been released.

During the beginning of the seige the enemybdoubly strengthened the fortresses of Fort Laugh, Keith, Hickmadee, Foward , Hickadee Powad, Garagustoplolis, Westruba, Latruva, Heikningburg, and also Hali and Protestia which they had erected themselves. They erected some other forts afterwards called the Forts of Glandelinia, copying the make of these builded by the Abgiennians and making them equally as strong. They also strengthened the heights of Turner Hill, and Evangelinia Crania, and erected great fortresses along both banks of the beautiful little Jonnie Vivian Creek, and also fortified the banks of the still more beautiful stream called Sunbeam Creek.

These two places beside the fortresses along Sunbeam Creek and Jonnie Vivian creek were the first to fall because of Hansons insane attacks of December Fourteenth to Four January (the from 1912 to 1913. That time was a literally hell of horror and losses of both sides was never estimated and these battles covered an extent of ground sixty miles long and ten to twenty wide and the region afterward was called "No Mans Land" because of the terrific desolation and annihilation of nature and her vegetation.

The enemy had also taken possession of the fortifications along a certain section of the Norma gun river called Fort Hoik and Laugh No. Two by the rebels and Fort Bennin. A half mile from these fortresses ran the small stream of Bi Bendinia gun, which ran into the Norma Run. The enemy later being reinforced had taken possession of Beauties Lane which was northwest of Julio Callio. Also other places the enemy had secured to strengthen their lines and these were Fort Hamagustogel Ha Hamagustogelis Hadula, And Fort Andon. Chrillio was another line of fortresses close to Norma's Bridge, besides Fort Glances, Glandelinia, Hcolliburg, Google, Arch Vaguh Kreckhellio, Evangeline Schello, Gatens Lanes, abd and Beelzebubs Creek. All this strong line of series of fortifications stretched for twenty three miles and were over two hundred and fifty feet high. There was also a line of fortifications so gloomy and forbeding looking that by the Angelinians were wer e called Poverty Row. Their Original name giving by the Glandelinians was "The Fortifications of Vincentian um. On the north of Gasteria Ridge the left flank of the Evangelinia Crania Heights was a fortified hill which at a great height above it looked to those like the shape of a mans longest fingre. It was called Finger Mountian and was one thousand five hundred and sixty five feet high. The enemy was also in possession of this hill. Along near the hill ran a small river or stream called Jellie Creek. Near here stood the great Red Hanson Fortifications. This also the enemy had secured and fortified both sides of the creek with breastworks twenty feet high, and immense batteries. Three other fortifications during the seige were builded here by the enemy. A mile northeast of Julie Gallie was the great Melkinghurg Fortifications which stretched for two miles in an unbroken line of walls, embbags, battlements, great one hundred foot towers six hundred feet long, immense lines of unknown numbers of cannons, spires, mounds of sand, moats, abatis, and barbed wire fences to the height of a hundred feet.

This was considered the strongest line of fortifiedtions outwid outside of Julie Gallie. This point Hanson vivian assaulted the fiercest during the battle of Gedernine in the third year of the war. In the centre of the gorman gun was a small fortified island called Landing Island. On this stood Fort Hero also in the possession of the enemy. It took took two years and three months desperate fighting and hammering to even invest this little island which was never captured by the besiegers. On account of the shore batteries, and the positions of Fort vivian, Marie, Stanek, Gell or, Mc Melkinghurg, Gallie Hickson and Mc-Hollester the little island was well protected.

On opposite sides of this river on an even line with immense chains stretching from one to the other in a perdect network across the river, also protecting the island, and covering all approaches to Lieghb rg Landing, were the immense fortresses called Fort Ignorance by the enemy, Chillie, Gollen, Gerryconn and Salrison and reinforced in size by the rebels though before they were ten miles long. Further to the east, stood Beaulie, and the great fortress of Tripanoncia. At Norma Proper Stood Fort Emly Fortenn, Fowad Antonia, Gandanlonia, Gandanlinia, And Gallo. Near here was the mouth of the Angeline River where the foe had great thirty mile fortified works and positions. Here stood the gorman fortification and the Gandan sailent. The stream called the Salvoe Run was also fortified on its banks by the foe. Here stood the Galverinian fortification of Mouthlenburg besides the great fortified plantations where there were kept six million stolen children as slaves. Nick Richerston, Richerton, FowadIII, Godma, Angelinia Stanck, Calmarinia Jermatonia, and Westruba from Latruva were also great fortifications in the possession of the enemy. The last section occupied by the foe was a line of fortifications on the bank of a stream called Jennie Richee Run. The fortresses here recieved the same name as the river. Thus it can be declared indeed that the enemy had easily secured a most strongly fortified city, a perfect Verdun of the world. After having learned through the slick efforts of his best spies the full strength of general Purgatorians army alon e general Hanson had notified general Hanson vivian who then decided to work out his plans immediately. He having been through all sections of vivian Wickey many times when even a little boy, and having lived there for four four r years general Hanson knew all parts of vivian Wickey as much as his ow own name. He on recieving Hansions note immediately halted his great armies at the small town of Fris Prince Albert, and taking possession of one of the buildings as his own headquarters summoned all his high generals and held a general Convention over vivian Wickey.

To recapture vivian Wickey immediately he knew was utterly impossible, so his pur ose was to capture Galverine vivian Wickeys main source of provisions; rush past Galverins after leaving an army there, cut his way past Jennie Turner where he had failed before, move on toward Madge Evans, orginase immense armies, and force these through the region of Sunbeam Creek to general Hansions assistance.

After the Convention was over a soldier ushered a handsome looking general nito Hansons presence, a general who claimed he knew all about the cause of the capture of vivian Wickey, and who by his im infpr information could help Hanson in his plans.

He claimed he also couldhelp general Hanson in his scene to reinforce general Hansion and atorm the gigantic fortresses of vivian Wickey. On being questioned the general answered all questions with a clear firm voice,---showing no four--malase- or anything to make him susp dious to others. He proved himself to be a good witness to the whole scene. General Hanson first asked the general!!!!!!

"What is your name sir????"

He. "He; Benjamine Gumpline."

"What a marny do you command?"

"I commanded a part of the garrison that was forced to abandon the Mc-Whirthian Fortifications."

"General Gumpline, how long has the fortifications been having so small a hagarrison before their capture by the Angelinian rebels."

"About two years before the outbreak of the Child Slave Rebellion."

"Then" Hanson said "I am handing t you a letter under date of October 25th 19II------did you rei recieve this letter?"

"I did "Answered the general.

"From whom?"

"A mysterious stranger garbed as a woman but who proved to be a man in disguise".

"How did you recieve it?"

"By mail."

"Where?"

"When I was on an e inspection of one of the fortresses of the RoyKing Islands."

"Then" said general Hanson "I will present this letter as evidence that Vivian Wickey was even in danger of seizure before the outbreak of the war of the rebellion and wil will read it before the whole assembly.!!!!!!

" Your Excellency general Bimbo Gumpine;
Roy King Islands; Vivian Wickey,
19II.
Dear sir:

I thought of the situation of Vivian Wickey and the condition of the garrison there. Thereis all signs of Glandelinia mobolizing for war against Angelinia and her countries, because the Glandelinians cannot uphold child slavery, and I would warn that the Glandelinian aurthorities plot to seize all the fortresses of Vivian Wickey on December 10th 19I2 19I3. I myself went into Glandelinia as a spy to learn the real cause of the approaching storm and saw one of the generals who was called by his people "The Conquerior of Christian Dogs". I could not help but connect the threatening rebellion with the enemys intentions to capture Vivian Vi Wickey though which the Glandelinian country could obtain all she needs to carry on the war. However Vivian Wickey and her immense fortresses, remind me of some hundreds of huge rocks in the sea towering above all else, the Gibrals Giberaltar Gibraltar of Heaven against which hell cannot prevail, Gibraltar of fortresses and shore and river batteries which the spirit waves of all the infernal regions, competition, and ambition, wind swept, and hell mad, strike only to be beaten back, like a wave of water into bubbles and foam.

I sincerely wt write to you to warn the main commander to notify the main Galverinian government to have Vivian Wickey strongly garrisoned, for if it is not done, and the rebels seize it, the whole world will suffer on account of the war.

With the fortresses strongly garrisoned, the foe will never be able to capture it. At first during my spying trips into Glandelinia, I wondered if this wicked Country was sincere in her intentions, and found it so without any doubts. Do you remember the night at Fort St John on one of the Blangiglossean Islands, at general Bill Bowys Camp when some mysterious person cauh caught snooping around was captured with maps of all the isnad islands and city fortifications in his possessions, and pictures also. And on one of the peitures was inscribed; "To King Procile. Mellan Palace. City of Vanity Fair?" No matter what the fug future may bring forth that night will be one of the most exciting memories of my life; and do you remember"(I'll bet you don't) when you scolded your own superior for allowing a suspecious person to escape his camp. You know the general made believe he was hurt, but he liked the thought that you might be ever suspicious——you great big wonderful man of destiny—— and I am wondering if way down deep in your heart you are really sincere in your trust of the Mc-Whirthian Garrison, or whether you are only there to view the scenery of the great fortresses. Any way I'm going to sign myself;

"Your Loving Friend.
Colonel Requiem..."

Then General Hanson folded the letter carefu lly and saif said;

"After Vivian Vickey was captured by the enemy under general Mc-Allister Stanek, and Purgatorian the custed general who had been ch in chagre of Mc-Whirther Janet, came to me and testified to me as well as ten other generals that the government of Calverinia did sent ten armies to garrison the fortresses and that none of them heard f of the misfortune untill bef shortly before the battles of Norma Bridge some time in July. This long letter was written long before that time was it not?"

"It was written about two years before the war broke out."

"You and s your superior had every honerable intention of having the fortresses strongly garrisoned had you not???"

"Yes sir." m answered the general.

"What caused the reinforcements to fail to come to your aid?"

"I found that ten generals sent with their armies to my rescue had been tricked by foe spies and traitors?... "

"What was the proof?"

"I found a dairy lost by one of the hidden spies."

"What became of this dairy?"

"I mailed it to the aurthoritiee of Calverinia."

"Why did you mail it to them instead of me?"

"I mailed it with a letter explaining the reason of our failure to hold the Mc-Whirthian fortifications and of the misfortune that happened to Julio Gallio on the date of the capture of Vivian Vickey after that one month and a half battles of Plestinia-Pesch, around Julio Gallio and the Norma Reign of terror going on at the same time. I did not think of sending it to you\at the same?.."

"Was there anything in this dairy pertaining to Vivian Vickey?"

"There were some very uncomplimentary thi things."

"What y do you mean by Uncomplimentary?"

"Well things written therein proved to me conclusively that the foe spies were making every effort to prevent reinforcements reaching the small garrison at Vivian Vickey."

After the general couted varin various passages from the dairy he had found, general Hanson dism dismissed him and again turned his attention to his plans.

General Hanson in looking over the map noticed the sea board of Vivian Vickey, and decided to have the fortresses of the city fiercely attacked by sea as often and as obstinately as possible, while he would invest Evangelinia Crania, Lieghburg Landing, and forde his way through all opposition, secure positions to place strong armies so general Hanson could maintain the seige to good advantage untill plans could be carried out which would bring about the capture of the city and the fortresses themselves.The first main sections he wished to secure was the Heights of Evangelinia Crania, and the Great Cedernine Fortifications. His first plans were to march toard Calverina the enemys main base of supplies, capture it, marsh then s thence toard Lucillia Jordan and on toard Julio Gallio.
